2 That alſo is moſt falſe, that the mindes of men are withdrawen from the affection of weldoing, when we take from them the opinion of meriting. Here by the way the readers muſt be warned, that they fooliſhly reaſon from reward to merite, as I ſhall afterward more plainely declare: namely, becauſe they know not this principle, that God is no leſſe liberall when he aſſigneth reward to workes than when he giueth power to doe well. But this I had rather deferre to the place fit for it. Now it ſhall be enough to touch how weake their obiection is: which ſhall be done two waies. For firſt whereas they ſay that there ſhall be no care of well framing of life, but when hope of reward is ſet before them: they erre quite from the trueth. For if this onely be intended when men ſerue God, that they looke to reward or let out to hire or ſell their labours to him, they little preuaile: for God will be freely worſhipped, freely loued: he (I ſay) alloweth that worſhipper, which when all hope of receiuing reward is cut off, yet ceaſeth not to worſhip him. Moreouer, if men be to be pricked forward, no man can put ſharper ſpurres vnto them, than thoſe that are taken of the end of our redemption and calling: ſuch as the word of God ſpurreth men withall, when it teacheth, that it is too wicked vnthankfulneſſe, not mutually to loue him againe which firſt loued vs: that by the blood of Chriſt our conſciences are clenſed from dead workes to ſerue the liuing God: that it is a hainous ſacrilege, if being once clenſed, we defile our ſelues with new filthineſſe, and prophane that holy blood: that we are deliuered from the hands of our enemies, that wee may without feare ſerue him inholineſſe and righteouſneſſe before him all the daies of our life: that we are made free from ſinne, that we may with a free ſpirite follow righteouſneſſe: that our old man is crucified, that we may riſe againe into newneſſe of life: againe, that if we be dead with Chriſt (as becommeth his members) we muſt ſeeke thoſe things that are aboue, and muſt in the world be waifaring men from home, that we may long toward heauen where is our treaſure: that the grace of God hath appeared to this end, that forſaking all vngodlineſſe and worldly deſires, we may liue ſoberly, holily, and godlily in this world, looking for the bleſſed hope and the appearing of the glorie of the great God and Sauiour: therefore that wee are not appointed that we ſhould ſtirre vp wrath to our ſelues, but that we may obteine ſaluation by Chriſt: that we are the temples of the holy Ghoſt, which is not lawfull to be defiled: that we are not darkneſſe, but light in the Lord, which muſt walke as children of light, that we are not called to vncleanneſſe, but to holineſſe: becauſe this is the will of God, our ſanctification, that we abſtaine from vnlawfull deſires: that our calling is holie, that the ſame is not fulfilled but with pureneſſe of life: that we are for this purpoſe deliuered from ſinne, that we ſhould obey to righteouſneſſe. Can we be pricked forward to charitie with any more liuely argument then that of Iohn, that we ſhould mutually loue one an other as God hath loued vs? that heerein his children doe differ from the children of the diuell, the children of light from the children of darkneſſe, becauſe they abide in loue? Againe with that argument of Paul, that we if we cleaue to Chriſt, are the members of one bodie, which is meete to be holpen one of another with mutuall duties? Can we be more ſtrongly prouoked to holineſſe than when we heare againe of Iohn, that all they that haue this hope, do ſanctify themſelues, becauſe their God is holy? Againe of the mouth of Paul: that hauing the promiſe of adoption, we ſhould clenſe our ſelues from all the defiling of the fleſh and ſpirit? then when we heare Chriſt ſetting foorth himſelfe for an example vnto vs that wee ſhould follow his ſteps.

Neither is the affection of weldoing hereby cooled in men when they are taught that the good which they doe, meriteth not the reward which they ſhall receiue for doing: the ſcripture hath other motions than this when it prouoketh vnto good workes.

3 *And theſe few things I haue ſet foorth for a taſte: For if I ſhould entend to goe through all, I ſhould be driuen to make a long volume. The Apoſtles are all full of encouragements, exhortations and rebukings, whereby they may enſtruct the man of God to euerie good worke, and that without any mention of merite. But rather they fetch their chiefe exhortations from this, that our ſaluation ſtandeth vpon the onely mercy of God and vpon no merite of ours. As Paul, after that he hath in a whole Epiſtle diſcourſed that there is no hope of life for vs but in the righteouſnes of Chriſt, when he commeth downe to morall exhortations, he beſeecheth them by that mercie of God which hee hath vouchſafed to entend to vs. And truely this one cauſe ought to haue beene ſufficient, that God may be glorified in vs. But if any be not ſo vehemently vehemently mooued with the glory of God, yet the remembrance of his benefits ought to haue beene moſt ſufficient to ſtir vp ſuch men to do well. But theſe men, which doe peraduenture with thruſting in of merits beate out ſome ſeruile and conſtrained obediences of the law, do falſly ſay that we haue nothing whereby we may exhort men to good workes, becauſe we goe not the ſame way to worke. As though God were much delighted with ſuch obediences which proteſteth that he loueth a cheerefull giuer, and forbiddeth any thing to be giuen as it were of heauineſſe or of neceſſitie. Neither doe I ſpeake this for that I doe either refuſe or deſpiſe that kinde of exhortation, which the Scripture oftentimes vſeth, that it may leaue no meane vnattempted euery way to ſtir vp our mindes. For it rehearſeth the reward which God will render to euerie man according to his works. But I denie that this is the onely thing, yea or the chiefe among many. And then I graunt not that we ought to take beginning thereat. Moreouer I affirme that it maketh nothing to the ſetting vp of ſuch merits as theſe men boaſt of, as we ſhall hereafter ſee. Laſt of all I ſay that it is to no profitable vſe, vnleſſe this doctrine haue firſt taken place, that we are iuſtified by the onely merit of Chriſt, which is conceiued by faith but by no merits of our works, becauſe none can be fit to the endeuour of holineſſe, vnleſſe they haue firſt digeſted this doctrine. Which thing alſo the Prophet very well ſignifieth, when he thus ſpeaketh to God: With thee is mercie that thou maieſt be feared. For he ſheweth that there is no worſhipping of God, but when his mercie is acknowledged, vpon which alone it is both founded and ſtabliſhed. Which is verie worthy to be noted, that we may know not only that the beginning of worſhipping God aright is the affiance of his mercy, but alſo that the feare of God (which the Papiſts will haue to be meritorious) cannot haue the name of merit, becauſe it is grounded vpon the pardon and forgiueneſſe of ſinnes.

To teach that God doth freely pardon ſinners is no allurement vnto ſinne.

4 But it is a moſt vaine ſlander, that men are allured to ſinne, when we affirme the free forgiuenes of ſins, in which we ſay that righteouſnes conſiſteth. For, we ſay that it is of ſo great value, that it can with no good of ours be recompenſed, and that therefore it ſhould neuer be obtained, vnleſſe it were freely giuen. Moreouer, that it is to vs indeede freely giuen, but not ſo to Chriſt which bought it ſo deerely, namely with his owne moſt holy blood, beſide which there was no price of value enough that might be paid to the iudgement of God. When men are taught theſe things, they are put in minde that it is no thanke to them that the ſame moſt holy blood is not ſhed ſo oft as they ſinne. Furthermore we learne, that our filthineſſe is ſuch as is neuer waſhed away but with the fountaine of this moſt pure blood. Ought not they that heare theſe things, to conceiue a greater horrour of ſinne, than if it were ſaid that it is wiped away with the ſprinkling of good works? And if they haue any thing of God, how can they but dread being once cleanſed, to wallow themſelues againe in the mire, as much as in them lieth to trouble and infect the pureneſſe of this fountaine? I haue waſhed my feete, (ſaith the faithfull ſoule in Salomon) how ſhall I againe defile them? Now it is euident, whether ſort doe both more abaſe the forgiueneſſe of ſinnes, and doe more make vile the dignitie of righteouſnes. They babble that God is appeaſed with their owne trifling ſatisfactions, that is, their dung: We affirme that the guiltineſſe of ſin is more grieuous than can be purged with ſo light trifles: that the diſpleaſure of God is more heauie than can be releaſed with theſe ſatisfactions of no value, and that therefore this is the prerogatiue of the onely blood of Chriſt. They ſay that righteouſneſſe (if it faile at any time) is reſtored and repaired by ſatisfactorie works: we thinke it more precious than that it can be matched with any recompence of works, and that therefore for the reſtoring thereof we muſt flie to the onely mercie of God. As for the reſt of thoſe things that pertaine to the forgiueneſſe of ſinnes, let them be ſought out of the next Chapter.

THE SEVENTEENTH CHAPTER.

The agreement of the promiſes of the law and the Goſpell.

Iuſtification by faith alone doth not make the

NOw let vs alſo goe through the other arguments wherewith Sathan by the ſouldiers of his guarde, goeth about either to ouerthrow or batter the iuſtification of faith. This I thinke we haue alreadie wrung from the ſlaunderers, that they can no more more charge vs as enemies of good works. For, iuſtification is taken away, from good workes, not that no good workes ſhould be done, or that thoſe which be done ſhould be denied to be good, but that we ſhould not put affiance in them, nor glory in them, nor aſcribe ſaluation vnto them. For this is our affiance, this is our glory, and the onely author of our ſaluation, that Chriſt the Sonne of God is ours, and we likewiſe are in him the ſonnes of God, and heires of the heauenly kingdome, being called by the goodnes of God, not by our owne worthineſſe into the hope of eternall bleſſednesſe. But becauſe they doe beſide theſe aſſaile vs, as we haue ſaid, with other engines, goe to, let vs goe forward in beating away theſe alſo. Firſt they come backe to the promiſes of the law, which the Lord did ſet forth to the keepers of his law: and they aske whether we will haue them to be vtterly voide or effectuall. Becauſe it were an abſurditie and to be ſcorned to ſay that they are voide, they take it for confeſſed that they are of ſome effectualneſſe. Hereupon they reaſon that we are not iuſtified by onely Faith. For thus ſaith the Lord: and it ſhall be, if thou ſhalt heare theſe commandements & iudgements, and ſhalt keepe them and doe them, the Lord alſo ſhall keepe with thee his couenant and mercy which he hath ſworne to thy fathers, he ſhall loue thee and multiply thee, and bleſſe thee, &c. Againe, if yee ſhall well direct your waies and your endeuours, if ye walke not after ſtrange Gods, if ye do iudgement betweene man and man, and goe not backe into malice, I will walke in the middeſt of you. I will not recite a thouſand peeces of the ſame ſort, which ſith they nothing differ in ſenſe, ſhall be declared by the ſolution of theſe. In a ſumme, Moſes teſtifieth that in the law is ſet forth bleſſing and curſe, death and life. Thus therefore they reaſon, that either this bleſſing is made idle and fruitleſſe, or that iuſtification is not of Faith alone. We haue already before ſhewed, how if we ſticke faſt in the law, ouer vs being deſtitute of all bleſſing, hangeth onely curſe which is threatned to all tranſgreſſors. For the Lord promiſeth nothing but to the perfect keepers of his law, ſuch as there is none found. This therefore remaineth, that all mankinde is by the law accuſed, and ſubiect to curſe and the wrath of God: from which that they may be looſed, they muſt needs goe out of the power of the law, and be as it were brought into libertie from the bondage thereof: not that carnall libertie which ſhould withdraw vs from the keeping of the law ſhould allure vs to thinke all things lawfull and to ſuffer our luſt, as it were the ſtaies being broken and with looſe reines to run at riot: but the ſpirituall libertie, which may comfort and raiſe vp a diſmaied & ouerthrowen conſcience, ſhewing it to be free from the curſe and damnation wherewith the Law held it downe bound and faſt tied. This deliuerance from the ſubiection of the Law, and Manumiſſion (as I may call it) we obtaine when by Faith we take hold of the mercy of God in Chriſt, whereby we are certified and aſſured of the righteouſneſſe of ſinnes, with the feeling whereof the law did pricke and bite vs.

promiſes of the law fruitleſſe.

Deut. 7.12.

Ier. 7.3. & 23.

Deut. 11.26.

2 By this reaſon euen the promiſes that were offred vs in the law ſhould be all vneffectuall and voide, vnleſſe the goodneſſe of God by the Goſpell did helpe. For, this condition that we keepe the whole law, vpon which the promiſes hang, and whereby alone they are to be performed, ſhall neuer be fulfiled. And the Lord ſo helpeth, not by leauing part of righteouſneſſe in our workes, and ſupplying part by his mercifull bearing with vs, but when he ſetteth onely Chriſt for the fulfilling of righteouſneſſe. For the Apoſtle, when he had before ſaid that he and other Iewes beleeued in Ieſus Chriſt, knowing that man is not iuſtified by the workes of the law, addeth a reaſon: not that they ſhould be holpen to fulneſſe of righteouſneſſe by the faith of Chriſt, but by it ſhould be iuſtified not by the works of the law. If the faithfull remooue from the law into Faith, that they may in Faith finde righteouſneſſe which they ſee to be abſent from the law: truely they forſake the righteouſneſſe of the law. Therefore now let him that liſt, amplifie the rewardings which are ſaid to be prepared for the keeper of the law, ſo that he therewithall conſider that it commeth to paſſe by our peruerſeneſſe, that we feele no fruite thereof till we haue obtained an other righteouſneſſe of Faith. So Dauid when he made mention of the rewarding which the Lord hath prepared for his ſeruants, by and by deſcendeth to the reknowledging of ſinnes, whereby that ſame rewarding is made voide. Alſo in the xix. Pſalme, he gloriouſly setteth foorth the benefits of the law, but he by and by crieth out: Who shall vnderstand his faults? Lord clense me from my secret faults? This place altogither agreeth with the place before, where when he had said that all the waies of the Lord are goodnesse and truth to them that feare him, he addeth: For thy names sake Lord, thou shalt be mercifull to my peruersenesse, for it is much. So ought we also to reknowledge, that there is indeede the good will of God set foorth vnto vs in the law, if we might deserue it by works, but that the same neuer commeth to vs by the deseruing of works.

Psal. 19. 12.

Psal. 25. 10.

The vnperfect works of beleeuers rewarded with that which is promised vnto the perfect obseruers of the law: whereof there are three causes.

Leu. 18. Eze. 20. 11. Rom. 10. 5.

3 How then? are they giuen that they should vanish away without fruite? I haue euen now already protested that the same is not my meaning. I say verily that they vtter not their effectualnes toward vs, so long as they haue respect to the merite of works, and that therefore if they be considered in themselues, they be after a certaine maner abolished. If the Apostle teacheth that this noble promise: I haue giuen you commandements, which who so shall doe shall liue in them, is of no value if we stand still in it, and shall neuer a whit more profite than if it had not beene giuen at all: because it belongeth not euen to the most holy seruants of God, which are all far from the fulfilling of the law, but are compassed about with many transgressions. But when the promises of the Gospell are put in place of them, which doe offer free forgiuenesse of sinnes, they bring to passe that not onely we our selues be acceptable to God, but that our workes also haue their thanke: and not this onely that the Lord accepteth them, but also extendeth to them the blessings which were by couenant due to the keeping of the law. I grant therefore, that those things which the Lord hath promised in his law to the followers of righteousnesse and holinesse, are rendered to the workes of the faithfull: but in this rendering the cause is alwaies to be considered that powreth grace to workes. Now causes we see that there be three. The first is, that God turning away his sight from the workes of his seruants, which alway deserue rather reproch than praise, embraceth them in Christ, and by the onely meane of Faith reconcileth them to himselse without the meane of workes. The second, that of his fatherly kindnesse and tender mercifulnesse, he lifteth vp workes to so great honor, not weying the worthinesse of them, that he accounteth them of some value. The third, that he receiueth the very same workes with pardon, not imputing the imperfection, wherewith they all being defiled should otherwise be rather reckoned among sins than vertues. And hereby appeareth how much the Sophisters haue beene deceiued, which thought they had gaily escaped all absurdities, when they said that workes doe not of their owne inward goodnesse auaile to deserue saluation, but by the forme of the couenant, because the Lord hath of his liberalitie so much esteemed them. But in the meane time they considered not, how far those workes which they would haue to be meritorious, were from the condition of the promises, vnlesse there went before both iustification grounded vpon onely faith, and the forgiuenesse of sins, by which euen the good works themselues haue neede to be wiped from spots. Therfore of three causes of Gods liberalitie, by which it is brought to passe that the workes of the faithfull are acceptable, they noted but one, and suppressed two, yea and those the principall.

The testimonie of Peter & example of Cornelius peruersly alleadged to proue that the mercy of God towards men is procured by some worthines of their owne.

Act. 10. 34.

4 These alleadge the saying of Peter, which Luke rehearseth in the Actes: I finde in trueth that God is not an accepter of persons: but in euery nation he that doth righteousnes is acceptable to him. And hereupon they gather that which seemeth to be vndoubted, that if a man doth by right endeuours get himselse the fauor of God, it is not the beneficiall gift of God alone that he obteineth saluation: yea that God doth so of his mercy helpe a sinner, that he is by works bowed to mercy. But you can in no wise make the Scriptures agree together, vnlesse you note a double accepting of man with God. For, such as man is by nature, God findeth nothing in him whereby he may be inclined to mercie, but onely miserie. If therefore it be certaine that man is naked and needie of all goodnesse, and on the other full stuffed and loaden with all kindes of euils, when God first receiueth them: for what qualitie, I pray you, shall we say that he is worthie of the heauenly calling? Away therefore with the vaine imagining of merits, where God so euidently setteth out his free mercifulnesse. For, that which in the same place is said by the voice of the Angels to Cornelius, that his prayers and almes had ascended into the sight of God, is by these men most lewdly wrested that man by endeuour of good works is prepared to receiue the grace of God. For it muſt needes be that Cornelius was already enlightened with the ſpirit of wiſedome, ſith he was endued with true wiſedome, namely with the feare of God: that he was ſanctified with the ſame Spirit, ſith he was a follower of righteouſneſſe, which the Apoſtle teacheth to be a moſt certaine fruite thereof. All theſe things therefore which are ſaide to haue pleaſed God in him, he hath of his grace, ſo farre is it off that he did by his owne endeuor prepare himſelfe to receiue it. Truly there cannot one ſyllable of the ſcripture be brought foorth, that agreeth not with this doctrine, that there is none other cauſe for God to accept man vnto him, but becauſe he ſeeth that man ſhould be euery way loſt, if he be left to himſelfe: but becauſe he will not haue him loſt, he vſeth his owne mercy in deliuering him. Now we ſee how this accepting hath not regard to the righteouſneſſe of man, but is a meere token of the goodneſſe of God toward men being miſerable and moſt vnworthie of ſo great a benefite. Gal. 5. 5.

5 But after that the Lord hath brought man out of the bottomleſſe depth of deſtruction, and ſeuered him to himſelfe by grace of adoption: becauſe he hath new begotten him & newly formed him into a new life, he now embraceth him, as a new creature with the gifts of his ſpirit. This is that accepting whereof Peter maketh mention, by which the faithfull are after their vocation allured of God euen in reſpect alſo of works: for the Lord cannot but loue and kiſſe thoſe good things which he worketh in them by his Spirit. But this is alway to be remembred, that they are none otherwiſe acceptable to God in reſpect of works, but in as much as for their cauſe & for their ſakes, whatſoeuer good workes he hath giuen them in encreaſing of his liberalitie, he alſo vouchſafeth to accept. For whence haue they good workes, but becauſe the Lord, as he hath choſen them for veſſels vnto honour, ſo will garniſh them with true godlineſſe? Whereby alſo are they accounted good, as though there were nothing wanting in them, but becauſe the kinde Father tenderly graunteth pardon to thoſe deformities and ſpots that cleaue to them? Summarily, he ſignifieth nothing elſe in this place, but that to God his children are acceptable and louely in whom he ſeeth the markes and features of his owne face. For we haue in another place taught that regeneration is a repairing of the image of God in vs. For as much as therefore whereſoeuer the Lord beholdeth his owne face, he both worthily loueth it and hath it in honour: it is not without cauſe ſaid, that the life of the faithfull being framed to holineſſe and righteouſneſſe pleaſeth him, but becauſe the godly being clothed with mortall fleſh, are yet ſinners, and their good works are but begun and fauouring of the faultineſſe of the fleſh: he cannot be fauourable neither to thoſe nor to theſe: vnleſſe he more embrace them in Chriſt than in themſelues. After this maner are thoſe places to be taken, which teſtifie that God is kinde and mercifull to the followers of righteouſneſſe. Moſes ſaid to the Iſraelites, The Lord thy God keepeth couenant, to a thouſand generations: which ſentence was afterward vſed of the people for a common maner of ſpeech. So Salomon in his ſolemne praier, ſaith, Lord God of Iſraell, which keepeſt couenant and mercie to thy ſeruants which walke before thee in their whole heart. The ſame wordes are alſo repeated of Nehemias. For, as in all the couenants of his mercie, the Lord likewiſe on their behalfes requireth of his ſeruaunts vprightneſſe and holineſſe of life, that his goodneſſe ſhould not be made a mockerie, and that no man ſwelling with vaine reioycing by reaſon thereof ſhould bleſſe his owne ſoule, walking in the meane time in the peruerſeneſſe of his owne heart: ſo his will is by this way to keepe in their duetie them that are admitted into the communion of the couenant: yet neuertheleſſe the couenant it ſelfe is both made at the beginning free, and perpetually remaineth ſuch. After this maner Dauid when he glorieth that there was rendred to him reward of the cleanneſſe of his handes, yet omitteth not that fountaine which I haue ſpoken of, that he was drawen out of the wombe, becauſe God loued him: where he ſo ſetteth out the goodneſſe of his cauſe, that he abateth nothing from the free mercie which goeth before all gifts, whereof it is the beginning.

The good workes of faithfull men acceptable vnto God howbeit not becauſe they are worthie to be accepted, but for that the mercie of God louing their perſons embraceth their workes, their vnworthineſſe notwithſtanding.

Deut. 7. 9.

1. King. 8. 23.

Nehem. 1. 5. Deut. 29. 18.

6 And here by the way it ſhall be profitable to touch what theſe formes of ſpeaking doe differ from the promiſes of the law. I call promiſes of the law, not thoſe which are each where commonly written in the bookes of Moſes: (for as much as in

The vertuous actions of faithful men are aſſurances of their rewards, and tokens that they are in the fauour of God, but no cause for the worthinesse whereof God should fauour them.

in them also are found many promises of the Gospell) but those which properly belong to the ministerie of the Law. Such promises, by what name soeuer you list to call them, doe declare that there is reward ready vpon condition, if thou doe that which is commanded thee. But when it is said, that the Lord keepeth the couenant of mercy to thē which loue him, therein is rather shewed what maner of men be his seruants which haue faithfully receiued his couenant, than the cause is expressed why the Lord should doe good to them. Now this is the maner of shewing it. As the Lord vouchsafeth to grant vs the grace of eternall life, to this end that he should be loued, feared, and honored of vs: so whatsoeuer promises there are of his mercie in the Scriptures, they are rightfully directed to this end that we should reuerence and worship the Author of the benefites. So oft therefore as we heare that he doth good to them that keepe his law, let vs remember that the children of God are there signified by the duetie which ought to be continuall in them: that we are for this cause adopted, that we should honor him for our Father. Therefore least we should disherite our selues from the right adoption, we must alway endeuour to this whereunto our calling tenderh. But let vs againe keepe this in minde, that the accomplishment of the mercy of God hangeth not vpon the works of the faithfull: but that he therefore fulfilleth the promise of saluation to them which answere to their calling in vprightnesse of life, because in them he acknowledgeth the naturall tokens of his children which are ruled with his Spirit vnto good. Hereunto let that be referred which is in the xv. Psalme spoken of the Citizens of the Church, Lord who shall dwell in thy tabernacle, and who shall rest in thy holy hill? The innocent in hands and of a cleane hart, &c. Againe in Esay, Who shall dwell with deuouring fire? He that doth righteousnesse, he that speaketh right things, &c. For there is not described the stay whereupon the faithfull may stand before the Lord, but the maner wherewith the most mercifull Father bringeth them into his fellowship, and therein defendeth and strengtheneth them. For, because he abhorreth sinne, he loueth righteousnesse, whom he ioyneth to himselfe, them he cleanseth with his spirit, that he may make them of like fashion to himselfe and his kingdome. Therefore if the question be of the first cause whereby the entrie is made open to the holy ones into the kingdome of God, from whence they haue that they may stand fast and abide in it, we haue this answer readie, because the Lord by his mercy both hath once adopted them, and perpetually defendeth them. But if the question be of the maner, then we must come downe to regeneration and the fruites thereof, which are rehearsed in that Psalme.

Esay 33.14.

In what sense the commandements of God are called righteousnesse.

7 But there seemeth to be much more hardnesse in these places, which doe both garnish good works with the title of righteousnesse, and affirmeth that man is iustified by them. Of the first sort there be very many places where the obseruings of the commandements are called iustifications or righteousnesses. Of the other sort, that is an example which is in Moses. This shall be our righteousnesse, if we keepe all these commandements. And if thou take exception and say that this is a promise of the law, which being knit to a condition impossible, prooueth nothing. There be other of which you cannot make the same answer, as this: And that shall be to thee for righteousnesse before the Lord to redeliuer to the poore man his pledge, &c. Againe, that which the Prophet saith, that the zeale in reuenging the shame of Israel, was imputed to Phinees for righteousnesse. Therefore the Pharisees of our time thinke that here they haue a large matter to triumph vpon. For when we say, that when the righteousnesse of Faith is set vp, the iustification of workes giueth place, by the same right they make this argument: if righteousnesse be of works, then it is false that we are iustified by Faith onely. Though I grant that the commandements of the law are called righteousnesses: it is no maruell: for they are so indeede. Howbeit we must warne the Readers that the Grecians haue not fitly translated the Hebrue word Hucmi, Dikaiomata, righteousnesses for commaundements. But for the word, I willingly release my quarell. For neither doe we deny this to the Law of God, that it conteineth perfect righteousnesse. For although, because we are debters of all the things that it commaundeth, therefore euen when we haue performed full obedience thereof, we are vnprofitable seruants: yet because the Lord vouchsafed to grant it the honour of righteousnesse,

we take not away that which he hath giuen. Therefore we willingly confeſſe that the full obedience of the law is righteouſneſſe, that the keeping of euery commandement, is a part of righteouſneſſe, if ſo be that the whole ſumme of righteouſneſſe were had in the other partes alſo. But we denie that there is any where any ſuch forme of righteouſneſſe. And therefore we take away the righteouſneſſe of the law, not for that it is maymed and vnperfect of it ſelfe, but for that by reaſon of the weakeneſſe of our fleſh it is no where ſeene. But the Scripture not onely calleth ſimply the commaundements of the Lord righteouſneſſes: but it alſo giueth this name to the workes of the holy ones. As when it reporteth that Zacharie and his wife walked in the righteouſneſſes of the Lord: truely when it ſo ſpeaketh it weigheth workes rather by the nature of the law, than by their owne proper ſtate. Howbeit heere againe is that to be noted, which I euen now ſaid, that of the negligence of the Greeke tranſlator is not a law to be made. But foraſmuch as Luke would alter nothing in the receiued tranſlation, I will alſo not ſtriue about it. For God hath commaunded theſe things that are in the law to men for righteouſneſſe: but this righteouſneſſe we performe not but in keeping the whole law: for by euery tranſgreſſion it is broken. Whereas therefore the law doth nothing but preſcribe righteouſneſſe: if we haue reſpect to it, all the ſeuerall commaundements thereof are righteouſneſſe: if wee haue reſpect to men of whom they are done, they doe not obtaine the praiſe of righteouſneſſe by one worke, being treſpaſſers in many, and by that ſame worke which is euer partly faultie by reaſon of imperfection. Luk. 1.6.

8 But now I come to the ſecond kinde, in which is the chiefe hardneſſe. Paul hath nothing more ſtrong to prooue the righteouſneſſe of faith: than that which is written of Abraham, that his faith was imputed to him for righteouſneſſe. Sith therefore it is ſaid that the act done by Phinees was imputed to him for righteouſneſſe: what Paul affirmeth of faith, the ſame may we alſo conclude of works. Wherupon our aduerſaries, as though they had won the victorie, determine that we are indeed not iuſtified without faith, but that we are alſo not iuſtified by it alone, and that workes accompliſh our righteouſneſſe. Therefore here I beſeech the godly, that if they know that the true rule of righteouſneſſe is to be taken out of the Scripture onely, they will religiouſly and earneſtly weigh with me, how the Scripture may without cauillations be rightly made to agree with it ſelfe. Foraſmuch as Paul knew that the iuſtification of faith is the refuge for them that are deſtitute of their owne righteouſneſſe, he doth boldly conclude that all they that are iuſtified by faith, are excluded from the righteouſneſſe of works. But ſith it is certaine that the iuſtification of faith is common to all the faithful, he doth thereof with like boldneſſe conclude that no man is iuſtified by workes, but rather contrariwiſe that men are iuſtified without any helpe of workes. But it is one thing to diſpute of what value workes are by themſelues, and another thing what account is to made of them after the ſtabliſhing of the righteouſneſſe of faith. If we ſhall ſet a price vpon workes according to their worthineſſe, we ſay that they are vnworthie to come into the ſight of God: and therefore that man hath no workes whereof he may glorie before God: then, that being ſpoiled of all helpe of workes he is iuſtified by onely faith. Now we define righteouſneſſe thus, that a ſinner being receiued into the communion of Chriſt is by his grace reconciled to God, when being cleanſed with his bloud he obteineth forgiueneſſe of ſinnes, and being cloathed with his righteouſneſſe as with his owne, he ſtandeth aſſured before the heauenly iudgement ſeat. When the forgiueneſſe of ſinnes is ſet before, the good workes which follow haue now another valuation than after their owne deſeruing: becauſe whatſoeuer is in them vnperfect, is couered with the perfection of Chriſt: whatſoeuer ſpots or filthineſſe there is, it is wiped away with his cleanneſſe, that it may not come into the examination of the iudgement of God. Therefore when the guiltineſſe of all treſpaſſes is blotted out, whereby men are hindered that they can bring foorth nothing acceptable to God, and when the fault of imperfection is buried, which is woont alſo to defile good workes: the good works which the faithfull doe are counted righteous, or (which is all one) are imputed for righteouſneſſe.

In what ſenſe man is ſaid to be iuſt by workes, and the act of Phinees to haue beene imputed vnto righteouſneſſe. Gen. 4.4. Pſal. 106.31.

9 Now if any man obiect this againſt me to aſſaile the righteouſneſſe of faith, firſt

It commeth of the righteousnesse which is by faith without works that the works of faithfull men are accounted righteous.
Deut.27.
Iob.4.18.

I will aske whether a man be counted righteous for one or two holy works, being in the rest of the workes of his life a trespasser of the law. This is more than an absurditie. Then I will aske if he be counted righteous for many good workes, if he be in any part found guiltie. This also he shall not be so bold to affirme, when the penall ordinance of the law crieth out against it, and proclaimeth all them accursed which haue not fulfilled all the commaundements of the law to the vttermost. Moreouer, I will go further and aske, whether there be any worke that deserueth to bee accused of no vncleannesse or imperfection. And how could there be any such before those eies, to whom euen the verie starres are not cleane enough, nor the Angels righteous enough? So shall he be compelled to graunt that there is no good worke which is not so defiled with transgressions adioyned with it, and with the corruptnesse of it selfe, that it cannot haue the honour of righteousnesse. Now if it bee certaine that it proceedeth from the righteousnesse of faith that works which are otherwise vnpure, vncleane, and but halfe workes, not woorthie of the sight of God, much lesse of his loue, are imputed to righteousnesse, why doe they with boasting of the righteousnesse of workes destroie the iustification of faith, whereas if this iustification were not, they should in vaine boast of that righteousnesse? Will they make a vipers birth? For thereto tend the saying of the vngodly men. They cannot denie that the iustification of faith is the beginning, foundation, cause, matter, and substance of the righteousnesse of works: yet they conclude that man is not iustified by faith, because good workes also are accounted for righteousnesse. Therefore let vs passe these follies and confesse as the truth is, that if the righteousnesse of workes of what sort soeuer it be accounted, hangeth vpon the iustification of faith, it is by this not onely nothing minished but also confirmed, namely whereby the strength thereof appeareth more mightie. Neither yet let vs thinke that workes are so commended after free iustification, that they also afterward come into the place of iustifying a man, or doe part the office betweene them and faith. For vnlesse the iustification remaine alway whole, the vncleannesse of workes shall be vncouered. And it is no absurditie, that a man is so iustified by faith, that not onely hee himselfe is righteous, but also his workes are esteemed righteous, aboue their woorthinesse.

Not onely wee but our works also iustified by faith in Christ: and therefore the righteousnesse of works a thing both vnder and after the righteousnesse of faith.

10 After this maner we will graunt in workes not onely a righteousnesse in part (as our aduersaries themselues would haue) but also that it is allowed of God as if it were a perfect and full righteousnesse. But if we remember vpon what foundation it is vpholden, all the difficultie shall be dissolued. For then and not till then it beginneth to be an acceptable worke, when it is receiued with pardon. Now whence commeth pardon, but because God beholdeth both vs and all our things in Christ? Therfore as wee, when we are grafted into Christ, doe therefore appeare righteous before God, because our wickednesses are couered with his innocencie, so our workes are and be taken for righteous, because whatsoeuer faultinesse is otherwise in them, being buried in the cleannesse of Christ, it is not imputed. So wee may rightfully say, that by onely Faith not onely we but also our workes are iustified. Now if this righteousnes of works of what sort soeuer it be, hangeth vpon Faith and free iustification, and is made of it: it ought to be included vnder it, and to be set vnder it as the effect vnder the cause thereof, as I may so call it: so farre is it off that it ought to be raised vp either to destroy or darken it. So Paul to driue men to confesse that our blessednesse consisteth of the mercie of God, not of workes, chiefely enforceth that saying of Danid. Blessed are they whose iniquities are forgiuen, and whose sins are couered. Blessed is he to whom the Lord hath not imputed sinne. If any man doe thrust into the contrarie innumerable sayings wherein blessednesse seemeth to be giuen to works, as are these: Blessed is the man which feareth the Lord, which hath pitie on the poore, which hath not walked in the counsell of the wicked, which beareth temptation: Blessed are they which keepe iudgement, the vndefiled, the poore in Spirit, the meeke, the mercifull, &c. They shall not make but that it shall be true which Paul saith, For because those things that are there commended are neuer so in man, that he is therefore allowed of God, it followeth that man is alway miserable, vnlesse he be deliuered from miserie by forgiuenesse of sinnes. Forasmuch as therefore all the kindes of blessednesse which are extolled in the Scriptures, doe fall downe void, ſo that man receiueth fruite of none of them, till he haue obtained bleſſednesse by forgiuenesse of ſinnes, which may afterward make place for them: it followeth that this is not onely the higheſt and the chiefe but alſo the onely bleſſednesse: vnleſſe peraduenture you will haue that it be weakened of thoſe which conſiſt in it alone. Now there is much leſſe reaſon why the calling of men righteous ſhould trouble vs, which is commonly giuen to the Faithfull. I graunt verily that they are called righteous of the holineſſe of life: but foraſmuch as they rather endeuour to the following of righteouſneſſe, than doe fulfill righteouſneſſe it ſelfe, it is meete that this righteouſneſſe ſuch as it is, giue place to the iuſtification of Faith, from whence it hath that which it is.

S. Iames maketh nothing againſt iuſtification by faith alone without workes. For he ſpeaketh not of ſuch a faith as is meant by S. Paul in deliuering this doctrine.

11 But they ſay that we haue yet more buſineſſe with Iames, namely which with open voice fighteth againſt vs. For he teacheth both that Abraham was iuſtified by workes, and alſo that all we are iuſtified by workes, not by Faith onely. What then? will they draw Paul to fight with Iames? If they hold Iames for a miniſter of Chriſt, his ſaying muſt be ſo taken that it diſagree not from Chriſt ſpeaking by the mouth of Paul, The holy Ghoſt affirmeth by the mouth of Paul, that Abraham obtained righteouſneſſe by Faith, not by workes: and we alſo doe teach that all are iuſtified by Faith without the workes of the law. The ſame holy Ghoſt teacheth by Iames that both Abrahams righteouſneſſe and ours conſiſteth of workes, not of onely Faith. It is certaine that the holy Ghoſt fighteth not with himſelfe. What agreement ſhall there be therefore of theſe two? It is enough for the aduerſaries, if they plucke the righteouſneſſe of Faith which we would haue to be faſtened with moſt deepe rootes: but to render to conſciences their quietneſſe, they haue no great care. Whereby verily you may ſee that they gnaw the iuſtification of faith, but in the meane time do appoint no marke of righteouſneſſe where conſciences may ſtay. Therefore let them triumph as they liſt, ſo that they may boaſt of no other victorie than that they haue taken away all certaintie of righteouſneſſe. And this wretched victorie they ſhall obtaine, where the light of truth being quenched, the Lord ſhall ſuffer them to ouerſpread the darkeneſſe of lies. But whereſoeuer the truth of God ſhall ſtand, they ſhall nothing preuaile. I denie therefore that the ſaying of Iames which they ſtill continually hold vp againſt vs as it were the ſhield of Achilles doth any thing at all make for them. That this may be made plaine, firſt we muſt looke at the marke that the Apoſtle ſhooteth at: and then we muſt note where they be deceiued. Becauſe there were then many (which miſchiefe is wont to be continuall in the Church) which openly bewrayed their infidelitie, in neglecting and omitting all the proper workes of the faithfull, and yet ceaſſed not to boaſt of the falſe name of faith: Iames doeth heere mocke the fooliſh boldneſſe of ſuch men. Therefore it is not his purpoſe in any point to diminiſh the force of true faith, but to ſhew how fondly thoſe triflers did chalenge ſo much the vaine image of it, that being contented herewith they careleſly ranne diſſolutely abroade into all licentiouſneſſe of vices. This ground being conceiued, it ſhall be eaſie to perceiue where our aduerſaries doe miſſe. For they fall into two deceits in the word, the one in the name of faith, the other in the word of iuſtifying. Whereas the Apoſtle nameth faith a vaine opinion far diſtant from the truth of faith, it is ſpoken by way of granting, which is no derogation to the matter: which he ſheweth at the beginning in theſe words. What profiteth it, my brethren, if any man ſay that he hath faith, and hath no works? He doth not ſay, if any haue faith without workes, but, If any man boaſt. More plainely alſo he ſpeaketh a little after, where he in mockerie maketh it worſe than the diuels knowledge: laſt of all, when he calleth it dead. But by the definition you may ſufficiently perceiue what he meaneth. Thou beleeueſt (ſaith he) that there is a God. Truely if nothing be contained in this faith but to beleeue that there is a God, it is now no maruell if it do not iuſtifie. And when this is taken from it, let vs not thinke that any thing is abated from the chriſtian faith, the nature whereof is far otherwiſe. For after what maner doth true faith iuſtifie vs, but when it coniovneth vs with Chriſt, that being made one with him we may enioy the partaking of his righteouſneſſe? It doth not therefore iuſtifie vs by this that it conceiueth a knowledge of the being of God, but by this that it reſteth vpon the aſſuredneſſe of the mercie of God.

Neither doth S. Iames vse the word Iustification, as S. Paul doth, but in a meaning far different: S. Paul meaning thereby the imputation of righteousnesse & S. Iames the declaration of that righteousnes by workes, which without workes was imputed.

12 We haue not yet the worke, vnlesse we examine also the other deceit in the word, forasmuch as Iames setteth part of iustification in workes. If you will make Iames agreeing both with the rest of the Scriptures, and with himselfe, you must of necessitie take the word of iustifying in another signification than it is taken in Paul. For Paul saith that we are iustified, when the remembrance of our vnrighteousnesse being blotted our, we are accounted righteous. If Iames had meant of that taking, he had wrongfully alleadged that out of Moses: Abraham beleeued God, &c. For he thus framed it together. Abraham by workes obteined righteousnesse, because he sticked not at the commandement of God, to offer vp his sonne. And so the scripture was fulfilled, which saith, that he beleeued God, and it was imputed to him for righteousnesse. If it be an absurditie, that the effect is before his cause, either Moses doth in that place falsely testifie, that faith was imputed to Abraham for righteousnesse: or he deserued not righteousnesse by that obedience which he shewed in offering vp of Isaac. Abraham was iustified by his faith, When Ismael was not yet conceiued, which was now growen past childhood before that Isaac was borne. How therefore shall we say, that he got to himselfe righteousnesse by obedience which followed long afterward? Wherefore either Iames, did wrongfully misturne the order (which it is a wickednesse to thinke) or he meant not to say that he was iustified, as though he deserued to be accounted righteous. How then? Truely it appeareth that he speaketh of the declaration of righteousnesse and not the imputation: as if he had said: Who so are righteous by true faith, they doe proue their righteousnesse with obedience and good workes, not with a bare and image-like visor of faith. In a summe, he disputeth not by what meane we are iustified, but he requireth of the faithfull a working righteousnesse. And as Paul affirmeth that men be iustified without the helpe of workes: so Iames doth here suffer them to be accounted righteous which want good workes. The considering of this end, shall deliuer vs out of al doubt. For our aduersaries are hereby chiefly deceiued, that they thinke that Iames defineth the maner of iustifying, whereas he trauaileth about nothing but to ouerthrow their peruerse carelesnesse, which did vainely pretend faith to excuse their despising of good works. Therefore into how many waies soeuer they wrest the words of Iames, they shall wring out nothing but two sentences: that a vaine bodilesse shew of faith doth not iustifie, and that a faithfull man not contented with such an imaginatiue shew, doth declare his righteousnesse by good workes.

That the doers of the law are iustified and not the bare hearers helpeth nothing to the ouerthrow of iustification by faith alone.
Rom. 2. 13.

13 As for that which they alleadge out of Paul, the same meaning, that the doers of the law, not the hearers, are iustified, it nothing helpeth them. I will not escape away with the solution of Ambrose, that that is therefore spoken because the fulfilling of the law is faith in Christ. For I see that it is but a meere starting hole, which nothing needeth where there is a broad way open. There the Apostle throweth downe the Iewes from fooliſh confidence, which boasted themselues of the onely knowledge of the law, when in the meane time they were the greatest despisers of it. Therefore that they should not stand so much in their owne conceit for the bare knowledge of the law, he warneth them, that if righteousnes be sought out of the law, not the knowledge but the obseruing of it is required. We verily make no doubt of this that the righteousnes of the law standeth in works: nor yet of this also, that the righteousnes consisteth in the worthinesse and merits of workes. But it is not yet prooued, that we are iustified by workes, vnlesse they bring foorth some man that hath fulfilled the law. And that Paul meant none otherwise, the hanging together of the text shall be a sufficient testimonie. After that he had generally condemned the Gentiles and the Iewes of vnrighteousnes, then he descended to the particular shewing of it, and saith, that they which sinned without the Law, doe perish without the law: which is spoken of the Gentiles, but they which haue sinned in the law, are iudged by the law: which pertaineth to the Iewes. Now because they winking at their owne trespassings proudly gloried of the onely law: he adioyneth that which most fitly agreed, that the law was not therefore made, that men should be made righteous by only hearing of the voice thereof: but then and not till then when they obeied, as if he should say: Seekest thou righteousnes in the law: alleadge not the hearing of it, which of it selfe is of small importance, but bring works, by which thou maist declare that the law was not set for thee in vaine.

vaine. Of theſe works becauſe they were all deſtitute, it followed that they were ſpoiled of glorying of the lawe. Therefore we muſt of the meaning of Paul rather frame a contrary argument. The righteouſneſſe of the lawe conſiſteth in the perfection of workes. No man can boaſt that he hath by workes ſatisfied the law. Therefore there is no righteouſneſſe by the lawe.

14 Now they alleadge alſo theſe places, wherein the faithfull do boldly offer their righteouſneſſe to the iudgement of God to be examined, and require that ſentence be giuen of them according to it. Of which ſort are theſe: Iudge me O Lord according to my righteouſneſſe, and according to my innocencie, which are in me. Againe, Heare my righteouſneſſe, O God: Thou haſt prooued my heart, and haſt viſited it in the night, and there was no wickedneſſe found in me. Againe, The Lord ſhall render to me according to my righteouſneſſe, and he ſhall recompence me according to the cleanneſſe of my hands. Becauſe I haue kept the waies of the Lord, and haue not wickedly departed from my God. And I ſhall be vnſpotted, and ſhall keepe me from my iniquitie. Againe, Iudge me, Lord, becauſe I haue walked in mine innocencie. I haue not ſit with lying men: I will not enter in with them that doe wicked things. Deſtroy not my ſoule with the vngodly, my life with men of blood in whoſe hands are iniquities: whoſe right hand is filled with gifts. But I haue walked innocently. I haue aboue ſpoken of the affiance which the holy ones doe ſeeme ſimply to take to themſelues of works. As for theſe teſtimonies that we haue heere alleadged, they ſhall not much accomber vs if they be vnderſtanded according to their compaſſe, or (as they commonly call it) their circumſtance. Now the ſame is double. For neither would they haue them to be wholly examined that they ſhould be either condemned or acquited according to the continuall courſe of their whole life: but they bring into iudgement a ſpeciall cauſe to be debated. Neither doe they claime to themſelues righteouſneſſe in reſpect of the perfection of God, but by compariſon of naughtie and wicked men. Firſt when the iuſtifying of man is intreated of, it is not onely required that he haue a good cauſe in ſome particular matter, but a certaine perpetuall agreement of righteouſneſſe in his whole life. But the holy ones, when they call vpon the iudgement of God to approoue their innocencie, doe not offer themſelues free from all guiltineſſe and in euery behalfe faultleſſe: but verily when they haue faſtened their affiance of ſaluation in his goodneſſe onely, yet truſting that he is the reuenger of the poore afflicted againſt right and equitie, they commend to him the cauſe wherein the innocent are oppreſſed. But when they ſet their aduerſaries with them before the iudgement ſeate of God, they boaſt not of ſuch an innocencie as ſhall anſwere to the pureneſſe of God if it be ſeuerely ſearched, but becauſe in compariſon of the malice, obſtinacie, ſubtiletie, and wickedneſſe of their aduerſaries, they know that their plainneſſe, righteouſneſſe, ſimplicitie, and cleanneſſe is knowen and pleaſing to God: they feare not to call vpon him to be iudge betweene themſelues and them. So when Dauid ſaid to Saul: The Lord render to euery man according to his righteouſneſſe and truth: he meant not that the Lord ſhould examine by himſelfe and reward euery man according to his deſeruings, but he tooke the Lord to witneſſe, how great his innocencie was in compariſon of the wickedneſſe of Saul. And Paul himſelfe, when he boaſteth with his glorying that he hath a good witneſſe of conſcience, that he hath trauelled with ſimplicitie and vprightneſſe in the Church of God, meaneth not that he ſtandeth vpon ſuch glorying before God, but being compelled with the ſlanders of the wicked, he defendeth his faithfull and honeſt dealing, which he knew to be pleaſing to the mercifull kindneſſe of God, againſt all euill ſpeaking of men whatſoeuer it be. For wee ſee what he ſayeth in another place, that he knoweth no euill by himſelfe, but that he is not thereby iuſtified, namely, becauſe he knew that the iudgement of God farre ſurmounteth the blear-eied ſight of men. Howſoeuer therefore the godly doe defend their innocencie againſt the hypocriſie of the vngodly, by the witneſſing and iudgement of God: yet when they haue to do with God alone, they all cry out with one mouth: If thou marke iniquitie, Lord, Lord, who ſhall abide it? Enter not into iudgement with thy ſeruants: becauſe euery one that liueth ſhall not be iuſtified in thy ſight: and diſtruſting their owne workes, they gladly ſing, Thy goodneſſe is better than life.

The proteſtations which faithfull men doe make of their innocencie in the ſight of God, are no argumẽts that they ſuppoſed themſelues thereby iuſtified before him.

15 There are also other places not vnlike to these before, in which a man may yet tarie. Salomon saith, that he which walketh in his vprightnesse, is righteous. Againe, That in the path of righteousnesse is life, and that in the same is not death. After which manner Ezechiel reporteth that hee shall liue that doth iudgement and righteousnesse. None of these do we either deny or darken. But let there come foorth one of the sonnes of Adam with such an vprightnesse. If there be none, either they must perish at the sight of God, or flee to the sanctuarie of mercy. Neither doe we in the meane time deny but that to the faithfull their vprightnesse, though it be but halfe and vnperfect, is a step toward immortalitie. But whence commeth that but because whom the Lord hath taken into the couenant of grace, he searcheth not their works according to their deseruings, but kisseth them with fatherly kindnesse? Whereby we do not onely vnderstand that which the schoolemen doe teach, that workes haue their value of the accepting grace. For they meane that workes which are otherwise insufficient to purchase righteousnesse by the couenant of the lawe, are by the accepting of God aduanced to the value of equalitie. But I say that they being defiled both with other trespassings and with their owne spots, are of no other value at all, than insomuch as the Lord tenderly graunteth pardon to both: that is to say, giueth free righteousnesse to man. Neither are heere those prayers of the Apostle seasonably thrust in place, where he wisheth so great perfection to the faithfull, that they may be faultlesse and vnblameable in the day of the Lord, These words in deed the Celestines did in old time turmoile, to affirme a perfection of righteousnesse in this life. But, which we thinke to be sufficient, we answer briefly after Augustine, that all the godly ought in deed to endeuour toward this marke, that they may one day appeere spotlesse and faultlesse before the face of God: but because the best and most excellent maner of this life is nothing but a going forward, we shall then and not till then attaine to this marke, when being vnclothed of this flesh of sinne we shall fully cleaue to the Lord. Yet will I not stiffely striue with him which will giue the title of perfection to the holy ones, so that he also limit the same with the words of Augustine himselfe. When (saith he) we will call the vertue of the holie ones, perfect: to the same perfection also belongeth the acknowledging of imperfection both in truth and humilitie.

NOw let vs passe ouer to those sayings which affirme, that God will render to euery man according to his works: of which sort are these. Euery man shall beare away that which he hath done in the body, either good or euill. Glorie and honour to him that worketh good: trouble and distresse vpon euery soule of him that worketh euill. And they which haue done good things, shall goe into the resurrection of life: they which haue done euill, into the resurrection of iudgement. Come ye blessed of my father: I haue hungred, and ye gaue me meate: I haue thirsted, and ye gaue me drinke, &c. And with them let vs also ioyne these sayings, which call eternall life the reward of works. Of which sort are these. The rendring of the hands of a man shall be restored to him. He that feareth the commandement shall be rewarded. Be glad and reioice, behold, your reward is plentifull in heauen. Euery man shall receiue reward according to his labour. Where it is said that God shall render to euery man according to his works, the same is easily assoyled. For that manner of speaking doth rather shew the order of following, than the cause. But it is out of doubt, that the Lord doth accomplish our saluation by these degrees of his mercie, when those whom he hath chosen he calleth to him: those whom he hath called, he iustifieth: those whom he hath iustified, he glorifieth. Although therefore he doe by his onely mercy receiue them that be his into life, yet because he bringeth them into the possession thereof by the race of good works, that he may fulfill his worke in them by such order as he hath appointed: it is no maruell if it be said that they be crowned according to their works, by which without doubt they are prepared to receiue the crowne of immortalitie. Yea and after this maner maner it is fitly ſaid that they worke their owne ſaluation, when in applying themſelues to good workes, they practiſe themſelues toward eternall life: namely as in another place they are commanded to worke the meate which periſheth not, when by beleeuing in Chriſt they get to themſelues life: and yet it is by and by afterward added: Which the ſonne of man ſhall giue you. Whereby appeereth that the word of Working is not ſet as contrarie to grace, but is referred to endeuour: and therefore it followeth not, that either the faithfull are themſelues authors of their owne ſaluation, or that the ſame proceedeth from their works. How then? So ſoone as they are taken into the fellowſhip of Chriſt, by knowledge of the Goſpell, and the enlightening of the holy Ghoſt, eternall life is begun in them. Now the ſame good worke which God hath begun in them, muſt alſo be made perfect vntill the day of the Lord Ieſu. And it is made perfect, when reſembling the heauenly father in righteouſneſſe and holineſſe, they proue themſelues to be his children not ſwarued out of kinde.

Phil. 2. 12.

Iohn 6. 27.

2 There is no cauſe why we ſhould of the name of reward gather an argument that our workes are the cauſe of ſaluation. Firſt let this be determined in our hearts, that the kingdome of heauen is not a reward of ſeruants, but an inheritance of children, which they onely ſhall enioy, that are adopted of the Lord to be his children: and for no other cauſe, but for this adoption. For, the ſonne of the bond-woman ſhall not be heire, but the ſonne of the free-woman. And in the very ſame places, in which the holy Ghoſt promiſeth to workes eternall glorie for reward, in expreſſing the inheritance by name, he ſheweth that it commeth from elſewhere. So Chriſt rehearſeth works, which he recompenſeth with the rewarding of heauen, whē he calleth the elect to the poſſeſſion thereof: but he therewithall adioyneth that it muſt be poſſeſſed by right of inheritance. So Paul biddeth ſeruants, which do their dutie faithfully, to hope for reward of the Lord: but he addeth, of inheritance. We ſee how they do as it were by expreſſe words prouide that we impute not eternall bleſſedneſſe to works, but to the adoption of God. Why therefore doe they therewithall together make mention of works? This queſtion ſhall be made plaine with one example of Scripture. Before the birth of Iſaac, there was promiſed to Abraham a ſeed in which all the nations of the earth ſhould be bleſſed: and a multiplying of his ſeede, which ſhould match the ſtarres of the skie, and the ſands of the ſea, and other like. In many yeres afterward, Abraham, as he was commanded by the oracle, prepared himſelfe to offer vp his ſonne in ſacrifice. When he had performed this obedience, he receiued a promiſe. I haue ſworne by my ſelfe (ſaith the Lord) becauſe thou haſt done this thing, and haſt not ſpared thine owne onely begotten ſonne, I will bleſſe thee, and multiply thy ſeede as the ſtarres of the skie, and the ſands of the ſea: thy ſeede ſhall poſſeſſe the gates of their enemies, and all the nations of the earth ſhall be bleſſed in thy ſeede, becauſe thou haſt obeyed my voyce. What heare we? Hath Abraham by his obedience deſerued the bleſſing, the promiſe whereof he had receiued before that the commandement was giuen? Heere verily we haue it without circumſtances ſhewed, that the Lord rewardeth the works of the faithfull with thoſe benefits which he had alreadie giuen them before that the works were thought of, hauing yet no cauſe why he ſhould do good to them but his owne mercie.

The rewarding of workes with ſaluation doth not argue thoſe workes to be the cauſe of that ſaluation wherewith they are rewarded, more than Abrahams obedience in offering his ſonne a cauſe of that bleſſing whereof he had the promiſe before he obeyed.

3 Yet doth the Lord not deceiue nor mocke vs when he ſaith that he rendreth for reward to works the ſame thing which he had before works freely giuen. For, becauſe he will haue vs to be exerciſed with good works, to thinke vpon the deliuery or enioying (as I may ſo call it) of theſe things which he hath promiſed, and to runne through them to the bleſſed hope ſet before vs in heauen, the fruite of the premiſes is alſo rightly aſſigned to them, to the ripeneſſe whereof they doe not bring vs. The Apoſtle very fitly expreſſed both theſe points, when he ſaid that the Coloſſians apply themſelues to the duties of charitie, for the hope which is laid vp for them in heauen, of which they had before heard by the word of the true ſpeaking Goſpell. For when he ſaieth that they knew by the Goſpell, that there was hope laid vp for them in heauen, he declareth that the ſame is by Chriſt only, not vnderpropped with any workes. Wherewith accordeth that ſaying of Peter, that the godly are kept by the power of God, through faith, vnto the ſaluation which is readie to be manifeſtly ſhewed at the time appointed for it. When he ſaith that they labour for it, he ſignifieth that the faithful muſt run all the time of their life, that they may attaine to it. But leaſt we ſhould thinke that the reward which the Lord promiſeth vs, is reduced to the meaſure of merite, he did put foorth a parable, in which he made himſelfe a houſholder, which ſent all them that he met, to the trimming of his vineyard, ſome at the firſt houre of the day, ſome at the ſecond, ſome at the third, yea and ſome alſo at the 11. At euening he paid to euery one equall wages. The expoſition of which parable, that ſame old writer whatſoeuer he was, whoſe booke is carried abroad vnder the name of Ambroſe of the calling of the Gentiles, hath briefely and truely ſet out. I will vſe rather his words than mine owne. The Lord (ſaith he) by the rule of this compariſon hath ſtabliſhed the diuerſitie of manifold calling, belonging to one grace: where without doubt they which being let into the vineyard at the 11. houre, are made equal with them that had wrought the whole day, doe repreſent the eſtate of them, whom for the aduancing of the excellencie of grace, the tender kindneſſe of the Lord hath rewarded at the waining of the day, and at the ending of their life: not paying wages for their labour, but pouring out the riches of his goodneſſe vpon them whom he hath choſen without workes, that euen they alſo which haue ſwet in great labour, and haue receiued no more than the laſt, may vnderſtand that they haue receiued a gift of grace not a reward of workes. Laſt of all, this alſo is woorthie to be noted in theſe places, where eternall life is called the reward of workes, that it is not ſimply taken for the communicating which we haue with God to bleſſed immortalitie, when he embraceth with fatherly goodwill in Chriſt: but for the poſſeſſing or enioying (as they call it of bleſſedneſſe, as alſo the verie wordes of Chriſt doe ſound, In time to come life euerlaſting. And in another place, Come and poſſeſſe the kingdome, &c. After this maner Paul calleth adoptiou, the reuealing of the adoption which ſhall be made in the reſurrection: and afterward expoundeth it the redemption of our bodie. Otherwiſe as eſtranging from God is eternall death, ſo when man is receiued of God into fauour, that he may enioy the communicating of him and be made one with him, he is receiued from death to life: which is done by the beneficiall meane of adoption onely. And if, as they are wont, they ſtifly enforce the reward of workes, we may turne againſt them that ſaying of Peter that eternall life is the reward of faith.

4 Therefore let vs not thinke, that the holy Ghoſt doth with ſuch promiſe ſet forth the worthineſſe of our works, as if they deſerued ſuch reward. For the Scripture leaueth nothing to vs, whereof we may be aduanced in the ſight of God. But rather it wholly endeuoureth to beate downe our arrogancie, to humble vs, to throw vs downe, and altogether to breake vs in peeces. But our weakneſſe is ſo ſuccoured, which otherwiſe would by and by ſlip and fall downe, vnleſſe it did ſuſtaine it ſelfe with this expectation, and mitigate her tedious grieues with comfort. Firſt how hard it is for a man to forſake and denie not onely all his things, but alſo himſelfe, let euerie man conſider for himſelfe. And yet with this introduction Chriſt traineth his ſcholers, that is, all the godly. Then throughout all their life he ſo inſtructeth them vnder the diſcipline of the croſſe, that they may not ſet their heart either to the deſire or confidence of preſent good things. Briefely he ſo handleth them for the moſt part, that which way ſoeuer they turne their eyes throughout the whole wideneſſe of the world, they haue on euery ſide nothing but deſperation preſent before them: ſo that Paul ſaith, that we are more miſerable than all men if our hope be onely in this world. That they ſhould not faint in theſe ſo great diſtreſſes, the Lord is preſent with them, which putteth them in minde to lift vp their head higher, to caſt their eies further, that they finde with him the bleſſedneſſe which they ſee not in the world. This bleſſedneſſe he calleth, reward, wages, recompence, not weying the merite of workes, but ſignifying that it is a recompenſing to their troubles, ſufferings, ſlanders, &c. Wherefore nothing withſtandeth, but that we may after the example of the Scripture, call eternall life a rewarding, becauſe in it the Lord receiueth his from labours into reſt, from affliction into proſperous and happie ſtate, from ſorrow into gladneſſe, from pouertie into flowing wealth, from ſhame into glorie, and changeth all the euils which they haue ſuffered for greater good things. So it ſhall alſo be no inconuenience, if wee thinke

Rewards are ſet before vs, not to the end we ſhould glorie in our workes, but leaſt we ſhould faint in the midſt of our trials.

holineſſe of life to be a way, not which openeth an entrie into the glorie of the heauenly kingdome, but whereby the elect are led of their God into the diſcloſing of it: for as much as this is his good will to glorifie them whom he hath ſanctified. Onely let vs not imagine a correlation of merit and reward, wherein the Sophiſters do fondly ſtick faſt, becauſe they conſider not this end which we ſet foorth. But how vnorderly is it, when the Lord calleth vs to one end, for vs to looke to another? Nothing is more euident, than that reward is promiſed to good workes, to releeue the weakeneſſe of our fleſh with ſome comfort, not to puffe vp our mindes with glorie. Whoſoeuer therefore doth thereby gather the merit of works, or doth in one balance wey worke with reward, he erreth farre from the right marke of God. Rom.8.30.

5 Wherefore when the Scripture ſaith that God the iuſt iudge will one day render to his a crowne of righteouſneſſe, I doe not onely take exception with Auguſtine, and ſay: To whom ſhould he being a iuſt iudge, render a crowne, if he had not being a merciſull father giuen grace? and how ſhould there be righteouſneſſe, vnleſſe grace went before which iuſtifieth the vnrighteous? How ſhould theſe due things be rendered, vnleſſe theſe vndue things were firſt giuen? But alſo I adde another thing. How ſhould he impute righteouſneſſe to our workes, vnleſſe his tender mercifulneſſe did hide the vnrighteouſneſſe that is in them? How ſhould he iudge them worthie of reward, vnleſſe he did by immeaſurable bountifulneſſe take away that which is worthie of puniſhment? For he is woont to call eternall life, grace: becauſe it is rendered to the free gifts of God when it is repaied to works. But the Scripture doth further humble vs, and therewithall raiſe vs vp. For beſides this that it forbiddeth vs to glorie in works, becauſe they are the free gifts of God, it therewithall teacheth that they are alwaies defiled with ſome dregs, that they cannot ſatisfie God, if they be examined by the rule of his iudgement: but leaſt our courage ſhould faint, it teacheth that they pleaſe by onely pardon. But although Auguſtine ſpeaketh ſomewhat otherwiſe than we do: yet that he doth not ſo diſagree in the matter, ſhall appeare by his words in his third booke to Boniface. Where when he had compared two men together, the one of a life euen miraculouſly holie and perfect, the other honeſt in deede and of vncorrupt manners, but not ſo perfect but that much wanteth in him: at the laſt he concludeth thus. Euen this man which in maners ſeemeth much inferiour, by reaſon of the true faith in God whereof he liueth and according to which he accuſeth himſelfe in all his offences, in all his good works praiſeth God, giuing to himſelfe the ſhame, and to him glorie, and taking from himſelfe both the pardon of ſinnes, and the loue of weldoings, when he is to be deliuered out of this life, he paſſeth into the fellowſhip of Chriſt. Wherefore, but becauſe of faith? Which although it ſaue no man without works, (for it is it, which worketh by loue, not a reprobate faith) yet by it alſo ſinnes are releaſed, becauſe the righteous man liueth of faith: but without it euen the ſame which ſeeme good works are turned into ſinnes. Heere verily he doth plainely confeſſe that which we ſo much trauell to proue, that the righteouſneſſe of good works hangeth hereupon, that they are by pardon allowed of God.

God as a iuſt iudge ſhall render a crowne to our righteouſneſſe but not vnleſſe he doe firſt graunt vnto our vnrighteouſneſſe a gracious pardon. 2.Tim.4.8. Aug.ad Valent.de grat. & lib. arbit. Cap.5. Heb.2.4.

6 A very neere ſenſe to the places aboue recited, haue theſe: Make to your ſelues friends of the Mammon of wickedneſſe, that when you ſhal faile, they may receiue you into euerlaſting tabernacles. Commaund the rich men of this world not to be proudly minded, nor to truſt in vncertaine riches but in the liuing God, to doe well, to become rich in good workes, to lay vp in ſtore for themſelues a good foundation againſt the time to come, that they may obtaine eternall life. For good works are compared to the riches, which wee may enioy in the bleſſedneſſe of eternall life. I anſwere, that we ſhal neuer come to the true vnderſtanding of them, vnleſſe we turne our eies to the marke whereunto the holy Ghoſt directeth his words. If it be true which Chriſt ſaith that our mind abideth there where our treaſure is, as the children of the world are woont to be earneſtly bent to the getting of thoſe things which ſerue for the delights of this preſent life: ſo the faithfull muſt looke ſith they haue learned that this life ſhall by and by vaniſh away like a dreame, that they ſend thoſe things which they would enioy thither where they ſhal haue perfect life. We muſt therfore do as they do which purpoſe to remoue into any place, where they haue choſen to reſt their whole life.

By ſeruing God we do eternally enrich our ſelues, not that our ſeruice is worthy as much as once to be regarded, but that his mercie ſuffereth not his ſeruants to loſe their Labors. Luk.16.9. 1.Tim.6.17.

They ſend their goods before, and do not miſcontentedly want them for a time: becauſe they thinke themſelues ſo much more happie, how much more goods they haue where they ſhall tarie long. If we beleeue that heauen is our countrey, it behooueth vs rather to ſend away our riches thither than to keepe them heere where we muſt loſe them with ſudden remouing. But how ſhall we ſend them thither? If we communicate to the neceſſities of the poore: to whom whatſoeuer is giuen, the Lord accounteth it giuen to himſelfe. Whereupon commeth that notable promiſe, He that giueth to the poore, lendeth for gaine to the Lord. Againe, he that liberally ſoweth, ſhall liberally reape. For thoſe things are deliuered into the hand of the Lord to keepe, which are beſtowed vpon our brethren by the dutie of charitie. He, as he is a faithfull keeper of that which is deliuered to him, will one day reſtore it with plentifull gaine. Are then our dutifull doings of ſo great value with God, that they be as riches laid vp in ſtore for vs in his hand? Who ſhall feare ſo to ſay, when the Scripture doth ſo oft and plainely witneſſe it? But if any man will leape from the meere goodnes of God to the worthineſſe of works, he ſhalbe nothing holpen by theſe teſtimonies to the ſtabliſhing of his errour. For you can gather nothing rightly thereof but the meere inclination of Gods tenderneſſe toward vs: For as much as to encourage vs to well doing although the ſeruices which we do to him are not worthie of ſo much as his only looking vpon them, yet he ſuffreth none of them to be loſt.

Math. 25. 40. Prou. 19. 17. 2. Cor. 9. 6.

This doctrine not ſhaken by the Apoſtle, either when he teacheth that afflictions are ſent that they which are afflicted may be accounted worthie of a kingdome, nor when he denieth that God is ſo vnrighteous to forget the good we doe for his ſake.

7 But they more enforce the words of the Apoſtle, which when he comforteth the Theſſalonians in troubles, teacheth that the ſame are ſent to them, that they may be accounted worthie of the kingdome of God, for which they ſuffer. For (ſaith he) it is righteous with God, to render trouble to them that trouble you: but to you, reſt with vs when the Lord Ieſus ſhall be ſhewed from heauen. But the author of the Epiſtle to the Hebrues ſaith, God is not vnrighteous, that he ſhould forget your worke, and the loue which you haue ſhewed in his name, for that you haue miniſtred to the Saints. To the firſt place I anſwere, that there is no worthineſſe of merits ſpoken of: but becauſe God the father willeth that we whom he hath choſen to be his children, ſhould be made like to Chriſt his firſt begotten ſonne: as it behooued that he ſhould firſt ſuffer, and then enter into the glorie appointed for him: ſo muſt we alſo by many tribulations enter into the kingdome of heauen. Therefore when we ſuffer tribulations for the name of Chriſt, there are as it were certaine marks printed vpon vs, wherewith God vſeth to marke the ſheepe of his flocke. After this manner therefore we are accounted worthie of the kingdome of God, becauſe we beare in our body the marks of our Lord and maſter which are the ſignes of the children of God. To this purpoſe make theſe ſayings: That we beare about in our body the mortification of Ieſus Chriſt that his life may be ſhewed in vs: That we be faſhioned like to his ſufferings, that we may come to the likeneſſe of his reſurrection from the dead. The reaſon which is adioyned ſerueth not to prooue any worthineſſe, but to confirme the hope of the kingdome of God: as if he had ſaid, As it agreeth with the iuſt iudgement of God to take vengeance of your enemies for the vexations that they haue done to you: ſo agreeth it alſo to giue to you releaſe and reſt from vexations. The other place, which teacheth that it ſo becommeth the righteouſneſſe of God not to forget the obedience of them that be his, that it declareth it to be in a maner vnrighteous if he ſhould forget them, hath this meaning: God to quicken our ſlouthfulneſſe, hath giuen vs aſſurance that the labour ſhall not be vaine which we ſhall take for his glorie. Let vs alway remember that this promiſe, as all other ſhould bring vs no profit, vnleſſe the free couenant of mercie went before, whereupon the whole aſſuredneſſe of our ſaluation ſhould reſt. But ſtanding vpon that couenant, we ought aſſuredly to truſt, there ſhall alſo not want reward of the liberalitie of God to our works howſoeuer they be vnworthie. The Apoſtle to confirme vs in that expectation, affirmeth, that God is not vnrighteous, but will ſtand to his promiſe once made. Therefore this righteouſneſſe is rather referred to the truth of Gods promiſe, than to his iuſtice of rendring due. According to which meaning there is a notable ſaying of Auguſtine, which as the holie man ſticketh not to rehearſe often as notable, ſo I thinke it not vnworthie that wee ſhould continually remember it. The Lord (ſaith he) is faithfull, which hath made made himselfe debter to vs, not by receiuing any thing of vs, but by promising all things to vs.

The aduance-ment of Charitie is no disgrace to the doctrine of iustification by faith. 1.Cor.13. Col.3.14.

8 There are also alleaged these sayings of Paul. If I haue all faith, so that I remoue mountaines out of their place, but haue not charitie, I am nothing. Againe, Now there remaine hope, faith, and charitie, but the greatest among these is charitie. Againe, Aboue all things haue charitie, which is the bond of perfection. By the first two places our Pharisees affirme that we are rather iustified by charitie than by faith, namely by the cheefer vertue, as they say. But this fond argument is easily wiped away. For wee haue in another place alreadie declared, that those things which are spoken in the first place pertaine nothing to true faith. The other place wee also expound of true faith, than which he saith that charitie is greater: not that it is more meritorious, but because it is more fruitfull, because it extendeth further, because it serueth mo, because it remaineth alway in force, whereas the vse of faith continueth but for a time. If we haue regard to excellency, the loue of God should worthily haue the cheese place, of which Paul heere speaketh not. For he enforceth this thing onely that we should with mutuall charitie edifie one another in the Lord, but let vs imagine that charitie doth euery where excell faith: yet what man of sound iudgement, yea, or of sound braine, will gather hereof that it doth more iustifie? The power of iustifying which faith hath, consisteth not in the worthinesse of the worke. Our iustification standeth vpon the onely mercy of God and the deseruing of Christ, which iustification when faith taketh hold of it, is said to iustifie. Now if you aske your aduersaries in what sense they assigne iustification to charitie, they will answer that because it is a dutifull doing acceptable to God, therefore by the deseruing thereof righteousnesse is imputed to vs by the acceptation of the goodnesse of God. Heere you see how well the argument proceedeth. We say that faith iustifieth, not because by the worthinesse of it selfe it deserueth righteousnesse to vs, but because it is an instrument by which we freely obtaine the righteousnesse of Christ. These men, omitting the mercy of God, and passing ouer Christ (where the sum of righteousnesse standeth) do affirme that we are iustified by the benefit of charitie because it excelleth aboue faith: euen as if a man should reason that a king is fitter to make a shooe than is a shoomaker, because he is an infinit way more excellent. This onely argument is a plaine example that all the Sorbonicall schooles doe not so much as taste with the vttermost part of their lips what the iustification of faith is. But if any wrangler do yet carp and aske, why in so small distance of place we take the name of faith in Paul so diuersly: I haue a weightie cause of this exposition. For sith those gifts which Paul rehearseth are after a certaine maner vnder faith and hope, because they pertaine to the knowledge of God, he comprehendeth them all by way of recapitulation vnder the name of faith and hope: as if he should say, both prophecie, and toongs, and the grace and knowledge of interpretation tend to this marke to leade vs to the knowledge of God. And we know God in this life none otherwise but by hope & faith. Therfore when I name faith & hope, I comprehend all these things together. And so there remaine these three, Hope, Faith, Charitie: that is to say, how great diuersitie of gifts soeuer there be, they are all referred to these. Among these the chiefe is Charitie, &c. Out of the third place they gather, If Charitie be the bond of perfection, then it is also the bond of righteousnesse which is nothing else but perfection. First, to speake nothing how Paul there calleth perfection, when the members of the Church well set in order doe cleaue together, and to graunt that we are by charitie made perfect before God: yet what new thing bring they foorth? For I will alway on the contrary side take exception and say that we neuer come to this perfection vnlesse we fulfill all the parts of charitie, and thereupon I will gather, that sith all men are most far from the fulfilling of charitie, therefore all hope of perfection is cut off from them.

Nothing contrarie hereunto taught by Christ in saying to a doctor of the law swelling with a vaine

9 I will not goe through all the testimonies which at this day the foolish Sorbonists rashly snatch out of the scriptures, as they first come to hand, and doe throw them against vs. For, some of them are so worthie to be laughed at, that I my selfe also cannot rehearse them, vnlesse I would woorthily be counted fond. Therefore I will make an end, when I shall haue declared the saying of Christ, wherewith they marueilously please themselues. For, to the Lawyer which asked him what was necessarie to conſcience of his works, If thou wilt enter into life keepe the commandements. Matt. 19. 17.

ſaluation, he anſwered: if thou wilt enter into life keepe the commandements. What would we more (ſay they) when we are commaunded by the author of grace himſelfe to get the kingdome of God by the keeping of his commandements? As though, forſooth it were not certain, that Chriſt tempered his anſwers to them with whom he ſaw that he had to doe. Heere a doctor of the law asketh of the meane to obtain bleſſednes, & not that onely, but with doing of what thing men may attain vnto it. Both the perſon of him that ſpake and the queſtion it ſelfe led the Lord ſo to anſwer. The Lawyer being filled with the perſwaſion of the righteouſnes of the law, was blinde in confidence of workes. Againe, he ſought nothing elſe but what were the works of righteouſneſſe, by which ſaluation is gotten. Therefore he is woorthily ſent to the law, in which there is a perfect mirrour of righteouſneſſe. We alſo do with a loud voice pronounce that the commandements muſt be kept, if life be ſought in works. And this doctrine is neceſſarie to bee knowne of Chriſtians. For how ſhould they flee to Chriſt if they did not acknowledge that they are fallen from the way of life into the headlong downe-fall of death? But how ſhould they vnderſtand how farre they haue ſtraied from the way of life, vnleſſe they firſt vnderſtand what is that way of life? For then they are taught that the ſanctuarie to recouer ſaluation is in Chriſt, when they ſee how great difference there is betweene their life and the righteouſnes of God which is contained in the keeping of the law. The ſumme is this, that if ſaluation be ſought in works, wee muſt keepe the commandements by which we are inſtructed to perfect righteouſnes. But we muſt not ſticke faſt heere, vnleſſe we will faint in our midde courſe: for none of vs is able to keepe the commandements. Sith therefore we are excluded from the righteouſneſſe of the law, we muſt of neceſſitie reſort to another helpe, namely to the faith of Chriſt. Wherefore as here the Lord calleth backe the doctor of the law, whom he knew to ſwel with vaine confidence of works, to the law, wherby he may learn that he is a ſinner ſubiect to dreadfull iudgement of eternall death: ſo in other places without making mention of the law, he comforteth other that are alreadie humbled with ſuch knowledge with promiſe of grace, as, Come to mee all yee that labour and are loaden, and I will refreſh you, and yee ſhall finde reſt for your ſoules. Matt. 11. 39.

Neither is faith by it owne worthineſſe of force to make vs righteous, nor good works to iuſtifie becauſe euill are to condemne. Ioh. 6. 29.

10 At the laſt when they are weary of wreſting the Scripture, they fall to ſubtleties and Sophiſticall arguments. They cauill vpon this that faith is in ſome places called a worke, and thereupon they gather that we doe wrongfully ſet Faith as contrarie to works. As though forſooth faith in that it is an obeying of the will of God, doth with her owne deſeruing procure vnto vs righteouſneſſe, and not rather becauſe by imbracing the mercy of God, it ſealeth in our hearts the righteouſneſſe of Chriſt offered to vs of it in the preaching of the Goſpel. The readers ſhall pardon me if I doe not tarry vpon confuting of ſuch follies, for they themſelues without any aſſault of other, are ſufficiently ouerthrowen with their owne feebleneſſe. But I will by the way confute one obiection which ſeemeth to haue ſome ſhew of reaſon, leaſt it ſhould trouble ſome that are not ſo well practiſed. Sith common reaſon teacheth that of contraries is all one rule, and all particular ſinnes are imputed to vs for vnrighteouſneſſe, they ſay it is meete that to all particular good works be giuen the praiſe of righteouſneſſe. They doe not ſatisfie me which anſwer, that the damnation of men properly proceedeth from onely vnbeleefe, not from particular ſinnes. I doe indeed agree to them, that vnbeleefe is the fountaine and roote of all euils. For it is the firſt departing from God, after which doe follow the particular treſpaſſings againſt the law. But whereas they ſeeme to ſet one ſelfe-ſame reaſon of good and euill works in weying of righteouſneſſe or vnrighteouſneſſe, therein I am compelled to diſagree from them. For the righteouſneſſe of works is the perfect obedience of the law. Therefore thou canſt not be righteous by works, vnleſſe thou doe follow it as a ſtraight line in the whole continuall courſe of thy life. From it ſo ſoone as thou haſt ſwarued thou art fallen into vnrighteouſneſſe. Heereby appeareth that righteouſneſſe commeth not of one or a few works, but of an vnſwarueing and vnwearied obſeruing of the will of God. But the rule of iudging vnrighteouſneſſe is moſt contrarie. For he that hath committed fornication, or hath ſtollen, is by one offence guiltie of death, becauſe he hath offended againſt the maieſtie of God. Therefore theſe our ſubtle arguers doe ſtumble, for that they marke not this ſaying of

Iames,

Iames, that he which ſinneth in one, is made guiltie of all, becauſe hee that hath forbidden to kill, hath alſo forbidden to ſteale, &c. Therefore it ought to ſeeme no abſurditie, when we ſay that death is the iuſt reward of euery ſinne, becauſe they are euerie one woorthy of the iuſt diſpleaſure and vengeance of God. But thou ſhalt reaſon fooliſhly, if on the contrary ſide thou gather that by one good worke man may be reconciled to God, which with many ſinnes deſerueth his wrath. Iam. 2. 10.

THE NINETEENTH CHAPTER.

Of Chriſtian libertie.

The neceſſitie of handling the queſtion that concerneth chriſtian libertie.

NOw we muſt entreat of Chriſtian libertie: the declaration whereof hee muſt not omit whoſe purpoſe is to comprehend in an abridgement the ſumme of the doctrine of the Goſpel. For it is a thing principally neceſſarie, and without the knowledge whereof conſciences dare in a maner enterpriſe nothing without doubting, they ſtumble and ſtart backe in many things, they alway ſtagger and tremble: but eſpecially it is an appendant of iuſtification, and auaileth not a little to the vnderſtanding of the ſtrength thereof. Yea they that earneſtly feare God, ſhall heereby receiue an incomparable fruite of that doctrine which the wicked and Lucinianicall men doe pleaſantly taunt with their ſcoffes, becauſe in the ſpirituall darkneſſe wherewith they bee taken, euery wanton railing is lawfull for them. Wherefore it ſhall now come foorth in fit ſeaſon: and it was profitable to differre to this place the plainer diſcourſing of it (for wee haue alreadie in diuerſe places lightly touched it) becauſe ſo ſoone as any mention is brought in of Chriſtian libertie, then either filthie luſts doe boile, or madde motions do riſe, vnleſſe theſe wanton wits be timely met withall, which do otherwiſe moſt naughtily corrupt the beſt things. For, ſome men by pretence of this libertie, ſhake off al obedience of God, and breake foorth into an vnbrideled licentiouſneſſe: and ſome men diſdaine it, thinking that by it all moderation, order and choiſe of things is taken away. What ſhould we heere do, being compaſſed in ſuch narrow ſtraites? Shall we bid Chriſtian libertie farewell, and ſo cut off all fit occaſion for ſuch perils? But, as we haue ſaid, vnleſſe that bee faſt holden, neither Chriſt, nor the truth of the Goſpell, nor the inward peace of the ſoule is rightly knowen. Rather we muſt endeuour that ſo neceſſarie a part of doctrine be not ſuppreſſed, and yet that in the meane time thoſe fond obiections may be mette withall which are woont to riſe thereupon.

The firſt part of Chriſtian libertie, the freedome from the bondage and tyrannie of the law.

2 Chriſtian libertie (as I thinke) conſiſteth in three parts. The firſt, that the conſciences of the faithfull, when the affiance of their iuſtification before God is to be ſought, may raiſe and aduance themſelues aboue the law, and forget the whole righteouſneſſe of the law. For ſith the law (as we haue already in another place declared) leaueth no man righteous: either we are excluded from all hope of iuſtification, or wee muſt be looſed from the law, and ſo that there be no regard at all had of workes. For who ſo thinketh that he muſt bring ſomewhat be it neuer ſo little of good workes to obtaine righteouſneſſe, hee cannot appoint any end or meaſure of them, but maketh himſelfe debtor to the law. Therefore taking away all mention of the law, and laying aſide all thinking vpon workes, we muſt embrace the onely mercie of God, when we intreat of iuſtification: and turning away our ſight from our ſelues, we muſt behold Chriſt alone. For there the queſtion is not how wee be righteous: but how although we be vnrighteous and vnworthy, we be taken for worthy. Of which thing if conſciences will attaine any certaintie, they muſt giue no place to the law. Neither can any man heereby gather that the law is ſuperfluous to the faithfull, whom it doth not therefore ceaſe to teach, and exhort, and pricke forwarde to goodneſſe, although before the iudgement ſeate of God it hath no place in their conſcences. For theſe two things, as they are moſt diuers, ſo muſt they bee well and diligently diſtinguiſhed of vs. The whole life of Chriſtians ought to be a certaine meditation of godlineſſe, becauſe they are called into ſanctification. Heerein ſtandeth the office of the law, that by putting them in minde of their duetie, it ſhould ſtirre them vp to the endeuor of holineſſe and innocencie. Eph 1. 4. 1. Theſ. 4. 5. But when conſciences are carefull how they may haue God mercifull, what they ſhall anſwere, and vpon what affiance they ſhall ſtand if they be called called to his iudgement, there is not to be reckoned what the law requireth, but onely Christ must be set foorth for righteousnesse, which passeth all perfection of the law.

The libertie disputed of in the Epistle to the Galathians. Gal 3.13. & 5.1.

3 Vpon this point hangeth almost all the argument of the Epistle to the Galathians. For, that they be fond expositors which teach that Paul there contendeth onely for the libertie of ceremonies, may be proued by the places of the arguments. Of which sort are these. That Christ was made a curse for vs, that he might redeeme vs from the curse of the law. Againe, Stand fast in the libertie wherewith Christ hath made you free, and be not againe entangled with the yoke of bondage. Behold, I Paul say, if ye be circumsised, Christ shall nothing profit you. And he which is circumcised is debtor of the whole law. Christ is made idle to you whosoeuer yee be that are iustified by the law: ye are fallen away from grace. Wherein truly is contained some higher thing than the libertie of ceremonies. I graunt indeed that Paul there entreateth of ceremonies, because he contendeth with the false Apostles, which went about to bring againe into the Christian Church the old shadowes of the law which were abolished by the comming of Christ. But for the discussing of this question, there were higher places to be disputed, in which the whole controuersie stood. First because by those Iewish shadowes the brightnesse of the Gospell was darkened, he sheweth that we haue in Christ a full giuing in deed of all those things which were shadowed by the ceremonies of Moses. Secondly, because these deceiuers filled the people with a most naughtie opinion, namely that this obedience auailed to deserue the fauour of God: Here he standeth much vpon this point, that the faithfull should not thinke that they can by any workes of the law, much lesse by those little principles, obraine righteousnesse before God. And therewithall he teacheth, that they are by the crosse of Christ free from the damnation of the law, which otherwise hangeth ouer all men, that they should with full assuredne sse rest in Christ alone. Which place properly pertaineth to this purpose. Last of all he maintaineth to the consciences of the faithfull their libertie, that they should not be bound with any religion in things not necessarie.

The second part of Christian libertie free and by the law vnconstrained obedience.

Deut. 6.5.

4 The second part, which hangeth vpon that former part, is that consciences obey the law, not as compelled by the necessitie of the law: but being free from the yoke of the law it selfe, of their owne accord they obey the will of God. For because they abide in perpetuall terrors, so long as they be vnder the dominion of the law, they shall neuer be with cheerefull readinesse framed to the obedience of God, vnlesse they first haue this libertie giuen them. By an example we shall both more briefly, and more plainly perceiue what these things meane. The commandement of the law is, that we loue our God with all our heart, with all our soule, and with all our strengthes. That this may be done, our soule must first be made voide of all other sense and thought, our heart must be cleansed of all desires, all our strengthes must be gathered vp and drawen together to this only purpose. They which haue gone most far before other in the way of the Lord, are yet very far from this marke. For though they loue God with their minde, & with syncere affection of hart, yet they haue stil a great part of their hart and soule possessed with the desires of the flesh, by which they are drawen backe and staied from going forward with hastie course to God. They doe indeed trauell forward with great endeuour: but the flesh partly feebleth their strengthes, and partly draweth them to it selfe. What shall they heere doe, when they feele that they doe nothing lesse then performe the law? They will, they couet, they endeuour, but nothing with such perfection as ought to be. If thou looke vpon the law, they see that whatsoeuer worke they attempt or purpose, is accursed. Neither is there any cause why any man should deceiue himselfe with gathering that the worke is therefore not altogether euil, because it is vnperfect: and therefore that God doth neuertheless accept that good which is in it. For, the law requiring perfect loue, condemneth all imperfection, vnlesse the rigour of it be mitigated. Therefore his workes should fall to nought which he would haue to seeme partly good: and he shall finde that it is a transgression of the law, euen in this because it is vnperfect.

Men freed from the exactions of the law are as 5 Loe, how all our works are subiect to the curse of the law, if they be measured by the rule of the law. But how should then vnhappie soules cheerefully apply themselues to worke, for which they might not trust that they could get any thing but curse?

On

On the other ſide, if being deliuered from this ſeuere exacting of the law, or rather from the whole rigour of the law, they heare that they be called of God with fatherly gentleneſſe: they will merily and with great cheerefulneſſe anſwere his calling and follow his guiding. In a ſumme, they which are bound to the yoke of the law, are like to bond-ſeruants, to whom are appointed by their lords certaine taskes of worke for euery day. Theſe ſeruants thinke that they haue done nothing, nor dare come in the ſight of their Lords, vnleſſe they haue performed that full taske of their workes. But children, which are more liberally and more freeman-like handeled of their fathers, ſticke not to preſent to them their begun and halfe vnperfect workes, yea and thoſe hauing ſome fault, truſting that they will accept their obedience and willingneſſe of minde, although they haue not exactly done ſo much as their goodwill was to doe. So muſt we be as may haue ſure affiance, that our obediences ſhall be allowed of our moſt kinde father, how little ſoeuer, and how rude and vnperfect ſoeuer they be. As alſo he aſſureth to vs by the Prophet: I will ſpare them (ſaith he) as the father is woont to ſpare his ſon that ſerueth him. Where this word Spare, is ſet for to beare withall, or gently to winke at faults, for as much as he alſo maketh mention of ſeruice. And this affiance is not a little neceſſarie for vs, without which we ſhall goe about all things in vaine. For God accounteth himſelfe to be worſhipped with no worke of ours but which is truely done of vs for the worſhipping of him. But how can that be done among theſe terrors, where it is doubted whether God be offended or worſhipped without our worke?

children ſweetly woon vnto cheerefull obedience by the fatherly gentleneſſe wherewith they know that God hath promiſed to intreat them.

Mal. 3. 17.

6 And that is the cauſe why the author of the Epiſtle to the Hebrues, referreth all the good workes which are read of in the holy fathers, to faith, and weieth them onely by faith. Touching this liberty there is a place in the Epiſtle to the Romans, where Paul reaſoneth that ſinne ought not to haue dominion ouer vs, becauſe we are not vnder the law, but vnder grace. For when hee had exhorted the faithfull that ſin ſhould not reigne in their mortall bodies, and that they ſhould not giue their members to be weapons of wickedneſſe to ſinne, but ſhould dedicate themſelues to God, as they that are aliue from the dead, and their members, weapons of righteouſneſſe to God: and whereas they might on the other ſide obiect that they do yet carry with them the fleſh full of luſts, and that ſinne dwelleth in them, hee adioyneth that comfort by the liberty of the law, as if he ſhould ſay. Though they doe not yet throughly feele ſinne deſtroyed and that righteouſneſſe yet liueth not in them, yet there is no cauſe why they ſhould feare and be diſcouraged as though he had beene alway diſpleaſed with them for the remnants of ſinne, foraſmuch as they are by grace made free from the law, that their workes ſhould not be examined by the rules of the law. As for them that gather that we may ſin becauſe we are not vnder the law, let them know that this liberty pertaineth nothing to them, the end whereof is to encourage vs to good.

The libertie which we haue in the ſtate of grace a ſpeciall encouragement to ſtriue that we be not ouerruled with ſin. Rom. 11. 2. Rom. 6. 12.

7 The third part is, that we be bound with no conſcience before God of outward things which are by themſelues indifferent, but that we may indifferently ſomtime vſe them, and ſometime leaue them vnuſed. And the knowledge of this liberty alſo is very neceſſary for vs, for if it ſhall be abſent, there ſhall be no quiet to our conſciences, no end of ſuperſtitions. Many at this day doe thinke vs fond to mooue diſputation about the free eating of fleſh, about the free vſe of daies, and garments, and ſuch other ſmall trifles as they indeed thinke them: but there is more weight in them than is commonly thought. For when conſciences haue once caſt themſelues into the ſnare, they enter into a long and cumberſome way, from whence they can afterward finde no eaſie way to get out. If a man begin to doubt whether he may occupie linnen in ſheets, ſhirts, handkerchiefes, and napkings, neither will he be out of doubt whether he may vſe hempe, and at the laſt he will alſo fall in doubt of matters, for he will weigh with himſelf whether he cannot ſup without napkins, whether he may not be without handkerchiefes. If any man thinke deinty meat to be vnlawfull, at length he ſhall not with quietneſſe before the Lord eate either brown-bread or common meats, when he remembreth that he may yet ſuſtaine his body with baſer food. If he doubt of pleaſant wine, afterward he wil not drinke dead wine with good peace of conſcience, laſt of all he will not be ſo bould to touch ſweeter and cleanner water than other. Finall, at the length he will come to this point, to thinke it vnlawfull (as the common ſaying is) to tread vpon

The third part of chriſtian liberty is freedom of conſcience touching the vſe of indifferent things, as cloth, meat, drinke, wherein it is vnneceſſary to know how much is permitted vs, leaſt too much ſtreitneſſe driue vs to inconuenience.

vpon a ſtraw lying a croſſe. For here is begun no light ſtrife, but this is in queſtion, whether God will haue vs to vſe theſe or thoſe things, whoſe will ought to guide all our counſels and dooings. Heereby ſome muſt needs be carried with deſperation into a confuſe deuouring pit: ſome muſt, deſpiſing God, and caſting away his feare, make themſelues away through deſtruction when they haue no ready way: For whoſoeuer are entangled with ſuch doubting, which way ſoeuer they turne themſelues, they ſee euery where preſent offence of conſcience.

We cannot with ſhamefulneſſe vnto God enioy the vſe of outward things, vnleſſe the knowledge of our libertie remoue all ſcruple of conſcience & trouble of mind from vs. Rom. 14. 14.

8 I know (ſaith Paul) that nothing is common (meaning by common, vnholy) but who ſo thinketh any thing common, to him it is common. In which words he maketh all outward things ſubiect to our libertie, prouided alway that our mindes haue the aſſurance of the libertie before God. But if any ſuperſtitious opinion caſt into vs any doubt, thoſe things which of their owne nature were cleane, are defiled to vs. Wherefore he addeth: bleſſed is he that iudgeth not himſelfe in that which he alloweth. But he that iudgeth, if he eate, is condemned, becauſe he eateth not of faith. And that which is not of faith, is ſinne. Among ſuch narrow ſtraits, who ſo neuertheleſſe with careleſly venturing on all things ſhew themſelues boulder, doe they not aſmuch turne themſelues away from God? But they which are throughly pearced with ſome feare of God, when they themſelues alſo are compelled to doe many things againſt their conſcience, are diſcouraged and doe fall downe with feare. All that are ſuch, doe receiue none of the gifts of God with thankeſgiuing, by which alone yet Paul teſtifieth that they all are ſanctified to our vſe: I meane the thankſgiuing that proceedeth from a heart that acknowledgeth the liberalitie and goodneſſe of God in his gifts. For many of them indeed doe vnderſtand that thoſe are the benefits of God which they vſe, and they praiſe God in his workes: but ſith they are not perſwaded that they are giuen to themſelues, how ſhould they thanke God as the giuer of them? Thus in a ſumme we ſee, whereto this libertie tendeth, namely that we ſhould vſe the gifts of God to ſuch vſe as he hath giuen them vnto vs, without any ſcruple of conſcience, without any trouble of minde, by which confidence our ſoules may both haue peace with him, and acknowledge his liberalitie toward vs. For heere are comprehended all ceremonies that are at libertie to be obſerued, that our conſciences ſhould not be bound with any neceſſitie to keepe them, but ſhould remember that the vſe of them is by Gods benefit ſubiect to themſelues vnto edification.

The vſe and abuſe of the doctrine which concerneth Chriſtian liberty.

9 But it is diligently to be noted, that Chriſtian libertie is in all the parts of it ſpirituall thing, the whole ſtrength whereof conſiſteth in appeaſing fearefull conſciences before God, if either they be vnquieted, or carefull for the forgiueneſſe of ſinnes, or if they be penſiue whether our imperfect workes and defiled with the faults of our fleſh doe pleaſe God, or if they be troubled about the vſe of indifferent things. Wherefore they doe wrongfully expound it, which either doe make it a cloake for their owne deſires, that they may abuſe the gifts of God to their owne luſt, or which doe thinke that there is no liberty but that which is vſed before men, and therefore in vſing it haue no regard of the weake brethren. In the firſt kinde, men doe at this day much offend. There is almoſt no man which may by his ability of wealth be ſumptuous, which deliteth not in exceſſiue gorgiouſneſſe, in furniture of bankets, in apparell of body, in building of houſes, which hath not a will to excell other in all kind of ſtatelineſſe: which doth not maruellouſly flatter himſelfe in his fine. And all theſe things are defended vnder the pretence of Chriſtian liberty. They ſay that they are things indifferent, I grant, ſo that a man indifferently vſe them. But when they are too greedily coueted, when they are proudly boaſted, when they are waſtfully ſpent, it is certaine that thoſe things which otherwiſe were of themſelues lawfull, are by theſe faults defiled. This ſaying of Paul doth very well put difference betweene things indifferent. All things are cleane to the cleane: but to the defiled and vnbeleeuing, nothing is cleane, becauſe their minde and conſcience is defiled. For why are accurſed the rich men, they which haue their comfort, which are ſatisfied with meat, which doe now laugh, which ſleepe in beds of Iuory, which ioyne land to land, whoſe bankets haue Lute, Harpe, Taber, and Wine? Verily both Iuory, and Gold, and riches are the good creatures of God, permitted yea and appointed by the prouidence of God for men to vſe. Neither is it any any where forbidden either to laugh, or to be ſatisfied with meat, or to ioyne new poſſeſſions to their owne old poſſeſſions or of their anceſters, or to be delighted with muſicall melody, or to drinke wine. This is true indeed. But when they haue plenty of things, to wallow in delightes, to glut themſelues, to make their wit and minde drunke with preſent pleaſures and alway to gape for new, theſe doings are moſt far from the lawfull vſe of the gifts of God. Therefore let them take away immeaſurable deſire, let them take away immeaſurable waſting, let them take away vanity and arrogance, that they may with a pure conſcience purely vſe the gifts of God, When the minde ſhall be framed to this ſobriety, they ſhall haue a rule of the lawfull vſe. On the other ſide let this moderation be wanting, euen baſe and common delicates are too much. For this is truely ſaid, that oftentimes in fraiſe and courſe cloth dwelleth a purple heart, and ſomtime vnder ſilke and purple, lieth ſimple humility. Let euery man in his degree ſo liue either poorely, or meanely, or plentifully, that they all remember that they are fed of God to liue, not to be riotous: and let them thinke, that this is the law of Chriſtian liberty: if they haue learned with Paul to be contented with thoſe things which they preſently haue: if they can skill both to be humble and to excell: if they be taught in all places and in all things to be both full and hungry, to haue plenty and to ſuffer want. Philip. 4.

10 Herein alſo many men doe erre, becauſe as though their liberty ſhould not be ſound and ſafe vnleſſe it had men witneſſes of it, they doe vndiſcreetly and vnwiſely vſe it. By which vnſeaſonable vſing they many times offend the weake brethren. You may ſee at this day ſome, which thinke that their liberty cannot ſtand, vnleſſe they take poſſeſſion of it by eating of fleſh on Friday. I blame not that they eat: but this falſe opinion muſt be driuen out of their mindes. For they ought to thinke that by their liberty they obtaine no new thing in the ſight of men but before GOD, and that it ſtandeth as well in abſtaining as in vſing. If they vnderſtand that it maketh no matter before GOD, whether they eat fleſh or egges, whether they weare red or blacke garments, that is enough. The conſcience is now free, to which the benefit of ſuch liberty was due. Therefore although they doe afterward abſtaine all their life long from fleſh, and weare alway but one colour, yet they are no leſſe free. Yea therefore becauſe they are free, they doe with a free conſcience abſtaine. But they doe moſt hurtfully offend becauſe they nothing regard the weakeneſſe of their brethren, which we ought ſo to beare with, that we raſhly commit nothing with offence of them. But ſometime alſo it behoueth that our liberty be ſet foorth before men. And this I grant. But there is a meaſure moſt heedfully to be kept, that we caſt not away the care of the weake of whom the Lord hath ſo earneſtly giuen vs charge. Vndiſcreet and vnſeaſonable vſing of liberty.

11 I will in this place therefore ſpeake ſomewhat of offences, in what difference they are to be taken, which are to be auoided, and which to be neglected: whereupon we may afterward determine what place there is for our liberty among men. I like well that common diuiſion, which teacheth that there is of offences one ſort giuen, another taken: for aſmuch as it both hath a plaine teſtimony of the Scripture, and doth not vnfitly expreſſe that which it meaneth. If thou doe any thing by vnſeaſonable lightneſſe, or wantonneſſe, or raſhneſſe, not in order, not in fit place, whereby the ignorant and weake are offended, that ſame may be called an offence giuen by thee: becauſe it came to paſſe by thy fault that ſuch offence was ſtirred vp. And it is alway called an offence giuen in any thing, the fault whereof came from the doer of the thing it ſelfe. It is called an offence taken, when a thing which is otherwiſe not euilly done nor out of time is by euill will or by ſome wrongfull maliciouſneſſe of minde drawen to occaſion of offence. For in this caſe was not offence giuen, but theſe wrongfull conſtruers doe without cauſe take one. With that firſt kind of offence none are offended but the weake: but with this ſecond kinde ſowre natures and Phariſaicall ſcornefull heads are offended. Wherefore we ſhall call the one, the offence of the weake: the other of the Phariſees: and we ſhall ſo temper the vſe of our liberty, that it ought to giue place to the ignorance of the weake brethren, but in no wiſe to the rigorouſneſſe of the Phariſees. For what is to be yeelded to weakneſſe, Paul ſheweth in very many places. Beare (ſaith he) with the weake in Faith. Againe, Let vs not hereafter iudge one another, but this rather, Of offences riſing vnto others in the vſe of our liberty. Rom. 14. 1. & 13.

rather, let there not be laid before our brother any offence or occasion of falling: and many other sayings to the same intent, which are more fit to be read in the place it selfe, than to be here rehearsed. The summe is, that we which are strong should beare with the weaknesse of our brethren, and not please our selues, but euerie one of vs please his neighbour vnto good for edifying. In another place, But see that your libertie be not in any wise an offence to them that are weake. Againe, Eate ye all things that are sold in the shambles, asking no question for conscience: of your conscience (I say) not another mans. Finally bee yee such, that yee giue no offence, neither to the Iewes, nor to the Greekes, nor to the Church of God. Also in another place, Yee are called, brethren, into libertie: onely giue not your libertie to bee an occasion to the flesh, but by charitie serue yee another. Thus it is. Our libertie is not giuen towarde our weake neighbours, whose seruaunts charitie maketh vs in all things: but rather, that hauing peace with God in our mindes, wee may also liue peaceably among men. As for the offence of the Pharisees, how much it is to be regarded, wee learne by the wordes of the Lord, whereby he biddeth them to bee let alone, because they are blinde, and guides of the blinde. The disciples had warned him, that the Pharisees, were offended with his sayings: he answered that they were to be neglected, and the offending of them not to be cared for.

12 But yet still the matter hangeth doubtfull, vnlesse we know who are to be taken for weake, and who for Pharisees: which difference being taken away, I see not among offences what vse at all of libertie remaineth, which might neuer be vsed without great danger. But it seemeth to me that Paul hath most plainely declared both by doctrine and by examples, how far our libertie is either to be tempered or to be defended though with offences. When he tooke Timothie into his companie, he circumcised him: but he could not be brought to circumcise Titus. Here were diuers doings, and no change of purpose or of mind: namely in circumcising Timothie, when he was free from all men, he made himselfe a seruant to all men: and he was made to the Iewes, as a Iew, that he might winne the Iewes: to them that were vnder the law, as if he himselfe were vnder the law, that he might win them which were vnder the law: all things to all men, that he might saue many, as he writeth in another place. Thus we haue a right moderation of liberty, if it may be indifferently restrained with some profit. What he had respect vnto, when he stoutly refused to circumcise Titus, he himselfe testifieth, writing thus: But neither was Titus, which was with me, although he was a Grecian compelled to be circumcised, because of the false brethren which were come in by the way, which had priuily crept in to espy our liberty which we haue in Christ Iesus, that they might bring vs into bondage, to whom we gaue not place by subiection so much as for a time, that the truth of the Gospell might continue with you. There is also a time when we must of necessity defend our liberty, if the same be in weake consciences endangered by the vniust exactings of false Apostles. We must in euery thing study to preserue charity, and haue regard to the edifying of our neighbour. All things (saith he) are lawfull for me, but not all things are expedient: all things are lawful for me, but all things doe not edifie. Let no man seeke that which is his owne, but that which is anothers. There is nothing now plainer by this rule, then that we must vse our liberty, if it may turne to the edifying of our neighbour: but if it be not so expedient for our neighbour, then we must forbeare it. There be some which counterfait the wisedome of Paul in forbearing of liberty, while they doe nothing lesse then apply the same to the duties of charity. For so that they may prouide for their owne quietnesse, they wish all mention of liberty to be buried, wheras it is no lesse behouefull for our neighbours, sometime to vse libertie for their benefit and edification, than in fit place to restraine it for their commodity. But it is the part of a godly man to thinke, that free power in outward things is therefore granted him, that he may be the freer to all duties of charity.

Gal.2.4.
1.Cor.10.23.

Intollerable halting couered with pretence of not offending the weake.

13 But whatsoeuer I haue spoken of auoiding of offences, my meaning is that it be referred to meane and indifferent things. For those things that are necessary to be done, are not to be left vndone for feare of any offence. For as our liberty is to be submitted to charity, so charity it selfe likewise ought to be vnder the pureness of faith.

Verily

Verily heere alſo ought to be had regard of charitie, but ſo farre as to the altars, that is, that for our neighbours ſake we offend not God. Their intemperance is not to be allowed, which doe nothing but with troubleſome turmoiling, and which had rather raſhly to rend all things, than leiſurely to rip them. Neither yet are they to be harkned to, which when they be leaders of men into a thouſand ſorts of vngodlineſſe, yet doe faigne that they muſt behaue themſelues ſo that they be none offence to their neighbors. As though they doe not in the meane edifie the conſciences of their neighbours to euill, ſpecially whereas they ſticke faſt in the ſame mire without any hope of getting out. And the pleaſant men forſooth, whether their neighbour be to be inſtructed with doctrine or example of life, ſay that he muſt be fed with milke, whom they fill with moſt euill and poyſonous opinions. Paul reporteth that he fed the Corinthians with drinking of milke: but if Popiſh Maſſe had then beene among them, would he haue ſacrificed to giue them the drinke of milke? No: For milke is not poyſon. Therefore they lie in ſaying that they feede them whom vnder a ſhew of flattering allurements they cruelly kill. But, graunting that ſuch diſſembling is for a time to be allowed, how long yet will they feede their children with milke? For if they neuer grow bigger, that they may at the leaſt be able to beare ſome light meate, it is certaine that they were neuer brought vp with milke. There are two reaſons that mooue me why I doe not now more ſharply contend with them: firſt, becauſe their follies are ſcarcely worthie to be confuted, ſith they worthily ſeeme filthie in the ſight of all men that haue their ſound wit: ſecondly, becauſe I haue ſufficiently done it in peculiar bookes, I will not now doe a thing alreadie done. Onely let the readers remember this, that with whatſoeuer offences Satan and the world goe about to turne vs away from the ordinances of God, or to ſtay vs from following that which he appointeth, yet we muſt neuertheleſſe goe earneſtly forward: and then, that whatſoeuer dangers hang vpon it, yet is it not at our libertie to ſwarue one haire breadth from the commandement of the ſame God, neither is it lawfull by any pretẽce to attempt any thing but that which he giueth vs leaue. 1. Cor. 3. 2.

14 Now therefore ſith faithfull conſciences hauing receiued ſuch prerogatiue of libertie as we haue aboue ſet foorth, haue by the benefit of Chriſt obtained this that they be not entangled with any ſnares of obſeruations in thoſe things in which the Lord willed that they ſhould be at libertie: we conclude that they are exempt from all power of men. For it is vnmeete, that either Chriſt ſhould loſe the thanke of his ſo great liberalitie, or conſciences their profit. Neither ought we to thinke it a ſlight matter, which we ſee to haue coſt Chriſt ſo deere: namely which he valued not with gold or ſiluer, but with his owne blood: ſo that Paul ſticketh not to ſay, that his death is made void, if we yeeld our ſoules into ſubiection to men. For he trauelleth about nothing elſe in certaine Chapters of the Epiſtle to the Galathians, but to ſhew that Chriſt is darkned or rather deſtroyed to vs, vnleſſe our conſciences ſtand faſt in their libertie, which verily they haue loſt if they may at the will of men be ſnared with the bonds of lawes and ordinances. But as it is a thing moſt worthie to be knowne, ſo it needeth a longer and plainer declaration. For ſo ſoone as any word is ſpoken of the abrogating of the ordinances of men, by and by great troubles are raiſed vp partly by ſeditious men, partly by ſlaunderers, as though the whole obedience of men were at once taken away and ouerthrowne.

The conſciences of faithfull men exempted from humane power.

1. Pet. 1. 18. Gal. 5. 1. & 4.

15 Therefore that none of vs may ſtumble at this ſtone, firſt let vs conſider, that there are two ſorts of gouernement in man: the one ſpirituall, whereby the conſcience is framed to godlineſſe and to the worſhip of God: the other ciuill, whereby man is trained to the duties of humanitie and ciuilitie which are to be kept among men. They are commonly by not vnfit names called the Spirituall and Temporall iuriſdiction, whereby is ſignified, that the firſt of the two formes of gouernment pertaineth to the life of the Soule, and the latter is occupied in the things of this preſent life: not onely in feeding and clothing, but in ſetting foorth of lawes whereby a man may ſpend his life among men holily, honeſtlie, and ſoberly. For, that firſt kinde hath place in the inward minde, this latter kinde ordereth onely the outward behauiours. The one we may call the ſpirituall kingdome, the other the ciuill kingdome. But theſe two, as we haue diuided them, muſt be either of them alway ſeuerally conſidered by themſelues, and when the one is in considering, we must withdraw and turne away our mindes from the thinking vpon the other. For there are in man as it were two worlds, which both diuers Kings and diuers lawes may gouerne. By this putting of difference shall come to passe, that that which the Gospel teacheth of the spirituall liberty, we shall not wrongfully draw to the ciuell order, as though Christians were according to the outward gouernment lesse subiect to the lawes of men, because their consciences are at liberty before God: as though they were therfore exempt from all bondage of the flesh, because they are free according to the spirit. Againe, because euen in those ordinances which seeme to pertaine to the spirituall kingdome, there may be some errour, we must also put difference betweene these, which are to be taken for lawfull as agreeable to the word of God, and on the other side which ought not to haue place among the godly. Of the Ciuill gouernement there shall be elsewhere place to speake. Also of the Ecclesiastical lawes I omit to speake at this time, because a more full entreating of it shall be fit for the fourth booke, where we shall speake of the power of the Church. But of this discourse, let this be the conclusion, The question being (as I haue said) of it selfe not very darke or entangled, doth for this cause accumber many, because they doe not subtilly enough put difference betweene the outward court as they call it, and the court of conscience. Moreouer this encreaseth the difficultie, that Paul teacheth that the magistrate ought to be obeied, not onely for feare of punishment, but for conscience. Whereupon followeth that consciences are also bound by the ciuill lawes. If it were so, all should come to naught which wee both haue spoken and shall speake of the spirituall gouernement. For the loosing of this knot, first it is good to know what is conscience. And the definition thereof is to be fetched from the deriuation of the word. For, as when men doe with minde and vnderstanding conceiue the knowledge of things, they are thereby said (Scire) to know, whereupon also is deriued the name of Science: Knowledge: so when they haue a feeling of the iudgement of God, as a witnesse ioyned with them, which doth not suffer them to hide their sinnes but that they be drawen accused to the iudgement seate of God, that same feeling is called Conscience. For it is a certaine meane betweene God and man, because it suffereth not man to suppresse in himselfe that which he knoweth but pursueth him so far till it bring him to guiltinesse. This is it which Paul meaneth, where he saith that conscience doth togither witnesse with men, when their thoughts doe accuse or acquite them in the iudgement of God. A simple knowledge might remaine as enclosed within man. Therefore this feeling which presenteth man to the iudgement of God, is as it were a keeper ioyned to man, to marke and espy all his secrets, that nothing may remaine buried in darkenesse. Whereupon also commeth that old Prouerbe, Conscience is a thousand witnesses. And for the same reason Peter hath set the examination of a good conscience for the quietnesse of minde, when being perswaded of the grace of Christ, we doe without feare present our selues before God. And the author of the Epistle to the Hebrues, setteth to haue no more conscience of sinne, insteed of, to be deliuered or acquited that sinne may no more accuse vs.

In what sort the conscience is bound or free.

16 Therefore as workes haue respect to men, so conscience is referred to God, so that a good conscience is no thing else but the inward pureneſse of the heart. In which sense Paul writeth that charity is the fulfilling of the law out of a pure conscience and faith not fained. Afterward also in the same chapter he sheweth how much it differeth from vnderstanding, saying that some had suffered shipwrake from the faith, because they had forsaken a good Conscience. For in these words he signifieth it is a liuely affection to worship God, and a syncere endeuour to liue holily and godlily. Sometime indeed it extendeth also to men, as in Luke where the same Paul protesteth that he endeuoured himselfe to walke with a good conscience toward God and men. But this was therefore said, because the fruites of good conscience doe flow and come euen to men. But in speaking properly, it hath respect to God onely, as I haue already said. Hereby it commeth to passe that the law is said to binde the conscience, which simply bindeth a man without respect of men, or without hauing any consideration of them. As for example: God commandeth not onely to keepe the minde chaste and pure from all lust, but also forbiddeth all maner of filthinesse of words and outward wantonneſſe whatſoeuer it be. To the keeping of this law my conſcience is ſubiect although there liued not one man in the world. So he that behaueth himſelfe intemperately, not onely ſinneth in this that he giueth an euill example to the brethren, but alſo hath his conſcience bound with guiltineſſe before God. In things that are of themſelues meane, there is another conſideration. For we ought to abſteine from them if they breede any offence, but the conſcience ſtill being free. So Paul ſpeaketh of ſleſh conſecrate to Idols. If any (ſaith he) mooue any doubt, touch it not for conſcience ſake: I ſay for conſcience, not thine but the others. A faithfull man ſhould ſinne, which being firſt warned ſhould neuertheleſſe eate ſuch fleſh. But howſoeuer in reſpect of his brother, it is neceſſarie for him to abſtaine as it is preſcribed of God, yet he ceaſeth not to keepe ſtill the libertie of conſcience. Thus we ſee how this lawe binding the outward worke, leaueth the conſcience vnbound. 1.Cor.10.28.

THE TVVENTIETH CHAPTER.

Of Prayer, which is the chiefe exerciſe of faith, and whereby we daily receiue the benefits of God.

OF theſe things that haue beene hitherto ſpoken, we plainely perceiue how needy and void man is of all good things, and how he wanteth all helps of ſaluation. Wherefore if he ſeeke for releefes whereby he may ſuccour his needineſſe, he muſt go out of himſelfe and get them elſewhere. This is afterward declared vnto vs, that the Lord doth of his own free will and liberality giue himſelfe to vs in his Chriſt, in whom he offereth vs in ſteede of our miſerie all felicitie, in ſteede of our neede welthineſſe, in whom he openeth to vs the heauenly treaſures: that our whole faith ſhould behold his beloued Sonne, that vpon him our whole expectation ſhould hang, in him our whole hope ſhould ſticke and reſt. This verily is the ſecret and hidden Philoſophie, which cannot be wrung out with Logicall arguments: but they learne it whoſe eyes God hath opened that they may ſee light in his light. But ſince that we are taught by faith to acknowledge that whatſoeuer we haue neede of, whatſoeuer wanteth in vs, the ſame is in God and in our Lord Ieſus Chriſt, namely in whom the Lord willed the whole fulneſſe of his largeſſe to reſt, that from thence we ſhould all drawe as out of a moſt plentifull fountaine: now it remaineth that we ſeeke in him, and with prayers craue of him that which we haue learned to be in him. Otherwiſe to know God to be the Lord and giuer of all good things, which allureth vs to pray to him, and not to go to him and pray to him: ſhould ſo nothing profit vs, that it ſhould be all one as if a man ſhould neglect a treaſure ſhewed him buried and digged in the ground. Therefore the Apoſtle to ſhew that true faith cannot be idle from calling vpon God, hath ſet this order: that as of the Goſpell ſpringeth faith, ſo by it our harts are framed to call vpon the name of God. And this is the ſame thing which he had a little before ſaid, that the ſpirit of adoption, which ſealeth in our harts the witneſſe of the Goſpell, raiſeth vp our ſpirits that they dare ſhew foorth their deſires to God, ſtirre vp vnſpeakeable gronings, and cry with confidence Abba Father. It is meete therefore that this laſt point, becauſe it was before but onely ſpoken of by the way and as it were lightly touched, ſhould now be more largely intreated of. Our owne emptineſſe and the fulneſſe of all riches laid vp in Chriſt ſhould allure vs vnto prayer. Rom.8.26.

2 This therefore we get by the benefit of prayer, that we attaine to thoſe riches which are laid vp for vs with the heauenlie father. For there is a certaine communicating of men with God, whereby they entring into the ſanctuarie of heauen, doe in his owne preſence call to him touching his promiſes: that the ſame thing which they beleeued him affirming only in word not to be vaine, they may when neede ſo requireth finde in experience. Therefore we ſee that there is nothing ſet forth to vs to be looked for at the hand of the Lord, which we are not alſo commanded to craue with prayers: ſo true it is that by prayer are digged vp the treaſures, which our faith hath looked vpon being ſhewed to it by the goſpell of the Lord. Now how neceſſarie and how many waies profitable this exerciſe of prayer is, it can by no words be ſufficientlie declared. Vndoubtedly it is not without cauſe that the heauenly father teſtifieth, that the onely fortreſſe of ſaluation is in the calling vpon his name, namely By prayer we are both enriched with grace, and in diſtreſſe quieted.

whereby we call to vs the presence both of his prouidence, by which he watcheth to take care of our matters: and of his power, by which he sustaineth vs being weake and in a manner fainting: and of his goodnesse, by which he receiueth vs into fauour being miserably loaden with sinnes: finally whereby we call him all whole, to giue himselfe present to vs. Hereby groweth singular rest and quietnesse to our consciences. For when we haue disclosed to the Lord the necessitie which distressed vs, we largely rest though it were but in this onely that none of our euils is hidden from him, whom we are perswaded both to be most well willing toward vs, and most able to prouide well for vs.

It is not a needlesse thing to pray euen for those things which before we pray we know that God is purposed to bestow.

3 But (will some man say) did not he know without any to put him in minde of it, both in what part we be distressed, and what is expedient for vs: so that it may seeme after a certaine manner superfluous, that he should be troubled with our prayers, as though he winked or slept, vntill he were awaked with our voyce? But they which so reason, marke not to what end the Lord hath instructed them that be his to pray: for he ordeined it not so much for his owne cause as rather for ours. He willeth in deede, as right it is, that his due be rendred to him, when they acknowledge to come from him whatsoeuer men require or doe perceiue to make for their profit, and doe testifie the same with wishings. But the profit also of this sacrifice wherewith he is worshipped, commeth to vs. Therefore how much more boldly the holie fathers gloriously talked both to themselues and other of the benefits of God, so much the more sharply they were pricked forward to pray. The onely example of Elias shall be enough for vs, which being sure of the counsell of God, after that he not rashly had promised raine to Achab, yet busily prayeth betweene his knees, and sendeth his seruant seuen times to espie it: not for that he did discredit the oracle of God, but because he knew that it was his dutie, least his faith should waxe drowsie and sluggish, to lay vp his desires with God. Wherefore although while we lie senseless and so dull that we perceiue not our owne miseries, he waketh and watcheth for vs, and sometime also helpeth vs vndesired, yet it much behooueth vs, that he be continually called vpon of vs, that our heart may be enflamed with earnest and feruent desire to seeke, loue, and worship him, while we accustome our selues in euery necessitie to flee to him as to our shoote-anchor. Againe, that no desire and no wish at all may enter into our mind, whereof we should be ashamed to make him witnesse, while we learne to present our wishes, yea and to poure out our whole heart before his eyes. Then that we may be framed to receiue all his benefits with true thankefulnesse of minde, yea and with outward thanksgiuing, of which we are put in minde by our prayer that they come to vs from his hand. Moreouer, that when we haue obtained that which we desired, being perswaded that he hath answered to our prayers, we may be thereby the more feruently caried to thinke vpon his kindnesse, and therewithall embrace with greater pleasure those things which we acknowledge to haue bene obteined by prayer. Last of all, that very vse and experience may according to the measure of our weakenesse assure our minds of his prouidence when we vnderstand that he not onely promiseth that he will neuer faile vs, and that he doth of his owne accord open vs the entrie to call to him in the very point of necessitie, but also hath his hand alway stretched out to help them that be his, and that he doth not feede them with words, but defendeth them with present help. For these causes, the most kind Father, although he neuer sleepeth or is sluggish, yet oftentimes maketh a shew as though he slept and were sluggish, that so he may exercise vs, which are otherwise slothfull and sluggish to come to him, to aske of him, to require him to our owne great benefit. Therefore they doe too foolishly, which to call away the minds of men from prayer, babble that the prouidence of God, which maketh for the safekeeping of all things, is in vaine wearied without callings vpon him: Whereas the Lord contrariwise not in vaine testifieth that he is nigh to all them that call vpon his name in the trueth. And of none other sort is that which other doe triflingly say, that it is superfluous to aske those things which the Lord is of his owne will readie to giue: whereas euen the very same things which flowe to vs from his owne free liberalitie, he will haue vs acknowledge to be graunted to our prayers. Which thing that notable sentence of the Psalme doeth testifie, wherewherewith many like ſayings doe accord. The eies of the Lord are vpon the righteous, and his eares vnto their praiers. Which ſaying ſo ſetteth out the prouidence of God bent of his owne accord to prouide for the ſafety of the godly, that yet he ommitteth not the exerciſe of faith, whereby ſlouthfulneſſe is wiped from the mindes of men. The eies of God therefore doe wake, that he may ſuccour the neceſſity of the blinde: but he will againe on our behalfes heare our gronings, that he may the better prooue his loue toward vs. And ſo both are true, that the watchman of Iſrael ſleepeth not, nor ſlumbereth, and yet that he ſitteth ſtill as hauing forgotten vs when he ſeeth vs dull and dumme. Pſal. 34. 16. Pſal. 121. 8.

4 Now, to frame praier rightlie and well, let this be the firſt rule, that we be no otherwiſe framed in minde and heart, than becommeth them that enter into talke with God. Which verily we ſhall attaine as touching the minde, if the ſame being free from fleſhly cares and thoughts wherewith it may be called away or withdrawen from the right and pure beholding of God, doe not onely bend it ſelfe wholy to praier, but alſo ſo much as is poſſible be lifted vp and caried aboue it ſelfe. Neither doe I heere require a minde ſo at liberty, that it be pricked and nipped with no care, whereas contrariwiſe the feruentneſſe of praier muſt by ſuch careſulneſſe be kindled in vs (as we ſee that the holy ſeruants of God do ſometime declare great torments, much more carefulneſſes, when they ſay they vtter to the Lord a bewailing voice out of the deepe depth, and out of the middeſt of the iawes of death.) But I ſay that all ſtrange and foraine cares muſt be driuen away, wherewith the minde it ſelfe wandring hither and thither is carried about, and being drawne out of heauen is preſſed downe to the earth. I meane by this that it muſt be lifted vp aboue it ſelfe, that it may not bring into the ſight of God any of thoſe things which our blinde and fooliſh reaſon is wont to imagine, nor may hold it ſelfe bound within the compaſſe of her owne vanity, but riſe vp to pureneſſe worthie for God. The firſt rule of framing rightly our praiers is to voide our cogitations as much as may be from all fleſhly and earthly cares.

5 Both theſe things are ſpecially worthie to be noted, that whoſoeuer prepareth himſelfe to pray, ſhould thereto apply all his ſenſes and endeuours, and not (as men are wont) be diuerſly drawen with wandering thoughts: becauſe there is nothing more contrary to the reuerence of God, than ſuch lightneſſe which is a witneſſe of too wanton licentiouſneſſe and looſe from all feare. In which thing we muſt ſo much more earneſtly labour as we finde it more hard. For no man can be bent ſo to pray, but that he ſhall feele many by thoughts to creepe vpon him, either to breake off, or by ſome bowing and ſwaruing to hinder the courſe of his praier. But here let vs call to minde, how great an vnworthineſſe it is, when God receiueth vs vnto familiar talke with him, to abuſe his ſo great gentleneſſe, with mingling holy and prophane things together, when the reuerence of him holdeth not our mindes faſt bound vnto him: but as if we talked with ſome meane man, we doe in the middeſt of our praier, forſaking him, leape hither and thither. Let vs therefore know that none doe rightly and well prepare themſelues to praier, but they whom the maieſty of God pearceth, that they come to it vncumbred of earthly cares and affections. And that is meant by the ceremony of lifting vp of hands, that men ſhould remember that they be farre diſtant from God, vnleſſe they lift vp their ſenſes on high. As alſo it is ſaid in the Pſalme. To thee haue I lifted vp my ſoule. And the Scripture oftentimes vſeth this maner of ſpeech, to lift vp praier: that they which deſire to be heard of God, ſhould not ſit ſtill in their dregs. Let this be the ſumme: that how much more liberally God dealeth with vs, gently alluring vs to vnload our cares into his boſome, ſo much leſſe excuſable are we vnleſſe his ſo excellent and incomparable benefit doe with vs ouerwey all other things and draw vs vnto it ſelfe, that we may earneſtly apply our endeuours and ſenſes to pray: which cannot be done vnleſſe our minde by ſtrongly wraſtling with the hinderances doe riſe vp aboue them. Another point wee haue ſet foorth, that wee aske no more than God giueth leaue. For though hee biddeth vs to poure out our hearts, yet he doth indifferently giue looſe reines to fooliſh and froward affections: and when he promiſeth that he will doe according to the will of the godly, he proceedeth not to ſo tender bearing with them that he ſubmitteth himſelfe to their will. But in both theſe points men do commonly much offend. For not only the moſt part of men The preparation of the minde vnto prayer is a thing of great both weight and difficulty. Pſal. 25. 14.

Psal.62.9. presume without shame, without reuerence, to speake to God for their follies, and shameleslly to present to his throne whatsoeuer liked them in their dreame: but also so great foolishnesse or senseleslle dulnesse possesseth them, that they dare thrust into the hearing of God, euen all their most filthie desires, whereof they would greatly be ashamed to make men priuie. Some prophane men haue laughed to scorne, yea and detested this boldnesse, yet the vice it selfe hath alway reigned. And hereby it came to passe that ambitious men haue chosen Iupiter to be their Patrone: couetous men, Mercurie: the desirous of learning Apollo and Minerua: warriers, Mars: and lecherous folke, Venus. Like as at this day (as I haue euen now touched) men doe in prayers graunt more licence to their vnlawfull desires, than when they sportingly talke with their egals. But God suffereth not his gentlenesse to be so mocked: but claiming to himselfe his right, maketh our prayers subiect to his authoritie, and restraineth them with a bridle. Therefore we must keepe fast this saying of Iohn: This is our affiance, that if we aske any thing according to his will, he heareth vs. But for as much as our abilities are farre from being sufficient to performe so great perfection, we must seeke a remedie to help vs. As we ought to bend the sight of our mind to God, so the affection of the hart ought also to follow to the same end. But both doe stay farre beneath it, yea rather doe faint and faile or be caried a contrarie way. Wherefore God to succour this weakenesse, in our prayers giueth the spirit to be our schoolemaster, to instruct vs what is right, and to gouerne our affections. For, because we know not what we ought to pray as we ought, the spirit commeth to our succour, and maketh intercession for vs with vnspeakable gronings, not that it in deede either prayeth or groneth but stirreth vp in vs affiance, desires, and sighings, which the strength of nature were not able to conceiue. And not without cause Paul calleth them vnspeakable gronings which so the faithfull send foorth by the guiding of the spirit, because they which are truly exercised in prayers, are not ignorant that they be so holden in perplexitie with blinde cares, that they scarcely finde what is profitable for them to speake: yea while they goe about to vtter stammering words they sticke fast incumbred. Whereupon it followeth, that the gift of praying rightly is a singular gift. These things are not spoken to this purpose, that we fauouring our owne slothfulnesse should giue ouer the charge of praying to the spirit of God, and lie dull in that careleslnesse, to which we are too much inclined (as there are heard the wicked sayings of some, that we must lie negligentlie gaping to wait vntill he preuent our mindes occupied elsewhere) but rather that we loathing our owne slothfulnesse and sluggishnesse, should craue such help of the Spirit. Neither doeth Paul, when he biddeth vs to pray in Spirit, therefore cease to exhort vs to wakefulnesse: meaning that the instinct of the Spirit so vseth his force to frame our prayers, that it nothing hindereth or slacketh our owne endeuour: because God will in this behalfe proue how effectually faith moueth our hearts.

1.Iohn 5.14.

Rom.8.26.

2.Cor.14.26.

A second rule for direction of prayer is the sense and feeling of our own wants.

6 Let also another lawe be, that in praying we alway feele our owne want, and that earnestly thinking how we stand in neede of those things that we aske, we ioyne with our prayer an earnest yea feruent affection to obtaine. For many doe slightly for manners sake recite prayers after a prescribed forme, as though they rendered a certaine taske to God: and although they confesse that this is a necessarie remedie for their euils, because it is to their destruction to be without the help of God which they craue: yet it appeareth that they doe this duetie for custome, forasmuch as in the meane time their mindes are cold, and do not wey what they aske. The generall and confuse feeling indeede of their necessitie leadeth them hereunto: but it doth not stirre them as it were in a present case to aske releefe of their neede. Now what thinke we to be more hatefull or mote detestable to God than this faining, when a man asketh forgiueneslse of sinnes, in the meane time either thinking that he is not a sinner, or not thinking vpon this that he is a sinner, euen wherewith God himselfe is plainely mocked? But of such peruerseneslse (as I haue said) mankinde is full, that for manners sake they many times aske many things of God, which they certainely iudge that without his liberalitie to come to them from some other where, or that they haue them alreadie remaining with them. The fault of some other seemeth to be lighter and yet not tollerable, that they which haue onely conceiued this principle, that that we muſt ſacrifice to God with praiers, doe mumble vp praiers without any muſing of minde vpon them. But the godly muſt principally take heede, that they neuer come into the ſight of God to aske any thing, but becauſe they doe both boile with earneſt affection of heart, and doe therewithall deſire to obtaine it of him. Yea, and alſo though in thoſe things which we aske onely to the glory of God, we ſeeme not at the firſt ſight to prouide for our owne neceſſitie, yet the ſame ought to be asked with no leſſe feruentneſſe and vehementneſſe of deſire. As, when we pray that his name be hallowed, we muſt (as I may ſo ſpeake) feruently hunger and thirſt for that hallowing.

7 If any man obiect, that we are not alway driuen with the like neceſſity to pray, I grant the ſame indeed: and this difference is profitably taught vs of Iames: Is any man heauy among you? Let him pray. Who ſo is merie, let him ſing. Therfore euen common feeling teacheth vs, that becauſe we are too ſlothfull, therefore, as the matter requireth we are the more ſharply pricked forward of God to pray earneſtly. And this Dauid calleth the fit time, becauſe (as he teacheth in many other places) how much more hardly troubles, diſcommodities, feares, and other kindes of tentations doe preſſe vs, ſo much freer acceſſe is open for vs, as though God did call vs vnto him. But yet no leſſe true is that ſaying of Paul, that we muſt at all times: becauſe howſoeuer things proſperouſly flow according to our hearts deſire, and matter of mirth doth compaſſe vs on euery ſide, yet there is no minute of time wherein our neede doth not exhort vs to pray. If a man haue abundance of wine and wheat: yet ſith he cannot enioy one morſell of bread but by the continuall grace of God, whole cellers or barnes full ſhall be no let why he ſhould not craue daily bread. Now if we call to minde how many dangers doe euery moment hange ouer vs, the very feare it ſelfe will teach vs that we haue no time free from praier. But this we may better perceiue in ſpirituall things. For, when ſhall ſo many ſinnes, whereof we know our ſelues guilty, ſuffer vs to ſit ſtill without care and not in humblewiſe craue pardon both of the fault and the paine? When doe tentations graunt vs truce, ſo that we neede not to haſt vnto helpe? Moreouer the deſire of the kingdome and glorie of God ought ſo to plucke vs to it ſelfe, not by fittes but continually, that it ſhould alway be fit time for vs. Therefore not without cauſe we are ſo oft commanded to pray continually. I doe not yet ſpeake of perſeuerance in prayer, whereof mention ſhall be made hereafter: but when the Scripture warneth vs that we ought to pray continually, it accuſeth our ſlouthfulneſſe, becauſe we doe not perceiue how neceſſarie this care and diligence is for vs. By this rule all hypocriſie and craftineſſe of lying to God, is debarred, yea driuen farre away from praier. God promiſeth that he will be neere to all them that call vpon him in trueth, and he pronounceth that they ſhall finde him which ſeeke him with their whole heart. But they aſpire not thither which pleaſe themſelues in their own filthineſſe. Therfore aright praier requireth Repentance. Whereupon this is commonly ſaid in the Scriptures, that God heareth not wicked doers, and that their prayers are accurſed, like as their ſacrifices alſo be: becauſe it is rightfull that they finde the eares of GOD ſhut, which doe locke vp their owne hearts, and that they ſhould not finde God eaſie to bow, which doe with their owne hardneſſe prouoke his ſtiffeneſſe. In Eſay he threatneth after this maner. When yee ſhall multiplie your prayers, I will not heare you: for your hands are full of bloud. Againe in Ieremie: I haue cried and they haue refuſed to heare: they ſhall likewiſe crie, and I will not heare: becauſe he taketh it for a moſt high diſhonour, that wicked men ſhould boaſt of his couenant, which do in all their life defile his holy name. Wherefore in Eſay he complaineth that when the Iewes come neere to him with their lips, their heart is far from him. He ſpeaketh not this of onely praiers, but affirmeth that he abhorreth faigning in all the parts of worſhipping him. To which purpoſe maketh that ſaying of Iames. Yee aske, and receiue not: becauſe yee aske ill, that yee may ſpend it vpon your pleaſures. It is true indeede (as we ſhall againe ſhew a little hereafter) that the praiers of the godlie, which they powre out, doe not reſt vpon their owne worthineſſe: yet is not that admonition of Iohn ſuperfluous, if we aske any thing wee ſhall receiue it of him, becauſe we keepe his commandements: foraſmuch as an euill conſcience ſhutteth the gate againſt vs. Whereupon followeth that none doe rightly pray, nor are heard, but the pure worſhippers of God. Therefore whoſoeuer prepareth himſelfe

Although there be no time wherin praier needeth not, yet at ſometime we feele a ſpeciall neceſſity thereof, but reape no benefit thereby at any time without a loathing of our owne filthineſſe which cannot be in vs but by repentance.

himselfe to pray, let him be loathfull to himselfe in his owne euils, and (which cannot be done without Repentance) let him put on the person and minde of a begger.

The third rule of prayer is the vnfained humbling and abasing of our selues.

8 Hereunto let the third rule be ioyned, that whosoeuer presenteth himselfe before God to pray, should forsake all thinking of his owne glorie, put off all opinion of worthinesse, and finally giue ouer all trust of himselfe, giuing in the abasing of himselfe the glorie wholie to God: least if we take any thing be it neuer so little to our selues, we doe with our owne swelling fall away from his face. Of this submission which throweth downe all height, we haue often examples in the seruants of God: among whom the holier that euerie one is, so much the more he is throwen downe when he commeth into the sight of the Lord. So Daniel, whom the Lord himselfe commended with so great title of praise, said: We powre not out our praiers before thee in our righteousnesses, but in thy great mercie. Heare vs Lord, Lord be mercifull to vs: Heare vs, and doe these things that we aske, For thine owne sake: because thy name is called vpon ouer the people and ouer thy holy place. Neither doth he by a crooked figure (as men sometime speake) mingle himselfe with the multitude as one of the people, but rather seuerally confesseth his owne guiltinesse and humbly fleeth to the sanctuarie of forgiuenesse, as he expresly saith: When I confessed my sinnes and the sinnes of my people. And this humblenesse Daniel also setteth out with his owne example, when he saith, Enter not into iudgement with thy seruant, because in thy sight euerie one that liueth shall not be iustified. In such maner Esay praieth: Loe, thou art angrie because we haue sinned, the world is founded in thy waies, therefore we shall be saued: And we haue beene all filled with vncleanesse, and all our righteousnesse as a defiled cloth: and we haue all withered away as a leafe, and our iniquities doe scatter vs abroad as the winde: and there is none that calleth vpon thy name, that raiseth vp himselfe to take hold of thee: because thou hast hid thy face from vs, and hast made vs to pine away in the hand of our wickednesse. Now therefor O Lord, thou art our father, we are clay, thou art our fashioner, and we are the worke of thy hande. Be not angrie O Lord, neither remember wickednesse for euer. Behold, looke vpon vs, we are all thy people. Loe, how they stand vpon no affiance at all, but vpon this onely, that thinking vpon this that they be Gods, they despaire not that he will haue care of them. Likewise Ieremie. If our iniquities answere against vs, deale thou for thy names sake. For it is both most truly and most holie written, of whomsoeuer it be, which being written by an vnknowen author is fathered vpon the Prophet Baruc: A soule heauie and desolate for the greatnesse of euill, crooked, and weake, a hungrie soule, and fainting eies giue glorie to thee O Lord. Not according to the righteousnesses of our fathers doe we poure out praiers in thy sight, and aske mercie before thy face O Lord our God: but because thou art mercifull, haue mercie vpon vs, because we haue sinned before thee.

Ier. 14. 7

The preface of our praier must be the humble acknowledgmēt of sinnes.

9 Finally the beginning and also the preparing of praying rightly, is crauing of pardon, with an humble and plaine confession of fault. For neither is it to be hoped, that euen the holiest man may obtaine any thing of God, vntill he be freely reconciled to him: neither is it possible that God may be fauourable to any but them whom he pardoneth. Wherefore it is no maruell if the faithfull doe with this key open to themselues the doore to pray. Which we learne out of many places of the Psalmes. For David when he asketh another thing, saith: Remember not the sinnes of my youth, remember me according to thy mercie for thy goodnesses sake O Lord. Againe, Looke vpon my affliction, and my labour, and forgiue all my sinnes. Where we also see that it is not enough, if we euerie seuerall day doe call our selues to account for our new sinnes, if we doe not also remember those sins which might seeme to haue beene long agoe forgotten. For, the same Prophet in another place, hauing confessed one hainous offence by this occasion returneth euen to his mothers wombe wherein he had gathered the infection: not to make the fault seeme lesse by the corruption of nature, but that heaping together the sinnes of his whole life, how much more rigorous he is in condemning himselfe, so much more easie he may finde God to intreat. But although the holy ones doe not alway in expresse wordes aske forgiuenesse of sins, yet if we diligently weigh their praiers which the Scripture rehearseth, we shall easily finde that which I say, that they gathered a minde to pray of the onely mercie of God, and so alway tooke their beginning beginning at appeasing him: becauſe if euerie man examine his owne conſcience, ſo farre is he from being bolde to open his eares familiarlie with God, that he trembleth at euery comming toward him, except that he ſtandeth vpon truſt of mercie and pardon. There is alſo another ſpeciall confeſſion, where they aske releaſe of paines, that they alſo pray to haue their ſinnes forgiuen: becauſe it were an abſurditie to will that the effect be taken away while the cauſe abideth. For we muſt beware that God be fauourable vnto vs, before that he teſtifie his fauour with outward ſignes: becauſe both he himſelfe will keepe this order, and it ſhould little profit vs to haue him beneficiall, vnleſſe our conſcience feeling him appeaſed ſhould throughly make him louely vnto vs. Which we are alſo taught by the anſwere of Chriſt. For when he had decreed to heale the man ſicke of the Palſey, he ſaid, Thy ſins are forgiuen thee: lifting vp our mindes thereby to that which is chiefly to be wiſhed, that God doth firſt receiue vs into fauour, and then ſhew foorth the fruit of reconciliation in helping vs. But beſide that ſpeciall confeſſion of preſent guiltineſſe, whereby the faithfull make ſupplication to obtaine pardon of euerie ſpeciall fault and paine, that generall preface, which procureth fauour to praiers, is neuer to be omitted, vnleſſe they be grounded vpon the free mercie of God, they ſhall neuer obtaine any thing of God. Whereunto may bee referred that ſaying of Iohn: If we confeſſe our ſinnes, he is faithfull and righteous to forgiue vs and cleanſe vs from all iniquitie. For which cauſe it behooued prayers in the time of the law to be hallowed with expiation of bloud, that they might be acceptable, and that ſo the people ſhould be put in minde that they are vnwoorthie of ſo great a prerogatiue of honour, till being cleanſed from their defilings they ſhould of the onely mercie of God conceiue affiance to pray.

Math. 9. 1.

10 But whereas the holie ones ſeeme ſometime for the entreating of God to alleadge the helpe of their owne righteouſnes (as when Dauid ſaith:) Keepe my ſoule, becauſe I am good. Againe Ezechias: Remember Lord I beſeech thee, that I haue walked before thee in trueth, and haue done good in thine eies, by ſuch formes of ſpeaking they meane nothing elſe than by their verie regeneration to teſtifie themſelues to bee the ſeruants and children of God, to whom he himſelfe pronounceth that hee will be mercifull. He teacheth by the Prophet (as we haue already ſeene) that his eies are vpon the righteous, and his eares vnto their praiers. Againe by the Apoſtle, that we ſhall obtaine whatſoeuer we aske, if we keepe his commandements. In which ſayings he doth not value praier by the worthineſſe of workes: but his will is ſo to ſtabliſh their affiance, whoſe owne conſcience wel aſſureth them of an vnfained vprightneſſe and innocency, ſuch as all the faithfull ought to be. For the ſame is taken out of the very truth of God, which the blinde man that had his ſight reſtored, ſaith in Iohn, that God heareth not ſinners: if we vnderſtand ſinners after the common vſe of the Scripture, for ſuch as without all deſire of righteouſneſſe doe altogether ſleepe and reſt vpon their ſinnes: for aſmuch as no heart can euer breake foorth into vnfained calling vpon God which doth not alſo aſpire to godlineſſe. Therefore with ſuch promiſes accord the praiers of the holy ones, wherein they make mention of their owne pureneſſe or innocency that they may feele that to bee giuen them which is to be looked for of all the ſeruants of God. Again it is then commonly found that they vſe this kind of praier, when they doe in the preſence of the Lord compare themſelues with their enimies, from whoſe vniuſt dealing they wiſhed themſelues to be deliuered by his hand. In this comparison it is no maruell if they brought foorth their righteouſneſſe, and ſimplicity of heart to mooue him the rather by the rightfulneſſe of their cauſe to helpe them. This therefore we take not away from the godly hart of a good man, but that he may vſe the pureneſſe of his conſcience before the Lord, to ſtrengthen himſelfe in the promiſes wherewith the Lord comforteth and vpholdeth his true worſhippers: but our meaning is, that the truſt of obtaining ſtand vpon the onely mercy of God, laying away all thinking of their owne deſeruing.

Prayer is fruitleſſe where there is not an vnfained aſpiring vnto godlines, ſuch as Dauid and Ezechias mention in their praying as warranted thereby that they could not pray in vaine.

11 The fourth rule is, that being ſo throwen downe and ſubdued with true humility, we ſhould neuertheleſſe with certaine hope of obtaining be encouraged to pray. Theſe be things indeed contrary in ſhew to ioyne with the feeling of the iuſt vengeance of Gods ſure affiance of fauour: which things doe yet very well agree together, if if the onely goodnesse of God raise vs vp being oppressed with our owne euils. For as we haue before taught that repentance and faith are knit as companions together with an vnseparable bond: of which yet the one afraieth vs, the other cheareth vs: so in praiers they must mutually meete together. And this agreement Dauid expresseth in few words: I (saith he) will in the multitude of thy goodnesse enter into thy house: I will worship in the Temple of thy holinesse with feare. Vnder the goodnes of God he comprehendeth faith, in the meane time not excluding feare: because not onely his maiesty driueth vs to reuerence, but also our owne vnworthinesse holdeth vs in feare forgetting all pride and assuredneſſe. But I meane not such affiance, which should stroke the minde loosed from all feeling of carefulnesse with a sweete and full quietnesse. For, to rest so peaceably is the doing of them which hauing all things flowing as they would wish it, are touched with no care, are kindled with no desire, doe swell with no feare. And it is a very good spurre to the holy ones to call vpon God, when being distressed with their owne necessity, they are vexed with most great vnquietnesse, and are almost dismaide in themselues, till faith come in fit time to their succours, because in such distresses the goodnesse of God so shineth to them, that they doe indeed grone being wearied with weight of present euils, they are also in paine and greeued with feare of greater: yet being so vpholden by it, they both releeue and comfort the hardnesse of bearing them, and doe hope for escape and deliuerance. Therefore the praier of a godly man must arise out of both affections, must also containe and shew both: namely to grone for present euils, and to be carefully afraide of new, and yet therewithall to flie to God, not doubting that he is ready to reach his helping hand. For God is maruellously prouoked to wrath by our distrustfulnesse, if we aske of him the benefits which we hope not to obtaine. Therefore there is nothing more agreeable with the nature of praiers, than that this law be prescribed and appointed to them, that they breake not forth rashly, but follow faith going before them. To this principle Christ calleth vs all with this saying: I say vnto you, whatsoeuer things ye require, beleeue that ye shal receiue them, and they shal happen to you. The same also he confirmeth in another place. Whatsoeuer ye aske in praier beleeuing, yee shal receiue. Wherwith agreeth Iames saying, If any need wisedom, let him aske it of him which giueth to al men freely, and vpbraideth not: but let him aske in faith not doubting. Wherein setting doubting as contrarie to faith, he doth most fitly expresse the nature of it. And no lesse is that to be noted which he addeth, that they obtaine nothing which call vpon God in wauering and doubt, and doe not determine in their hearts whether they shall be heard or no. Whom he also compareth to waues which are diuersly tossed and driuen about of the winde. Whereupon in another place he calleth a right praier, the praier of faith. Againe when God so oft affirmeth that he will giue to euery one according to his faith, he signifieth that we obtaine nothing without faith. Finally it is faith that obtaineth whatsoeuer is granted by praier. This is meant by that notable saying of Paul, which the foolish men doe take no heede vnto. How shall any man call vpon him, in whom he hath not beleeued? But who shall beleeue, vnlesse he haue heard? But faith commeth of hearing, and hearing of the worde of God. For conueying by degrees the beginning of praier from faith, he plainly affirmeth that God cannot be syncerely called vpon of any other, than them to whom by the preaching of the Gospell his mercifulnesse and gentlenesse hath beene made knowen, and familiarly declared.

Psal. 5. 8.

Mat. 11. 24. Mat. 21. 22.

Iam. 5. 15.

Rom. 10. 14.

It is a thing not absurd but most necessarie, that they which call vpon God haue an assured confidence in his fauour, and a stedfast feeling of his good will.

12 This necessitie our aduersaries doe not thinke vpon. Therefore when we bid the faithfull to hold with assured confidence of minde that God is fauourable and beareth good will to them, they thinke that we speake a most great absurditie. But if they had any vse of true praier, they would truely vnderstand that God cannot be rightlie called vpon without that stedfast feeling of Gods good will. Sith no man can well perceiue the force of faith, but he which by experience feeleth it in his heart: what may a man profit by disputing with such men which doe openly shew, that they neuer had any thing but a vaine imagination? For of what force, and how necessarie is that assuredneſſe which we require, is chiefly learned by inuocation. Which who so seeth not, he bewraieth that he hath a very dull conscience. Let vs therefore, leauing this kinde of blinde men, sticke fast in that saying of Paul, that God cannot be called vpon of any other, other, but them that know his mercie by the Goſpell, and are ſurely perſwaded that it is ready for them. For what maner of ſaying ſhould this be? O Lord, I am verily in doubt whether thou wilt heare me: but becauſe I am diſtreſſed with carefulneſſe, I flee to thee, that thou maiſt helpe me if I be worthy. This was not the wonted maner of all the holy ones, whoſe praiers we read in the Scriptures. Neither hath the holy Ghoſt thus taught vs by the Apoſtle which biddeth vs to goe to the heauenlie throne with confidence, that we may obtaine grace, and when in another place he teacheth that we haue boldneſſe and acceſſe in confidence by the faith of Chriſt. We muſt therefore hold faſt with both hands this aſſuredneſſe to obtaine what we aske (ſith both the Lord with his owne voice ſo commandeth vs, and all the holy ones teach it by their example) if we will pray with fruit. For, that onely praier is pleaſing to God which ſpringeth out of ſuch a preſumption of faith (as I may ſo call it) and is grounded vpon a dreadleſſe certaintie of faith. He might haue been content with the bare name of faith, but he not onely added confidence, but alſo furniſhed the ſame with libertie or boldneſſe, by this marke to put difference betweene vs and vnbeleeuers, which doe indeede alſo pray to God as we doe, but at aduenture. For which reaſon the whole Church praieth in the Pſalme: Let thy mercie be vpon vs, as we put our truſt in thee. The ſame condition is alſo ſpoken of in another place by the Prophet: In what day I ſhall cry, this I know that God is with me. Againe, In the morning I will direct my ſelfe to thee, and I will watch. For of theſe words we gather, that praiers are in vaine caſt into the aire, vnleſſe hope be adioyned, from whence as out of a watch tower we may quietly waite for the Lord. Wherewith agreeth the order of Pauls exhortation. For before that he mooue the faithfull to pray in ſpirit at all times with wakefulneſſe and diligence, he firſt of all biddeth them to take the ſhield of Faith, the helmet of ſaluation, and the ſword of the Spirit, which is the word of God. Now let the Readers here call to remembrance that which I haue before ſaid, that faith is not ouerthrowen where it is ioyned with acknowledging of our miſerie, needineſſe, and filthineſſe. For with how heauie weight ſoeuer of euill doings the faithfull feele themſelues to be ouerloaden or grieued, and that they bee not onely voide of all things which may procure fauour with God, but alſo that they be burdened with many offences which may worthilie make him dreadfull to them: yet they ceaſe not to preſent themſelues, neither doth this feeling make them ſo afraide but that they ſtill reſort to him, for as much as there is no other way to come to him. For praier was not ordeined, whereby we ſhould arrogantly aduance our ſelues before God, or eſteeme at great value any thing of our owne, but whereby confeſſing our guiltineſſe, wee would bewaile our miſeries to him, as children doe familiarly open their complaints to their parents. But rather the vnmeaſurable heape of our euils ought to be full of ſpurres or pricks to pricke vs forwarde to pray. As alſo the Prophet teacheth vs by his example, ſaying: Heale my ſoule, becauſe I haue ſinned againſt thee, I graunt indeed that in ſuch ſayings ſhould be deadly prickings vnleſſe God did helpe: but the moſt good father of his incomparable tender kindneſſe hath brought remedie in fit ſeaſon, whereby appeaſing all trouble, aſſwaging all cares, wiping away feares, he might gently allure vs to him, yea, and taking away all doubts (much more all ſtops) he might make vs an eaſie way.

Nothing could be more preciſely commanded, than that which is in the Pſalme: Call vpon me in the day of trouble. But for as much as among all the dueties of godlineſſe, the Scripture commendeth none more often, I need not to tarrie longer vpon this point. Aske (ſaith our maſter) and ye ſhall receiue: knocke, it ſhall be opened to you. Howbeit here is alſo with the commandement ioyned a promiſe as it is neceſſary. For though all men confeſſe that the commandement ought to be obeyed, yet the moſt part would flee from God, when he calleth, vnleſſe he promiſed that he would be eaſie to be intreated, yea and would offer himſelfe. Theſe two things being ſtabliſhed, it is certaine that whoſoeuer make delaies that they come not ſtraight to God, are not onely rebellious and diſobedient, but alſo are prooued guiltie of infidelitie, becauſe they diſtruſt the promiſes. Which is ſo much more to be noted, becauſe hypocrites vnder the colour of humilitie and and modeſtie doe as well proudly deſpiſe the commandement of God, as diſcredit his gentle calling, yea and defraud him of the chiefe part of his worſhip. For after that he hath refuſed ſacrifices, in which at that time all holineſſe ſeemed to ſtand, he declareth that this is the chiefe thing and moſt pretious to him aboue all other, to be called vpon in the day of need. Therefore where he requireth his owne, and encourageth vs to cheerefulneſſe of obeying, there are none ſo gay colours of doubting that may excuſe vs. Wherefore how many teſtimonies are commonly found in the Scriptures whereby we are commanded to call vpon God, ſo many ſtandards are ſet vp before our eies to put affiance into vs. It were raſhneſſe to ruſh into the ſight of God, vnleſſe he did preuent vs with calling vs. Therefore he openeth vs the way with his owne voice, ſaying: Zach. 13. 9. I will ſay to them, Yee are my people: and they ſhall ſay to me, thou art our God. We ſee how he preuenteth them that worſhip him, and willeth them to follow him, and therefore it is not to be feared that this ſhould not be a verie ſweete melodie which hee tuneth. Specially let this notable title of God come in our minde, whereupon if we ſtay,

For what is more louely or more alluring, than that God be garniſhed with this title which may aſcertaine vs that nothing is more proper to his nature, than to grant the deſire of humble ſuters? Hereby the Prophet gathereth that the gate ſtandeth open not onely to a few, but to all men: becauſe he ſpeaketh euen to all in this ſaying:

Yea, and this we may note in the Pſalmes, that as it were breaking his courſe of praying he paſſeth ouer ſometime to the power of God, ſometime to his goodneſſe, ſometime to the truth of his promiſes. It might ſeeme that Dauid by vnſeaſonable thruſting in of theſe ſentences, made mangled praiers: but the faithfull know by vſe and experience that feruentneſſe fainteth vnleſſe they put new nouriſhments vnto it, and therefore in praying the meditation both of the nature of God, and of his word is not ſuperfluous. And ſo by the example of Dauid: let it not greeue vs to thruſt in ſuch things as may refreſh fainting hearts with new liuely ſtrength.

Our ſluggiſhnes notwithſtanding ſo many ſo effectuall motiues vnto this heauenly exerciſe.

14 And it is wonderfull that with ſo great ſweetneſſe of promiſes we are either but coldly or almoſt not at all mooued, that a great part of men wandering about by compaſſes had rather leauing the fountaine of liuing waters, to digge for themſelues drie pits, than to embrace the liberality of God freely offered them. An inuincible tower is the name of the Lord (ſaith Salomon) to it the righteous man ſhall flee, and he ſhall be ſaued. And Ioel, after that he had prophecied of that horrible diſtruction which was at hand, addeth this notable ſentence. Whoſoeuer calleth vpon the name of the Lord, ſhall be ſafe: which ſentence we know to pertaine properly to the courſe of the Goſpel. Pro. 18. 10. Ioel. 2. 32. Scarcely euery hundreth man is mooued to goe forward to meete God. He himſelfe crieth by Eſay: Yee ſhall call vpon me, and I will heare you, yea, before that yee crie, Eſa. 65. 24. I will anſwere you. And the ſame honour alſo in another place he vouchſafeth to giue in common to the whole Chuch, as it belongeth to all the members of Chriſt. He hath cried to me, I will heare him, I am in trouble with him, that I may deliuer him. Neither Pſal. 91. 15. yet (as I haue alreadie ſaid) is it my purpoſe to reckon vp all the places, but to chooſe out the chiefe, by which we may take a taſte how kindly God alloureth vs vnto him, and with how ſtraite bonds our vnthankfulneſſe is bound, when among ſo ſharpe prickings our ſluggiſhneſſe ſtill maketh delay. Wherefore let theſe ſayings alway ſound in Pſal. 145. our eares: The Lord is nigh to all them that call vpon him, that call vpon him in truth: alſo theſe ſayings which we haue alleadged out of Eſay and Ioel, by which God affirmeth that he is heedefull to heare prayers, yea and is delighted as with a ſacrifice of ſweete ſauour, when we caſt our cares vpon him. This ſingular fruite we receiue of the promiſes of God, when we make our prayers not doubtingly and fearefully: but truſting vpon his word, whoſe maieſtie would otherwiſe make vs afraid, we dare call call vpon him by the name of Father, for as much as he vouchsafeth to put this most sweete name into our mouthes. It remaineth that we hauing such allurements should know that we haue thereby matter enough to obtaine our prayers: for as much as our prayers stand vpon no merit of our owne, but all their worthinesse and hope of obtaining are grounded vpon the promises of God, and hang vpon them: so that it needeth none other vnderpropping, nor looketh vpward hither or thither. Therefore we must determine in our mindes, that although we excell not in like holinesse as is praysed in the holie Fathers, Prophets, and Apostles, yet because the commaundement of prayer is common to vs, and faith is also common, if we rest vpon the word of God, in this right we are fellowes with them. For God (as we haue before shewed) promising that he will be gentle, and mercifull to all, giueth cause of hope to all euen the most miserable, that they shall obtaine what they aske. And therefore the generall formes are to be noted, from which no man (as they say) from the first to the last is excluded: onely let there be present a pureness of heart, misliking of our selues, humilitie, and faith: let not our hypocrisie vnholilie abuse the name of God with deceitfull calling vpon it: the most good father will not put backe them, whom he not only exhorteth to come to him, but also mooueth them by all the meanes that he can. Hereupon commeth the maner of praying of Dauid which I haue euen now rehearsed. Lo thou hast promised, Lord, to thy seruant: for this cause thy seruant at this day gathereth courage, and hath found what prayer he might make before thee. Now therefore O Lord God, thou art God, and thy words shall be true. Thou hast spoken to thy seruant of these benefits: begin therefore, and do them. As also in another place, Persoume to thy seruant according to thy word. And all the Israelites togither, so oft as they arme themselues with remembrance of the couenant, do sufficiently declare that we should not pray fearefully, whereas the Lord so appointeth. And herein they followed the examples of the Fathers, specially of Iacob, which after that he had confessed that he was vnworthie of so many mercies which he had receiued at the hand of God, yet he sayeth that he is encouraged to require greater things, because God had promised that he would do them. But whatsoeuer colours the vnbeleeuers do pretend, when they flee not to God so oft as necessitie presseth them, when they seeke not him nor craue his help, they do as much defraud him of his due honor as if they made to themselues new gods and idols: for by this meane they denie that he is to them the author of all good things. On the other side, there is nothing stronger to deliuer the godly from all doubt, than to be armed with this thought, that no stop ought to stay them while they obey the commandement of God, which pronounceth that nothing is more pleasing to him than obedience. Heere againe that which I said before more clearly appeareth, that a dreadlesse spirit to pray agreeth well with feare, reuerence, and carefulnesse: and that it is no absurditie to say that God raiseth vp the ouerthrowen. After this maner those formes of speech agree well together which in seeming are contrarie. Ieremie and Daniel say that they throw downe prayers before God. In another place Ieremie saith: Let our prayer fall downe in the sight of God, that he may haue mercie on the remnant of his people. On the other side, the faithfull are oftentimes said to lift vp prayer. So speaketh Ezechias, requiring the Prophet to make intercession for him. And Dauid desireth that his prayer may ascend as incense. For although they being perswaded of the fatherly loue of God, cheerefully commit themselues into his faithfull keeping, and doubt not to craue the helpe which he freely promiseth: yet doeth not an idle carefulnesse lift them vp, as though they had cast away shame, but they ascend so vpward by degrees of promises, that they still remaine humble suppliants in the abacement of themselues.

Verily for a iust cause: Iotham had auowed the inhabitants of Sichem, to the destruction which afterward came vpon them: but yet God kindled with feruentnesse of anger and vengeance following his execration seemeth to allow ill tempered violent passions. Such heate also caried Sampson when he said, Strengthen me O God, that I may take vengeance of the vncircumcised. For though there were some peece of good zeale mingled with it: yet a hote, and therefore faultie greedinesse of vengeance did beare rule therein. God granted it. Whereupon it seemeth that it may be gathered, that although the praiers be not framed according to the prescribed rule of the worde, yet they obtaine their effect. I answere first that a generall law is not taken away by singular examples: againe, that sometime speciall motions haue beene put into a few men, whereby it came to passe that there was another consideration of them than of the common people. For the answere of Christ is to be noted, when the Disciples did vndiscreetly desire to counterfait the example of Elias, that they knew not with what Spirit they were endued. But we must goe yet further, and say that the praiers doe not alway please God which he graunteth: but that, so much as serueth for example that is by cleare praise made plaine which the Scripture teacheth, namely that he succoureth the miserable, heareth the gronings of them which being vniustly troubled doe craue his helpe: that therefore hee executeth his iudgements, when the complaints of the poore rise vp to him, although they be vnworthie to obtaine any thing be it neuer so little. For how oft hath he taken vengeance of the cruelties, robberies, violence, filthy lustes, and other wicked dooings of the vngodly, subduing their boldnesse and rage, and also ouerthrowing their tyrannous power, testified that he helpeth the vnworthily oppressed, which yet did beate the aire with praying to an vncertaine Godhead? And one Psalme plainely teacheth that the prayers want not effect, which yet doe not pearce into heauen by faith. For he gathereth together those prayers which necessitie wringeth no lesse out of the vnbeleeuers than out of the godly by the verie feeling of nature: to which yet he prooueth by the effect, that God is fauourable. Is it because he doth with such gentlenesse testifie that they be pleasing to him? No. But to enlarge or to set out his mercie by this circumstance, for that euen to vnbeleeuers their prayers are not denied: and then the more to pricke forward his true worshippers to pray, when they see that prophane wailings sometime want not their effect. Yet there is no cause why the faithful should swarue from the law laid vpon them by God, or should enuie the vnbeleeuers, as though they had gotten some great gaine, when they obteined their desire. After this maner wee haue said, that the Lord was bowed with the Repentance of Achab, that he might shew by this example how easie he is to entreat toward his elect, when true turning is brought to appease him. Therefore in the Psalme he blameth the Iewes, that they hauing by experience prooued him so easie to graunt their prayers, yet within a little after returned to the stubbornnesse of their nature. Which also plainely appeareth by the historie of the Iudges: namely that so oft as they wept, although their teares were deceitfull, yet they were deliuered out of the hands of their enemies. As therefore the Lord indifferently bringeth foorth his Sunne vpon the good and the euill: so doth he also not despise their weepings, whose cause is righteous and their miseries woorthie of helpe. In the meane time he no more heareth these to saluation, than heerein ministreth foode to the despisers of his goodnesse. The question seemeth to be somewhat harder of Abraham and Samuel: of whom the one being warranted by no worde of God, prayed for the Sodomites: the other against a manifest forbidding prayed for Saul. Likewise is it of Ieremie which praied that the Citie might not be destroyed. For though their requestes were denied, yet it seemeth hard to take faith from them. But this solution shall (as I trust) satisfie sober readers: that they being instructed with the generall principles, whereby God commandeth them to be mercifull euen also to the vnworthie, were not altogether without faith, although in a speciall case their opinion deceiued them. Augustine writeth wisely in a certaine place. How (saith he) doe the holy ones pray by faith, to aske of God contrarie to that which he hath decreed? Euen because they pray according to his will: not that hidden and vnchangeable will, but the will which he inspireth into them, that he may heare them after another maner: as he wisely maketh difference. This is well said: because after his incomprehensible counsell he so tempereth the successes of things, that the praiers of the holy ones be not voide which are wrapped both with faith and error together. Neither yet ought this more to auaile to be an example to follow, than it excuseth the holy ones themselues, whom I denie not to haue passed measure. Wherefore where appeareth no certaine promise, we must aske of God with a condition adioyned.

To

To which purpose serueth that saying of Dauid. Watch to the iudgement which thou hast commanded: because he telleth that he was warranted by a speciall oracle to aske a temporall benefit. Psal. 7. 7.

16 This also it is profitable to note, that those things which I haue spoken of the fower rules of right praier, are not so exactly required with extreame rigour, that God refuseth the prayers in which he shall not finde either perfect faith or perfect repentance together with a feruentnesse of zeale and well ordered requestes. We haue said that although prayer be a familiar talke of the godly with God, yet wee must keepe a reuerence and modestie, that wee giue not loose reines to all requestes whatsoeuer they be, and that we desire no more, than God giueth leaue: and then, least the maiestie of God should grow in contempt with vs, that wee must lift vp our mindes vpward to a pure and vndefiled worshipping of him. This no man hath euer performed with such pureness as it ought to be. For (to speake nothing of the common sort) how many complaintes of Dauid doe sauour of vntemperance: not that hee meant of purpose to quarrell with God, or carpe against his iudgements: but because hee fainting for weakness, found no other better comfort, than to cast his sorrowes into his bosome. Yea and God beareth with our childish speech and pardoneth our ignorance, so oft as any thing vnaduisedly escapeth vs: as truely without this tender bearing, there should be no libertie of praying. But although Dauids minde was to submit himselfe wholly to the will of God, and he prayed with no lesse patience than desire to obtaine: yet there arise yea boile out sometimes troublous affections, which are much disagreeing from the first rule that we haue set. Specially we may perceiue by the conclusion of the xxxix Psalme, with how great vehemencie of sorrow that holy man was caried away, that he could not keepe measure. Cease (saith he) from me, till I goe away and be not. A man would say that he like a desperate man desireth nothing else but that the hand of God ceassing, he might rot in his euils. Hee saith it not for that he with an auowed minde runneth into such outrage, or (as the reprobate are woont) would haue God to depart from him: but onely he complaineth that the wrath of GOD is too heauie for him to beare. In these tentations also there fall out oftentimes requestes not well framed according to the rule of the worde of God, and in which the holie ones doe not sufficiently weigh what is lawfull and expedient. Whatsoeuer praiers are spotted with these faults, they deserue to be refused: yet if the holie ones doe bewaile, correct themselues, and by and by come to themselues againe, God pardoneth them. So they offend also in the second rule, because they are oftentimes driuen to wrastle with their owne coldnesse, and their neede and miserie doth not sharpely enough pricke them to pray earnestly. And oftentimes it happeneth that their mindes doe slip aside, and in a maner wander away into vanitie. Therefore in this behalfe also there is neede of pardon, least our faint, or vnperfect, or broken and wandering praiers haue a deniall. This God hath naturally planted in the mindes of men, that prayers are not perfect but with mindes lifted vpward. Heereupon came the ceremonie of lifting vp of hands, as we haue before said, which hath been vsed in all ages and nations, as yet it is in vre. But how many a one is there, which when he lifteth vp his hands doth not in his owne conscience finde himselfe dull, because his heart resteth vpon the ground? As touching the asking of forgiuenesse of sinnes, although none of the faithfull doe ouerpasse it, yet they which are truely exercised in praiers doe feele that they bring scarcely the tenth part of that sacrifice, of which Dauid speaketh. An acceptable sacrifice to God is a troubled Spirit: a broken and humble heart O God thou wilt not despise. So there is alway a double pardon to be asked, both because they know themselues guiltie in consciences of many faultes, with feeling whereof they are not yet so touched, that they mislike themselues so much as they ought: and also that, so much as it is giuen them to profit in repentance and in the feare of God, they being throwen downe with iust sorrow for their offences, should pray to escape the punishment of the iudge. Chiefly the feeblenes or imperfection of faith corrupteth the praiers of the faithful, vnles the tender mercy of God did helpe them. But it is no maruel that God pardoneth this default, which doth oftentimes exercise them that be his with sharp instructions, as if he should of purpose quench their faith. This is a most hard tentation, when the faithfull Psal. 51. 19.

The rules of praier must not be too rigorously applied.

Psal.80. faithfull are compelled to cry: How long wilt thou be angry vpon the praier of thy seruant? as though the very praiers made God more angry. So when Ieremy saieth: The Lord hath shut out my praier, it is no doubt that he was shaken with a violent pang of trouble. Innumerable such examples are commonly found in the Scriptures, by which appeareth that the Faith of the holy ones was oftentimes mingled and tossed with doubtings, that in beleeuing and hoping they bewraied yet some vnfaithfulnesse: but because they come not so far as it is to be wished, they ought to indeuour so much the more that their faults being amended, they may daily come neerer to the perfect rule of praying, and in the meane time to feele in how great a depth of euils they be drowned, which euen in the very remedies doe get to themselues new diseases: sith there is no praier, which the Lord doth not worthily loath, vnlesse he winke at the spots wherwith they are all besprinkled. I rehearse not these things to this end that the Faithfull should carelesly pardon themselues any thing, but that in sharply chastising themselues they should trauell to ouercome these stops, and although Satan labour to stop vp all the waies, that he may keepe them from praying, yet neuertheless they should breake through, being certainely perswaded, that although they be not vncombred of all hinderances, yet their indeuours doe please God, and their praiers are allowed of him, so that they trauile and bend themselues thitherward, whither they doe not by and by attaine.

Lam.3.8.

That the conscience of our own imbecillitie discourage vs not too much, we are to release our selues in praier with the mediation of Christ Iesus beside whose name no other by way of intercession should be mentioned in our prayers.

17 But for asmuch as there is no man worthy to present himselfe to God, and to come into his sight: the heauenly Father himselfe to deliuer vs both from shame and feare which should haue throwen downe all our courages, hath giuen to vs his Sonne Iesus Christ our Lord, to be an Aduocate and Mediator with him for vs, by whose leading we may boldly come to him, trusting that we haue such an intercessor, nothing shal be denied vs which we aske in his name, as nothing can be denied him of the Father. And heereunto must all be referred whatsoeuer we haue heretofore taught concerning Faith: because as the promise setteth out vnto vs Christ for our Mediator, so vnlesse our hope of obtaining stay vpon him, it taketh from it selfe the benefit of praying. For so soone as the terrible maiesty of God commeth in our minde it is impossible but that we should tremble for feare, and the acknowledging of our owne vnworthinesse should driue vs far away, till Christ come meane betweene vs and him, which may change the throne of dreadfull glory into the throne of grace: as also the Apostle teacheth that we may be bold to appeare with all confidence which shall obtaine mercy and finde grace in helpe comming in fit season. And as there is a law set that we should call vpon God like as there is a promise giuen, that they shall be heard which call vpon him: so are we peculiarly commanded to call vpon him in the name of Christ, and we haue a promise set foorth, that we shall obtaine that which we shall aske in his name. Hitherto (saith he) yet haue not asked any thing in my name: aske and ye shall receiue. In that day ye shall aske in my name, and whatsoeuer ye aske, I will doe that the father may be glorified in the son. Hereby it is plaine without controuersie, that they which call vpon God in any other name than of Christ, do stubbornly breake his commandements, and regard his will as nothing, and that they haue no promise to obtaine any thing. For (as Paul saith) all the promises of God are in Christ, yea and Amen, that is to say, they are confirmed and fulfilled.

No prayer effectuall which hath not Christ an aduocate.

18 And the circumstance of the time is diligently to be marked, where Christ commandeth his disciples to flee to intercession to him after that he is gone vp into heauen. In that hower (saith he) ye shal aske in my name. It is certaine that euen from the begining none were heard that praied, but by meane of the Mediator. For this reason the Lord had ordained in the law, that the Priest alone entering into the sanctuary, should beare vpon his shoulders the names of the tribes of Israel, and as many precious stones before his breast: but the people should stand a far off in the porch, and from thence should ioyne their praiers with the Priest. Yea and the sacrifice auailed hereto, that the praiers should be made sure and of force. Therefore that shadowish ceremony of the law taught that wee are all shut out from the face of God, and that therefore we neede a Mediatour, which may appeare in our name, and may beare vs vpon his shoulders, and hold vs fast bound to his breast, that wee may be heard in his person:

Iohn 16.26. Exod. 28.9.& 10.21.

perſon: then that by ſprinkling of bloud our praiers are clenſed, which (as we haue alreadie ſaid) are neuer voide of filthineſſe. And we ſee that the holie ones, when they deſired to obtaine any thing, grounded their hope vpon ſacrifices, becauſe they knew them to bee the ſtabliſhings of all requeſts. Let him remember thy offering (ſaith Dauid) and make thy burnt offering fatte. Heereupon is gathered that God hath beene from the beginning appeaſed by the interceſſion of Chriſt, to receiue the praiers of the godlie. Why then doth Chriſt appoint a new heire, when his Diſciples ſhall beginne to pray in his name, but becauſe this grace, as it is at this day more glorious, ſo deſerueth more commendation with vs. And in this ſame ſenſe he had ſaide a little before. Hitherto yee haue not asked any thing in my name, now aske. Not that they vnderſtood nothing at all of the office of the Mediatour (whereas all the Iewes were inſtructed in the principles) but becauſe they had not yet clearely knowen that Chriſt by his aſcending into heauen ſhould be a ſurer patrone of the Church than he was before. Therefore to comfort their griefe of his abſence with ſome ſpeciall fruite, he claimeth to himſelfe the office of an aduocate, and teacheth that they haue hitherto wanted the chiefe benefit, which it ſhall be graunted them to enioy, when being aided by his mediation, they ſhal more freely call vpon GOD: As the Apoſtle ſaith that his new way is dedicate in his bloud. And ſo much leſſe excuſable is our frowardneſſe, vnleſſe wee doe with both armes (as the ſaying is) embrace ſo ineſtimable benefit, which is properly appointed for vs. Heb.10.20.

19 Now whereas he is the onely way, and the onely entrie by which it is graunted vs to come in vnto God: who ſo doe ſwarue from this way and forſake this entrie, for them there remaineth no way nor entry to God: there is nothing left in his throne but wrath, iudgement, and terrour. Finally ſith the Father hath marked him for our head, and guide, they which do in any wiſe ſwarue or goe away from him, doe labour as much as in them lieth to race out and disfigure the marke which God hath imprinted. So Chriſt is ſet to be the onely Mediator, by whoſe interceſſion the Father may be made to vs fauorable and eaſie to be entreated. Howbeit in the meane time the holy ones haue their interceſſions left to them, whereby they doe mutually commend the ſafetie one of another to God, of which the Apoſtle maketh mention: but thoſe be ſuch as hang vpon that one onely interceſſion: ſo far is it off, that they miniſh any thing of it. For as they ſpring out of the affection of loue, wherewith we embrace one another, as the members of one bodie: ſo they are alſo referred to the vnitie of the head. Sith therefore they alſo are made in the name of Chriſt, what doe they elſe but teſtifie that no man can be holpen by any praiers at all, but with the interceſſion of Chriſt? And as Chriſt with his interceſſion withſtandeth not, but that in the Church we may with praiers be aduocates one for another: ſo let this remaine certaine, that all the interceſſors of the whole church ought to be directed to that onely one. Yea and for this cauſe we ought ſpeciallie to beware of vnthankfulneſſe, becauſe God pardoning our vnwoorthineſſe, doth not onely giue leaue to euery one of vs to pray for himſelfe, but alſo admitteth vs to be entreaters one of another. For, where God appointeth aduocates for his Church which deſerue worthilie to be reiected if they pray priuately euerie one for himſelfe: what a pride were it to abuſe this libertie to darken the honour of Chriſt.

The interceſſion of Chriſt withſtãdeth not but that we may be aduocates one for another: ſo that we know that the force of our mutuall praiers dependeth wholy vpon him without whom it were in vaine to intreat either for others or for our ſelues. 1.Tit.2.1.

20 Now it is a meere trifling, which the Sophiſters babble, that Chriſt is the Mediator of redemption, but the faithfull are Mediators of interceſſion. As though Chriſt hauing performed a Mediation for a time, hath giuen to his ſeruants that eternall Mediatourſhip which ſhall neuer die. Full curteouſly forſooth they handle him, that cut away ſo little a portion of honour from him. But the Scripture ſaith farre otherwiſe, with the ſimplicitie whereof a good man ought to be contented, leauing theſe deceiuers. For where Iohn ſaith, that if any do ſinne, wee haue an aduocate with the Father, Chriſt Ieſus: doth he meane that he was once in olde time a patrone for vs, and not rather aſſigned to him an euerlaſting interceſſion? How ſay we to this that Paul alſo affirmeth, that he ſitteth at the right hande of God the father and maketh interceſſion for vs? And when in another place hee calleth him the onely Mediatour of God and men: meaneth hee not of prayers, of which hee had a little before made mention? For when he had before ſaide that interceſſion muſt bee made for all men: for proofe of of that saying, he by and by addeth, that of all men there is one God and one Mediator. And none otherwise doth Augustine expound it, when he saith thus: Christian men do mutually commend themselues in their praiers. But hee for whom none maketh intercession, but hee for all, he is the onely and true Mediatour. Paul the Apostle, though he were a principall member vnder the head (yet because he was a member of the body of Christ, and knew that the greatest and truest Priest of the Church entred, not by a figure, into the inward places of the vaile, to the holy of holy places, but by expresse and stedfast truth into the innermost places of heauen, to a holinesse not shadowish but eternall) commendeth himselfe also to the prayers of the faithfull. Neither doth he make himselfe a Mediatour betweene the people & God, but prayeth that all the members of the body of Christ should mutually pray for him: because the members are carefull one for another: and if one member suffer, the other suffer with it. And that so the mutuall praiers one for another of all the members yet trauailing in earth, may ascend to the head which is gone before into heauen, in whom is appeasement for our sinnes. For if Paul were a Mediatour, the other Apostles should also be Mediatours: and if there were many Mediatours, then neither should Pauls owne reason stand fast, in which he had said, For there is one God, one Mediatour of one GOD and men, the man Christ, in whom we also are one if we keepe the vnitie of faith in the bond of peace. Againe in another place. But if thou seeke for a Priest, he is aboue the heauens, where he maketh intercession for thee, which in earth died for thee. Yet doe we not dreame that he falleth downe at the Fathers knees and in humble wise entreateth for vs: but we vnderstand with the Apostle, that he so appeareth before the face of God, that the vertue of his death auaileth to be a perpetuall intercession for vs: yet so that being entred into the sanctuary of heauen, vnto the end of the ages of the world he alone carrieth to God the praiers of the people abiding a far off in the porch.

No Saint hath entry vnto God but by Christ: and therefore we cannot without iniury vnto him, make them our intercessors.

21 As touching the Saints, which being dead in the flesh doe liue in Christ, if we giue any praier at all to them, let vs not dreame that they themselues haue any other way of asking than Christ which onely is the way, or that their praiers be acceptable to God in any other name. Therefore sith the Scripture calleth vs backe from all to Christ onely: sith the heauenly fathers will is to gather together all in him: it was a point of too much dulnesse, I will not say madnesse, so to desire to make for our selues an entry by them, that we should be led away from him without whom euen they themselues haue no entry open. But, that this hath beene vsually done in certaine ages past, and that it is at this day done wheresoeuer Papistry reigneth, who can deny? Their merites are from time to time thrust in, to obtaine the good will of God: and for the most part, Christ being passed ouer, God is praied to by their names. Is not this, I beseech you, to conuey away to them the office of that onely intercession, which we haue affirmed to belong to Christ alone? Againe, what Angell or Diuell euer reueiled to any man any one syllable of this their intercession which these men faine? For in the Scripture is nothing of it. What is the reason therefore of inuenting it? Truely when the wit of man so seeketh for it selfe succours, wherewith we are not certified by the word of God, it plainly bewraieth his owne distrustfulnesse. If we appeale to all their consciences that are delighted with the intercession of Saints, we shall finde that the same commeth from no other ground, but because they are grieued with carefulnesse, as though Christ were in this behalfe either too weake or too rigorous. By which doubtfulnesse first they dishonour Christ, and rob him of the title of onely Mediatour, which as it is giuen him of the Father for a singular prerogatiue, so ought not also to be conueyed away to any other. And in this very doing they darken the glory of his birth, they make void his crosse, finally whatsoeuer he hath done or suffered they spoile and defraud of the due praise thereof: for all tend to this end that he may be in deede and be accounted the onely Mediator. And therewith they cast away the goodnesse of God, which gaue himselfe to be their Father. For he is not their father, vnlesse they acknowledge Christ to be their brother. Which they vtterly deny vnlesse they thinke that he beareth a brotherly affection toward them, than which there can nothing be more kinde or tender. Wherefore the Scripture offereth onely him to vs, sendeth vs to him, and staieth vs in him. He (saith Ambrose) is our mouth, by which we ſpeake to the Father: our eye, by which we ſee the Father: our right hand, by which we offer vs to the Father, otherwiſe than by whoſe interceſſion neither we nor all the Saints haue any thing with God. If they anſwere that the common prayers which they make in Churches, are ended with this concluſion adioyned, Through Chriſt our Lord: this is a triſling ſhift: becauſe the interceſſion of Chriſt is no leſſe prophaned when it is mingled with the prayers and merits of dead men, than if it were vtterly omitted and only dead men were in our mouth. Againe, in all their Letanies, Hymnes, and Proſes, where no honour is left vngiuen to dead Saints, there is no mention of Chriſt.

Lib. de Iſa. & anima.

22 But their fooliſh dulneſſe proceeded ſo farre, that heere we haue the nature of ſuperſtition expreſſed, which when it hath once ſhaken off the bridle, is wont to make no end of running aſtray. For after that men once begun to looke to their interceſſion of Saints, by little and little there was giuen to euery one his ſpeciall doing, that according to the diuerſitie of buſineſſe, ſometime one and ſometime another ſhould be called vpon to be interceſſor: then they tooke to themſelues euery one his peculiar Saint, into whoſe faith they committed themſelues as it were to the keeping of ſafegarding gods. And not only (wherewith the Prophet in the old time reproched Iſrael) gods were ſet vp according to the number of Cities, but euen to the number of perſons. But ſith the Saints referre their deſires to the only will of God, and behold it and reſt vpon it: he thinketh fooliſhly, and fleſhly, yea and ſlanderouſly of them, which aſſigneth to them any other prayer, than whereby they pray for the comming of the kingdome of God: from which that is moſt farre diſtant which they faigne to them, that euery one is with priuate affection more partially bent to his own worſhippers. At length many abſtained not from horrible ſacriledge, in calling now vpon them not as helpers but as principall rulers of their ſaluation. Loe whereunto fooliſh men doe fall when they wander out of their true ſtanding, that is, the word of God. I ſpeake not of the groſſer monſtrouſneſſes of vngodlineſſe, wherein although they be abhominable to God, Angels, and men, they are not yet aſhamed nor wearie of them. They falling downe before the image or picture of Barbara, Catherine, and ſuch other, doe mumble Pater noſter, Our father. This madneſſe the Paſtors do ſo not care to heale or reſtraine, that being allured with the ſweete ſauour of gaine they allow it with reioyſing at it. But although they turne from themſelues the blame of ſo hainous an offence, yet by what colour will they defend this that Loy or Medard are prayed vnto, to looke downe vpon and help their ſeruants from heauen? that the holy Virgin is prayed vnto, to commaund her ſonne to do that which they aske? In the old time it was forbidden in the Councell at Carthage, that at the altar no direct prayer ſhould be made to Saincts. And it is likely that when the holie men could not altogether ſuppreſſe the force of the naughtie cuſtome, yet they added at leaſt this reſtraint that the publike prayers ſhould not be corrupted with this forme: Saint Peter pray for vs. But how much further hath their diueliſh importunacie ranged, which ſticke not to giue away to dead men that which properly belongeth onely to God and Chriſt?

How farre ſuperſtition hath gone in prayer vnto Saincts.

Iere. 2. 28. & 11. 13.

23 But whereas they trauell to bring to paſſe that ſuch interceſſion may ſeeme to be grounded vpon the authoritie of Scripture, therein they labour in vaine. We reade oftentimes (ſay they) of the prayers of Angels: and not that onely: but it is ſaid that the prayers of the faithfull are by their hands caried into the ſight of God. But if they liſt to compare holie men departed out of this preſent life, to Angels: they ſhould proue that they are miniſtring ſpirits, to whom is committed the miniſterie to looke to our ſafetie, to whom the charge is giuen to keepe vs in all our wayes, to go about vs, to admoniſh and counſell vs, to watch for vs: all which things are giuen to Angels, but not to them. How wrongfully they wrap vp dead holie men with Angels, appeareth largely by ſo many diuers offices, whereby the ſcripture putteth difference betweene ſome and otherſome. No man dare execute the office of an aduocate before an earthly iudge, vnleſſe he be admitted, from whence then haue wormes ſo great libertie, to thruſt vnto God thoſe for patrons to whom it is not read that the office is inioyned? Gods will was to appoint the Angels to looke vnto our ſafetie, wherefore they do both frequent holy aſſemblies, and the Church is a ſtage to them, wherein they wonder at the the diuerſe and manifold wiſedome of God. Who ſo conuey away to other that which ispeculiar to them, verily they confound & peruert the order ſet by God, which ought to haue beene inuiolable. With like handſomeneſſe they proceede in alleadging other teſtimonies. God ſaid to Ieremie: If Moſes and Samuel ſhould ſtand before me, my ſoule is not to this people. How (ſay they) could he haue ſpoken thus of dead men, vnleſſe he knew that they made interceſſion for the liuing? But I on the contrarie ſide gather thus, that ſith it thereby appeareth that neither Moſes nor Samuel made interceſſion for the people of Iſrael, there was then no interceſſion at all of dead men. For which of the Saints is to be thought to be carefull for the ſafetie of the people, when Moſes ceaſſeth, which in this behalfe farre paſſed all other when he liued. But if they follow ſuch ſleight ſubtleties, to ſay that the dead make interceſſion for the liuing, becauſe the Lord ſaid, If they ſhould make interceſſion: I will much more colourably reaſon in this maner: In the extreme neceſſitie of the people Moſes made not interceſſion, of whom it is ſaid, if he ſhall make interceſſion. Therefore it is likely that none other maketh interceſſion, ſith they are all ſo farre from the gentleneſſe, goodneſſe, and fatherly carefulneſſe of Moſes. This forſooth they get with cauilling, that they be wounded with the ſame weapons, wherewith they thought themſelues gaily fenſed. But it is very fond that a ſimple ſentence ſhould ſo be wreſted, becauſe the Lord pronounceth onely that he will not ſpare the offences of the people, although they had ſeene Moſes to be their patrone, or Samuel, to whoſe praiers he had ſhewed himſelfe ſo tender. Which ſenſe is moſt cleerely gathered out of a like place of Ezechiel. If (ſaith the Lord) theſe three men were in the citie, Noe, Daniel, and Iob, they ſhall not deliuer their ſons and daughters in their righteouſneſſe: but they ſhall deliuer onely their owne ſoules. Where it is no doubt that he meant if two of them ſhould happen to reuiue againe, for the third was then aliue, namely Daniel, who (as it is knowen) did in the firſt flouriſhing of his youth ſhew an incomparable example of godlineſſe: let vs then leaue them whom the Scripture plainly ſheweth to haue ended their courſe. Therefore Paul, when he ſpeaketh of Dauid, teacheth not that he doth with praiers helpe his poſteritie, but onely that he ſerued his owne time.

A third argument for interceſſion of Saints anſwered.

24 They anſwer againe: ſhall we then take from them all praier of charity, which in the whole courſe of their life breathed nothing but charity and mercy? Verily as I will not curiouſly ſearch what they doe, or what they muſe vpon: ſo it is not likely that they are carried about hither and thither with diuers and particular requeſts: but rather that they doe with a ſtaied and vnmooued will, long for the kingdome of God, which ſtandeth no leſſe in the deſtruction of the wicked, than in the ſaluation of the godly. If this be true, it is no doubt that their charity is contained in the communion of the body of Chriſt, and extendeth no further, than the nature of that communion beareth. But now though I grant that they pray in this maner for vs, yet they doe not therefore depart from their owne quietneſſe, to be diuerſly drawen into earthly cares: and much leſſe muſt we therefore by and by call vpon them. Neither doth it thereby follow that they muſt ſo doe, becauſe men which liue in earth may commend one another in their praier. For this dooing ſerueth for nouriſhing of charitie among them, when they doe as it were part and mutually take vpon them their neceſſities among themſelues. And this they doe by the commandement of the Lord, and are not without a promiſe, which two things, haue alway the chiefe place in prayer. All ſuch conſiderations are farre from the dead, whom when the Lord hath conueied from our companie, he hath left to vs no enterchange of doings with them, nor to them with vs, ſo farre as we may gather by coniectures. But if any man alleadge, that it is impoſſible but that they muſt keepe the ſame charitie toward vs, as they be ioyned in one faith with vs: yet who hath reuealed that they haue ſo long eares to reach to our voices? and ſo pearcing eies to watch our neceſſities? They prate in their ſhadowes I wot not what of the brightneſſe of the countenance of God extending his beames vpon them, in which as in a mirror they may from on high behold the matters of men beneath. But to affirme that, ſpecially with ſuch boldneſſe as they dare, what is it elſe but to goe about by the drunken dreames of our owne braine, without his word to pearce and breake into the hidden iudgements of God, and to tread the Scripture vnder feete which so oft pronounceth that the wisedome of the flesh is enemie to the wisedome of God, which wholy condemneth the vanitie of our naturall wit, which willeth all our reason to be throwen downe, and the onely will of God to be looked vnto of vs. Rom. 8. 6.

25 The other testimonies of Scripture which they bring to defend this their lie, they most naughtily wrest. But Iacob (said they) prayeth that his name and the name of his Fathers Abraham and Isaac be called vpon ouer his posteritie. First let vs see what forme of calling vpon this is among the Israelites. For they call not vpon their Fathers to help them: but they beseech God to remember his seruants Abraham, Isaac & Iacob. Therefore their example maketh nothing for them that speake to the Saints themselues. But because those blocks (such is their dulnesse) neither vnderstand what it is to call vpon the name of Iacob, nor why it is to be called vpon, it is no maruell if in the very forme also they so childishly stumble. This maner of speech is not seldome found in the Scriptures. For Esay sayeth that the name of the men is called vpon ouer the women, when they haue them as their husbands vnder whose charge and defence they liue. Therefore the calling vpon of the name of Abraham vpon the Israelites, standeth in this when they conuey their pedegree from him, and do with solemne memorie honor him for their author and parent. Neither doth Iacob this because he is carefull for the enlarging of the renoume of his name: but for as much as he knew that the whole blessednesse of his posteritie consisted in the inheritance of the couenant which God had made with him: he wished that that which he seeth should be the chiefe of all good things to them, that they be accounted in his kinred: For, that is nothing els but to conuey to them the succession of the couenant. They againe when they bring such remembrance into their prayers, do not flee to the intercessions of dead men: but do put the Lord in mind of his couenant, whereby the most kind father hath promised that he will be fauorable and beneficiall to them for Abraham, Isaac, and Iacobs sake. How little the holie ones did otherwise leane vpon the merits of their father, the common saying of the Church in the Prophet testifieth, Thou art our Father, and Abraham knew vs not, and Israel was ignorant of vs. Thou Lord art our Father and our redeemer. And when they say thus, they adde therewithall, Returne O Lord for thy seruants sakes: yet thinking vpon no intercession, but bending their mind to the benefit of the couenant. But now sith we haue the Lord Iesus, in whose hand the eternall couenant of mercie is not onlie made, but also confirmed to vs: whose name should we rather vse in our prayers? And because these good masters will haue the Patriarches to be by these words made intercessours, I would faine know of them why in so great arout Abraham the Father of the Church hath no place at all among them. Out of what sinke they fetch their aduocates, it is not vnknowen. Let them answere me, how fit it is that Abraham, whom God preferred aboue all other, and whom he aduanced to the highest degree of honor, should be neglected and suppressed. Verily when it was euident that such vse was vnknowen to the old Church, they thought good for hiding of the newnesse to speake nothing of the old Fathers: as though the diuersitie of names excused the new and forged maner. But whereas some obiect that God is prayed vnto, to haue mercie on the people for Dauids sake, it doth so nothing at all make for defence of their error, that it is a most strong proose for the confutation thereof. For if we consider what person Dauid did beare: he is seuered from all the assembly of the Saints, that God should stablish the couenant which he hath made in his hand. So both the couenant is rather considered than the man and vnder a figure the onely intercession of Christ is affirmed. For it is certaine that that which belonged only to Dauid, in so much as he was the image of Christ, accordeth not with any other. Esay 4. 1. Esay 63. 16.

A fourth argument. Gen. 46. 16.

26 But this forsooth mooueth some, that it is often times read that the prayers of Saints haue beene heard. Why so? Euen because they prayed. They trusted in thee (saith the Prophet) and they were saued: they cried, and they were not confounded. Therefore let vs also pray as they did, that we may be heard as they were. But these men, otherwise than they ought, do wrongfullie reason, that none shall be heard but they that haue once beene heard. How much better doth Iames say? Elias (saith he) was a man like to vs: and he prayed with prayer that it should not raine, and it rained not vpon the earth in three yeeres and sixe moneths. Againe he prayed, and the heauen heauen gaue raine, and the earth gaue her fruite. What? doth he gather any singular prerogatiue of Elias, to which we ought to flee? No. But he teacheth what is the continuall strength of godly and pure prayer, to exhort vs likewise to pray. For we doe niggardlie construe the readinesse and gentlenesse of God in hearing them, vnlesse we be by such experiences confirmed into a more sure affiance of his promises, in which he promiseth that his eare shall be inclined not to one, or two, nor yet to a few, but to all that call vpon his name. And so much lesse excusable is this foolishnesse, because they seeme as it were of set purpose to despise so many admonitions of Scripture. Dauid was oft deliuered by the power of God. Was it that he should draw that power to himselfe, that we should be deliuered by his helpe? He himselfe affirmeth farre otherwise: The righteous looke for me, till thou render to me. Againe, The righteous shall see, and they shall reioyce, and trust in the Lord. Behold, this poore man hath cried to God, and he hath answered him: There be in the Psalmes many such prayers, in which to craue that which he requireth, he mooueth God by this maner, that the righteous be not made ashamed, but many by his example be raised vp to hope well. Let vs now be contented with this one example. Therefore euery holie one shall pray to thee in fit time. Which place I haue so much the more willinglie rehearsed, because the lewd babblers which doe let out to hire the seruice of their waged toong haue not beene ashamed to alleage it to proone the intercession of the dead. As though Dauid meant any thing else, than to shew the fruite that shall come of the mercifulnesse and gentlenesse of God, when he shall be heard. And in this kind we must learne, that the experience of the grace of God, as well toward our selues as other, is no slender help to confirme the credit of his promises. I haue vnrehearsed many places, where Dauid setteth before himselfe the benefits of God for matter of confidence, because the readers of the Psalmes shall commonly finde them without seeking. This selfe same thing had Iacob before taught by his owne example: I am vnworthie of all thy mercies, and of the truth which thou hast performed to thy seruant. I with my staffe haue passed ouer this Iordane, and now I come foorth with two bands. He alleageth in deed the promise, but not alone: but he also ioyneth the effect, that he may the more couragiously in time to come trust that God will be the same toward him. For he is not like to mortall men, which are weary of their liberalitie, or whose abilitie is wasted: but he is to be weighed by his owne nature, as Dauid wisely doth, where he saith, Thou hast redeemed me, O God that speakest truth. After that he hath giuen to God the praises of his saluation, he addeth that he is a true speaker: because vnlesse he were continually like himselfe, there could not be gathered of his benefits a sufficiently strong reason of affiance and calling vpon him. But when we know that so oft as he helpeth vs, he sheweth an example and proofe of his goodnesse, we neede not to feare that our hope shall be put to shame or disappoint vs.

Psal. 142. 8. Psal 52. 8. Psal. 34. 7. Psal. 32. 6. Gen. 38. 10. Psal. 31. 6.

The directing of prayers vnto Saints departed is the offering of iniurie vnto God, and of disgrace vnto Christes intercession, which by the mutuall prayers of Saints as yet liuing, is not preiudiced.

27 Let this be the summe. Whereas the Scripture setteth out this vnto vs for the cheefe point in the worshipping of God, (as refusing all sacrifices, he requireth of vs this duetie of godlinesse) prayer is not without manifest sacriledge directed to other. Wherefore also it is said in the Psalme, If we stretch foorth our hands to a strange God, shall not God require these things? Againe, whereas God will not be called vpon but of Faith, and expressly commandeth prayers to be framed according to the rule of his word: finally whereas Faith founded vpon the word is the mother of right prayer: so soone as we swarue from the word, our prayer must needs be corrupted. But it is already shewed, that if the whole scripture be sought, this honor is therein challenged to God only. As touching the office of intercession, we haue also shewed that it is peculiar to Christ, and that there is no prayer acceptable to God, but which that Mediator halloweth. And though the faithfull do one for another offer prayers to God for their brethren, we haue shewed that this abateth nothing from the onely intercession of Christ: because they altogether standing vpon it do commend both themselues and other to God. Moreouer we haue taught that this is vnfitly drawne to dead men, to whom we neuer read that it hath been commanded that they should pray for vs. The Scripture doth oftentimes exhort vs to mutuall dooings of this duty one for another: but of dead men there is not so much as one syllable: yea and Iames ioyning these two things together, together, that we ſhould confeſſe our ſelues, among our ſelues, and mutually pray one for another, doth ſecretly exclude dead men. Therfore to condemne this error, this one reaſon ſufficeth, that the beginning of praying rightly, ſpringeth out of faith, and that faith cõmeth of the hearing of the word of God where is no mention of the fained interceſſiõ, becauſe ſuperſtition hath raſhly gotten to it ſelfe patrones which were not giuen them of God. For whereas the Scripture is full of many formes of praier, there is no example found of this patroneſhip, without which in the Papacy they beleeue that there is no praier. Moreouer it is certaine that this ſuperſtition hath growne of diſtruſtfulneſſe either becauſe they were not content with Chriſt to be their interceſſor, or haue altogether robbed him of his praiſe. And this latter point is eaſily prooued by their ſhameleſneſſe: becauſe they haue no other ſtronger argument to prooue that we haue neede of the interceſſion of Saints, than when they obiect that we are vnworthy of familiar acceſſe to God. Which we indeed grant to be moſt true: but thereupon we gather, that they leaue nothing to Chriſt, which eſteeme his interceſſion nothing woorth, vnleſſe there be adioyned Gorge, Hippolite, or ſuch other viſors. Iames 5. 8.

28 But although praier properly ſignifieth onely wiſhes and petitions: yet there is ſo great affinity betweene petition and thankeſgiuing, that they may be fitly comprehended both vnder one name. For, theſe ſpeciall ſorts which Paul rehearſeth, fall vnder the firſt part of this diuiſion. With asking and crauing we powre forth our deſires before God, requiring as well thoſe things that ſeeme to ſpread abroad his glory and ſet foorth his name, as the benefits that are profitable to our vſe. With giuing of thankes, we doe with due praiſe magnifie his good doings toward vs, acknowledging to be receiued of his liberality whatſoeuer good things doe come to vs. Therefore Dauid comprehended theſe two parts together, ſaying: Call vpon me in the day of neceſſity: I will deliuer thee, and thou ſhalt glorifie me. The Scripture not in vaine commandeth vs to vſe both. For we haue ſaid in another place, that our needineſſe is ſo great, and the experience it ſelfe crieth out that we are on euery ſide pinched and preſſed with ſo many and ſo great diſtreſſes, that all haue cauſe enough why they ſhould both ſigh to God, and in humble wiſe call vpon him. For though they be free from aduerſities, yet the guiltineſſe of their wicked doings, and their innumerable aſſaults of temptations ought to pricke forward the moſt holy to aske remedy. But in the ſacrifice of praiſe and thankeſgiuing there can be no interruption without hainous ſinne, foraſmuch as God ceaſeth not to heap vpon diuerſe men diuerſe benefits to driue vs though we be ſlacke and ſlow, to thankfulneſſe. Finally ſo great and ſo plenteous largeſſe of his benefits doth in a maner ouerwhelme vs: there are ſo many and ſo great miracles of his ſeene on euery ſide which way ſoeuer thou turne thee, that we neuer want ground and matter of praiſe and thankeſgiuing. And that theſe things may be ſomewhat plainelier declared ſith all our hopes and wealth ſtand in God (which we haue before ſufficiently prooued) that neither we nor all our things can be in proſperity but by his bleſſing: we muſt continually commit our ſelues and all our things to him. Then whatſoeuer we purpoſe, ſpeake, or doe, let vs purpoſe, ſpeake, and doe vnder his hand and will, finally vnder the hope of his helpe. For, all are pronounced accurſed of God, which deuiſe or determine any purpoſes vpon truſt of themſelues or of any other, which without his will, and without calling vpon him doe enterpriſe or attempt to begin any thing. And whereas we haue diuerſe times already ſaid, that he is duely honored when he is acknowledged the author of all good things: thereupon followeth that all thoſe things are ſo to be receiued at his hand, that we yeeld continuall thankes for them: and that there is no other right way for vs to vſe his benefits, which flow and proceed from his liberality to no other end, but that we ſhould be continually buſied in confeſſing his praiſe and giuing of thankes. For Paul, when he teſtifieth that they are ſanctified by the word and praier, doth therewithall ſignifie that they are not holy and cleane to vs without the word and praier, vnderſtanding by the word faith by figure. Therefore Dauid ſaith very well, when hauing receiued the liberality of the Lord, he declareth that there is giuen him into his mouth a new ſong: wherby verily he ſignifieth that it is a malicious ſilence, if we paſſe ouer any of his benefits without praiſe: ſith he ſo oft giueth vs matter to ſay good of him, as he doth good to vs. As alſo Eſaie ſetting out the ſingular gular grace of God, exhorteth the faithfull to a new and vnwoonted song. In which sense Dauid saith in another place, Lord open thou my lips, and my mouth shall shew foorth thy praise. Likewise Ezechias and Ionas testifie that this shall be to them the end of their deliuerance, to celebrate the goodnesse of God with songes in the temple. The same law Dauid prescribeth to all the godly. What shall I repay to the Lord (saith he) for all the things that he hath bestowed vpon me? I will take the cup of saluation, and will call vpon the name of the Lord. And the same law the Church followeth in another Psalme, Saue vs our God, that wee may confesse to thy name, and glorie in thy praise. Againe, he hath looked vnto the praier of the solitary, and he hath not despised their praiers. This shall be written to the generation that shall follow, and the people created shall praise the Lord, that they may declare his name in him and his praise in Hierusalem. Yea so oft as the faithfull beseech God to doe for his names sake: as they professe themselues vnworthy to obtaine any thing in their owne name, so they binde themselues to giue thankes, and they promise that this shall be to them the

So Osee speaking of the redemption to come of the Church, saith: Take away iniquity O God, and lift vp good: and we will pay the calues of lippes. Paul, that all praiers are wrongfull and faulty to which is not adioyned giuing of thankes. For thus he saith, in all praier and beseeching with thankesgiuing let your petitions, be knowen with God. For sith testines, tediousnesse, impatience, bitternesse of griefe, and feare doe moue many in praying to murmure, hee commandeth that our affections be so tempered, that the faithful ere they haue obtained that which they desire, should neuertheless cheerefully blesse God. If this knot ought to haue place in things in a manner contrary, with so much more holy a band doth God binde vs to sing his praises, so oft as he maketh vs to enioy our requests. But as we haue taught that our praiers are hallowed by the intercession of Christ, which otherwise should be vncleane: so the Apostle, where he commandeth vs to offer a sacrifice of praise by Christ, putting in minde that we haue not a mouth cleane enough to praise the name of God, vnlesse the Priesthood of Christ become the meane. Whereupon we gather that men haue beene monstrously bewitched in the papacy, where the greater part marueileth that Christ is called an Aduocate. This is the cause why Paul commandeth both to pray and to giue thankes without ceasing: namely for that he willeth that with so great continuing as may be, at euery time in euery place, in all matters and businesses, the praiers of all men should be lifted vp to God, which may both looke for all things at his hand and yeeld to him the praise of all things, as he offereth vs continuall matter to praise and pray.

Order for assiduity of praier both priuate and publike in the Church.

29 But this continuall diligence of praying, although it specially concerne the proper and priuate praiers of euerie man, yet somewhat also pertaineth to the publike praiers of the Church. But those can neither be continuall, nor ought otherwise to be done than according to the politike order that shall by common consent bee agreed vpon among all. I graunt the same in deede. For therefore certaine houres are set and appointed, as indifferent with God, so necessarie for the vses of men, that the commoditie of all men may be prouided for, and all things (according to the saying of Paul) may bee comelily and orderly done in the Church. But this maketh nothing to the contrarie but that euery Church ought both from time to time to stirre vp it selfe to often vse of praiers, and when it is admonished by any great necessitie, to be feruent with most earnest endeuour. As for perseuerance which hath a great affinitie with continuall diligence, there shall bee a fit place to speake of it about the end. Now these make nothing for the much babling which Christ willed that we should be forbidden.

1. Cor. 15. 40.

Mat. 6. 7.

For he forbiddeth not to continue long, nor oft, nor with much affection in prayers, but that we should not trust that we may wring any thing out of God, by dulling his eares eares with much babbling talke, as if he were to be perſwaded after the maner of men. For we knowe that Hypocrites, becauſe they doe not conſider that they haue to doe with God, doe no leſſe make a pompous ſhew in their prayers than in a triumph. For, the Phariſee which thanked God that he was not like to other men, without doubt reioyced at himſelfe in the eyes of men, as if he would by prayer ſeeke to get a fame of holineſſe. Hereupon came that much babbling, which at this day vpon a like cauſe is vſed in the Papacie: while ſome doe vainely ſpend the time in repeating the ſame prayers, and other ſome doe ſet out themſelues among the people with a long heape of words. Sith this babbling childiſhly mocketh God, it is no maruell that it is forbidden out of the Church, to the end that nothing ſhould there be vſed but earneſt and proceeding from the bottome of the heart. Of a neere kinde and like to this corruption is there another, which Chriſt condemneth with this, namely that hypocrites for boaſting ſake doe ſeeke to haue many witneſſes, and doe rather occupie the market place to pray in, than their prayers ſhould want the prayſe of the world. But whereas we haue alreadie ſhewed that this is the marke that prayer ſhooteth at, that our mindes may be caried vpward to God, both to confeſſion of prayſe and to craning of helpe: thereby we may vnderſtand that the chiefe duties thereof doe ſtand in the minde and the hart, or rather that prayer it ſelfe is properly an affection of the inward hart, which is powred foorth and laid open before God the ſearcher of harts. Wherefore (as it is alreadie ſaid) the heauenly Schoolemaſter, when he minded to ſet out the beſt rule of praying, commanded vs to go into our chamber, and there the doore being ſhut to pray to our Father which is in ſecret, that our Father which is in ſecret may heare vs. For when he hath drawen them away from the example of hypocrites, which with ambitious boaſting ſhew of prayers ſought the fauour of men, he therewithall addeth what is better, namely, to enter into our chamber, and there to pray the doore being ſhut. In which words (as I expound them) he willed vs to ſeeke ſolitarie being which may helpe vs to deſcend and to enter throughly with our whole thought into our hart, promiſing to the affections of our hart that God ſhall be neere vs whoſe temples our bodies ought to be. For he meant not to deny but that it is expedient alſo to pray in other places: but he ſheweth that prayer is a certaine ſecret thing, which both is chiefly placed in the ſoule, and requireth the quiet thereof far from all troubles of cares. Not without cauſe therefore the Lord himſelfe alſo, when he was diſpoſed to applie himſelfe more earneſtly to prayer conueyed himſelfe into ſome ſolitarie place farre from the troubleſome company of men: but to teach vs by his example that theſe helps are not to be deſpiſed, by which our minde being too ſlipperie of it ſelfe is more bent to earneſt applying of prayer. But in the meane time euen as he in the middeſt of the multitude of men abſtained not from praying, if occaſion at any time ſo ſerued: ſo ſhould we in all places where neede ſhall be, lift vp pure hands. Finally, thus it is to be holden, that whoſoeuer refuſeth to pray in the holie aſſemblie of the godly, he knoweth not what it is to pray apart, or in ſolitarineſſe, or at home. Againe, that he that neglecteth to pray alone or priuately how diligently ſoeuer he haunt publike aſſemblies, doth there make but vaine prayers: becauſe he giueth more to the opinion of men than to the ſecret iudgement of God. In the meane time, that the common prayers of the Church ſhould not grow into contempt, God in old time garniſhed them with glorious titles, ſpecially where he called the temple the houſe of prayer. For, by this ſaying he both taught that the chiefe part of the worſhipping of him is the dutie of prayer: and that to the end that the faithfull ſhould with one conſent exerciſe themſelues in it, the temple was ſet vp as a ſtandard for them. There was alſo added a notable promiſe: There abideth for thee, O God, praiſe in Sion: and to thee the vow ſhall be paid. By which words the prophet telleth vs, that the prayers of the Church are neuer void: becauſe the Lord alway miniſtreth to his people matter to ſing vpon with ioy. But although the ſhadowes of the law are ceaſed: yet becauſe the Lords will was by this ceremonie to nouriſh among vs alſo the vnitie of faith, it is no doubt that the ſame promiſe belongeth to vs, which both Chriſt hath ſtabliſhed with his owne mouth, and Paul teacheth that it is of force for euer.

Churches ordained to be houses of praier.

34 Now as the Lord by his word commanded the faithfull to vse common praier: so there must be common temples appointed for the vsing of them: where who so refuse to communicate their praier with the people of God, there is no cause why they should abuse this pretence, that they enter into their chamber that they may obey the commandement of the Lord. For he that promiseth that he will doe whatsoeuer two or three shall aske being gathered together in his name, testifieth that he dispiseth not praiers openly made: so that boasting and seeking of glory of men be absent, so that vnfained and and true affection be present which dwelleth in the secret of the heart. If this be the right vse of temples (as truely it is) we must againe beware that neither (as they haue begun in certaine ages past to be accounted) we take them for the proper dwelling places of God from whence he may more neerely bende his eare vnto vs: nor faine to them I wot not what secret holinesse, which may make our praier more holy before God. For sith we our selues be the true temples of God we must pray in our selues if we will call vpon God in his owne holy temple. * As for that grosseneſſe, let vs which haue a commandement to call vpon the Lord in spirit and trueth without difference of place, leaue it to the Iewes or the Gentiles. There was indeed a Temple in old time by the commandement of God for offering of praiers and sacrifices: but that was at such time as the truth lait hid figured vnder such shadowes, which being now liuely expressed vnto vs doth not suffer vs to sticke in any materiall temple. Neither was the temple giuen to the Iewes themselues with this condition, that they should inclose the presence of God, within the wals thereof, but whereby they might be exercised to behold the image of the true temple. Therfore they, which in any part thought that God dwelleth in temples made with hands, were sharply rebuked of Esay and Stephen.

The sound of the voice without the inward feeling of the heart in praier availeth not.

31 Here moreouer it is more than euident, that neither voice nor song, if they be vsed in praier, haue any force, or doe any whit profit before God, vnlesse they proceed from the deepe affection of the heart. But rather they prouoke his wrath against vs, if they come onely from the lips and out of the throate: for as much as that is to abuse his holy name, and to make a mockery of his majesty: as we gather out of the words of Esay, which although they extende further, yet pertaine also to reproue this fault. This people (saith he) commeth neere to me with their mouth, and honoreth me with their lips: but their heart is far from me: and they haue feared me with the commandement and doctrine of men. Therefore behold I will make in this people a miracle great and to be wondered at. For, wisedome shall perish from their wise men, and the prudence of the Elders shall vanish away. Neither yet doe we here condemne voice or singing, but rather doe highly commend them, so that they accompany the affection of the minde. For so they exercise the minde and hold it intentiue in thinking vpon God: which as it is slippery and rolling, easily slacketh and is diuersely drawen vnlesse it be staied with diuerse helpes. Moreouer whereas the glory of God ought after a certaine maner to shine in all the parts of our body, it specially behoueth that the tongue be applied and auowed to this seruice both in singing and in speaking which is properly created to shew foorth and display the praise of God: But the chiefe vse of the tongue is in publike praiers, which are made in the assembly of the godly: which tend to this end, that we may all with one common voice, and as it were with one mouth together glorifie God whom we worship with one spirit and one faith: and that openly, that all men mutually, euery one of his brother, may receiue the confession of Faith, to the example whereof they may be both allured and stirred.

Esay 9. 13. Mat. 15. 8.

The vse of singing in the Church.

32 As for the vse of singing in Churches (that I may touch this also by the way) it is certaine that it is not onely most ancient: but that it was also in vse among the Apostles, we may gather by these words of Paul. I will sing in Spirit, I will sing also in minde. Again to the Colossians, Teaching and admonishing you, mutually in Hymnes Psalmes and spirituall songs, singing with grace in your hearts to the Lord. For in the first place he teacheth that we should sing with voice and heart: in the other he commandeth spirituall songs, wherewith the godly doe mutually edifie themselues. Yet that it was not vniuersall, Augustine testifieth, which reporteth that in the time of Ambrose the Church of Millain first began to sing, when while Iustina the mother of Valentinian, cruelly cruelly raged againſt the true faith, the people more vſed watchings than they were wont: and that afterward the other weſterne Churches followed. For he had a little before ſaid that this maner came from the Eaſterne Churches. He telleth alſo in his ſecond booke of Retractations that it was in his time receiued in Africa. One Hilarie (ſaith he) a ruler did in euery place whereſoeuer he could, with malicious blaming raile at the maner which then began to be at Carthage, that the Hymnes at the altar ſhould be pronounced out of the booke of Pſalmes, either before the oblation, or when that which had been offered was diſtributed to the people. Him I anſwered at the commandement of my brethren. And truly if ſongs be tempered to that grauitie which becommeth the preſence of God and Angels, it both procureth dignitie and grace to the holie actions, and much auaileth to ſtirre vp the mindes to true affection and feruentneſſe of praying. But we muſt diligently beware that our eares be not more heedfully bent to the note, than our mindes to the ſpirituall ſenſe of the words. With which peril Auguſtine in a certaine place ſaith that he was ſo mooued, that he ſometime wiſhed that the maner which Athanaſius kept ſhould be eſtabliſhed, which commanded that the Reader ſhould ſound his words with ſo ſmall a bowing of his voyce, that it ſhould be liker to one that readeth than to one that ſingeth. But when he remembred how much profit he himſelfe had receiued by ſinging, he inclined to the other ſide. Therefore vſing this moderation, there is no doubt that it is a moſt holie and profitable ordinance. As on the other ſide what ſongs ſoeuer are framed onely to ſweetneſſe and delight of the eares, they both become not the maieſtie of the Church, and cannot but highlie diſpleaſe God.

1. Cor. 14. 13.

Confesse. lib. 9. cap. 7.

Confeſſ.li.10. cap.33.

33 Whereby it alſo plainely appeereth that common prayers are to be ſpoken not in Greeke among Latine men, not in Latine among Frenchmen or Engliſhmen (as it hath heretofore been each where commonly done) but in the peoples mother toong, which commonly may be vnderſtood of the whole aſſemblie: foraſmuch as it ought to be done to the edifying of the whole Church, which receiue no fruite at all of a ſound not vnderſtanded. But they which haue no regard neither of charitie nor of humanitie, ſhould at leſt haue been ſomewhat mooued with the authoritie of Paul, whoſe words are nothing doubtfull. If thou bleſſe (ſaith he) in ſpirit, how ſhal he that filleth the place of an vnlearned man anſwer Amen to thy bleſſing, ſith he knoweth not what thou ſayeſt? For thou in deed giueſt thanks, but the other is not edified. Who therfore can ſufficiently wonder at the vnbrideled licentiouſneſſe of the Papiſts, which the Apoſtle ſo openly crying out againſt it, feare not to roare out in a ſtrange toong moſt babling prayers, in which they themſelues ſometime vnderſtand not one ſyllable, nor would haue other folks to vnderſtand it? But Paul teacheth that we ought to do otherwiſe. How then? I will pray (ſaith he) with ſpirit, I will pray alſo with minde: I will ſing with ſpirit: I will ſing alſo with minde: ſignifying by the name of ſpirit, the ſingular gift of toongs, which many being endued with, abuſed it, when they ſeuered it from the minde, that is, from vnderſtanding. But this we muſt altogether thinke, that it is by no meane poſſible, neither in publicke nor in priuate prayer, but that the toong without the heart muſt highly diſpleaſe God. Moreouer we muſt thinke that the mind ought to be kindled with feruentneſſe of thought, that it may farre ſurmount all that the toong may expreſſe with vtterance. Finally that the toong is not neceſſarie at all for priuate prayer, but ſo farre as the inward feeling either is not able to ſuffice to enkindle it ſelfe, or the vehemencie of inkindling violently carieth the worke of the toong with it. For though very good prayers ſometime be without voyce, yet oftentimes betideth, that when the affection of the minde is feruent, both the toong breaketh foorth into voyce, and the other members into ieſturing without exceſſiue ſhew. Hereupon came the muttering of Hanna, and ſuch a like thing all the holie ones alway feele in themſelues, when they burſt out into broken and vnperfect voyces. As for the geſtures of the bodie which are wont to be vſed in prayer (as kneeling and vncouering of the head) they are exerciſes by which we endeuour to riſe vp to a greater reuerencing of God.

Publique praier in what toong and with what geſture to be made.

34 * Now we muſt learne not onely a more certaine rule, but alſo the very forme of praying: namely the ſame, which the heauenly father hath taught vs by his beloued ſonne: wherein we may acknowledge his vnmeaſurable goodneſſe and kindneſſe. For beſide this he warneth and exhorteth vs to ſeeke him in all our neceſſitie (as children are woont to flie to their fathers defenſe, ſo oft as they be troubled with any diſtreſſe) becauſe he ſawe that we did not ſufficiently perceiue this, how ſlender our pouertie was, what were meete to be asked, and what were for our profit: he prouided alſo for this our ignorance, and what our capacitie wanted, he ſupplied and furniſhed of his owne. For he hath preſcribed to vs a forme wherein he hath as in a Table ſet out whatſoeuer we may deſire of him, whatſoeuer vaileth for our profit, and whatſoeuer is neceſſarie to aske. Of which his gentleneſſe we receiue a great fruit of comfort that we vnderſtand that we aske no inconuenient thing, no vnſeeming or vnfit thing, finally nothing that is not acceptable to him, ſith we aske in a maner after his owne mouth.

* A preſcript forme of prayer deliuered by Chriſt. Matt.6.9. Luk.11.9.

Alcib. vel de voto.

When Plato ſaw the follie of men in making requeſts to God, which being graunted, it many times befell much to their owne hurt: he pronounced that this is the beſt maner of praying taken out of the old Poet. King Iupiter giue vnto vs the beſt things both when we aske them, and when we do not aske them, but command euill things to be away from vs euen when we aske them. And verily the heathen man is wiſe in this, that he iudgeth how perilous it is to aske of the Lord that which our owne deſire mooueth vs: and therewithall he bewrayeth our vnhappie caſe, that we cannot once open our mouthes before God without danger, vnleſſe the ſpirit doe inſtruct vs to a right rule of praying. And in ſo much greater eſtimation this priuiledge is worthie to be had of vs, ſith the onely begotten Sonne of God miniſtreth words into our mouth which may deliuer our mind from all doubting.

Rom. 8. 6.

The diuiſion of the Lords prayer into parts.
Aug. in Enchi. ad Laur. cap. 116.
Chryſ. aut oper. imperf.

35 This whether you call it forme or rule of praying is made of ſixe petitions. For, the cauſe why I agree not to them that diuide it into ſeuen parts, is this, that by putting in this aduerſatiue word (But) it ſeemeth that the Euangeliſt meant to ioine theſe two peeces together, as if he had ſaid: Suffer vs not to be oppreſſed with tentation, but rather helpe our weakeneſſe, and deliuer vs, that we faint not. The old writers alſo thinke on our ſide, ſo that now that which is in Matthew added in the ſeuenth place, is by way of declaration to be ioined to the ſixt petition. But although the whole prayer is ſuch that in euery part of it regard is ſpecially to be had of the glory of God, yet the three firſt petitions are peculiarly appointed to Gods glory, which alone we ought in them to looke vnto without any reſpect (as they ſay) of our owne profit. The other three haue care of vs, and are properly aſſigned to aske thoſe things that are for our profit. And when we pray that the name of God be hallowed: becauſe God will prooue whether he be loued and honored of vs freely or for hope of reward, we muſt then thinke nothing of our owne commoditie, but his glory muſt be ſet before vs, which alone we muſt behold with fixed eyes: and no otherwiſe ought we to be minded in the other prayers of this ſort. And euen this turneth to our great profit, that when it is ſanctified as we pray, it is alſo likewiſe made our ſanctification. But our eyes (as it is ſaid) muſt winke and after a certaine maner be blind at ſuch profit, ſo as they may not once looke at it: that if all hope of our priuate benefite were cut off, yet we ſhould not ceaſe to wiſh and pray for this ſanctification and other things which pertaine to the glory of God. As it is ſeene in the examples of Moſes and Paul, to whom it was not greeuous to turne away their mindes and eyes from themſelues, and with vehement and inflamed zeale to wiſh their owne deſtruction, that though it were with their owne loſſe they might aduance the glory and kingdome of God. On the other ſide when we pray that our dayly bread be giuen vs: although we wiſh that which is for our owne commoditie, yet heere alſo we ought cheefely to ſeeke the glory of God, ſo that we ſhould not aske it vnleſſe it might turne to his glory. Now let vs come to the declaring of the Prayer it ſelfe.

Exod. 32. 32. Rom. 9. 3.

Our Father which art in heauen.

A comfort vnto Chriſtians that they may call God their Father.

36 First in the very entry we meete with this which we ſaid before that all prayer ought none otherwiſe to be offered of vs to God than in the name of Chriſt, as it can by no other name be made acceptable vnto him. For ſince we call him Father, truely we alleadge for vs the name of Chriſt. For by what boldneſſe might any man call God, Father?

Father? who ſhould burſt foorth into ſo great raſhneſſe, to take to himſelfe the honour of the Sonne of God, vnleſſe we were adopted the children of grace in Chriſt? Which being the true Sonne, is giuen of him to vs to be our brother: that that which he hath proper by nature, may by the benefit of adoption be made ours, if we doe with ſure Faith embrace ſo great bountifulneſſe. As Iohn ſaith, that power is giuen to them which beleeue in the name of the onely begotten Sonne of God, that they alſo may be made the children of God. Therefore he both calleth himſelfe our Father, and will be ſo called of vs, by this ſweetneſſe of name deliuering vs from all diſtruſt, ſith there can no where be found any greater affection of loue than in a Father. Therefore he could by no ſurer example teſtifie his vnmeaſurable deare loue toward vs than by this that we are named the Sonnes of God. But his loue is ſo much greater and more excellent toward vs than all loue of our parents, as he paſſeth all men in goodneſſe and mercie: that if all the Fathers that are in the earth, hauing ſhaken off all feeling of Fatherly naturalneſſe, would forſake their children, yet he will neuer faile vs, becauſe he cannot deny himſelfe. For we haue his promiſe, If you being euill can giue good gifts to your children, how much more can your Father which is in heauen? Againe in the Prophet, Can a mother forget her children? Though ſhe forget them, yet I will not forget thee. If wee be his children: then as a child cannot giue himſelfe into the tuition of a ſtranger and foraine man, vnleſſe he complaine either of the cruelty or pouerty of his Father: ſo wee cannot ſeeke ſuccours from elſe where than from him alone, vnleſſe we reproch him with pouerty and want of ability, or with cruelty or too extream rigorouſneſſe.

Eſay 39. 15.

37 Neither let vs alleadge that we are woorthily made fearefull with conſcience of ſinnes, which may make a Father be he neuer ſo mercifull and kinde, daily to be diſpleaſed. For if among men the ſonne can with no better Aduocate plead his cauſe to his Father, and by no better meane get and recouer his fauour being loſt, than if he himſelfe humbly and lowly, acknowledging his fault, doe beſeech his fathers mercy (for then the fatherly bowels cannot hide themſelues but muſt be mooued at ſuch praiers) what ſhall that father of mercy doe, and the God of all comfort? ſhall not he rather heare the teares and gronings of his children intreating for themſelues (ſpecially ſith he doth call and exhort vs to doe ſo) than any other interceſſions whatſoeuer they be to the ſuccour whereof they do ſo fearefully flee, not without ſome ſhew of deſpaire, becauſe they diſtruſt of the kindneſſe and mercifulneſſe of their father? This ouerflowing plenty of fatherly kindneſſe he depainteth and ſetteth out vnto vs in the parable, where the Father louingly embraceth the ſonne that had eſtranged himſelfe from him, that had riotouſly waſted his ſubſtance, that had euery way grieuouſly offended againſt him, and he tarieth not till he doe with words craue pardon, but he himſelfe preuenteth him, knoweth him a farre off returning, of his owne will goeth to meete him, comforteth him and receiueth him into fauour. For, ſetting out in a man this example of ſo great gentleneſſe, he minded to teach vs how much more plentifull kindneſſe we ought to looke for at his hand, who is not onely a Father, but alſo the beſt and moſt mercifull of all Fathers, howſoeuer we be vnkinde, rebellious and naughty children: ſo that yet we caſt our ſelues vpon his mercie. And that he might make it to be more aſſuredly beleeued, that he is ſuch a Father to vs, if we be Chriſtians: he willed not onely to be called Father, but alſo by expreſſe name Our Father: as if we might thus talke with, O Father which haſt ſo great naturall kindneſſe toward thy children, ſo great eaſineſſe to pardon, we thy children call to thee and pray to thee, being aſſured and fully perſwaded, that thou beareſt no other affection to vs than fatherly, howſoeuer we be vnworthy of ſuch a father. But becauſe the ſmall capacities of our heart conceiue not ſo great vnmeaſurableneſſe of fauour, not onely Chriſt is to vs a pledge and earneſt of our adoption, but alſo he giueth vs the ſpirit for witneſſe of the ſame adoption, through whom we may with a free and lowd voice crie Abba, Father. So oft therefore as any delay ſhall withſtand vs, let vs remember to aske of him, that correcting our feareſulneſſe he will ſet before vs that ſpirit of couragiouſneſſe to be our guide to pray boldly.

What the name of a Father doth import and teach.

Luk. 15. 20.

2. Cor. 1. 3.

Gal. 4 6.

38 Whereas wee are not ſo taught that euery one ſhould ſeuerally call him his owne father, but rather that we ſhould all in common together call him Our Father: thereby we are put in mind, how great affection of brotherly loue ought to be among vs, which are altogether by one ſame right of mercie and liberalitie, the children of ſuch a father. For we all haue one common Father, from whom commeth whatſoeuer good thing may betide vnto vs: there ought to be nothing ſeuerall among vs, which we are not readie with great cheerefulneſſe of mind to communicate one to another, ſo much as neede requireth. Now if we be ſo deſirous, as we ought to be, to reach our hand and helpe one to another, there is nothing wherein we may more profit our brethren, than to commend them to the care and prouidence of the moſt good father, who being well pleaſed and fauouring, nothing at all can be wanted. And verily euen this ſame we owe to our father. For as he that truely and hartily loueth any father of houſhold, doth alſo embrace his whole houſhold, with loue and good will: likewiſe what loue and affection we beare to this heauenly Father, we muſt ſhew toward his people, his houſhold and his inheritance, which he hath ſo honored, that he hath called it the fulneſſe of his onely begotten Sonne. Let a Chriſtian man therefore frame his prayers by this rule, that they be common, and may comprehend all them that be brethren in Chriſt with him: and not onely thoſe whom he preſently ſeeth and knoweth to be ſuch, but all men that liue vpon earth: of whom, what God hath determined, it is out of our knowledge: ſauing that it is no leſſe godly than naturall to wiſh the beſt to them, and hope the beſt of them. Howbeit we ought with a certaine ſingular affection to beare a ſpeciall inclination to them of the houſhold of Faith, whom the Apoſtle hath in euery thing peculiarly commended vnto vs. In a ſumme, All our prayers ought to be ſo made, that they haue reſpect to that communitie which our Lord hath ſtabliſhed in his kingdome and his houſe.

When we call God our Father the holie fellowſhip which we haue one with another is commanded and we admoniſhed to pray for others not one'y for our ſelues.

Ephe.1.24.

39 Yet this withſtandeth not, but that we may ſpecially pray both for our ſelues and for certaine other: ſo that yet our minde depart not from hauing an eye to this communitie, nor once ſwarue from it, but apply all things vnto it. For though they be ſingularly ſpoken in forme, yet becauſe they are directed to that marke, they ceaſe not to be common. All this may be eaſily vnderſtood by a like example. The commandement of God is generall, to relieue the neede of all poore: and yet they obey this commandement which to this end doe helpe their pouertie whom they know or ſee to be in neede, although they paſſe ouer many whom they ſee to be preſſed with no leſſe neceſſitie: either becauſe they can not know all, or be not able to helpe all. After this maner they alſo do not againſt the will of God, which hauing regard vnto, and thinking vpon this common fellowſhip of the Church, do make ſuch particular prayers, by which they doe with a common minde in particular words, commend to God themſelues or other, whoſe neceſſitie God willed to be more neerely knowne to them. Howbeit all things are not like in prayer and in beſtowing of goods. For, the liberalitie of giuing cannot be vſed but toward them whoſe neede we haue perceiued: but with prayers we may helpe euen them that are moſt ſtrange and moſt vnknowen to vs, by how great a ſpace of ground ſoeuer they be diſtant from vs. This is done by the generall forme of prayer, wherein all the children of God are contained, among whom they alſo are. Hereto we may apply that which Paul exhorteth the faithfull of his time, that they liſt vp euery where pure hands, without ſtrife: becauſe when he warneth them that ſtrife ſhutteth the gate againſt prayers, he willeth them with one minde to lay their petitions in common together.

The conceiuing of prayer in common is no hinderance to the priuate and particular commending of our owne, or our brethrens neceſſities vnto God.

Gal.6.10.

1.Tim.2.8.

40 It is added, that he is in heauen. Whereupon it is not by and by to be gathered that he is bound faſt incloſed and compaſſed with the circle of heauen, as within certaine barres. For Salomon alſo confeſſeth that the heauens of heauens cannot containe him. And he himſelfe ſaith by the Prophet that heauen is his ſeate, and the earth his footeſtoole. Whereby verily he ſignifieth that he is not limited in any certaine coaſt, but is ſpread abroad throughout all things. But becauſe our minde (ſuch is the groſſeneſſe of it,) could not otherwiſe conceiue his vnſpeakeable glory, it is ſignified to vs by the heauen, than which there can nothing come vnder our ſight more ample or fuller of maieſtie. Sith therefore whereſoeuer our ſenſes comprehend any thing, there they vſe to faſten it: God is ſet out of all place, that when we will ſeeke him, we we ſhould bee raiſed vp aboue all ſenſe both of bodie and ſoule. Againe by this maner of ſpeaking he is lifted aboue all chaunce of corruption and change: finally it is ſignified that he comprehendeth and conteineth the whole world and gouerneth it with his power. Wherefore this is all one as if he had been called of infinite greatneſſe or height, of incomprehenſible ſubſtance, of vnmeaſurable power, of euerlaſting immortalitie. But while we haue this, we muſt lift vp our minde higher when God is ſpoken of, that we dreame not any earthly or fleſhly thing of him, that we meaſure him not by our ſmall proportions, nor draw his will to the rule of affections. And therewithall is to be raiſed vp our affiance in him, by whoſe prouidence and power we vnderſtand heauen and earth to be gouerned. Let this be the ſumme, that vnder the name of Father is ſet before vs that God which hath in his owne image appeared to vs, that he may be called vpon with aſſured Faith: and that the familiar name of Father is not onely applied to ſtabliſh affiance, but alſo auaileth to hold faſt our mindes that they be not drawen to doubtfull or faigned Gods, but ſhould from the onely begotten ſonne climbe vp to the onely Father of Angels and of the Church: then, that becauſe his ſeate is placed in heauen, we are by the gouernance of the world put in minde that not without cauſe wee come to him which with preſent care commeth of his owne will to meete vs. Who ſo come to God (ſaith the Apoſtle) they muſt firſt beleeue that there is a God, then that he is a rewarder to all them that ſeeke him. Both theſe things Chriſt affirmeth to bee proper to his father, that our faith may be ſtaied in him: then, that we may be certainely perſwaded that he is not careleſſe of our ſafetie: becauſe he vouchſafeth euen to vs to extend his prouidence. With which introductions Paul prepareth vs to pray rightly. For before that he biddeth our petitions to be opened before God, he ſaith thus. Be ye carefull for nothing, the Lord is at hand. Whereby appeareth that they doubtfully and with perplexitie toſſe their praiers in their minde which haue not this well ſetled in them, that the eie of God is vpon the righteous.

Phil. 4. 6.

41 The firſt petition is, That the name of God be hallowed, the neede whereof is ioyned with our great ſhame. For what is more ſhamefull than that the glorie of God ſhould be partly by our vnthankfulneſſe, partly by our malicioufneſſe darkened: and (ſo much as in it lieth) by our boldneſſe and furious ſtubbornneſſe, vtterly blotted out? Though all the wicked would burſt themſelues with their wilfulneſſe ful of ſacriledge, yet the holineſſe of the name of God glorioufly ſhineth. And not without cauſe the Prophet crieth out, As thy name O God, ſo is thy praiſe into all the ends of the earth. For whereſoeuer the name of God is knowen, it cannot be but that his ſtrength, power, goodneſſe, wiſedome, righteouſneſſe, mercy, and trueth muſt ſhew foorth themſelues, which may draw vs into admiration of him, and ſtirre vs vp to publiſh his praiſe. Sith therefore the holineſſe of God is ſo ſhamefully taken from him in earth, if we be not able to reſcue it, we be at the leaſt commanded to take care of it in our praiers. The ſumme is, that we wiſh the honour to be giuen to God which he is worthy to haue, that men neuer ſpeake or thinke of him without moſt high reuerence: whereunto is contrarie the vnholy abuſing, which hath alway beene too common in the world, as at this day alſo it rangeth abroad. And heereupon commeth the neceſſitie of this petition, which if there liued in vs any godlineſſe, though it were but a little, ought to haue beene ſuperfluous. But if the name of God haue his holineſſe ſafe, when being ſeuered from all other, it breatheth out nothing but glorie, heere we are commanded not onely to pray that God will deliuer that holy name from all contempt and diſhonour, but alſo that he will ſubdue all mankinde to the reuerence of it. Now whereas God diſcloſeth himſelfe to vs, partly by doctrine, and partly by workes, he is no otherwiſe ſanctified of vs, than if we giue to him in both behalfes that which is his, and ſo embrace whatſoeuer ſhall come from him: and that his ſeueritie haue no leſſe praiſe among vs than his mercifulneſſe, for as much as he hath in the manifold diuerſitie of his works imprinted markes of his glorie which may worthily draw out of all tongues a confeſſion of his praiſe. So ſhall it come to paſſe that the Scripture ſhall haue full authoritie with vs, and that no good ſucceſſe ſhall hinder the bleſſing which God deſerueth in the whole courſe of the gouerning of the world. Againe, the petition alſo tendeth to this purpoſe, that all vngodlineſſe which defileth this holy name, may be deſtroyed and taken away: that whatſoeuer whatsoeuer things doe darken and diminish this sanctifying, as well slaunders as mockings, may be driuen away: and when God subdueth all sacriledges, his glorie may thereby more and more shine abroad.

The parts and processe of the kingdome of God amongst men: which is the second petition.

42 The second petition is, that The kingdome of God may come: which although it containe no new thing, is yet not without cause seuered from the first: because if we consider our owne drousinesse in a thing greatest of all other, it is profitable that the thing which ought of it selfe to haue beene most well knowen, be with many wordes oft beaten into vs. Therefore after that we haue beene commanded to pray to God to bring into subiection, and at length vtterly to destroy whatsoeuer spotteth his holy name: now is added a like and in a maner the same request, that his kingdome come. But although we haue alreadie set foorth the definition of his kingdome, yet I now briefly rehearse, that God reigneth when men as well with forsaking of themselues as with despising of the world and of the earthly life, doe so yeeld themselues to his righteousnesse, that they aspire to the heauenly life. Therefore there are two parts of this kingdome: the one that God correct with the power of his Spirit all corrupt desires of the flesh, which doe by multitudes make warre against him: the other, that he frame all our senses to the obedience of his gouernment. Therefore none doe keepe right order in this prayer, but they which begin at themselues, that is to say, that they be cleansed from all corruptions which trouble the quiet state of the kingdome of God, and infect the pureness thereof. Now because the worde of God is like a kingly scepter, we are heere commanded to pray he will subdue the mindes and harts of all men to willing obedience of it. Which is done, when with the secret instinct of his Spirit he vttereth the effectuall force of his worde, that it may bee aduanced in such degree as it is woorthy. Afterward we must come downe to the wicked which doe obstinately and with desperate rage resist his authoritie. God therefore setteth vp his kingdome by humbling the whole worlde: but that in diuerse maners: because he tameth the wantonnesses of some, and of other some he breaketh the vntamed pride. This is daily to be wished that it be done, that it may please God to gather to himselfe Churches out of all the coastes of the world: to enlarge and encrease them in number, to enrich them with his gifts, to stablish right order in them: on the other side to ouerthrow all the enemies of pure doctrine and religion, to scatter abroad their counsels, to cast downe their enterprises. Whereby appeareth that the endeuour of daily proceeding is not in vaine commanded vs: because the matters of men, are neuer in so good case, that filthinesse being shaken away and clensed, full pureness flourisheth and is in liuely force. But the fulnesse of it is deferred vnto the last comming of Christ, when Paul teacheth that God shall be all in all. And so this prayer ought to withdraw vs from all the corruptions of the world, which doe seuer vs from God that his kingdome should not flourish in vs, and also to kindle our endeuour to mortifie the flesh, finally to instruct vs to the bearing of the crosse: forasmuch as God will in this wise haue his kingdome spread abroad. Neither ought we to take it miscontentedly that the outward man be destroied, so that the inward man be renewed. For this is the nature of the kingdome of God, when we submit our selues to the righteousnesse thereof, to make vs partakers of his glory. This is done when brightly setting foorth his light and truth with alway new encreases, whereby the darkenesse and lies of Satan and his kingdome may vanish away, be destroyed and perish, he defendeth them that be his, with the helpe of his Spirit, directeth them to vprightnesse, and strengtheneth them to continuance: but ouerthroweth the wicked conspiracies of his enimies, shaketh abroad their treasons and deceits, preuenteth their malice, and beateth downe their stubbornnesse, till at length he kill Antichrist with the Spirit of his mouth and destroy all vngodlinesse with the brightnes of his comming.

1. Cor. 15. 28.

Our requesting in the third petition that the will of God may be obeyed: a renouncing of our owne carnall wils and desires.

43 The third petition is, That the will of God be done in earth, as it is in heauen. Which although it hangeth vpon his kingdome, and cannot be seuered from it, is not in vaine added seuerally, for our grossenes, which doth not easily or by and by conceiue what it is that God reigne in the world. It shall therefore be no absurdity if this be taken by way of plainer exposition: that God shall then be king in the world when all things shall submit themselues to his will. Now heere is not meant of his secret will whereby whereby hee gouerneth all things and directeth them to their end. For though Satan and men are troublesomely carried against him, yet he can by his incomprehensible counsell not onely turne aside their violent motions, but also driue them into order that he may doe by them that which he hath purposed. But heere is spoken of another will of God, namely that, whereunto answereth willing obedience: and therefore the heauen is by name compared with the earth: because the Angels, as it is said in the Psalme, doe willingly obey God and are diligently bent to doe his commandements. We are therefore commanded to wish that as in heauen nothing is done but by the becke of God, and the Angels are quietly framed to all vprightnesse: so the earth, all stubbornnesse and peruersnesse being quenched, may be subiect to such gouernment. And when we require this, we renounce the desires of our owne flesh: because whosoeuer doth not resigne and yeeld his affections to God, he doth as much as in him lieth set himselfe against him, forasmuch as nothing commeth out of vs but faultie. And we are againe by this praier framed to the forsaking of our selues, that God may gouerne vs after his will: and not that onely, but that he may also create in vs new mindes, and new hearts, our old being brought to nought: that wee may feele in our selues none other motion of desire than a meere consent with his will: summarily that we may will nothing of our selues, but that his Spirit may gouerne our hearts, by whom inwardly teaching vs wee may learne to loue those things that please him, and to hate those things that displease him. Whereupon this also followeth, that whatsoeuer affections fight against his will, hee make them vaine and voide. Loe heere be the first three chiefe points of this prayer, in asking whereof we ought to haue the onely glorie of God before our eies, leauing the respect of our selues, and hauing no regard to any of our owne profit, which although it come heereof largely vnto vs, yet we ought not heere to seeke it. But albeit all these things, though we neuer thinke of them, nor wish them, nor aske them, must neuertheless come to passe in their due time, yet we ought wish them and require them. And this to doe is no small profit for our trauaile, that we may so testifie and professe our selues to be the seruants and children of God, as much as in vs lieth endeuouring and being truely and throughly giuen to set foorth his honour, which is due to him being both a Lord and a Father. Who so therefore doe not with affection and zeale of aduancing the glorie of God, pray that the name of God be hallowed, that his kingdome come, that his will be done: they are not to be accounted among the children and seruants of God: and as all these things shall be done against their wils, so they shall turne to their confusion and destruction.

The sense of the fourth petition wherein our corporall and earthlie necessities are cõmended vnto God.

44 Now followeth the second part of the prayer, in which wee come downe to our owne commodities: not that bidding farewell to the glory of God (which as Paul witnesseth, is to be regarded euen in meate and drinke) wee should seeke onely what is profitable for our selues: but we haue alreadie giuen warning that there is this difference, that God peculiarly claiming three petitions to himselfe doth draw vs to himselfe wholly, that hee may in this wise proue our godlinesse. Then hee graunteth vs also to haue an eye to our owne commodities, but with this condition, that wee aske nothing for our selues but to this end that whatsoeuer benefits hee bestoweth vpon vs, they may set foorth his glorie: forasmuch as nothing is more rightfull than that we liue and die to him. But in this petition we aske of God generally all things which the vse of the bodie needeth vnder the elements of this world, not onely wherewith we may be fed and clothed, but also whatsoeuer he foreseeth to be profitable for vs, that wee may eate our bread in peace. By which prayer briefly wee yeeld our selues into his care, and commit vs to his prouidence, that he may feede, cherish, and preserue vs. For the most good Father disdaineth not to receiue also our bodie into his faithfull safegard and keeping, to exercise our faith in these small things, when wee looke for all things at his hands euen to a crumme of bread and a drop of water. For whereas it is come to passe I wote not how by our iniquitie, that we bee mooued and vexed with greater care of the flesh than of the soule: many which dare trust to God for their soule, are yet carefull for their flesh, are yet in doubt what they shall eate, and wherewith they shall be clothed: and if they haue not plentie of wine, wheare, and oile aforehand, they tremble for feare. So much more doe we esteeme the shadow of this life which lasteth but a moment, than that euerlasting immortality. But whoso trusting to God haue once cast away that carefulnesse for the prouision of the flesh, doe also by and by looke for saluation and euerlasting life at his hand, which are greater things. It is therefore no small exercise of Faith, to hope for those things of God, which otherwise doe so much holde vs in care: and we haue not smally profited, when we haue put off this vnbeleeuingnesse which sticketh fast within the bones almost of all men. As for that which some doe heere teach of transubstantiall bread, it seemeth but smally to agree with the meaning of Christ: yea but if we did not euen in this fraile life giue to God the office of a nourishing Father, our praier should be vnperfect. The reason which they bring is too much prophane: that it is not meet that the children of God, which ought to be spirituall, should not onely cast their minde to earthly cares, but also wrap God therein with them. As though his blessing and fatherly fauour doth not also appeare in the sustenance of our life, or as though it were written in vaine that godlinesse hath promises not onely of the life to come, but also of this present life. But

1. Tim. 4. 8. although the forgiuenesse of sinnes is of much greater value than the sustenances of the body, yet Christ hath set the inferior thing in the first place, to the intent to lift vs vp by degrees to the other two petitions which doe properly belong to the heauenly life, wherein he had regard to our grossenesse. We are commanded to aske Our bread, that we should be content with the quantitie which our heauenly father vouchsafeth to giue to vs, and should not seeke for gaine by vnlawfull crafty meanes. In the meane time we must learne that it is made Ours by Title of gift, because neither our diligence, nor our Leuit. 26. 20. trauaile, nor our hands (as it is said in Moses) doe by themselues get vs any thing, vnlesse the blessing of God be present: yea the plentie of the bread should nothing at all profite vs, vnlesse it were by God turned into nourishment. And therefore this liberality of God is no lesse necessary for the rich than for the poore: because hauing their cellers and their barnes full, they should yet faint for drinesse and emptinesse, vnlesse they did by his grace enioy their bread. The word This Day, or euery day as it is in the other Euangelist, and also the adiectiue Dailie, doe bridle the too much greedinesse of fraile things, wherewith we are wont to burne out of measure, and whereunto are ioyned other euils: sith if we haue plentifull abundance, we doe gloriously power it out vpon pleasure, delights, boasting, and other kinds of riotous excesse. Therefore we are commanded to aske onely so much as is enough for our necessity, and as it were from day to day, with this affiance, that when our heauenly Father hath fed vs this day, he will also not faile vs to morrow. Therefore how great plenty of things soeuer doe flow vnto vs, yea when our barnes be stuffed and our cellars full: yet we ought alway to aske our daily bread: because we must certainly beleeue that all substance is nothing, but insomuch as the Lord doth by powring out of his blessing with continuall encrease make it fruitfull: and that the very same substance that is in our hand, is not our owne, but insomuch as he doth euery houre giue vs a portion and grant vs the vse of it. This whereas the pride of men doth most hardly suffer it selfe to be perswaded: the Lord testifieth that he hath shewed a singular example thereof for all ages, when he fed his Deut. 8. 3. Matth. 3. 4. people with Manna in the wilderneſſe, to teach vs that man liueth not by bread only, but rather in the word that commeth out of his mouth. Whereby is declared, that it is his power alone by which our life and strengths are sustained, although he doe minister it vnto vs vnder bodily instruments. As he is wont also to teach vs by the contrary example, when he so oft as he will, breaketh the strength and (as he calleth it) the staffe Leuit. 26. 26. of bread, that men eating may pine with hunger, and drinking may be dried vp with thirst. But whoso not being contented with dayly bread, but with vnbrideled greedinesse are gaping for endlesse store, or whoso being full with their aboundance, and careleſſe by reason of the heape of their riches, doe neuertheleſſe sue to God with this prayer, they doe nothing else but mocke him. For, the first sort of such men aske that which they would not obtaine, yea that which they most of all abhor, that is, to haue onely daily bread, and so much as in them lieth they dissemblingly hide from God the affection of their couetousnesse: whereas true praier ought to power out before him the very whole minde it selfe, and whatsoeuer inwardly lieth hidden. But the other sort doe aske that which they looke not for at his hand, namely that which they thinke that they haue with themselues. In this that it is called Ours the bountifulnesse of God (as we haue said) so much more appeareth, which maketh that ours that is by no right due to vs. Yet that exposition is not to be reiected which I haue also touched, that by our bread is meant that which is earned with rightfull and harmelesse trauell, and not gotten with deceits and extortions: because that is alway other mens which wee get to our selues with any ill doing. Whereas we pray that it be giuen vs, thereby is signified that it is the onely and free gift of God, from whence soeuer it come to vs, yea when it shall most of all seeme to be gotten by our owne policie and trauell, and earned with our owne hands: for as much as it commeth to passe by his onely blessing that our labours prosper well.

45 Now followeth. Forgiue vs our debts: in which petition and the next following, Christ hath briefly contained whatsoeuer maketh for the heauenly life: as in these two partes standeth the spirituall couenant which God hath made for the saluation of his Church, I will write my lawes in their hearts, and I will be mercifull to their iniquitie. Heere Christ beginneth the forgiuenesse of sinnes: after this, he will by and by adioyne the second grace, that God defend vs with the power of his Spirit, and sustaine vs with his helpe, that we may stand vnouercome against all tentations. And sinnes he calleth debts, because we are debt-bound to pay the penaltie of them, and were by no meanes able to satisfie it, vnlesse we were acquited by this forgiuenesse. Which pardon is of his free mercie, when he himselfe liberally wipeth out these debts, taking no payment of vs, but with his owne mercie satisfying himselfe in Christ, which hath once giuen himselfe for recompence. Therefore who so trust that God shall be satisfied by their owne or other mens merits, and that with such satisfactions the forgiuenesse of sinnes is recompenced and redeemed, they haue no part of communicating of this free forgiuenesse: and when they call vpon God in this maner, they doe nothing but subscribe to their owne accusation, yea and seale their owne condemnation with their owne witnesse. For they confesse themselues debters, vnlesse they be acquited by the benefit of forgiuenesse, which yet they doe not receiue, but rather refuse, when they thrust vnto God their owne merits and satisfactions. For, so they doe not beseech his mercie, but do appeale to his iudgement. As for them that dreame of a perfection in themselues, which taketh away neede to craue pardon, let them haue such disciples whom the itching of their eares driueth to errors: so that it be certaine that so many disciples as they get, are taken away from Christ: for as much as he instructing all to confesse their guiltinesse, receiueth none but sinners: not for that he cherisheth sinnes with flatterings, but because he knew that the faithfull are neuer throughly vnclothed of the vices of their flesh, but that they alway remaine subiect to the iudgement of God. It is indeed to be wished, yea and to be earnestly endeuoured, that we hauing performed all the parts of our dutie may truely reioice before God that we are cleane from all spot: but for as much as it pleaseth God by little and little to make againe his image in vs, that there alway remaineth some infection in our flesh, the remedie ought not to haue beene despised. If Christ by the authoritie giuen to him of his Father, commaundeth vs throughout the whole course of our life, to flee to crauing of pardon of our guiltinesse: who shal be able to suffer these new masters, which goe about with this imagined ghost of perfect innocencie to dazle the eies of the simple, to make them to trust that they may be made free from all fault? Which, as Iohn witnesseth, is nothing else but to make God a lier. And with all one worke these lewd men by cancelling one article doe teare in sunder and by that meane doe weaken from the verie foundation the whole couenant of God, wherein we haue shewed that our saluation is conteined: so as they be not only robbers of God, because they seuer those things so conioyned, but also wicked and cruel because they ouerwhelme poore soules with despaire: and traitours to themselues and other, that be like them, because they bring themselues into a slothfulnesse directly contrarie to the mercie of God. But whereas some obiect, that in wishing the comming of the kingdome of God, we doe also aske the putting away of sinne: that is too childish, because in the first table of this praier is set foorth vnto vs most high perfection, but in this part is set foorth our weaknesse. So these two things doe fitly agree together, that in a spring toward the marke we despise not the remedies which our necessities sities requireth. Finally, we pray that we may be forgiuen as we our selues doe forgiue our debters, that is, as we doe forgiue and pardon all of whomsoeuer we haue beene in any thing offended, either vniustly handled indeed, or reprochfully vsed in word. Not that it lieth in vs to pardon the guiltinesse of the fault and offence which perteineth to God alone: but this is our forgiuing, of our owne willingnesse to lay away out of our minde wrath, hatred, and desire of reuengement, and with voluntary forgetfulnesse to treade vnder foote the remembrance of iniuries. Wherefore we may not aske forgiuenesse of sinnes at the hand of God, if we doe not also forgiue their offences toward vs which either doe or haue done vs wrong. But if we keepe any hatreds in our hearts, and purpose any reuengements, and imagine by what occasion we may hurt, yea, and if we doe not endeuour to come into fauour againe with our enemies, and to deserue well of them with all kinde of friendly doings, and to win them vnto vs: we doe by this praier beseech God that he doe not forgiue vs. For we require that he grant to vs the same forgiuenesse which we grant to other. But this is to pray that he grant it not to vs, vnlesse we grant it to them. Whoso therefore be such, what doe they obtaine by their praier but a more grieuous iudgement? Last of all it is to be noted, that this condition that he forgiue vs as we forgiue our debters, is not therefore added for that we deserue his forgiuenesse by the forgiuenesse which we grant to other, as if that cause of forgiuenesse to vs were there expressed: but by this word partly the Lords will was to comfort the weakenesse of our Faith, for he added this as a signe whereby we may be assured that he hath as surely granted to vs forgiuenesse of our sinnes, as we surely know in our conscience that we haue granted the same to other, if our minde be void and cleansed of all hatred, enuy, and reuengement, and partly by this as it were by a marke, he wipeth them out of the number of his children that they may not be bold to call vpon him as their Father, which being headlong hasty to reuenge, and hardly entreated to pardon, doe vse stiffely continuing enmities, and doe cherish in themselues the same displeasure toward other which they pray to be turned from themselues. Which is also in Luke expresly spoken in the words of Christ.

Esay 43. 29.

The sixt petition of aide and succour against the power of those meanes which prouoking vnto euill we are not able of our selues to withstand.

Iam. 1. 2. & 14. Mat. 4. 1. & 3.

46 The sixte petition (as we haue said) answereth to the promise of engrauing the law of God in our hearts. But becausse we doe not without continuall warfare and hard and great striuings obey to God, we doe here pray to be furnished with such weapons and defended with such succour, that we may be able to get the victorie: whereby we are warned that we stand in neede not onely of the grace of the spirit, which may soften, bow, and direct our hearts to the obedience of God, but also of his helpe, whereby he may make vs inuincible against both all the traiterous entrappings and violent conflicts of Satan. But now oftentimes there are many and diuerse sorts. For, both the peruerse thoughts of minde prouoking vs to trespassing against the law, which either our owne lust doth minister vnto vs, or the deuill stirreth vp, are tentations: and also those things which of their owne nature are not euill, yet by the craft of the deuill are made tentations, when they are so set before our eies, that by the occasion of them we be drawne away or doe swarue from God. And these tentations are either on the right hand or on the left. On the right hand, as riches, power, honours, which commonly doe with their glistering and shew of good so dasell the sight of men, and catch them with the baited hooke of their flatterings, that being entrapped with such deceites, or drunke with such sweetnesse, they may forget their God. On the left hand, as pouertie, reproches, despisings, troubles, and such other: that they being grieued with the bitternesse and hardnesse thereof may be vtterly discouraged, cast away Faith and hope, and finally be altogether estranged from God. To these tentations of both sorts, which fight with vs either being kindled in vs by our owne lust, or being set against vs by the craft of Satan, we pray to our heauenly Father that he suffer vs not to yeeld: but rather that he vphold vs and raise vs vp with his hand, that being strong by his strength, we may stand fast against all the assaults of the malicious enemy, whatsoeuer thoughts he put into our minde: then, that whatsoeuer is set before vs on either side, we may turne it to good, that we neither be puffed vp with prosperitie, nor throwne downe with aduersity. Neither yet doe we heere require that we may feelee no tentations at all, with which we haue great need to be ſtirred vp, pricked, and pinched, leaſt by too much reſt we grow dull. For not in vaine did Dauid with to be tempted: and not without cauſe the Lord daily tempteth his elect, chaſtiſing them by ſhame, pouerty, trouble, and other kindes of Croſſe. But God tempteth after one maner, and Satan after another: Satan, to deſtroy, damne, confound, and throw downe headlong: but God, that by prouing them that be his he may haue a triall of their vnfainedneſſe, and by exerciſing them may confirme their ſtrength, to mortifie, purge by fire, and ſeare their fleſh, which vnleſſe it were in this wiſe reſtrained, would wax wanton, and would wildly outrage aboue meaſure. Moreouer Sathan aſſaileth men vnarmed and vnready, that he may oppreſſe them vnware: God euen with tempting worketh the effect, that they which be his may patiently beare whatſoeuer he ſendeth vpon them. By the name of the Euill, whether we vnderſtand the Deuill or ſinne, it maketh little matter. Satan indeed himſelfe is the enemy that lieth in waite for our life: but with ſinne he is armed to deſtroy vs. This therfore is our requeſt, that we may not be ouercome or ouerwhelmed with any tentations, but may by the power of the Lord ſtand ſtrong againſt all contrary powers wherewith we are aſſailed: which is, not to yeeld vs vanquiſhed to tentations, that being receiued into his keeping and charge, and being ſafe by his protection: we may endure vnouercome ouer ſinne, death, the gates of hell, and the whole kingdome of the deuill: which is to be deliuered from euill. Where it is alſo to be diligently marked, that it is aboue our ſtrength to match with the diuell ſo great a warrier, and to beare his force and violence. Otherwiſe we ſhould but vainly or as it were in mockage aske that which we had already in our ſelues. Surely, they which prepare them to ſuch a battell with truſt of themſelues, doe not ſufficiently vnderſtand with how fierce and well armed an enemy they haue to doe. Now we pray to be deliuered from his power, as out of the mouth of a mad and raging lion, whereas we ſhould be torne in peeces with his teeth and pawes, and ſwallowed with his throate, vnleſſe the Lord doe deliuer vs out of the middeſt of death: yet therewithall knowing this that if the Lord ſhall ſtand by vs, and fight for vs when we are ouerthrowne, we ſhall in his ſtrength ſhew ſtrength. Let other truſt as they liſt to their owne abilities and ſtrengths of freewil, which they thinke that they haue of them ſelues: but let it ſuffice vs that we ſtand and are ſtrong by the onely ſtrength of God. But this praier containeth more than at the firſt ſight it beareth in ſhew. For if the Spirit of God be our ſtrength to fight out our combate with Satan, we ſhall not be able to get the victorie vntill we being filled with that Spirit ſhall haue put off all the weakneſſe of our fleſh. When therefore we pray to be deliuered from Satan and the Diuell, we pray to be from time to time enriched with new encreaſes of the grace of God, till being fully ſtuffed with them, we may triumph ouer all euill. It ſeemeth hard and rough to ſome, that we craue of God that he leade vs not into tentation, for as much as it is contrary to his nature to tempt, as Iames witneſſeth. But this queſtion is already partly aſſoiled, where we ſaid that our owne luſt is properly the cauſe of all the tentations wherewith we are ouercome, and therefore woorthily beareth the blame thereof. Neither doeth Iames meane any thing elſe, but that the faultes are without cauſe and wrongfully laide vpon God, which we are driuen to impute to our ſelues, becauſe we know our ſelues in our conſcience guilty of them. But this withſtandeth not but that God may when it pleaſeth him make vs bond to ſatan, caſt vs away into a reprobate ſenſe, and to filthy luſts, and ſo lead vs into tentation by his iudgement which is righteous in deed but yet oftentimes ſecret: for as much as the cauſe of it is often hid from men, which is yet certainly knowen with him. Whereupon is gathered that this is no vnfit maner of ſpeaking, if we be perſwaded that hee doth not without cauſe ſo oft threaten, that when the reprobate ſhall be ſtricken with blindeneſſe and hardeneſſe of heart, theſe ſhall be ſure tokens of his vengeance.

47 Theſe three petitions, wherwith we do peculiarly commend vs and our things to God, doe euidently ſhew this which we haue before ſaid, that the praiers of Chriſtians ought to be common and to tend to the common edifying of the church, and to the encreaſe of the communion of the faithfull. For there doth not euery man pray to haue any thing priuately giuen, but all in common together doe pray for Our bread, for forgiueneſſe of ſinnes, that we may not be led into tentation, that we may be deliuered from euill. There is furthermore adioyned a cauſe why we haue both ſo great boldneſſe to aske, and ſo great truſt to obtaine: which although it be not in the Latin copies, yet it agreeth more fitly in this place than that it ſhould ſeeme woorthy to be omitted, namely that this is the kingdome, and the power, and the glory for euer. This is the perfect and quiet reſt of our ſoule. For if our praiers were to be commended to God by their owne worthineſſe, who ſhould be ſo bould, as once to open his mouth before him? Now howſoeuer we be moſt miſerable, howſoeuer moſt vnwoorthy of all men, howſoeuer voide of all commendation: yet we ſhall neuer want cauſe to pray, and neuer be deſtitute of confidence: foraſmuch as our Father cannot haue his kingdome, power and glory taken away from him. At the end is added Amen, whereby is expreſſed our feruentneſſe of deſire to obtaine thoſe things that we haue asked of God, and oure hope is confirmed that all ſuch things are already obtained and ſhall ſurely be giuen vs becauſe they are promiſed by God, which cannot deceiue. And this agreeth with that maner of praier which we haue here before rehearſed, Doe it Lord for thy names ſake, not for our ſakes or our righteouſneſſe: whereby the holy ones doe not onely expreſſe the end of their praiers, but alſo confeſſe that they are vnworthy to obtaine vnleſſe God fetch the cauſe from himſelfe, and that their truſt to ſpeed commeth of the only nature of God.

The perfection of the Lords prayer, and the danger of preſuming to craue things without the compaſſe thereof.
Matth. 17.5.
See Auguſt. Of prayer to Proba.

48 Thus haue wee whatſoeuer wee ought yea or in any wiſe may aske of God, ſet foorth in this forme and as it were a rule of praying taught by the beſt Schoolemaſter Chriſt, whom the Lord hath ſet ouer vs to be our teacher, and whom alone hee hath willed to be harkened vnto. For hee both alway hath beene his eternall wiſdome, and being made man is giuen to men the Angell of great counſell. And this praier is in all points, ſo fully perfect, that whatſoeuer forreine or ſtrange thing is added which cannot be referred to it, it is vngodly and vnwoorthy to be allowed of God. For in this ſumme hee hath ſet foorth, what is meete for him, what is pleaſing to him, what is neceſſary for vs: finally what he will grant. Wherefore who ſo dare goe further, and to aske any thing of God beſide theſe, firſt they will adde of their owne to the wiſedome of God (which cannot be done without made blaſphemy) then they hold not themſelues vnder the will of God, but deſpiſing it doe with greedineſſe wander further: finally they ſhall neuer obtaine any thing, foraſmuch as they praie without faith. And there is no doubt that all ſuch praiers are made without faith, becauſe here wanteth the word of God, vpon which vnleſſe faith be grounded, can in no wiſe ſtand. But they which forſaking the maſters rule, doe follow their owne deſires, are not onely without the word of God, but alſo ſo much as they be able with their whole endeuour are againſt it. Therefore Tertullian no leſſe fitly than truely hath called this a lawfull praier, ſecretly ſignifying that all other are lawleſſe and vnlawfull.

De fuga in perſecut.

Our requeſts when we pray, are not tied to the words and ſyllables, but to thoſe things which are contained within the compaſſe of the Lords praier.

49 We would not haue theſe things ſo taken as though we were ſo bound with this forme of praier, that we may not change a word or a ſayllable. For there are each where read many praiers in the Scripture, farre differing from this in words, yet written by the ſame Spirit, and which are at this day profitable to be vſed of vs. Many are continually put into the mouthes of the faithfull by the ſame Spirit, which in likeneſſe of words doe not ſo much agree. This onely is our meaning in ſo teaching, that no man ſhould ſeeke, looke for, or aske any other thing at all than that which is ſummarily comprehended in this praier, and which though it moſt differ in words, yet differeth not in ſenſe. Like as it is certaine that all the praiers which are found in the Scriptures, and which doe come out of godly hearts, are applied to this, ſo verily none can any where be found, which may match, much leſſe paſſe, the perfectneſſe of this praier. Heere is nothing left out, that might be thought vpon to the praiſes of God, nothing that ought to come into the minde of man for his owne profits: and the ſame ſo fully that all hope is woorthily taken away from all men to attempt to make any better. In a ſum, let vs remember that this is the doctrine of the wiſdome of God, which hath taught what he willed, and willed what was needfull.

50 But

50 But although we haue aboue ſaid, that we ought alway to breath vpward with mindes lifted vp to God, and pray without ceaſing: yet forasmuch as ſuch is our weakneſſe, as needeth to be vpholden with many helpes: ſuch is our dulneſſe, as needeth to be pricked forward with many ſpurs: it is good that euerie one of vs appoint to himſelfe priuately certaine houres which may not paſſe away without praier, and which may haue the whole affections of our minde throughly buſied to that purpoſe: as, when we riſe in the morning, before that we go to our daies worke, when we ſit downe to meate, when we haue beene fed by the bleſſing of God, when we take vs to reſt. Only let this not be a ſuperſtitious obſeruing of houres, by which, as praying a taske to God, we may thinke our ſelues diſcharged for the other houres: but a training of our weakneſſe, whereby it may ſo be exerciſed and from time to time ſtirred vp. Specially we ought carefully to looke that ſo oft as either we our ſelues are in diſtreſſe, or we ſee other to be in diſtreſſe with any hardneſſe of aduerſitie, we run ſtraight way to him, not with feete but with harts: then, that we ſuffer not any proſperitie of our owne or other mens, to paſſe but that we teſtifie that we acknowledge it to be his with praiſe and thankeſgiuing. Finally, this is diligently to be obſerued in all praier, that we goe not about to binde God to certaine circumſtances, nor to appoint to him, what he ſhall doe, at what time, in what place, and in what maner: as by this praier we are taught to make to him no law, nor to appoint to him any condition, but to leaue to his will that thoſe things which he will doe, he may doe in what maner, at what time, and in what place it pleaſeth him. Wherefore ere we make any praier for our ſelues, we firſt pray that his wil be done: where we doe alreadie ſubmit our will to his: with which when it is reſtrained as with a bridle put vpon it, it may not preſume to bring God into rule, but make him the iudge and gouernour of all her deſires.

The neceſſitie of prayer and of ſet times for that purpoſe.

51 If we doe with mindes framed to this obedience, ſuffer our ſelues to bee ruled with the lawes of Gods prouidence, we ſhall eaſily learne to continue in prayer, and with longing deſires patiently to waite for the Lord: being aſſured that although hee appeare not, yet he is alway preſent with vs, and will when he ſeeth his time declare how not deafe eares he gaue to the prayer, which in the eyes of men ſeemed to bee deſpiſed. And this ſhall be a moſt preſent comfort, that wee faint not and fall downe by deſpaire, if at any time God doe not anſwere at our firſt requeſtes. Like as they are woont to doe, which while they are carried with their ſudden heate, doe ſo call vpon God, that if he come not to them at their firſt brunts and bring them preſent helpe, they by and by imagine him to be angrie and hatefully bent againſt them, and caſting away all hope of obtaining doe ceaſe to call vpon him. But rather deferring our hope with a well tempered euenneſſe of minde, let vs goe forward in that perſeuerance which is ſo much commended to vs in the Scriptures. For in the Pſalmes wee may oftentimes ſee how Dauid and other faithfull men, when they ſeeme in a maner wearied with praying, did beate the aire becauſe they threw away their wordes to God that heard them not, and yet they ceaſe not from praying: becauſe the worde of God hath not his full authoritie maintained, vnleſſe the credit thereof be ſet aboue all ſucceſſes of things. Moreouer let vs not tempt God and prouoke him againſt vs being wearied with our importunacie, which many vſe to doe, which doe nothing but indent with God vpon a certaine condition, and binde him to the lawes of their couenanting, as though he were ſeruant to their deſires: which if he doe not preſently obey, they diſdaine, they chafe, they carpe againſt him, they murmure, they turmoile. Therefore to ſuch oftentimes in his furor he being angrie graunteth that, which to other in his mercie he being fauourable denieth. An example hereof are the children of Iſrael, for whom it had beene better not to haue beene heard of the Lord, than with fleſh to eate vp his wrath.

Conſtancie and patience in praiers needfull.

52 But if yet at length after long looking for it our ſenſe doe not perceiue what we haue preuailed with praying, and feeleth no fruit thereof: yet our faith ſhall aſſure vs of that, which cannot be perceiued by ſenſe, namely that we haue obtained that which was expedient for vs, for as much as the Lord doth ſo oft and ſo certainely take vpon him that he will haue care of our grieues, after that they haue beene once laid in his boſome. And ſo he will make vs to poſſeſſe abundance in pouertie, comfort in affliction.

Our praiers not fruitleſſe though the fruit thereof be not alwaies ſenſible.

For howsoeuer all other things doe faile vs, yet God will neuer faile vs, which suffereth the waiting and patience of them that be his to be disappointed. He alone shall suffice vs insteed of all things, for as much as he containeth in himselfe all good things, which he shall one day disclose vnto vs at the day of iudgement when he shall plainly shew foorth his kingdome. Beside this although God grant to vs, yet he doth not alway answer according to the expresse forme of our request, but holding vs after outward seeming in suspence, yet by a meane vnknowen he sheweth that our praiers were not vaine. 1. Iohn 5. 15. This is meant by the words of Iohn, If we know that hee heareth vs when we aske any thing of him, we know that we haue the petitions which we aske of him. This seemeth a weake superfluousnesse of words: but it is singularly profitable declaration, namely that God euen when he doth not follow our desires, is yet gentle and fauourable to our praiers, that the hope which resteth vpon his word may neuer disappoint vs. But with this patience the faithfull doe so farre neede to be sustained, that they should not long stand vnlesse they did stay vpon it. For the Lord doth by no light trials proue them that be his, and not tenderly doth exercise them: but oftentimes driueth them into the greatest extremities, and then they are driuen thither he suffereth them long to stick fast in the mire, ere he gaue them any tast of his sweetnesse: 1. Sam. 26. and, as Hanna saith, he slaieth, and quickeneth: he leadeth downe to the hels, and bringeth backe againe. What could they here doe but be discouraged, and fall headlong into dispaire: vnlesse when they are in distresse and desolate and already halfe dead, this thought did raise them vp, that God doth looke vpon them, and that there shall be at hand an end of their euils. But howsoeuer they stand fast vpon the assurednesse of that hope, they cease not in the meane time to pray: because if there be not in praier a stedfastnesse of continuance, we nothing preuaile with praying.

THE XXj. CHAPTER.

Of the eternall Election, whereby God hath predestinate some to saluation, and other some to destruction.

The necessity of knowing the truth in the question of predestination that God may be glorified, our mindes both humbled and confirmed, and the danger of curious wading therein beyond the bounds of scripture.

BVt now whereas the couenant of life is not equally preached to all men, and with them to whom it is preached it doth not either equally or continually finde like place: in this diuersitie the woonderous depth of the iudgement of God appeareth. For neither is it any doubt but that this diuersity also serueth the free choise of Gods eternall election. If it be euident that it is wrought by the will of God that saluation is freely offered to some, and other some are debarred from comming to it: here by and by arise great and hard questions which cannot otherwise be discussed, than if the godly mindes haue that certainly stablished which they ought to hold concerning election and Predestination. This it (as many thinke) a combersome question: because they thinke nothing to be lesse reasonable than of the common multitude of men some be fore ordained to saluation, other some to destruction. But how they wrongfully encomber themselues, shall afterward be euident by the framing of the matter together. Beside that in the very same darknesse which maketh men afraid, not onely the profitableneesse of this doctrine, but also the most sweet fruit sheweth foorth it selfe. We shall neuer be cleerely perswaded as we ought to be, that our saluation floweth out of the fountaine of the free mercy of God, till his eternall election bee knowen to vs, which by this comparison brightly setteth foorth the grace of God, that he doth not with out difference adopt all into the hope of saluation, but giueth to some that which he denieth to other. How much the ignorance of this principle diminisheth of the glory of God, how much it withdraweth from the true humility, it is plaine to see. But Paul denieth that that which is so necessary to be knowen, is possible to be knowen, vnlesse God leauing altogether the respect of workes doe choose them whom he hath determined with himselfe. Rom. 11. 5. In this time (saith hee) the remnants were saued according to the free election, If by grace, then out of workes: forasmuch as grace should then not be grace. If of works, then not of grace: for as much as worke should ſhould now not be worke. If we muſt be brought backe to the beginning of election, that it may be certain that ſaluation commeth to vs from no other where than from the meere liberality of God: they which will haue this principle quenched, doe niggardly ſo much as in them lieth darken that which ought gloriouſly and with full mouth to haue beene publiſhed, and they plucke vp the very roote of humility. Paul, where the ſaluation of the remnant of the people is aſcribed to free election, cleerely teſtifieth that onely then it is knowen that God doth by his meere good pleaſure ſaue whom he will, and not render reward which cannot be done. They which ſhut the gates, that none may be bold to come to the taſting of this doctrine, doe no leſſe wrong to men than to God: becauſe neither ſhall any other thing ſuffice to humble vs as we ought to be, neither ſhall we otherwiſe feele from our heart how much we are bound to God. Neither yet is there any other where the vpholding ſtay of ſound affiance, as Chriſt himſelfe teacheth, which to deliuer vs from all feare, and to make vs vnianquiſhable among ſo many dangers, ambuſhes, and deadly barrels, promiſeth that whatſoeuer he hath receiued of his Father to keepe, ſhall be ſafe. Wherefore we gather that they ſhall with continuall trembling be miſerable, whoſoeuer they be that know not themſelues to be the proper poſſeſſion of God: and therefore that they doe very ill prouide both for themſelues and for all the faithfull, which being blind at theſe three profits which we haue touched, would wiſh the whole foundation of our ſaluation to be quite taken from among vs. Moreouer, heereby the Church appeareth vnto vs, which otherwiſe (as Bernard rightly teacheth) were not poſſible to be found, nor to be knowen among creatures: becauſe both waies in maruellous wiſe it lieth hidden within the boſome of bleſſed predeſtination and within the Maſſe of miſerable damnation. But ere I enter into the matter it ſelfe, I muſt beforehand in two ſorts ſpeake to two ſorts of men. That the intreating of predeſtination, whereas of it ſelfe it is ſomewhat cumberſome, is made very doubtfull yea and dangerous, the curiouſneſſe of men is the cauſe: which can by no ſtops be reſtrained from wandring into forbidden compaſſes, and climbing vp on high: which, if it may, will leaue to God no ſecret which it will not ſearch and turne ouer. Into this boldneſſe and importunacy foraſmuch as we commonly ſee many to run headlong, and among thoſe ſome that are otherwiſe not euill men: heere is fit occaſion to warne them what is in this behalfe the due meaſure of their dutie. Firſt therfore let them remember, that when they enquire vpon Predeſtination, they pearce into the ſecret cloſets of the wiſdome of God: whereinto if any man doe careleſly and boldly breake in, he ſhall both not attaine wherewith to ſatisfie his curiouſneſſe, and he ſhall enter into a maze whereof he ſhall finde no way to get out againe. For neither is it meete that man ſhould freely ſearch thoſe things which God hath willed to be hidden in himſelfe, and to turne ouer from very eternity the height of wiſdome, which he willed to be honoured and not be conceiued, that by it alſo he might be maruellous vnto vs. Thoſe ſecrets of his will which he hath determined to be opened vnto vs, he hath diſcloſed in his word: and he hath determined, ſo far as he foreſaw to pertaine to vs and to be profitable for vs.

Ser. in Cant. 78.

2 We are come (ſaith Auguſtine) into the way of Faith, let vs ſteadfaly hold it. It bringeth into the Kings chamber, in which all the treaſures of knowledge and wiſedome are hidden. For, the Lord himſelfe Chriſt did not enuy his excellent and moſt choſen diſciples, when he ſaid, I haue many things to be ſaid to you, but yee cannnot beare them now. We muſt walke, we muſt profit, we muſt encreaſe, that our hearts may be able to conceiue thoſe things which now we cannot conceiue. If the laſt day find vs profiting, there we ſhal learne that which here we could not. If this thought be of force with vs, that the word of the Lord is the onely way, that may lead vs to ſearch whatſoeuer is lawfull to be learned of him, that it is the onely light, which may giue vs light to ſee whatſoeuer we ought to ſee of him: it ſhal eaſilie hold backe and reſtraine vs from all raſhneſſe. For we ſhall know that ſo ſoone as we be gone out of the bounds of the world we run out of the way, and in darkneſſe, in which race we muſt needs oftentimes ſtraie, ſlip, and ſtumble. Firſt therefore let this be before our eies, that to couet any other knowledge of Predeſtination than that which is ſet foorth by the word of God, is a point of no leſſe madneſſe than if a man haue a will to goe by an vnpaſſible way, Gods word the onely ſafe way to walke in, and the light to direct our walking in matters of ſo great hardneſſe as this is.

Hom. in Ioh 15.

way, or to see in darknesse. Neither let vs be ashamed, to be ignorant of somewhat in it wherein there is some learned ignorance. But rather let vs willingly abstaine from the searching of that knowledge, whereof the excessiue coueting is both foolish and perilous, yea and deadly. But if the wantonnesse of wit prouoke vs, it shall be profitable alway to set this against it, whereby it may be beaten backe, that as too much of honie is not good, so the searching of glorie doth not turne vnto glorie to the curious. For there is good cause why we should be frayed away from that boldnes, which can do nothing but throw vs downe headlong into ruine.

Pro. 25. 27.

The doctrine of predestination not vtterly to be shunned and buried in silence

3 There be other which when they haue a will to remedie this euill, do command all mention of Predestination to be in a maner buried, at the least they teach men to flee from euerie maner of questioning thereof as from a rocke. Although the moderation of these men be heerein woorthily to bee praised that they iudge that mysteries should be tasted of with such sobrietie: yet because they descend too much beneath the meane: they little preuaile with the wit of man, which doth not lightlie suffer it selfe to be restrained. Therefore, that in this behalfe also we may keepe a right end, we must returne to the word of the Lord, in which we haue a sure rule of vnderstanding. For the Scripture is the schoole of the holy Ghost, in which as nothing is left out which is both necessarie and profitable to be knowen, so nothing is taught but that which is behouefull to learne. Whatsoeuer therefore is vttered in the Scripture concerning predestination, we must beware that we debar not the faithfull from it, least we should seeme either enuiously to defraude them of the benefit of their God, or to blame and accuse the holy Ghost who hath published those things which it is in any wise profitable to be suppressed. Let vs (I say) giue leaue to a christian man, to open his minde and his eares to all the sayings of God which are directed to him, so that it be done with this temperance, that so soone as the Lord hath closed his holie mouth, he may also foreclose to himselfe all the way to enquire further. This shall be the best bond of sobrietie, if not onely in learning wee may follow the Lord going before vs, but also when he maketh an end of teaching, we cease to will to learne. Neither is the danger which they feare of so great importance, that wee ought therefore to turne away our mindes from the oracles of God. Notable is the saying of Salomon, that the glorie of God is to conceale a word. But sith both godlinesse and common reason teacheth that this is not generally meant of euerie thing, we must seeke a difference, least brutish ignorance should please vs vnder colour of modestie and sobrietie. That difference is in few words plainly set out by Moses, To the Lord our God (saith he) belong his secrets: but to vs and to our children he hath disclosed these things. For we see how he cõmendeth to the people the studie of the doctrine of the law, only by reason of the decree of God, because it pleased God to publish it: and how he withholdeth the people within those bounds, by this onely reason, because it is not lawfull for mortall men to thrust themselues into the secrets of God.

Pro. 23. 2.

Deut. 29. 26.

Predestination not therefore to be concealed because prophane men carp, or barke, or scoffe at it, as they doe also at other parts of christian doctrine which are not for that cause to be ouerpast.

4 Prophane men (I grant) doe in the matter of Predestination suddenly catch hold of somewhat which they may carpe, or cauill, or barke, or scoffe at. But if their waywardnesse doe fray vs away from it, the chiefe articles of the faith must be kept secret, of which there is almost none which they or such as they be doe leaue vntouched with blasphemie. A froward wit will no lesse proudly outrage when he heareth that in the essence of God there are three persons, than if he heare that God foresaw what should become of man when he created him. Neither will they abstaine from laughing, when they shall vnderstand that there is litle more than fiue thousand yeares passed since the creation of the world: for they will aske why the power of God was so long idle and asleepe. Finally there can be nothing brought foorth, which they will not scoffe at. For the restraining of these sacriledges, must we hold our peace of the Godhead of the Sonne, and of the holy Ghost? or must we passe ouer in silence the creation of the world? Yea but the truth of God is both in this behalfe and euery where mightier than that it need to feare the euill speaking of the wicked: as Augustine strongly maintaineth in his worke of the good of Perseuerance. For we see that the false Apostles could not by defaming and slaundering the true doctrine of Paul, make him to be ashamed of it. But whereas they say that this whole disputation is perillous also for godly mindes, because it maketh against exhortations, because it shaketh faith, because it troubleth the hart it selfe: this is vaine. Augustine sticketh not to confesse that for these causes he was wont to be blamed, for that he did too freely preach Predestination: but, as he had in readinesse wherewithall, he largely confuteth them. But we, because many and diuers absurdities are thrust into this place, had rather to reserue euery one to be wiped away in place fit for it. Only this I desire generally to obtaine of them, that those things which the Lord hath laid vp in secret, we may not search: those things which he hath brought openly abroad, we may not neglect: lest either on the one part we be condemned of vaine curiositie, or on the other part, of vnthankfulnesse. For, this also is very well said of Augustine, that we may safely follow the scripture, which as with a motherly pace goeth stoupingly, lest it should forsake our weakenesse. But who so are so warie and so fearefull that they would haue Predestination to be buried, lest it should trouble weake soules: with what colour, I beseech you, will they couer their arrogancie, when they indirectly accuse God of foolish vnaduisednesse, as though he foresaw not the danger, which they thinke themselues to haue wisely met with? Whosoeuer therefore trauelleth to bring the doctrine of Predestination into misliking, he openly saith euill of God: as though somewhat had vnaduisedly slipped from him which is hurtfull to the Church.

Cap. 15. vsque ad 20.

De bono perseuer. cap. 14.

Lib. 5. de Gen. ad lit.

5 Predestination whereby God adopteth some into the hope of life, and iudgeth some to eternall death, no man that would be accompted godly dare simply denie: But they wrap it vp with many cauillations, specially they which make foreknowledge the cause of it. We in deede do say that they be both in God, but we say that the one is wrongfully made subiect to the other. When we giue foreknowledge to God, we meane that all things alway haue beene and perpetually doe remaine vnder his eies, so that to his knowledge there is nothing to come or past, but all things are present, and so present that he doth not imagine onely by conceiued formes (as those things are present to vs, whereof our mind holdeth fast the remembrance) but he truly beholdeth and seeth them as set before him. And this foreknowledge extendeth to the whole compasse of the world and to all creatures. Predestination we call the eternall decree of God, whereby he had it determined with himselfe what he willed to become of euery man. For all are not created to like estate: but to some eternall life, and to some eternall damnation is fore-appointed. Therefore as euery man is created to the one or other end, so we say that he is predestinate either to life or to death. But this Predestination God hath not onely testified in euery seuerall person, but hath shewed an example thereof in the whole issue of Abraham, whereby might plainely appeare that it lyeth in his will what shall be the estate of euery nation. When the Highest deuided the nations, and seuered the children of Adam, his part was the people of Israel, the cord of his inheritance. The separation is before the eyes of all men: in the person of Abraham as in a drie stocke one people is peculiarly chosen, all other being refused: but the cause appeareth not, sauing that Moses, to cut off all occasion of glorying from posteritie, teacheth that they excell onely by the free loue of God. For he assigneth this to be the cause of their deliuerance, for that God loued the Fathers, and chose their seed after them. More plainely in another Chapter: He was pleased in you to choose you, not because you passed other nations in number, but because he loued you. The same admonition is often repeated with him, Behold, to the Lord thy God belongeth the heauen, the earth, and whatsoeuer things are in it: and he hath pleased himselfe only in your Fathers, and hath loued them, and hath chosen you their seed. Againe in an other place sanctification is commanded them, because they are chosen to be a peculiar people. And againe in an other place, Loue is affirmed to be the cause of protection. Which also the Faithfull doe declare with one voyce, saying: He hath chosen for vs our inheritance, the glory of Iacob, whom he hath loued. For they do all impute to free loue all the gifts wherewith they were garnished of God: not onely because they knew that they themselues had obtained them by no deseruings, but also that euen the holy Patriarch was not endued with such vertue, that he could purchase to himselfe and his posteritie so great a prerogatiue of honor. And, the more strongly to tread downe all pride, he vpbraided them that they haue deserued no such thing, forasmuch

And oftentimes the Prophets doe hatefully and as by way of reproch caſt the Iewes in the teeth with this election, becauſe they had fowly departed from it. Whatſoeuer it be, now let them come foorth which will binde the election of God either to the worthineſſe of men, or to the merits of workes. When they ſee one nation to be preferred before all other, and when they heare that God was led with no reſpect to be more fauourably bent to a few and vnnoble, yea and froward and diſobedient men: will they quarrell with him, becauſe his will was to ſhew ſuch an example of mercie? But they ſhall neither with their prattling voices hinder his worke, nor with throwing ſtones of taunts into heauen ſhall hit or hurt his righteouſneſſe, but rather they fall backe vpon their owne heads. Moreouer the Iſraelites are called backe to this principle of the free couenant, when either thanks are to be giuen to God, or their hope to be raiſed vp againſt the time to come. He made vs, and not we our ſelues, (ſaith the Prophet) his people and the ſheepe of his paſtures. The negatiue is not ſuperfluous, which is added to exclude vs, that they may know that of all the good things wherewith they excell, God is not onely the author, but fetched the cauſe thereof from himſelfe, becauſe there was nothing in them worthy of ſo great honour. Alſo he biddeth them to be contented with the meere good pleaſure of Pſal.105.6. God, in theſe words. The ſeede of Abraham are his ſeruants: the children of Iacob his elect. And after that he hath rehearſed the continuall benefits of God as fruites of the election, at length he concluded, that he dealt ſo liberally becauſe he remembred his couenant. With which doctrine agreeth the ſong of the whole Church, Thy right Pſal44.4. hand and the light of thy countenance gaue the land to our Fathers, becauſe thou waſt pleaſed in them. But it is to be noted, that where mention is made of the land, it is a viſible ſigne of the ſecret ſeuering wherein the adoption is contained. To the ſame thankfulneſſe Dauid in another place exhorteth the people, ſaying, Bleſſed is the nation Pſal.33.12. whoſe God the Lord is, the people which he hath choſen for an inheritance to himſelfe. And Samuel encourageth them to good hope, ſaying, The Lord will not forſake you, 1.Sam. 20.22. for his owne great names ſake, becauſe it pleaſed him to create you for a people to himſelfe. Likewiſe Dauid when his faith is aſſailed, armeth himſelfe to fight, ſaying, Bleſſed Pſal.65.5. is he whom thou haſt choſen, he ſhall dwell in thy courts. But for as much as the election hidden in God was ſtabliſhed as well by the firſt deliuerance as by the ſecond, and Eſay 14.2. other meane benefits: in Eſay the word of Electing is transferred to this, God ſhall haue mercie on Iacob, and he ſhall yet chooſe out of Iſrael: becauſe he ſignifying the time to come, ſaith that the gathering together of the remnant of the people which he ſeemed to haue forſaken, ſhall be a ſigne of the ſtable and ſtedfaſt election, which once ſeemed to haue beene fallen away. When alſo it is ſaid in another place, I haue choſen thee and haue not caſt thee away: he ſetteth out the continuall courſe of the notable liberalitie of his fatherly goodwill. And yet more plainly the Angell ſaith in Zacharie, Eſay 41.9. Zach.2.12. God ſhall yet chooſe Ieruſalem: as though in hardly chaſtning it, he had reiected it: or as though the exile were an interrupting of the election: which yet remaineth inuiolable, although the ſignes thereof doe not alway appeare.

Of election and Predeſtination both generall & ſpeciall.

6 There is to be added a ſecond degree more narrowly reſtrained, or in which was ſeene a more ſpeciall grace of God: when of the ſame kindred of Abraham God refuſed ſome, and other ſome by nouriſhing them in the church he ſhewed that he retained among his children. Iſmael had at the beginning obtained equall degree with his brother Iſaac, becauſe the ſpirituall couenant had beene no leſſe ſealed in him by the ſigne of Circumciſion. He is cut off, and then Eſau: at the laſt an innumerable multitude and almoſt Iſrael. In Iſaac was the ſeede called: the ſame calling endured in Iacob. A like example God ſhewed in reiecting Saul: which thing is alſo glorioufly ſet forth in the Pſal.78.69 Pſalme. He hath put backe the tribe of Ioſeph, and the tribe of Ephraim he hath not choſen, but he hath choſen the tribe of Iuda. Which the holy hiſtorie diuers times repeateth, that the wonderfull ſecret of the grace may the better appeare in this change. Iſmael, Eſau, and ſuch other, (I graunt) fell from the adoption by their owne fault and guiltineſſe: becauſe there was a condition adioyned, that they ſhould faithfully keepe the couenant of God, which they falſely brake. But this was yet a ſingular benefit of God, that hee vouchſafed to prefer them aboue the other Gentiles: as it is ſaid in the Pſalme, Pſalme, He hath not ſo done to other nations, nor hath opened his iudgements to them. But heere I haue not without cauſe ſaid that there be two degrees to be noted: becauſe now in the chooſing of the whole nation God ſhewed that he is in his owne meere liberalitie bound to no lawes: but he is free, ſo that equall portion of grace is not to be required at his hand: the vnequalitie whereof ſheweth that it is truely of free giſt. Therefore Malachie amplifieth the vnthankefulneſſe of Iſrael, becauſe they being not onely choſen out of all mankinde, but alſo ſeuered out of a holie houſe to be a peculiar people, doe vnfaithfully and wickedly deſpiſe God ſo beneficiall a Father. Was not Eſau the brother of Iacob? (ſaith he) and yet Iacob I loued, but Eſau I hated. For, God taketh it for confeſſed, that when either of them was borne of a holie Father, and ſucceſſour of the couenant, finally a branch of the holie roote: now the children of Iacob were more than commonly bound, which were taken into that dignitie. But whē Eſau the firſt begotten being refuſed, their Father which was by nature inferior was made thē heire, he prooueth them doubly vnthankfull, and complaineth that they were not holden with that double bond.

Mal. 1. 2.

7 Although it be already ſufficiently euident, that God doth by his ſecret counſell freely chooſe whom he will, reiecting other, yet his free election is hitherto but halfe ſhewed, till we come to all particular perſons, to whom God not onely offereth ſaluation, but ſo aſſigneth it, that the certaintie of the effect thereof is not in ſuſpenſe or doubtfull. For, theſe are accounted in that onely ſeede, whereof Paul maketh mention. For although the adoption was left in the hand of Abraham, yet becauſe many of his poſteritie were cut off as rotten members: that the election may be effectuall and truly ſtedfaſt, we muſt needs aſcend to the head, in whom the heauenly Father hath bound together his elect one with another, and hath knit them to himſelfe with a knot impoſſible to be looſed. So in the adoption of the kinred of Abraham, ſhined the liberall fauour of God, which he denied to other men: yet in the members of Chriſt appeareth a much more excellent ſtrength of grace, becauſe they being graffed into their head doe neuer fall away from ſaluation. Therefore Paul doth fitly reaſon out of the place of Malachie which I euen now alleaged: that where God with making a couenant of eternall life calleth any people to himſelfe, there is in part a ſpeciall maner of election, that he doth not chooſe all effectually with common grace. Whereas it is ſaid, I haue loued Iacob, this pertaineth to the whole iſſue of the Patriarch, which the Prophet there ſetteth in compariſon againſt the poſteritie of Eſau. Yet this withſtandeth not but that in the perſon of one man was ſet foorth to vs an example of the election, which cannot ſlip away, but muſt come to the marke that it tendeth to. Theſe Paul doth not vainely note to be called remnants: becauſe experience teacheth that of a great multitude many ſlide and vaniſh away, ſo that oftentimes there remaineth but a ſmall portion. But why the generall election of a people is not alway firme and ſtedfaſt, there is a reaſon offering it ſelfe in readineſſe: becauſe with whom God couenanteth he doth not by and by giue to them the ſpirit of regeneration, by the power whereof they may continue in the couenant to the end: but the outward changing without the inward effectualneſſe of grace, which might be of force to hold them in, is a certaine meane thing betweene the forſaking of whole mankind, and the election of a ſmall number of the godly. The whole people of Iſrael was called the inheritance of God, of whom yet there were many ſtrangers. But becauſe God had not for nothing made couenant with them that he would be their Father and Redeemer, he rather hath reſpect to his owne free fauour than to the vnfaithfull falling away of many: by whom alſo his truth was not aboliſhed: becauſe where he reſerued any remnant, it appeared that his calling was without Repentance. For whereas God did from time to time chooſe vnto himſelfe a Church rather out of the children of Abraham, than out of the prophane nations, he had regard to his couenant, which being broken of the whole multitude he reſtrained to a few, that it ſhould not vtterly fall away. Finally the common adoption of the ſeede of Abraham was a certaine viſible image of a greater benefit, which God hath vouchſafed to graunt to a few out of many. This is the reaſon why Paul ſo diligently putteth difference betweene the children of Abraham according to the fleſh, and his ſpirituall children which were called after the example of Iſaac.

Election outward and inward, in the generall body of men outwardly elected ſundry, which inwardly are not elected in the Spirit.

Isaac. Not that it was a vaine and vnfruitfull thing ſimply to be the child of Abraham, (which might not be ſaid without diſhonor of the couenant) but becauſe the vnchangeable counſell of God, whereby he hath predeſtinate whom he would, is by it ſelfe effectuall onely to this latter ſort vnto ſaluation. But I warne the readers that they bring not a foreconceiued iudgement on either ſide, till it appeare by the places of ſcripture brought foorth what is to be thought. That therefore which the ſcripture cleerely ſheweth, we ſay that God by eternall and vnchangeable counſell hath once appointed whom in time to come he would take to ſaluation, and on the other ſide whom he would condemne to deſtruction. This counſe as touching the elect, we ſay to be grounded vpon his free mercie without any reſpect of the worthineſſe of man, but whom he appointeth to damnation, to them by his iuſt in deed and irreprehenſible, but alſo incomprehenſible iudgement, the entry of life is forecloſed. Now in the elect we ſet vocation to be the teſtimonie of election: and then iuſtification to be another ſigne of the manifeſt ſhewing of it, till they come to glory wherein is the fulfilling of it. But as by vocation and election God maketh his elect: ſo by ſhutting out the reprobate either from the knowledge of his name or from the ſanctification of his ſpirit, he doth as it were by theſe marks open what iudgement abideth for them. I will heere paſſe ouer many fained inuentions, which fooliſh men haue forged to ouerthrow predeſtination. For they neede no confutation, which ſo ſoone as they are brought forth, doe largely bewray their owne falſeneſſe. I will tary only vpon thoſe, which either are in controuerſie among the learned, or which may bring any hardneſſe to the ſimple, or which vngodlineſſe with faire ſeeming ſhew pretendeth, to ſcoffe at the righteouſneſſe of God.

THE XXIJ. CHAPTER.

A confirmation of this doctrine by teſtimonies of the Scripture.

God was not moued with the foreſight of mans merites to predeſtinate, neither is to be grudged at for preferring ſome, and paſſing by others, whom particularly and freely he hath choſen.

ALL theſe things which we haue ſet are not without controuerſie among many, ſpecially the free election of the faithfull: which yet cannot be weakened. For the common ſort doe thinke that God, as he foreſeeth that euery mans deſerning ſhall be, ſo maketh difference betweene men: that therefore whom he foreknoweth that they ſhall be not vnworthy of his grace, them he adopteth into place of children: and whoſe natures he eſpieth that they will be bent to wickedneſſe and vngodlineſſe, them he appointeth to the damnation of death. So by cloaking it with the veile of foreknowledge they doe not onely darken election, but faine that it hath beginning from elſewhere. And this opinion receiued of the common ſort is not the opinion of the common ſort alone: for in all ages it hath had great maintainers. Which I doe plainely confeſſe, to the intent that no man ſhould truſt that it ſhall much hurt our cauſe if their names be obiected againſt vs. For, the truth of God herein is more certaine, than that it may be ſhaken: more cleare, than that it may be darkened with the authoritie of men. But ſome other neither exerciſed in the ſcripture, nor woorthie of any voice, doe raile at this doctrine with greater maliciouſneſſe, than that their forward pride ought to be ſuffered. Becauſe God chooſing ſome after his owne will, leaueth other ſome, they picke a quarrell againſt him. But if the thing it ſelfe be knowen for true, what ſhall they preuaile with brawling againſt God? We teach nothing but that which is approoued by experience, that it was alway at libertie for God, to beſtow his grace to whom he will. I will not enquire whereby the poſteritie of Abraham excelled other, but by that vouchſafeing, whereof there is found no cauſe elſewhere than in God. Let them anſwere why they be men rather then oxen or aſſes. When it was in the hand of God to make them dogs, he faſhioned them after his owne image. Will they giue leaue to brute beaſts to quarrell with God for their eſtate, as though the difference were vnrighteous? Truely it is no more righteous, that they ſhould enioy the prerogatiue which they haue obteined by no deſeruings, than for God diuerſly to deale abroade his benefits according to the meaſure of his owne iudgement. If they skip ouer to perſons, where the inequalitie is more hatefull to them, at the leſt at the example of Chriſt, they ought to be afraid to prate ſo boldly of ſo high a myſterie. He is conceiued of the ſeed of Dauid, a mortall man: by what vertues will they ſay that he deſerued to be in the the verie wombe made the head of Angels, the onely begotten ſonne of God, the image and glorie of the Father, the light, righteouſneſſe, and ſaluation of the world? This thing Auguſtine wiſely noted, that in the verie head of the Church is a moſt cleere mirrour of free election, leaſt it ſhould trouble vs in the members: and that he was not by righteouſly liuing made the ſonne of God, but that he had ſo great honour freely giuen him, that he might afterward make other partakers of his gifts. Heere if any man aske why other were not the ſame that he was, or why all wee are ſo farre diſtant from him, why all we be corrupt and hee pureneſſe: ſuch a man ſhall bewray not onely his madneſſe, but therewithall alſo his ſhameleſneſſe. But if they goe forward to labour to take from God the free power to chooſe and refuſe, let them alſo take away that which is giuen to Chriſt. Now it is woorth the trauaile to conſider what the ſcripture pronounceth of euerie one. Paul verily, when he teacheth that we were choſen in Chriſt, taketh away all reſpect of our owne worthineſſe. For it is all one as if hee had ſaid: becauſe in the whole ſeede of Adam the heauenly father found nothing worthy of his election, he turned his eies vnto his Chriſt, to chooſe as it were members out of his bodie them whom he would take into the fellowſhip of life. Let this reaſon then be of force among the faithfull, that we were therefore adopted in Chriſt into the heauenly inheritance, becauſe in our ſelues we are not able to receiue ſo great excellencie. Which alſo he touched in another place, when he exhorteth the Coloſſians to giuing of thankes, for this that they were by God made fit to be partakers of the eſtate of the holie. If election goe before this grace of God that we be made fit to obtaine the glorie of the life to come: what ſhall God himſelfe now finde in vs whereby hee may be mooued to elect vs? My meaning ſhall yet be more openly expreſſed by another ſaying of his. He hath choſen (ſaith he) ere the foundations of the world were laid, according to the good pleaſure of his will, that we might be holie, and vnſpotted, and vnreproueable in his ſight: where he ſetteth the good pleaſure of God againſt all our deſeruings whatſoeuer they be.

2 That the proofe may be more ſtrong, it is worth the labour to note all the parts of that place, which being coupled together doe leaue no doubt. Where he nameth the elect, it is no doubt that he ſpeaketh to the faithfull, as he alſo by and by afterward affirmeth. Wherefore they doe with too foule a gloſe abuſe that name, which wreſt it to the age wherein the Goſpell was firſt publiſhed. Where he ſaith that they were elect before the beginning of the world, he taketh away all reſpect of worthineſſe. For what reaſon or difference is there betweene them which yet were not, and thoſe which afterward ſhould in Adam be equall? Now if they be elect in Chriſt, it followeth that not onely euery man is ſeuered without himſelfe, but alſo one of them from another, foraſmuch as we ſee that not all are the members of Chriſt. That which is added, that they were elect that they might be holie, plainly confuteth the error which deriueth election from foreknowledge, foraſmuch as Paul crieth out againſt it and ſaith that whatſoeuer vertue appeareth in men, it is the effect of election. Now if a higher cauſe be ſought, Paul anſwereth that God hath ſo predeſtinate, yea and that according to the good pleaſure of his will. In which wordes he ouerthroweth whatſoeuer meanes of their election men doe imagine in themſelues. For he alſo teacheth that whatſoeuer things God giueth toward ſpirituall life, they flow out of this one fountaine, becauſe God hath choſen whom he would, and ere they were borne he had ſeuerally laid vp for them the grace which he vouchſafed to giue them.

Speciall & free election without reſpect of merits going before or following after, demonſtrated out of S. Pauls wordes to the Epheſians.

3 But whereſoeuer this pleaſure of God reigneth, there no workes come to be conſidered. He doth not heere in deede purſue the compariſon of contraries, but it is to be vnderſtanded ſuch as he himſelfe declareth. He hath called vs (ſaith he) with a holy calling, not according to our workes, but according to his purpoſe and the grace which is giuen of Chriſt before the times of the world. And we haue alreadie ſhewed that all doubt is taken away in this which followeth, that we might be holie and vnſpotted. For if thou ſay, becauſe he foreſaw that we ſhould be holie, therefore he choſe vs, thou ſhalt peruert the order of Paul. Thus therefore thou maiſt ſafely gather. If hee choſe vs that we might be holie: then he choſe vs, not becauſe he foreſaw that wee would be ſuch. For theſe two things are contrarie the one to the other: that the godly haue haue it of election that they be holie, and that they come to it by meane of workes. Neither is their cauillation heere any thing worth to which they commonly flee, that the Lord doth not render the grace of election to any works going before, but yet graunteth it to works to come. For when it is said that the faithfull were chosen, that they might be holie: therewithall is signified that the holinesse which was to come in them tooke beginning at election. And how shall this saying agree together, that those things which are deriued from election gaue cause to election? The same thing which he said he setteth afterward to confirme more strongly, where he saith, According to the purpose of his will which he had purposed in himselfe. For, to say that God purposed in himselfe, is as much in effect as if it had been said, that without himselfe he considered nothing whereof he had any regard in decreeing. Therefore he by and by addeth, that the whole summe of our election tendeth to this end, that we should be to the prayse of the grace of God. Truly the grace of God deserueth not to be praysed alone in our election, vnlesse our election be free. But free it shall not be, if God in electing his, doe consider what shall be the works of euery one. Therefore we find that that which Christ said to his disciples, hath place vniuersally among all the faithfull, Ye haue not chosen me, but I haue chosen you. Where he not onely excludeth deseruings past, but also signifieth that they had nothing in themselues why they should be chosen, if he had not preuented them with his mercie. Like as this saying of Paul is also to be vnderstoode: Who first gaue to him, and shall receiue recompence? For he meaneth to shew that the goodnesse of God so preuenteth men, that it findeth nothing in them neyther past nor to come, whereby he may be woon to be fauourable to them.

Our ſanctification the end wherevnto, not the cauſe wherefore we were choſen. 2. Tim. 1. 9.

Rom. 11. 35.

Speciall and free election proued out of S. Paul to the Romanes. Rom. 9. 6.

4 Now to the Romanes, where he fetcheth this question further off, and followeth it more largely, he denieth that all they are Israelites, which are issued of Israel: because although by right of inheritance they were all blessed, yet the succession did not egally passe to them all. The beginning of this disputation proceeded of the pride and deceitfull glorying of the Iewish people. For when they claimed to themselues the name of the Church, they would haue the credit of the Gospell to hang vpon their will: as the Papists at this day would gladly with this fained colour thrust themselues into the place of God. Paul, although he grant that the offspring of Abraham is holie by reason of the couenant, yet affirmeth that the most part of them are strangers in it: and that not onely because they swarue out of kinde, so that of lawfull children they become bastards, but because the especiall election of God standeth aboue and reigneth in the highest top, which alone maketh the adoption thereof sure. If their owne godlinesse stablished some in the hope of saluation, and their owne falling away alone disherited other some: Paul verily should both fondly and vnconuenientlie lift vp the readers euen to the secret election. Now if the will of God (the cause whereof neither appeareth nor is to be sought, without himselfe) maketh the one sort differing from the other, so that not all the children of Israell be true Israelites, it is vainely fained that euery mans estate hath beginning in himselfe. Then he further followeth the matter vnder the example of Iacob and Esau. For when they both were the sonnes of Abraham, both together enclosed in one mothers wombe, it was a monsterlike change that the honour of first birth was remoued to Iacob, by which change Paul affirmeth that there was testified the election of the one, and the reprobation of the other. The originall and cause of it is enquired, which the teachers of foreknowledge will haue to be set out in the vertues, and vices of men. For this is an easy short way with them, that God shewed in the person of Iacob, that he chooseth the worthy of his grace: and in the person of Esau, he refuseth them whom he foreseeth to be vnworthy. Thus they say boldly. But what saith Paul? when they were not yet borne, and had not done any good or euill, that according to election the purpose of God might abide, not of works, but of him that calleth, it is said: The elder shall serue the yonger: as it is written, Iacob I haue loued, but Esau I haue hated. If foreknowledge were of any force in this difference of the brethren, then verily mention were vnfitlie made of the time. Let vs graunt that Iacob was chosen, because he had worthinesse gotten by works to come: to what purpose should Paul say that he was not yet borne: And this now

ſhould be vnaduiſedly added, that he had yet done no good: becauſe this ſhall be a readie anſwere, that nothing is hidden from God, and that ſo the godlineſſe of Iacob was preſent before him. If works do win grace, they ſhould then worthily haue had their price before that Iacob was borne as if he had bene growne to full age. But the Apoſtle goeth forward in vndoing this knot, and teacheth that the adoption of Iacob was not made of works, but of the calling of God. In works he enterlaceth not the time to come or time paſt: and then he directly ſetteth them againſt the calling of God, meaning by ſtabliſhing of the one expreſly to ouerthrow the other: as if he had ſaid, that it is to be conſidered what hath pleaſed God, not what men haue brought of themſelues. Laſt of all it is certaine that by the words of election and Purpoſe, all cauſes whatſoeuer men are wont to faine elſewhere than in the ſecret counſell of God, are quite remoued from this matter.

5 What colour will they bring to darken theſe things, who in election aſſigne ſome place to works either paſt or to come? For this is vtterlie to mocke out that which the Apoſtle affirmeth, that the difference of the brethren hangeth not vpon any conſideration of works, but vpon the meere calling of God, becauſe it was put betweene them when they were not yet borne. Neither had he beene ignorant of this their ſubtletie, if it had had any ſoundneſſe in it: but becauſe he very well knew, that God can foreſee no goodneſſe in man, but that which he hath firſt determined by the benefit of his election to giue him: he fleeth not to that vnorderlie order, to ſet good works before the cauſe of themſelues. Thus haue we by the words of the Apoſtle, that the ſaluation of the faithfull is founded vpon the will of the onely election of God: and that the ſame fauour is not gotten by works, but commeth of free calling. We haue alſo as it were an image of that thing ſet before vs. Eſau and Iacob are brethren, iſſuing both of the ſame parents, encloſed yet both in one wombe, not yet brought out into the world. In them all things are egall, yet of them the iudgement of God is diuers. For he taketh the one and forſaketh the other. There was nothing but the onely firſt birth, by right whereof the one excelled the other. But this alſo being paſſed ouer, that thing is giuen to the yonger which is denied in the elder. Yea, and in other alſo God ſeemeth alway as of ſet purpoſe to haue deſpiſed firſt birth, to cut off from the fleſh all matter of glorying, Refuſing Iſmael, he caſt his mind to Iſaac. Plucking backe Manaſſe, he more honoured Ephraim.

The doctrine is ſo cleare and the example ſo plaine which S. Paul produceth, that there is no place at all left to cauill.

6 If any man interrupt me with ſaying that we muſt not by theſe inferiour and ſmall benefits determine of the ſumme of the life to come, that he which hath bin aduanced to the honor of the firſt birth, ſhould therefore be reckoned to be adopted into the inheritance of heauen: (for there be ſome which ſpare not Paul himſelfe, as though in alleaging theſe teſtimonies he had wreſted the ſcripture to a ſtrange ſenſe:) I anſwere as I haue done here before, that the Apoſtle neither ſlipped by vnaduiſedneſſe, nor wilfully abuſed the teſtimonies of the Scripture. But he ſaw (which they cannot abide to conſider) that God minded by an earthly ſigne to declare the ſpirituall election of Iacob, which otherwiſe was hidden in his inacceſſible throne. For vnleſſe we referre the firſt birth granted to him vnto the world to come, it ſhould be a vaine and fond forme of bleſſing whereby he obtained nothing but manifold miſeries, diſcommodities, griefefull baniſhment, and many bitterneſſe of ſorow and cares. Therefore when Paul ſaw without doubting, that God by outward bleſſing teſtified the bleſſing which he had in his kingdome prepared ſpirituall and neuer decaying for his ſeruant: he doubted not for proofe of this ſpirituall bleſſing, to fetch an argument from that outward bleſſing. This alſo we muſt remember that to the land of Canaan was adioyned the pledge of the heauenly dwelling: ſo that it ought not at all to be doubted that Iacob was graffed with the Angels into the bodie of Chriſt, that he might be partaker of the ſame life. Iacob therefore is choſen, when Eſau is reiected: and by the predeſtination of God is made different from him from whom he differed not in any deſeruings. If you aske a cauſe, the Apoſtle rendreth this, becauſe it is ſaid to Moſes, I will haue mercie vpon whom I will haue mercie, and I will vouchſafe to graunt mercie to whom ſoeuer I will vouchſafe to graunt mercie. And what I beſeech you meaneth this? Verily, the Lord himſelfe moſt plainly pronounceth that men haue in themselues no cause why he should doe good to them, but he fetcheth the cause from his owne mercy onely: and therfore that the saluation of his is his owne worke. When God setteth thy saluation in himselfe alone, why wilt thou descend to thy selfe? When he appointeth to thee his mercie alone, why wilt thou run to thine own deseruings? When he holdeth thy thought wholy in his mercifulnesse alone, why wilt thou turne part to the beholding of thine owne works? Therefore we must needs come to that lesser people, which Paul in another place said to haue beene foreknowen to God: not in such sort as these men imagine, to foreknow out of an idle watch-toure the things that he worketh not: but in such sense as it is oft read. For truly when Peter saith in Luke, that Christ was by the determinate counsell and foreknowledge of God appointed to death: he doth not bring God as a looker on, but the author of our saluation. So the same Peter also, where he saith that the faithfull to whom he wrot were chosen according to the foreknowledge of God, properly expresseth that secret predestination whereby God hath marked for his children whom he would. And the word Purpose, which he ioyneth for a diuers word, expressing all one thing, for as much as it doth euery where signifieth a stedfast determination as they commonly call it, vndoubtedly teacheth that God when he is author of our saluation goeth not out of himselfe. In which sense he saith in the same Chapter that Christ was the lambe foreknowen before the creation of the world. For what is more fond or trifling, than to say that God from on high did stand looking whence saluation should come to mankind? Therefore in Paul the foreknowing people is as much as a small portion mingled with the multitude which falsely pretendeth name of God. In another place also Paul to beate downe their boasting which being but couered with a visor, doe take vpon themselues the chiefe preheminence among the godly before the world, saith that God knoweth who be his. Finally, by that saying Paul pointeth vnto vs two sorts of people: the one, of the whole kindred of Abraham: the other, seuerally chosen out of it, and which being laid vp vnder the eies of God, is hidden from the sight of men. And it is no doubt that he tooke this out of Moses, which affirmeth that God will be mercifull to whom he will (although he there speake of the elect people, whose estate in outward seeming was equall) as if he should haue said, that in the common adoption is included with him a speciall grace toward some, as it were a more holy treasure: and that the common couenant withstandeth not but that the same small number may be exempt in degree: and he willing to make himselfe the free disposer and ruler of this thing, precisely denieth that he will be mercifull to one rather than to another, for any other reason, but for that it so pleaseth him: because when mercy commeth to him that seeketh it, though he indeed suffer not a deniall, yet he either preuenteth or partly getteth to himselfe the fauour whereof God claimeth to himselfe the praise.

Their election whom S. Paul ſpeaketh of, was not onely to an earthlie inheritance but an heauenlie.

Rom. 9. 15.

Speciall and free election proued by the words of Christ in S. Iohn.

7 Now let the soueraigne Iudge and master pronounce of the whole matter. When he saw so great hardnesse in his hearers, that he did in a maner waste his words without fruit among the multitude: to remedy this offence, he crieth out, Whatsoeuer my Father giueth me, it shall come to me. For this is the will of my Father, that whatsoeuer my Father hath giuen me, I shall not loose any thing of it. Note that the beginning is taken at the Fathers gift, that we may be deliuered into the faithfull keeping and defence of Christ. Here some man peraduenture will turne a circle about, and will take exception, saying that they onely are accounted in the proper possession of the Father, whose yeelding hath beene voluntary by faith. But Christ standeth onely vpon that point, that although the fallings away of great multitudes doe shake the whole world, yet the counsell of God shall be stedfast and stand faster than the heauens themselues, that his election may neuer faile. They are said to haue beene the elect of the Father, before that he gaue to them his onely begotten Sonne. They aske whether it were by nature: yea rather, them which were strangers he made his owne by drawing them to him. There is a greater cleerenesse in the words of Christ than can by shifting be couered with any darkenesse. No man (saith he) can come to me, vnlesse my Father draw him. But who so hath heard and learned of my Father, he commeth to me. If all generally without difference should bow their knee before Christ, then the election were common: but now in the fewnesse of the beleeuers appeareth a manifest diuersity:

Iohn 6. 37.

Iohn 6. 44.

Therefore

Therefore after that Christ had affirmed that the disciples which were giuen him, were the peculiar possession of God the Father, within a little after he added, I pray not for the world, but for those whom thou hast giuen me, because they are thine. Whereby is prooued that the whole world belongeth not to the Creator of it, saving that grace deliuereth a few from the wrath of God, and from eternall death, which otherwise should haue perished: but the world it selfe is left in his owne destruction to which it was appointed. In the meane time although Christ put himselfe meane betweene, yet he claimeth to himselfe the power of choosing in common with the Father. I speake not (saith he) of all: I know whom I haue chosen. If any man aske from whence he hath chosen them, he answereth in an other place, Out of the world, which he excludeth out of his prayers when he commendeth his disciples to his Father. This is to be holden, that when he affirmeth that he knoweth whom he hath chosen, there is signified some speciall sort in the generall kind of men: then, that the same speciall sort is made to differ not by the qualitie of their owne vertues, but by the heauenly decree. Whereupon followeth that many excell by their owne force or diligence, when Christ maketh himselfe the author of election. For when in another place he reckoneth Iudas among the elect, whereas he was a deuill, this is referred only to the office of Apostleship, which although it be a cleere mirrour of the fauour of God (as Paul so oftentimes acknowledgeth in his owne person,) yet it conteineth not in it selfe the hope of eternall saluation. Iudas therefore, when he did vnfaithfully beare the office of an Apostle, might be worse than the deuill: but of those whom Christ hath once graffed into his bodie, he will suffer none to perish: because in preseruing their saluation he will performe that which he hath promised, that is, he will stretch forth the power of God which is greater then all. For whereas he saith in another place, Father, of those whom thou hast giuen mee, I haue lost none but the sonne of perdition: although it be an abusiue speech by figure, yet it hath no doubtfull meaning. The summe is, that God maketh them his children by free adoption whom he will, haue to be his children: and that the inward cause thereof is in himselfe: because he is content with his owne secret good pleasure.

8 But Ambrose, Origene, and Hierome thought that God distributeth his grace among men, as he foreseeth that euery man will vse it well: Yea and Augustine was once in the same opinion. But when he had better profited in knowledge of the Scripture, he not onely reuoked it as euidently false, but also strongly confuted it: yea and after his reuoking of it, in reprooving the Pelagians for that they continued in the same errour, saith: who cannot maruell that the Apostle knew not this most subtile sense? For when he had set out a thing to be wondred at of these brethren, while they were not yet borne, and afterward obiected a question against himselfe, saying: what then? Is there vniustice with God? Heere was fit place for him to answere, that God foresaw the merits of them both: yet he saith not this, but flieth to the iudgements and mercy of God. And in another place, when he had taken away all merits before election, Heere (saith he) is confuted their vaine reasoning which defend the foreknowledge of God against the grace of God, and therefore say that we are chosen before the making of the world, because God foreknew that we would be good, not that he himselfe would make vs good. He saith not this, which saith, Yee haue not chosen me, but I haue chosen you. For if he had therefore chosen vs, because he foreknew that we would be good: he should therewithall also haue foreknowen that we would choose him: and so foorth as followeth to that effect. Let the testimonie of Augustine be of force among them that willingly rest in the authoritie of the Fathers. Howbeit Augustine suffereth not himselfe to be seuered from the rest: but by cleere testimonies sheweth that this disagreement is false with the malice whereof the Pelagians burdened him. For in the xix. Chapter of his booke of the predestination of Saints, he alleageth out of Ambrose, Christ calleth whom he hath mercy on. Againe, if he had willed, of the vndeuout he might haue made deuout. But God calleth whom he vouchsafeth, and whom he will he maketh religious. If I listed to knit together a whole volume out of Augustine, I could readily shew to the readers that I neede no other words but his: But I will not load them with tediousnesse. But go to, let vs imagin that they ſpeake not at all: but let vs giue heed to the matter it ſelfe. A hard queſtion was mooued, whether God did righteouſly in this that he vouchſafed to grant his grace but to ſome: Of which queſtion Paul might haue vncombred himſelfe with one word if he had alleaged the reſpect of works. Why therefore doth he it not, but rather continueth on a diſcourſe which abideth in the ſame hardneſſe? Why, but becauſe he ought not? For the Holy Ghoſt which ſpake by his mouth, had not the diſeaſe of forgetfulneſſe. Therefore without any circumſtances he anſwereth, that God therefore fauoureth his elect, becauſe he will: therefore hath mercy, becauſe he will. For this Oracle of God, I will haue mercie vpon whom I will haue mercie, and I will ſhew mercie to whom I will ſhew mercie, is as much in effect as if it had beene ſaid, that God is mooued to mercy by no other reaſon, but becauſe he will haue mercie. Therefore this ſaying of Auguſtine remaineth true, that the grace of God doth not find men fit to be choſen, but maketh them.

The ſhift which Thomas vſeth in ſoluing this queſtion, reiected.

9 Neither doe we any thing paſſe vpon the ſubtletie of Thomas, that the foreknowing of deſeruings, is not in deede the cauſe of Predeſtination on the behalfe of the act of him that doth predeſtinate, but on our behalfe it may after a certaine maner be ſo called, that is, according to the particular weying of Predeſtination: as when it is ſaid that God predeſtinateth glorie to man by deſeruings, becauſe he hath decreed to giue to him grace by which he may deſerue glorie. For ſith the Lord will in election haue vs to looke vnto nothing but his meere goodneſſe, if any man ſhall couet heere to ſee any more, it ſhall be a wrongfull greedineſſe. If we luſted to ſtriue in ſubtletie, we want not wherewith to beate backe this ſilly ſubtletie of Thomas. He affirmeth that to the elect glorie is after a certaine maner predeſtinate by deſeruings, becauſe the Lord doth after a certaine maner predeſtinate to them the grace, by which they may deſerue glorie. What if I anſwere on the contrarie ſide and ſay that predeſtination vnto grace, ſerueth election vnto life, and is as it were a waiting maide after it? that grace is predeſtinate to them, to whom the poſſeſſion of glorie hath beene long agoe appointed: becauſe it pleaſeth the Lord to bring his children from election into iuſtification? For thereupon it ſhall follow that the predeſtination of glorie was rather the cauſe of the predeſtination of grace, than contrariwiſe. But away with theſe ſtriuings as things ſuperfluous for ſuch as ſhall thinke that there is wiſedome ynough for them in the word of God. For this was in old time truly written of an Eccleſiaſticall writer, that they which aſſigne the election of God to merits are more wiſe than they ought to be.

Ambroſ. de vocat. gent. lib. 1. cap. 1.

There is no repugnancie betweene Gods calling of all, and calling effectually but choſen onely.

10 Some doe obiect that God ſhould be contrarie to himſelfe if he ſhould vniuerſally call all men to him, and receiue but a few elect. So by their opinion the vniuerſalneſſe of the promiſe taketh away the difference of ſpeciall grace. And thus certaine ſober men ſpeake, not ſo much to oppreſſe the truth, as to debarre crabbed queſtions, and to bridle the curioſitie of many. Their will is praiſe-woorthie, but their counſell is not to be allowed: becauſe dallying by ſhifts is neuer excuſable. But their obiecting of it which doe more railinglie inueigh againſt it, is verily too fond a cauillation, or too ſhamefull an error. How the Scripture maketh theſe two to agree together, that by outward preaching all men are called to repentance and faith, and yet not to all men is giuen the Spirit of repentance and faith, I haue in another place alreadie declared, and by and by ſomewhat of it muſt be repeated againe. Now that which they require I denie to them, ſith it is two waies falſe. For, he that threatneth that while it raineth vpon one citie, there ſhall be drought vpon another: Hee that pronounceth that there ſhall in another place be famine of doctrine, bindeth not himſelfe with a certaine law to call all men egallie. And he which forbidding Paul to ſpeake in Aſia, and turning him from Bithinia, draweth him into Macedonia, ſheweth, that it is in his owne power to diſtribute this treaſure to whomſoeuer it ſhall pleaſe him. Yet more plainly he ſheweth by Eſay, how he peculiarly directeth to the elect the promiſes of ſaluation: for he ſaith of them only, and not of all mankind indifferently, that they ſhall be his Diſciples. Whereby it is certaine that the doctrine of ſaluation is wrongfully ſet open in common to all men to profit effectually, which is ſaid to be ſeuerally laid vp onely for the children of the Church. Let this ſuffice at this preſent, Amos 4.7. & 8.11. Act. 16.6.

Eſa. 8.16.

that although the voice of the Gospell spake generally to all, yet the gift of faith is rare. Esay assigneth the cause, for that the arme of the Lord is not open to all men. If he had said that the Gospell is maliciously and frowardly despised, because many doe stubbornely refuse to heare: peraduenture this colour touching vniuersall calling should preuaile. Neither is it the purpose of the Prophet to diminish the fault of men, when he teacheth that the fountaine of blindnesse is, that God vouchsafeth not to open his arme to them: onely he giueth warning, that because faith is a singular gift, the eares are beaten in vaine with outward doctrine. But I would faine know of these doctors, whether onely preaching, or faith, make the children of God. Certainly when it is said in the first Chapter of Iohn, Whosoeuer beleeue in the onely begotten Sonne of God, are themselues also made the children of God, there is not in that place a confused heape iumbled vp together: but a speciall order is giuen to the faithfull, which are borne nor of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God. But (say they) there is a mutuall consent of faith with the word, namely, whersoeuer is faith. But it is no new thing that seed fall among thornes or in stony places: not onely because the greater part appeareth indeed obstinate against God, but also because not all men haue eies and eares. How then shall it agree that God calleth to him them whom he knoweth will not come? Let Augustine answer for me. Wilt thou dispute with mee? Maruell with mee, and crie out, O depth, Let vs both agree in feare, lest wee perish in errour. Moreouer if election (as Paul witnesseth) be the mother of faith, I turne backe the argument vpon their owne head, that faith is therefore not generall, because election is speciall. For by the orderly hanging together of causes and effectes, it is easily gathered, that where Paul saith, that we are full of all spirituall blessing, as God had chosen vs before the creation of the world: therefore these riches are not common to all, because God hath chosen onely whom he would. This is the reason why in another place he commendeth the faith of the elect, lest it should be thought that any man doth by his owne motion get faith to himselfe: but that this glory may remaine with God, that they are freely enlightned of him, whom he had chosen before. For Bernard saith rightly, Friends doe seuerally heare, to whom he also saith, Feare not thou small flocke: for to you it is giuen to know the mysterie of the kingdome of heauen. Who be these? euen they whom he hath foreknowen and predestinate to be fashioned like to the image of his Sonne. A great and secret counsell is made knowen. The Lord knew who be his: but that which was knowen to God is made manifest to men: neither doth he vouchsafe to make any other partakers of so great a mystery, but those selfe same men whom he hath foreknowen and predestinate to be his. A little after hee concludeth: The mercy of God is from eternity euen to eternity vpon them that feare him: from eternity, by reason of predestination: to eternitie, by reason of blessed making: the one without beginning, the other without ending. But what neede I to cite Bernard for witnesse, when we heare of the masters owne mouth, that none doe see but they which are of God? By which words he signifieth, that all they which are not begotten againe of God, doe dazell at the brightnesse of his countenance. And to election faith indeed is fitly ioyned, so that it keepe the second degree. Which order the words of Christ doe cleerely expresse in another place, This is the will of my Father, that I lose not that which he hath giuen. For this is his will, that whosoeuer beleeueth in the Sonne, shall not perish. If he would haue all saued, he would appoint ouer them his Sonne to be their keeper, and would graffe them all into his body with the holy bond of faith. Now it is certaine that faith is a singular pledge of his fatherly loue, laid vp for his children whom he hath adopted. Therfore Christ in another place saith, that the sheepe follow the shepheard, because they know his voice: but they follow not a stranger, because they know not the voice of strangers. Whence commeth this difference, but because their eares are boared by God? For no man maketh himselfe a sheepe: but hee is made one by the heauenly grace. For which cause also the Lord teacheth that our safetie shall alway bee certaine and free from danger, because it is kept by the inuincible power of God. Wherefore he concludeth that the vnbeleeuers are not of his sheepe: namely because they are not of the number of them, whom God hath promised by Esay that they shall be his disciples. Now because in the testimonies which I haue alleaged is expressed perseuerance, they do therewithall testifie the vnmooueable stedfastnesse of election.

Rom.9.13. The ground of reprobation the will of God to reiect and not men deseruing to be reiected.

11 Now let vs speake of the reprobate, whom the Apostle ioyneth there together. For as Iacob, hauing yet with good works deserued nothing, is taken into grace: so Esau, being yet defiled with no wicked doing, is hated. If we turne our eyes to works, we do wrong to the Apostle, as though he sawe not the same thing which we cleerely see. It is prooued that he sawe it not, forasmuch as he expresly enforceth this point, that when they had not yet done any good or euill, the one was chosen, and the other refused, to proue that the foundation of the predestination of God is not in works. Againe when he mooued the obiection, whether God be vnrighteous, he alleageth not that which had been the most certaine and plaine defence of his righteousnesse, namely, that God reduced to Esau according to his euilnesse: but he was content with another solution, that the reprobate are stirred vp to this end, that the glorie of God may be set foorth by them. Last of all he adioyneth a concluding sentence, that God hath mercie vpon whom he will, and hardeneth whom he will. See you not how he imputeth both to the onely will of God? Therefore if we cannot declare a reason why he vouchsafeth to grant mercie to them that be his, but because it so pleaseth him: neither also shall we haue any other cause in reiecting of other, than his owne will. For when it is said that God hardeneth, or sheweth mercie to whom he will, men are thereby warned to seeke no cause elsewhere than in his will.

THE XXIIJ. CHAPTER.

A confutation of the slanders wherewith this doctrine hath alway beene wrongfully burdened.

Election graunted by some who notwithstanding deny reprobation.

BVt when the wit of man heareth these things, the frowardnesse thereof cannot be restrained, but that by and by as at the bloudie blast of a trumpet sounding to battell, it diuersly & excessiuely turmoileth. And many in deed, as though they would driue away the malice from God, doe so grant election, that they denie that any man is reprobate: but they doe too ignorantly and childishly: for as much as election it selfe could not stand vnlesse it were set contrarie to reprobation: God is said to seuer them whom he adopteth vnto saluation: it should be more than foolishly said that other doe either by chaunce or by their owne endeuor obtaine that which onely election giueth to a fewe. Therefore whom God passeth ouer, he reiecteth: and for none other cause, but for that he will exclude them from the inheritance which he doth predestinate to his children. Neither is the waywardnesse of men tolerable, if it suffer not it selfe to be bridled with the word of God, where the incomprehensible counsell of God is intreated of, which the Angels themselues doe worship. But we haue alreadie heard, that hardening is no lesse in the hand and will of God than mercie. Neither doth Paul (as these men doe that I haue spoken of) busily labour to excuse God with a lying defence: but onely he teacheth that it is not lawfull for the thing formed to quarrell with him that formed it. Now who so do not admit that any are reiected of God, how will they vncumber themselues from that saying of Christ, Euery tree which my father hath not planted, shall be plucked vp by the roote? They plainely heare that all they are adiudged and auowed to destruction, whom the heauenly Father hath not vouchsafed to plant as holie trees in his ground. If they denie this to be a signe of reprobation, then is there nothing so cleere that it may be prooued to them. But if they cease not to wrangle, let the sobrietie of faith be contented with this admonition of Paul, that there is no cause to quarrell with God, if he willing on the one side to shew his wrath and to make his power knowen doe with dum sufferance and lenitie beare with the vessels of wrath prepared to destruction: and on the other side he make knowne the riches of his glorie toward the vessels of mercy which he hath prepared to glorie. Let the Readers marke, how Paul to cut off occasion from whisperings and backbitings, giueth the chiefe rule to the wrath and power of God: becausse it is vniust that those deepe iudgements which swallow vp all our senses, should be made subiect to our determination. Our aduersaries answere is very trifling, that God doth not vtterly reiect them whom he suffereth in lenitie, but abideth with a minde hanging in suspence toward them, if peraduenture they may repent. As though Paul giueth to God a patience, to looke for their turning, whom he saith to be made to destruction. For Augustine saith rightly where he expounderh this place, where power is ioyned to sufferance, God doth not suffer, but gouerne with his power. They further say also that it is not for nothing said that the vessels of wrath are prepared to destruction: but, that God hath prepared the vessels of mercie: because by this meane he ascribeth and challengeth the praise of saluation to God, but the blame of destruction he casteth vpon them which by their owne will doe bring it vpon themselues. But although I graunt to them that Paul by the diuers maner of speaking did soften the roughnesse of the first part of the sentence, yet is it not meete to assigne the preparing vnto destruction to any other thing than to the secret counsell of God: which also is affirmed a little before in the rest of the text. That God stirred vp Pharao: Then that he hardneth whom he will. Whereupon followeth that the hidden counsell of God is the cause of hardening. This at the least I get which Augustine saith, that when God of woolues maketh sheepe, he doth with a mightier grace reforme them, that their hardnesse may be tamed: and therefore God for this cause doth not conuert the obstinate, because he doth not shew forth in them the mightier grace, which he wanteth not if he would shew it foorth.

Lib. 5. contra Iul. cap. 5.

Lib. 1. de præd. sanct. c. 2.

2 These sayings in deede should be sufficient for the godly and sober, and them which remember themselues to be men. But for as much as these venemous dogs doe cast vp not onely one sort of venome against God, we will as the matter shall serue answere to euerie one particularly. Foolish men doe diuers waies quarrell with God, as though they had him subiect to their accusations. First therefore they aske, by what right the Lord is angrie with his creatures, of whom he hath not beene first prouoked by any offence: for to condemne to destruction whom he will, agreeth rather with the wilfulnesse of a tyrant, than the lawfull sentence of a Iudge. Therefore they say that there is cause why men should charge God, if by his bare will, without their owne deseruing, they be predestinate to eternall death. If such thoughts doe at any time come into the minde of the godly, to breake their violent assaults they shall be sufficiently armed with this, although they had no more, if they consider how great wickednesse it is, euen so much as to inquire of the causes of the will of God: sith of all things that are, it is the cause, and worthily so ought to be. For if it haue any cause, then somewhat must goe before it, whereto it must be as it were bound: which it is vnlawfull once to imagine. For, the will of God is so the highest rule of righteousnesse, that whatsoeuer he willeth, euen for this that he willeth it, it ought to be taken for righteous. When therefore it is asked, why the Lord did it: it is to beanswered, because he willed it. But if thou go further in asking why he willed it, thou askest some greater and higher thing than the will of God: which cannot be found. Let therefore the rashnesse of man restraine it selfe, and not seeke that which is not, least peraduenture it may not finde that which is. With this bridle (I say) he shall be well withholden whosoeuer hee be that will dispute of the secrets of God with reuerence. As for the boldnesse of the wicked, which dread not openly to speake euill of God: against it the Lord with his owne righteousnesse, without any our defence shall sufficiently defend himselfe, when he shall take all shifting from their consciences, and hold them fast conuinced, and condemne them. Neither doe we yet thrust in the faigned deuise of absolute power, which as it is prophane, so woorthily ought to be abhorred of vs. We faigne not God lawlesse, who is a law to himselfe: because (as Plato saith) men stand in neede of lawes, who are troubled with vnlawfull lustes: but the will of God is not onely pure from all faule, but also is the highest rule of perfection, yea and the law of all lawes. But we denie that he is subiect to yeeld account. We denie also that we are meere iudges, which would pronounce of this cause after our own sense. Wherefore if we attempt further than we lawfully may, let that threatning of the Psalme bring vs in feare, that God shall ouercome so oft as he is iudged of any mortall man.

There is no striuing against God in this cause.

This is taken out of Augustine lib. 1. de Gent. contra Manic. cap. 3.

Psal. 51. 6.

3 So can God in keeping silence, put his enemies to silence. But, that we may not suffer

The truth hath

Sufficient to stop their mouthes, who aske why God should foreappoint some vnto death, when they, not being, could not deserue the death whereunto they were appointed.

suffer them freely to scorne his holie name, he deliuereth to vs out of his word weapons against them. Wherefore if any man assaile vs with such words: why God hath from the beginning predestinate some to death, which when they were not, could not yet deserue the iudgement of death: we in stead of answere may againe on our side aske of them, what they thinke that God oweth to man, if he will iudge him by his owne nature. In such sort as we be all corrupted with sin, we cannot but be hatefull to God: and that not by tyrannous crueltie, but by most vpright reason of iustice. If all they whom the Lord doth predestinate to death, are by the estate of nature subiect to the iudgement of death: of what vniustice against themselues, I beseech you, may they complaine? Let all the sonnes of Adam come: Let them striue and dispute with their creator, for that by his eternall prouidence they were before their generation condemned to euerlasting miserie. What shall they be able once to mutter against this defence, when God on the other side shal cal them to reknowledging of themselues? If they be all taken out of a corupt masse, it is no maruell if they be subiect to damnation. Let them not therefore accuse God of vniustice, if by his eternall iudgement they be appointed to death, to which they themselues doe feele whether they will or no, that they are willingly led of their owne nature. Whereby appeareth how wrongfull is the desire of their murmuring, because they doe of set purpose hide the cause of damnation which they are compelled to acknowledge in themselues, that the laying of the blame vpon God may acquite them. But though I doe a hundred times confesse, as it is most true that God is the author of it, yet doe they not by and by wipe away the guiltinesse which, being engrauen in their consciences from time to time with oft recourse, presenteth it selfe to their eies.

God not vniust though men be condemned for that corruption whereunto they were foreappointed.

4 Againe they except and say: were they not before predestinate by the ordinance of God to the same corruption which is now alleadged for the cause of damnation? When therefore they perish in their corruption, they doe nothing but suffer the punishment of that miserie into which by his predestination Adam fell and drew his posteritie headlong with him. Is not he therefore vniust, which doth so cruelly mocke his creatures? I grant indeed that all the children of Adam fell by the will of God into that miserie of state wherein they be now bound: and this is it that I said at the beginning, that at length we must alway returne to the determination of the will of God, the cause whereof is hidden in himselfe. But it followeth not by and by that God is subiect to this slander. For we will with Paul answere them in this maner, O man, what art thou that contendest with God? doth the thing formed say to him that formed it, Why hast thou formed me so? Hath not the potter power to make of the same lumpe one vessell to honour, and another to dishonour? They will say that the righteousnesse of God is not so truely defended, but that we may seeke a shift, such as they are wont to haue that want a iust excuse. For what else seemeth here to be said, than that God hath a power which cannot be hindred from doing any thing whatsoeuer it be as he will himselfe? But it is far otherwise. For, what stronger reason can be brought than when we are commanded to thinke what a one God is? For how should he commit any vniustice, which is iudge of the world? If it properly pertaine to the nature of God to doe iudgement, then he naturally loueth righteousnesse, and abhorreth vnrighteousnesse. Wherefore the Apostle did not, as though he were ouertaken, looke about for holes to hide him: but shewed that the reason of the righteousnesse of God is higher than that either it is to be measured by the measure of man, or may be comprehended by the slender capacitie of the wit of man. The Apostle indeed confesseth that there is such depth in the iudgements of God, wherewith the mindes of men should be swallowed, if they endeuoured to pearse into it. But he teacheth also how hainous wrong it is, to binde the workes of God to such a law, that so soone as we vnderstand not the reason of them, we may be bold to disallow them. It is a knowen saying of Salomon (which yet few doe rightly vnderstand) The great creator of all rendreth reward to the foole, and reward to transgressors. For he crieth out concerning the greatnesse of God: in whose will it is to punish fooles and transgressors, although he doe not vouchsafe to let them haue his spirit. And monstrous is the madnesse of men, when they so couet to make that which is vnmeasurable, subiect to the small measure of their reason. The Angels which ſtood ſtill in their vprightneſſe, Paul calleth elect. If their ſtedfaſtneſſe was grounded vpon the good pleaſure of God, the falling away of the other prooueth that they were forſaken: Of which thing there can no other cauſe be alleaged than reprobation, which is hidden in the ſecret counſell of God. 2. Tim. 2. 22.

5 Goe to: let there now be preſent ſome Manichee, or Celeſtine, a ſlanderer of the prouidence of God: I ſay with Paul that there ought no reaſon to be rendered thereof: becauſe with the greatneſſe of it, it farre ſurmounteth our vnderſtanding. What maruaile? or what abſurdity is it? Would he haue the power of God ſo limited, that it might be able to worke no more, than his minde is able to conceiue? I ſay with Auguſtine, that they are created of the Lord, whom he without doubting foreknew that they ſhould goe into diſtruction: and that it was ſo done becauſe he ſo willed: but why he willed, it is not our part to aske a reaſon of it, who cannot comprehend it: neither is it meet that the will of God ſhould come downe into controuerſie among vs, of which ſo oft as mention is made, vnder the name of it is named the higheſt rule of righteouſnes. Why therfore is any queſtion mooued of vnrighteouſneſſe where righteouſneſſe clearly appeareth? Neither let vs be aſhamed, after the example of Paul, ſo to ſtop the mouthes of the wicked, and from time to time ſo oft as they ſhall be bold to barke againſt it, to repeate this, Who be yee miſerable men, that lay an accuſation to Gods charge and doe therefore lay it to his charge, becauſe he doth not temper the greatneſſe of his works to your dulneſſe? As though they were therefore wrongfull, becauſe they are hidden from fleſh. The vnmeaſurableneſſe of the iudgements of God is by cleere experiences knowen vnto you. Yee know that they are called the deepe bottomleſſe depth. Now aske of the narrow capacities of your wit, whether they comprehend that which God hath decreed with himſelfe. What good doth it you therefore with mad ſearching to plunge your ſelues into the bottomleſſe depth, which reaſon it ſelfe teacheth you that it ſhall be to your deſtruction? Why are yee not at the leſt reſtrained with ſome feare of the which both that hyſtory of Iob and the bookes of the Prophet doe report of the incomprehenſible wiſdome, and terrible power of God? If thy minde be vnquieted, let it not grieue thee to embrace the counſell of Auguſtine. Thou being a man lookeſt for an anſwere at my hand: and I alſo am a man. Therefore let vs both heare him that ſaith: O man, what art thou? Better is a faithfull ignorance than raſh knowledge. Seeke merits: thou ſhalt finde nothing but paine. O depth, Peter denieth: The Thiefe beleeueth. O depth: Seekeſt thou a reaſon? I will tremble at the depth. Reaſon thou, I will wonder, diſpute thou, I will beleeue: I ſee depth, but I reach not the bottome. Paul reſted, becauſe he found wondering. He calleth the iudgements of God vnſearcheable: and art thou come to ſearch them? He ſaith that his waies are impoſſible to be traced out: and doſt thou trace them? with proceeding further we ſhall nothing profit: For neither we ſhall ſatisfie their wayward wanton curiouſneſſe, neither doth the Lord need any other defence, than which he hath vſed by his ſpirit, which ſpake by the mouth of Paul: and we forget to ſpeake well, when we ceaſe to ſpeake with God.

A reaſon of the will of God in reiection of the wicked, we neither can finde neither ſhould ſearch.

Aug. de verb. apo. ſerm. 20.

6 Their other obiection alſo ariſeth out of vngodlineſſe, which yet tendeth not ſo directly to the accuſing of God as to the excuſing of the ſinner. Howbeit the ſinner which is condemned of God cannot be iuſtified without diſhonour of the iudge. Thus therefore prophane tongues doe barke againſt God, ſaying: why ſhould God impute thoſe things for ſinne to men, whereof he hath by his predeſtination laid neceſſitie vpon men? For, what ſhould they doe? Should they wraſtle with his decrees? But ſo ſhould they doe it in vaine, ſith they cannot doe it at all. Therefore they are not rightfully puniſhed for thoſe things, whereof the chiefe cauſe is in Gods predeſtination. Heere I will abſtaine from that defence, whereunto the Eccleſiaſticall writers doe commonly flee, namely that the foreknowledge of God withſtandeth not but that man may be accounted the ſinner: becauſe God foreſeeth the euils of man, not his owne. For ſo the cauillation would not ſtay here, but will rather preſſe vs further with ſaying that God might if he had would, haue prouided remedie for thoſe euils which he foreſaw: and that ſith he hath not ſo done, he hath of determined purpoſe created men to that end that ſhee ſhould ſo behaue himſelfe in earth: and if by the prouidence of God, man man was created to this condition, that he ſhould doe all thoſe things that he doth: then he is not to be blamed for that which he cannot auoide, and which he enterpriſed by the will of God. Therefore let vs ſee how this knot ought to be well looſed. Firſt of all this ought to be holden certaine among all men which Salomon ſaith, that God hath created all thing, for himſelfe, and the wicked man to an euill day. Behold, when the diſpoſing of all things is in the hand of God, when in his power remaineth the rule of ſafetie and death: he ſo ordereth them by his counſell and becke, that among men there are borne ſome adiugded euen from their mothers wombe to death, which with their deſtruction may glorifie his name. If any man anſwere, that there is no neceſſitie laid vpon them by the prouidence of God, but rather that he created them in ſuch eſtate, becauſe he foreſaw their peruerſneſſe to come: he neither ſaith nothing at all, nor altogether. The old writers are wont in deed ſometimes to vſe this ſolution: but as it were doubtingly. But the Schoolemen reſt vpon it, as though nothing could be obiected againſt it. In deed I will willingly grant, that foreknowledge alone bringeth no neceſſitie to creatures, although all men doe not ſo agree: for there be ſome that will haue it alſo to be the cauſe of things. But it ſeemeth to me that Valla, a man otherwiſe not much practiſed in holy writings, ſaw both more deepely and more wiſely, which ſhewed that this contention is ſuperfluous: becauſe both life and death are rather the dooings of Gods will than of his foreknowledge. If God did but foreſee the ſucceſſes of men, and did not alſo diſpoſe and order them by his will, then this queſtion ſhould not without cauſe be mooued, whether his foreſeeing any thing auailed to the neceſſitie of them. But ſith he doth none otherwiſe foreſee the things that ſhall come to paſſe, than becauſe he hath decreed that they ſhould ſo come to paſſe: it is vaine to moone controuerſie about foreknowledge, where it is certaine that all things doe happen rather by ordinance and commandement.

Neceſſitie of ſinning neither excuſeth the ſinner, nor chargeth God iuſtly with iniuſtice for condemning them that ſo ſin.

God did not only foreſee, but diſpoſe the fall of man, and in him the ruine of his poſteritie.

7 They ſay that this is not written in expreſſe words, that it was decreed of God, that Adam ſhould periſh by his falling away. As though the ſame God, whom the Scripture reporteth to doe whatſoeuer he will, created the nobleſt of all his creatures to an vncertaine end. They ſay he had freewill, that he might ſhape to himſelfe his owne fortune: and that God decreed nothing, but to handle him according to his deſeruing. If ſo cold a deuiſe be receiued, where ſhall bee that almightineſſe of God, whereby he gouerneth all things according to his ſecret counſell, which hangeth vpon none other thing than it ſelfe? But Predeſtination, whether they will or no, ſheweth himſelfe in Adams poſteritie. For it came not to paſſe naturally that all men ſhould looſe ſaluation by the fault of one Parent. What hindreth them to confeſſe of one man, that which againſt their wils they confeſſe of all mankinde? For why ſhould they looſe their labour with dallying ſhifts? The Scripture crieth out that all men were in the perſon of one man made bound to eternall death. Sith this cannot be imputed to nature, it is plaine that it proceeded from the wondrous counſell of God. But it is too much abſurditie that theſe good Patrones of the righteouſneſſe of God doe ſo ſtumble at a ſtraw, and leape ouer great beames. Againe I aske: how came it to paſſe, that the fall of Adam did wrap vp in eternall death ſo many nations with their children being infants without remedie, but becauſe it ſo pleaſed God? Here their tongues which are otherwiſe ſo prating, muſt of neceſſitie be dumbe. It is a terrible decree, I grant: yet no man ſhall be able to denie, but that God foreknew what end man ſhould haue, ere he created him, and therefore foreknew it becauſe hee had ſo ordained by his decree. If any man here inueigh againſt the foreknowledge of God, hee raſhly and vndiſcreetly ſtumbleth. For, what matter is there, I beſeech you, why the heauenly iudge ſhould be accuſed for that hee was not ignorant of that which was to come? Therefore if there be any either iuſt or colourable complaint, it toucheth predeſtination. Neither ought it to ſeeme an abſurditie which I ſay, that God foreſaw not onely the fall of the firſt man, and in him the ruine of his poſteritie, but alſo diſpoſed it after his owne will. For as it belongeth to his wiſedome, to foreknow all things that ſhall be: ſo it belongeth to his power, to rule and gouerne all things with his hand. And this queſtion Auguſtine very well diſcuſſeth, as he doth other, ſaying. We moſt wholeſomely confeſſe that which we moſt rightly beleeue, that the God and Lord of all things, which created all things very good, and foreknew that euill things should spring out of good, and knew that it more pertained to his almighty goodnesse euen of euill things to do wel, than not to suffer them to be euill: that he so ordered the life of Angels and men, that in it he might first shew what freewill could doe, and then what the benefit of his grace and iudgement of iustice could doe.

The wicked doe sin and perish not by Gods permission only, but by his will and appointment.

8 Here they run to the distinction of will and permission, by which they will haue it granted that the wicked doe perish, God onely permitting but not willing it. But why should we say that he permitted it, but because he so willeth? Howbeit it is not likely that man by himselfe, by the onely permission of God, without any his ordinance, brought destruction to himselfe: as though God appointed not, of what condition he would haue the chiefe of his creatures to be. I therefore will not doubt to confesse simply with Augustine, that the will of God is a necessity of things, and that what he willeth, it must of necessity come to passe: as those things shall truely come to passe which he hath foreseene. Now if for excuse of themselues and of the vngodlie, either the Pelagians, or Manichees, or Anabaptists, or Epicurians (for with these fower sects we haue to doe in this question) shall obiect against vs necessity wherewith they be bound by the predestination of God: they bring nothing fit to the purpose. For if predestination be nothing else but a dispensation of righteousnesse of God, which is hiden indeed, but yet without fault: Forasmuch as it is certaine that they were not vnworthy to be predestinate to that estate, it is also as certaine that the destruction is most righteous which they enter into by predestination. Moreouer their destruction so hangeth vpon the predestination of God, that both cause and matter thereof is found in themselues. For the first man fell, because the Lord so iudged it to be expedient: why he so iudged, is vnknowen to vs: yet it is certaine that he so iudged for no other reason but because he saw that thereby the glory of his name should be worthily set forth. When thou heareſt mention of the glory of God, there thinke of his righteousnesse: for it must be righteous that deserueth praise. Man therefore falleth, the prouidence of God so ordaining it: but he falleth by his owne fault. The Lord had a little before pronounced, that all the things which hee had made were very good. Whence therefore commeth that peruersnesse to man, to fall away from his God? Least it should be thought to bee of creation, the Lord with his commendation allowed that which came from himselfe. Therefore by his owne euilnesse he corrupted the nature which he had receiued pure of the Lord, and by his fall he drew his whole posteritie with him into destruction. Wherefore let vs rather behold an euident cause of damnation in the corrupted nature of mankinde, which is neerer to vs, than search for a hidden and vtterly incomprehensible cause thereof in the predestination of GOD. Neither let it grieue vs so far to submit our wit to the vnmeasurable wisedome of God, that it may yeeld in many secrets of his. For, of those things which it is neither granted nor lawfull to know, the ignorance is well learned: the coueting of knowledge is a kinde of madnesse.

De Gen. ad lite. li. 6. c. 15.

Gen. 1. 31.

The iudgement of God in punishing men for that whereof he hath laid a necessitie vpon them is righteous, but the reason how it is righteous is vnknowen to vs: who should rather bewaile iniquitie in our selues, than seek the cause thereof in God.

9 Some man perhaps will say, that I haue not yet brought enough to subdue that wicked excuse. But I verily confesse that it can neuer be brought to passe, but that vngodlinesse will alway grudge and murmure against it: yet I thinke that I haue spoken so much as might suffice to take away not onely all reason but also all colour of gainesaying. The reprobate would be thought excusable in sinning, because they cannot escape the necessitie of sinning: specially sith such necessitie is cast vpon them by the ordinance of God. But we denie that they are thereby well excused, because the ordinance of God, by which they complaine that they are destinate to destruction, hath his righteousnesse, vnknowen indeed to vs, but yet most certaine. Whereupon wee conclude, that they beare no euill which is not laid vpon them by the most righteous iudgement of God. Then, we teach that they doe ouerthwartly, which to seeke out the beginning of their damnation, doe bend their eies to the secret closets of the counsell of God, and winke at the corruption of nature, from whence their damnation springeth. And this withstandeth that they cannot impute it to God, for that he witnesseth of his owne creation. For although man is create by the eternall prouidence of God to that calamitie, whereunto he is subiect: yet the matter thereof he he tooke of himselfe, not of God, forasmuch as he is by no other meane so left, but because he went out of kinde from the pure creation of God into a corrupt and vnpure peruersenesse.

God not to be charged as a partiall accepter of persons.

10 Now the aduersaries of Gods Predestination doe slander it also with a third absurdity. For when we impute it to nothing else but to the choise of the will of God, that they are made free from the vniuersall destruction, whom he maketh heires of his kingdome, thereby they gather that there is with him accepting of persons, which the Scripture euery where denieth: and therefore, that either the Scripture disagreeth with it selfe, or that in the election of God there is respect of deseruings. First, the Scripture in another sense demeth, that God is an accepter of persons, than as they iudge it. For by the name of person, it signifieth not a man, but those things which being seene with eies in man are wont to procure either fauour, grace, and dignity, or hatred, contempt, and shame: as riches, wealth, power, nobility, office, countrey, excellency of beauty, and such other: on the other side, pouerty, need, baseneſſe, vilenesse, contempt and such other. So Peter and Paul doe teach that the Lord is not an accepter of persons, because he putteth not difference betweene the Iew and the Grecian, to refuse the one and embrace the other for onely respect of nation. So Iames vseth the same words when he mindeth to affirme, that God in his iudgement nothing regardeth riches. But Paul in another place speaketh thus of God, that in iudgeing he hath no consideration of freedom or bondage. Wherfore there shal be no contrariety if we shal say that God according to the wil of his good pleasure without any deseruing chooseth to his Sonnes whom he will, reiecting and refusing other. But the matter may thus be opened, that men may be more fully satisfied. They aske how it commeth to passe, that of two betweene whom no deseruing putteth any difference, God in his electing passeth ouer the one and taketh the other. I on the other side doe aske them, whether they thinke that in him that is taken there is any thing that may make the minde of God to encline toward him. If they confesse (as they needs must) that there is nothing, it shall follow that God looketh not vpon man, but from his owne goodnesse fetcheth a cause why to doe good to him. Whereas therefore God chooseth one man, refusing an other, this commeth not of respect of man, but of his mercy alone, which ought to haue liberty to shew foorth and vtter it selfe where and when it pleaseth him. For we haue in another place also shewed, that there were not from the beginning many called noble, or wise, or honorable, that God might humble the pride of flesh: so far is it off, that is fauour was bound to persons.

Col. 3. 25. Eph. 6. 9.

Aug. ad Bon. lib. 1. cap. 7. 1. Cor. 1. 26.

God finding all guilty is not partiall in condemning any but in saueing some mercifull.

11 Wherefore many do falsely and wickedly accuse God of partiall vnrighteousnesse, for that he doth not in his Predestination keepe one selfe course toward all men. If (saith they) he finde all guilty, let him equally punish all: if he finde them vnguilty, let him withhold the rigor of his iudgement from all. But so they deale with him, as if either mercy were forbidden him, or when we would haue mercy he be compelled altogether to giue ouer his iudgement. What is it that they require? if all be guilty, that all may together suffer all one paine. We grant the guiltinesse to be common, but we say that the mercy of God helpeth some. Let it helpe all, say they. But we answer, that it is rightful that hee should also in punishing shew himselfe a rightful iudge. When they suffer not this: what doe they else but either goe about to spoile God of his power to haue mercy, or at least to grant it him vpon this condition, that he vtterly giue ouer his iudgement. Wherefore these sayings of Augustine doe very well agree together. Sith in the first man the whole masse of mankinde fell into condemnation, these vessels that are made of it to honour, are not the vessels of their owne righteousnesse, but of the mercy of God: and whereas other are made to disnonour, the same is not to be imputed to vnrighteousnesse but to iudgement, &c. That to those whom he refuseth, God rendreth due paine: to those whom he calleth, he giueth vndeserued grace: that they are deliuered from all accusation, after the maner of a creditour, in whose power it is to forgiue to the one, and aske of the other. Therefore the Lord also may giue grace to whom he will, because he is mercifull: and giue it not to all, because he is a iust iudge. He may by giuing to some that which they doe not deserue, shew his free grace: and by not giuing to all, declare what all deserue. For whereas Paul writeth that that God enclosed all vnder sinne, that he might haue mercy vpon all, it is therewithall to be added that he is debter to no man: because no man first gaue to him, that he may require like of him.

Epi. 106. de prædest. & grat. De bon. per. seu. cap. 12.

12 This also they often say, to ouerthrow predestination, that while it standeth, all carefulnesse and endeuour of well doing falleth away. For who (say they) shall heare that either life or death is certainly appointed for him by the eternall decree of God, but that it will by and by come into his mind that it maketh no matter how he behaue himselfe, sith the predestination of God can by his worke be nothing hindered or furthered? So shall all men dissolutely throw foorth themselues, and after a desperate maner runne headlong whither their lust shall carie them. And verilie they say not altogether falsly, for there be many swine, which with filthie blasphemies defile the doctrine of predestination: and by this pretence also do mock out all admonishments and rebukings, saying; God knoweth what he hath once determined to do with vs: if he haue decreed our saluation, he will bring vs to it at the time appointed: if he haue predestinate our death, we should trauell in vaine to the contrary. But the scripture, when it teacheth with how much greater reuerence and religiousnes we ought to thinke of so great a mysterie, doth both instruct the godly to farre other sense, and well confute these mens outrage. For it doth not speake of predestination to this end, that we should be encouraged to boldnes, and with vnlawfull rashnesse attempt to search the vnattained secrets of God: but rather that being humbled and abased we should learne to tremble at his iudgement, and reuerently to look vp to his mercie. To this mark the faithfull will leuell themselues. As for that filthie groaning of swine, it is well confuted of Paul. They say that they go carelesly forward in vices: because if they be of the number of the elect, their vices shal nothing hinder them, but that they shall at length be brought to life. But Paul telleth that we be to this end, that we should lead a holy and faultlesse life. If the marke that election is directed vnto be holinesse of life, it ought more to awake and stirre vs vp cheerfully to practise that holinesse, than to serue for a cloaking of slothfulnesse. For how greatly do these things differ the one from the other? to cease from well doing, because election sufficeth to saluation: and that the appointed end of election is that we should apply our selues to the endeuour of good doings. Away therfore with such sacrileges which do wrongfully misturne the whole order of election. Where they stretch their blasphemies further, when they say that he which is reprobate of God, shall lose his labour if he go about to make himselfe allowable to him with innocencie and honestie of life: therein they are taken with a most shamelesse lie. For, whence could such endeuour come but of election? For whosoeuer be of the number of the reprobate, as they are vessels made to dishonor, so they cease not with continuall wicked doings to prouoke the wrath of God against themselues, and by euident tokens to confirme the iudgement of God which is alreadie pronounced vpon them: so farre be they from striuing with him in vaine.

13 But other do malitiously and shamefully slander this doctrine, as though it did ouerthrow all exhortations to godly liuing. For which matter in old time Augustine was burdened with a great malice. Which he wiped away with his book of correption and grace written to Valentine, the reading whereof will appease all godlie and tractable men: yet I will touch a few things, which (as I trust) shall satisfie them that be honest and not contentious. We haue alreadie seen how open and loud a preacher of the free election Paul was: was he therefore cold in admonishing and exhorting? Let these good zealous men compare their earnestnesse with his, and it shall be found in them ise in comparison of his incredible heat. And truly this principle taketh away all doubts, that we are not called to vncleannesse, but that euerie man should possesse his vessell in honor, &c. Againe, that we are the handie worke of God created to good works, which he hath prepared that we should walke in them. Summarily, they that are euen but meanly exercised in Paul, shall without long declaration easily perceiue how fitly he maketh these things to agree, which they faine to disagree. Christ commandeth that men beleeue in him: Yet is his definitiue sentence neither false nor contrarie to his commandement, where he saith: No man can come to me, but he to whom it is giuen of my father. Let preaching therefore haue his course, which may bring men to faith, and with continuall profiting hold them fast in perseuerance. Neither yet let the knowledge of predestination bee hindered, that they which obey may not be proud as of their owne, but may glory in the Lord. Christ not for nothing saith: Who so hath eares of hearing, let him heare. Therefore when we exhort and preach, they that haue eares doe willingly obey: but who so lacke eares, in them is fulfilled that which is written, That hearing they heare not. But why (saith Augustine) should some haue, and othersome not haue? Who hath knowen the minde of the Lord? Must that therefore bee denied which is open, because that cannot be comprehended which is hidden: These sayings I haue faithfully reported out of Augustine: but because peraduenture his words shall haue more authoritie than mine, goe to, let vs bring foorth the very wordes that are read in himselfe. If when this is heard, many are turned into dulnesse and sluggishnesse, and being enclined from labor to lust doe goe after their desires: ought that therefore to bee accompted false which is spoken of the foreknowledge of God? If God haue foreknowen that they shall be good, shall they not be good, in how great euilnesse soeuer they now liue? and if he haue foreknowen that they will be euill, shall they not be euill in how great goodnesse soeuer they be now seene? shall therefore those things which are truely spoken of the foreknowledge of God, be for such causes either to be denied or to be left vnspoken of? namely then when if they be not spoken of, men goe into errors? The rule (saith he) to keepe truth vnspoken of, is one thing, and the necessitie to speake truth is another. As for the causes of leauing truth vnspoken, it were long to search them out all: of which yet this is one, that they be not made worse which vnderstand it not, while we meane to make them more learned that vnderstand it, who when we speake any such thing are indeed not made more learned, nor yet are made worse. But when a true thing is in such a case, that when wee speake it, he is made worse that cannot conceiue it: and when we speake it not, he is made worse that can conceiue it: what thinke wee now to be done? Is not the trueth rather to be spoken that he may conceiue it, that can conceiue it: than to keepe it vnspoken, that not only neither of them may conceiue it, but also he that more vnderstandeth may bee the worse? whereas if he did heare and conceiue it, by him also many should learne. And we will not say that which, as the Scripture witnesseth, we lawfully might haue spoken. For we feare forsooth least when we speake, hee be offended that cannot conceiue it: but we feare not least while we hold our peace, he that can conceiue truth be deceiued with falshood. Which sentence hee at the last shortly knitting vp, more plainely also confirmed. Wherefore if the Apostles, and they which followed them, the doctors of the Church did both, namely both godlily preach of the eternall election of God, and hold the faithfull in awe vnder the discipline of godly life: why doe these our aduersaries being confuted with inuincible violence of truth, thinke that they say well in saying, that that which is spoken of predestination is not to be preached to the people although it be true? Yea it must in any wise be preached, that he which hath eares to heare may heare. But who hath eares if he hath not receiued them from him that promiseth that he will giue them? Truely let him that receiueth not, refuse it: so that yet he which receiueth it, do take and drinke, do drinke and liue. For as godlinesse is to be preached, that God may be rightly worshipped: so is also predestination, that he which hath eares to heare of the grace of God, may glorie in God and not in himselfe.

Vndiscreet deliuering of the doctrine which concerneth predestination.

14 And yet that holie man, as he had a singular desire to edifie, so tempereth the maner of teaching the trueth, that offence be wisely auoyded so farre as it lawfully may be. For he sheweth that those things which are truly said, may also be conueniently sayd. If any man do thus preach to the people. If ye beleeue not, the cause is for that ye are alreadie predestinate of God to destruction: such a man doth not only cherish slothfulnesse, but also maintaine wickednesse. If any man also stretch his saying to the time to come, and say that they which heare shall not beleeue, because they are reprobate: this shall be rather a cursing than a teaching. Such therefore Augustine not vnworthily biddeth to depart from the Church, as foolish teachers, and vnlucky vnlucky and ill prophecying Prophets. In another place he truely affirmeth that it is to be holden that a man then profiteth with rebuking, when he hath mercy and helpeth which maketh to profite whom he will, euen without rebuking. But why some thus and some otherwise? God forbid that, that we should say the power of iudging belongeth rather to the clay than to the Potter. Againe afterward. When men by rebuking either come or returne into the way of righteousnesse, who worketh saluation in their hearts, but he, which when any whosoeuer he be planteth and watereth giueth the increase, whom when he will saue, no freewill of man resisteth? It is therefore not to be doubted that the wils of men cannot resist the will of God (which both in heauen and earth hath done whatsoeuer he would, and which hath also done those things that are to come) but that he may doe what he will, forasmuch as euen of the very wils of men he doth what he will. Againe, when he will leade men to him, doth he binde them with corporall bonds? He inwardly worketh, inwardly holdeth hearts, inwardlie mooueth hearts, and draweth them with their wils which he himselfe hath made in them. But, that which he by and by addeth ought in no wise to be omitted: that because we know not who belongeth or not belongeth to the number of the predestinate, we ought so to be affectioned that we would all men to be saued. So shall it come to passe, that whomsoeuer we finde, we shall trauell to make him partaker of peace. But our peace shall rest vpon the children of peace, Therefore for our part, we must apply wholsome and sharpe rebuking to all men like a medicine, that they perish not, nor destroy other, but it shalbe the worke of God to make it profitable to them whom he hath foreknowen and predestinate.

THE XXIIIJ. CHAPTER.

That election is stablished by the calling of God, but that the reprobate doe bring vpon themselues the iust destruction whereunto they are appointed.

God effectual and inward calling of some whose election is thereby sealed.

BVT, that the matter may more plainely appeare, wee must intreate both of the calling of the elect, and of the blinding and hardening of the wicked. Of the first of these I haue alredy spoken somewhat, when I confuted their errour, which thinke that the generalnesse of the promises extendeth equally to all makind. But this election which otherwise God hath hidden with himselfe he doeth not without choise at length disclose by his calling, which a man may therefore call the testifying of it. For, whom he hath foreknowen, them he hath also forappointed to be fashioned like the image of his sonne: whom he hath foreappointed, them he hath also called: whom he hath called, them he hath also iustified, that in time to come he may glorifie them. When the Lord hath by electing already adopted his into the number of his children: yet we see how they enter not into possession of so great a benefite, but when they be called: on the other side, how being called they doe now enioy a certaine communicating of his election. For which reason Paul calleth the spirit which they receiue, both the spirit of adoption, and the seale, and earnest of the inheritance to come: namely because it doth with the testimony thereof stablish and seale to their hearts the assuredneſse of the adoption to come. For though the preaching of the Gospell spring out of the fountaine of election: yet because it is also common to the reprobate, therefore it could not by it selfe be a sure proofe thereof. But God effectually teacheth his elect, that he may bring them to faith: as we haue before alleadged out of the words of Christ, Who so is of God, he and none other seeth the Father. Againe, I haue shewed thy name to the men whom thou hast giuen mee: Whereas he saith in another place, no man can come to mee, vnlesse my Father draw him. Which place Augustine wisely weieth, whose words are these. If (as Truth saith) euery one that hath learned, commeth: whosoeuer commeth not, certainly neither hath he learned. It doth not therefore follow that he which can come, also commeth, vnlesse he haue both willed and done it. But euery one that hath learned of the Father, not onely can come, but also commeth, when now there is present both the profit of comming, and the affection of willing, and the effect of doing. Also in another place more plainly. What is this else, Euery one that hath heard of the father, and hath learned, commeth to mee, but there is none that heareth and learneth of the father and commeth not to mee? For if euery one which hath heard of the father and learned, commeth: truely euery one that commeth not, hath not heard of the father, nor learned: for if he had heard and learned, he would come. This schoole is farre from the senses of the flesh, in which schoole the father is heard and teacheth, that men may come to the sonne. And a little after. This grace which is secretly giuen to the hearts of men, is receiued of no hard heart: for it is therefore giuen, that the hardnesse of the heart may first be taken away. When therefore the father is heard within, he taketh away the stonie heart, and giueth a fleshly heart. For so hee maketh the children of promise and vessels of mercy, which he hath prepared to glorie. Why therfore doth he not teach all, that they may come to Christ, but because all whom he teacheth, by mercie hee teacheth: whom he doth not teach, by iudgement he doth not teach? because he hath mercy vpon whom he will, and hardneth whom he will. Therefore God assigneth them for children to himselfe, and appointeth himselfe father to them, whom he hath chosen. Now by calling he bringeth them into the houshold, and vniteth himselfe to them, that they may be one together. But, when calling is ioyned to election, in that maner the Scripture sufficiently signifieth that in it nothing is to be required but the mercy of God. For if we aske, whom he calleth and for what reason: he answereth, whom he had elected. But when we come once to election, there the onely mercy of God appeareth on euery side. And heere that saying of Paul truly hath place, It is not of him that willeth, nor of him that runneth, but of God that hath mercie. Neither yet that same so, as they commonly take it, which part it betweene the grace of God, and the willing and running of man. For they expound it, that the desire and indeuour of man hath indeed no force of themselues, vnlesse they be prospered by the grace of God: but when they are holpen by his blissing, then they affirme that they haue also their parts in obtaining saluation. Whose cauillation I had rather confute with Augustines words than mine owne: If the Apostle meant nothing else but that it is not of him onely that willeth or runneth, vnlesse the Lord be there present mercifull: we may contrariwise turne it against them and say that it is not of onely mercy, vnlesse there be present willing and running. But if this be openly wicked, let vs not doubt that the Apostle giueth all to the mercie of the Lord, and leaueth nothing to our wils or endeuours. To this effect speaketh that holy man. And I set not a straw by that nice subtiltie, that they say that Paul would not haue so said vnlesse there had beene some indeuour and some will in vs. For he did not consider what was in man: but when he saw that some did assigne part of saluation to the endeuour of men, he simply condemned their errour in the first part of the sentence, and in the second he challenged the whole summe of saluation of the mercie of God. And what other things do the Prophets trauell about but continually to preach the free calling of God?

Rom. 9. 16.

Euchir. ad Laur. cap. 31.

It is of Gods most free and vndeserued fauour, that we are effectually called to saluation.

2 Moreouer the very nature also and dispensation of calling doth cleerely shew it, which consisteth not in the onely preaching of the word, but also in the inlightening of the Spirit. To whom God offereth his word, is shewed vs in the Prophet: I am found of them that sought mee not: I haue openly appeared to them that did not aske for mee. To a people which hath not called vpon my name I haue said, Loe I am present. And least the Iewes should thinke that this kindenesse belonged onely to the Gentiles, he doth also put them in remembrance from whence he tooke their father Abraham, when he vouchsafed to ioyne him to himselfe, namely from meere idolatrie, in which he was drowned with all his. When he first shineth with the light of his word to men not deseruing it, he therein sheweth an example plaine enough of his free goodnesse. Heere therefore the vnmeasurable goodnesse of God sheweth foorth it selfe, but not vnto saluation to all: because for the reprobate there abideth a more greeuous iudgement, for that they refuse the testimony of the will of God. And God also, to set foorth his glory, withdraweth from them the effectuall force of his Spirite. Therefore this inward calling is a pledge of saluation, which cannot deceiue vs. For which purpose maketh that saying of Iohn. Thereby wee know know that we are his children, by the ſpirit which hee hath giuen vs. And leaſt fleſh ſhould glorie, that it did at the leaſt anſwere to him when he called and of his owne will offered himſelfe, hee affirmeth that it hath no eares to heare, no eies to ſee but which he hath made: and that he maketh them, not according to euery mans thankfulneſſe, but according to his owne election. Of which thing you haue a notable example in Luke, where both Iewes and Gentiles in common together, heard the preaching of Paul and Barnabas. Whereas they were at that time all taught with one ſelfeſame word, it is ſaid that they beleeued which were ordained to euerlaſting life. With what face may wee denie that the calling is free, in which euen to the very laſt part election reigneth alone? Act. 13.14.

3 But heere we muſt beware of two errors, becauſe many make man a worker together with God, that he by his conſent may make the election to be of force: ſo by their opinion, the will of man is aboue the counſell of God. As though the Scripture did teach, that it is onely giuen vs that we may beleeue, and not rather faith it ſelfe. Other ſome, although they doe not ſo weaken the grace of the holy Ghoſt: yet being led by I wot not what reaſon, hang election vpon faith as though it were doubtfull, yea and vneffectuall vntill it be confirmed by faith. It is in deed certaine that it is confirmed, as toward vs: and we haue already ſhewed that the ſecret counſell of God beginneth to ſhine out, which was before hidden: ſo that by this word you vnderſtand nothing elſe, than that it is approued which was vnknowen, and is as it were ſealed with a ſeale. But it is falſely ſaid, that election is then and not till then effectual, when we haue embraced the Goſpel, & that therof it taketh liuely ſtrength. We muſt indeed from thence fetch the certaintie of it: Becauſe if we attempt to reach vnto the eternall ordinance of God, that deepe bottomleſſe depth will ſwallow vs vp. But when God hath opened it vnto vs, we muſt climbe vp higher, leaſt the effect ſhould drowne the cauſe. For what greater abſurditie or ſhamefull vniuſtice is there, than that when the Scripture teacheth that we are enlightned as God hath choſen vs, our eyes ſhould be ſo daſeled with this light, that they ſhould refuſe to looke vpon election? Yet in the meane time I denie not, that to the end we may be certaine of our ſaluation, wee muſt begin at the word, and that our affiance ought therewith to be contented, that we may call vpon God by the name of Father. For ſome quite contrary to right order, that they may be certified of the counſell of God (which is neere vnto vs, in our mouth and in our heart) doe couet to flie aboue the cloudes. Therefore that raſhneſſe is to be reſtrained with ſobrietie of faith, that it may ſuffice vs that God in his outward word is a witneſſe of his hidden grace: ſo that the conduit pipe out of which there floweth water largely for vs to drinke, doe not hinder but that the ſpring-head may haue his due honor. Deut. 30.14.

We are not workers with God of our owne election, neither doth it hang in ſuſpence vpon our faith

4 Therefore as they doe wrongfully, which hang the ſtrength of election vpon the faith of the Goſpell, by which faith we feele that election pertaineth to vs: ſo we ſhall keepe the beſt order, if in ſeeking the certaintie of our election, we ſticke faſt in theſe latter ſignes, which are ſure witneſſings of it: Satan doth with no tentation either more grieuouſly, or more dangerouſly aſtoniſh the faithfull, than when diſquieting them with doubt of their election, he doth alſo moue them with a peruerſe deſire to ſeeke it out of the way. I call it ſeeking out of the way, when a wretched man enterpriſeth to breake into the hidden ſecrets of the wiſedome of God, and to pearce euen to the higheſt eternitie to vnderſtand what is determined of himſelfe at the iudgement ſeate of God. For then he throweth himſelfe headlong to bee ſwallowed vp into the depth of the vnmeaſurable deuouring pit: then he wrappeth himſelfe with innumerable ſnares and ſuch as he cannot winde out of: then he ouerwhelmeth himſelfe with the bottomleſſe depth of blinde darkneſſe. For ſo is it right full that the fooliſhneſſe of the wit of man be puniſhed with ſo horrible ruine, when he attempteth of his owne force to riſe vp to the height of the wiſedome of God. And ſo much more deadly is this tentation, as there is none to which wee are commonly all more bent. For there is moſt rarely any man to be found, whoſe minde is not ſometime ſtriken with this thought. Whence haſt thou ſaluation, but of the election of God? And of Election what reuelation haſt thou? which thought, if it haue once taken place in any man, man, either perpetually vexeth the miserable man with terrible torments, or vtterly dismaieth him. Truely I would haue no surer argument than this experience to proove, how wrongfully such men imagine of predestination. For the minde can be infected with no errour more pestilent, than that which plucketh downe, and thrusteth the conscience from her peace and quietnesse toward God. Therefore if we feare shipwracke, we must diligently beware of this rocke, which is neuer striken vpon without destruction. And though the disputing of predestination be esteemed like a dangerous sea, yet in passing through it there is found a safe and quiet yea and pleasant sayling, vnlesse a man doe wilfully couet to be in danger. For as they doe drowne themselues in the deadly bottomlesse depth, which to be certified of their election doe enquire of the secret Counsell of God without his word: so they which doe rightly and orderly search it in such sort as it is contained in the word, receiue thereof a singular fruit of comfort. Let this therefore be our way to search it, that we begin at the calling of God, and end in the same. Howbeit this withstandeth not, but that the Faithfull may thinke that the benefits which they daily receiue at the hand of GOD, doe descend from that secret adoption: as they say in Esay, Thou hast done maruels, thy thoughts are old, true, and faithfull: forasmuch as by that adoption as by a token, the Lords will is to confirme so much as is lawfull to be knowen of his counsell. But least any man should thinke this a weake testimony, let vs consider how much both clearenesse, and certainty it bringeth vs. Of which thing Bernard speaketh fitly. For after that he had spoken of the reprobate, he saith: The purpose of God standeth, the sentence of peace standeth vpon them that feare him, both couering their euils, and rewarding their good things: so as to them after a marueilous maner not onely good things, but also euill doe worke together vnto good. Who shall accuse the elect of God? It sufficeth me to all righteousnesse, to haue him alone mercifull, to whom alone I haue sinned. All that he hath decreed not to impute to me, is so as if it neuer had been. And a little after: O place of true rest, and to which not vnworthily I may giue the name of a bedchamber, in which God is seene not as troubled with wrath, not as withholden with care: but his will is prooued in him good, and well pleasing, and perfect. This sight doth not make afraid, but calmeth: doth not stirre vp vnquiet curiousnesse, but appeaseth it: doth not weary the senses, but quieteth them: Here is quiet truely taken, God being appeased, appeaseth all things: and to behold him quiet, is to be quiet.

Being chosen in Christ in him we must behold our choosing ascertained.

5 First, if we seeke a fatherly kindnesse, and fauourable minde of God, we must turne our eies to Christ, in whom alone the soule of the father resteth. If wee seeke saluation, life, and the immortalitie of the heauenly kingdome, we must then also flee to no other: forasmuch as he alone is both the fountaine of life, and Authour of saluation, and heire of the kingdome of Heauen. Now whereto serueth election, but that being adopted of the heauenly Father into the degree of children, we may by his fauour obtaine saluation and immortalitie? Howsoeuer in seeking thou tosse it and shake it, yet thou shalt finde that the vttermost marke of it extendeth no further. Therfore whom God hath taken to his children, it is not said that he hath chosen them in themselues, but in his Christ: because he could not loue them but in him, nor giue them the honour of the inheritance of his kingdome, vnlesse they had first beene made partakers of him. If we be chosen in him, we shall not finde in our selues the certainty of our election: no, nor yet in God the Father, if we imagine him naked without the Sonne. Christ therefore is the mirror, in whom we both must, and without deceit may behold our election. For sith it is he into whose body the Father hath appointed to graft all them whom from eternitie he hath willed to be his, that he may take for his children so many as he reknowledgeth among his members: we haue a witnesse plaine and sure enough, that we are written in the booke of life, if we communicate with Christ. And that sure communion of himselfe he gaue vs, when by preaching of the Gospell he testified that he was giuen to vs of the Father, that he withall his good things should be ours. We are said to put on him, and to grow together into him, that we may liue: because he liueth. So oft is this doctrine repeated, The Father spared not his onely begotten Sonne, that whosoeuer beleeueth in him, may not perish.

periſh. But he that beleeueth in him, is ſaid to haue paſſed from death into life. In which ſenſe he calleth himſelfe the Bread of life, which who ſo eateth, he ſhall not die for euer. He (I ſay) hath beene a witneſſe to vs, that they ſhall be receiued of the heauenly Father in place of his children, of whom he hath beene receiued by Faith. If we couet any more than to be accompted among the children and heires of God, then we may climbe aboue Chriſt. If this be our vttermoſt marke: how much be we mad in ſeeking without him that which we haue alreadie obtained in him, and which may be found in him alone? Moreouer, ſith he is the eternall wiſedome, the vnchangeable truth, and faſt ſetled counſell of the Father: it is not to be feared leaſt that which he declareth to vs in his word, ſhould varie any thing be it neuer ſo little from that will of the Father which we ſeeke: but rather he faithfullie openeth it vnto vs, ſuch as it was from the beginning, and euer ſhall be. The practiſe of this doctrine ought alſo to be in vre in prayers. For though the faith of election doth incourage vs to call vpon God: yet when we make our prayers, it were vnorderly done to thruſt it into the preſence of God, or to couenant with this condition. Lord, if I be elected, heare me: for as much as he willeth vs to be content with his promiſes, and no where elſe to ſeeke whether he will be intrearable to vs or no. This wiſedome ſhall deliuer vs from many ſnares, if we can skill to apply that, to a right vſe which hath beene rightly written: but let vs not, vndiſcreetly draw hither and thether that which ought to haue beene reſtrained.

Iohn 3. 15. Iohn 5. 24. Iohn 6. 35.

6 There is alſo for ſtabliſhing of our affiance another ſtay of election, which we haue ſaid to be ioyned with our calling. For, whom Chriſt taketh being enlightened with the knowledge of his name into the boſome of his Church, them he is ſaid to receiue into his faith and protection. And whom ſoeuer he receiueth, they are ſaid to be committed to him of the Father, and deliuered to his truſt, that they may be kept into eternall life. What meane we? Chriſt crieth out with a lowd voyce, that ſo many as the Father willeth to be ſaued, he hath deliuered them into his protection. Therefore if we liſt to know whether God hath care of our ſafetie, let vs ſeeke whether he hath committed vs to Chriſt, whom he hath made the onely Sauiour of all his. Now if we doubt whether we be receiued of Chriſt into his faith and keeping, he preuenteth our doubting, when he voluntarily offereth himſelfe to be our ſhepheard, and pronounceth that we ſhal be in the number of his ſheepe if we heare his voice. Let vs therefore imbrace Chriſt, being liberally ſet open for vs, and comming to meete vs, he ſhall number vs in his flocke, and ſhall keepe vs incloſed within his fold. But there entreth into vs a carefulneſſe of our ſtate to come. For as Paul teacheth that they are called, which were before choſen: ſo Chriſt ſheweth that many are called, but few are choſen. Yea and alſo Paul himſelfe in another place diſhorteth vs from careleſneſſe: Let him that ſtandeth (ſaith he) looke that he fall not. Againe, Art thou graffed into the people of God? Be not proud, but feare: for God is able to cut thee off againe that he may graffe other. Finally, we are ſufficiently taught by experience it ſelfe, that calling and faith are of ſmall value, vnleſſe there be adioyned continuance which happeneth not to all men. But Chriſt hath deliuered vs from this care: for verilie theſe promiſes haue reſpect to the time to come. All that my father giueth me ſhall come to me: and him that ſhall come to me, I will not caſt him out of dores. Againe, this is the will of him that ſent me, the Father, that I looſe nothing of all things that he hath giuen me, but may raiſe them vp againe in the laſt day. Againe, My ſheepe heare my voyce, and they follow mee: I know them, and I giue them eternall life, and they ſhall not periſh for euer, neither ſhall any man take them out of my hand. The father which gaue them to me, is greater than all: and no man can take them out of the hand of my father. Now when he pronounceth, Euery tree which my father hath not planted, ſhall be plucked vp by the roote: he ſignifieth on the contrarie ſide, that they can neuer be plucked from ſaluation, which haue roote in God. Wherewith agreeth that ſaying of Iohn, If they had beene of vs, they had not at all gone out from vs. Hereupon alſo commeth that noble glorying of Paul againſt life and death, preſent things and things to come: which glorying muſt needs bee grounded vpon the gift of continuance. Neither is it any doubt that he directeth this

As also Dauid, when his faith fainted, leaned vpon this stay: Thou shalt not forsake the worke of thy hands. And now neither is this doubtfull, that Christ when he prayeth for all the faithfull, asketh the same thing for them which he asked for Peter, that their faith may neuer faile. Whereby we gather, that they are out of danger of falling away, because the Sonne of God, asking stedfast continuance for their godlinesse, suffered no deniall. What would Christ haue vs to learne heereby, but that we should trust that we shall perpetually be safe, because we are once made his?

Luk. 22.32.

They which fall from Christ were in truth neuer Christians, in whom a modest, humble, and religious feare of falling doth not take away assuredmesse of continuing his. Iohn 17.12. 1.Iohn 2.19. Iohn 3.16. & 6.39.

7 But it dayly happeneth, that they which seemed to be Christes, doe againe reuolt from him and fall. Yea and in the very same place where he affirmeth that none had perished of them which were giuen him of the Father, yet he excepteth the sonne of perdition. That is true indeed: but this is also as certaine, that such did neuer cleaue to Christ with that affiance of hart with which I say that the assuredneſse of our election is stablished. They went out from vs (saith Iohn) but they were not of vs. For if they had beene of vs, they had still tarried with vs. Neither doe I denie that they haue like signes of calling as the elect haue: but I doe not grant that they haue that sure stablishment of election which I bid the faithfull to fetch out of the word of the Gospell. Wherefore let not such examples moue vs, but that we quietly rest vpon the promise of the Lord, where he pronounceth, that all they are giuen to him of the Father, which receiue him with true faith, of whom sith he is their keeper and Pastor, none shall perish. Of Iudas we shall speake heereafter. Paul doth not counsell Christians from assuredneſse altogither, but from careleſse and looſe assuredneſse of the flesh, which draweth with it pride, presumption, and disdaine of other, and quencheth humilitie and the reuerence of God, and bringeth forgetfulneſse of grace receiued. For he speaketh to the Gentiles, whom he teacheth, that they ought not proudly and vngently to reproch the Iewes for this, that the Iewes being disherited, they were set in their stead. Feare also he requireth not wherewith they should be dismayed and stagger, but with framing vs to the receiuing of the grace of God, should abate nothing of the affiance thereof, as we haue said in another place. Beside that he doth not there speake to euery man particularly, but to the sects themselues generally. For when the Church was diuided into two parts, and enuie bred dissention, Paul putteth the Gentiles in minde that they being supplied into the place of the peculiar and holie people ought to be to them a cause of feare and modestie. And among them there were many puffed vp with glorie, whose vaine boasting it was profitable to beate downe. But we haue in another place shewed, that our hope is extended to the time to come euen beyond death, and that nothing is more contrarie to the nature of it, than to doubt what shall become of vs.

Calling generall and special.

8 That saying of Christ, of many being called but few chosen, is very ill taken after that maner. There shall be nothing doubtfull if we hold fast that which ought to be cleare by the things aboue spoken, that there are two sorts of calling. For there is an vniuersall calling whereby through the outward preaching of the word, God calleth altogither to him, euen them also to whom he setteth it foorth vnto the sauour of death, and vnto matter of more grieuous condemnation. The other is a speciall calling which for the most part he vouchsafeth to giue onely to the faithfull, when by the inward enlightening of his spirit he maketh that the word preached is setled in their hearts. Yet sometime he maketh them also partakers of it whom he enlighteneth but for a time, and afterward by the deseruing of their vnthankefulneſse forsaketh them, and striketh them with greater blindneſse. Now when the Lord saw the Gospell to be published farre and wide, and to be despised of many, but to be had in due price of few: he describeth to vs God vnder the person of a King, which preparing a solemne feast sendeth his messengers round about to bid a great multitude to be his guests, and yet can get but a few, because euerie one alleageth lets for his excuse, so that at length he is compelled vpon their refusall, to call out of the high waies euery one that hee meeteth. Hitherto euery man seeth that the parable must be vnderstood of the outward calling. He addeth afterward that God doth like a good maker of a feast, which goeth about the tables, to cheare his gueſtes. If he finde any not clothed with a wedding garment, he will not ſuffer him with his vncleanlineſſe to diſhonor the ſolemnitie of the feaſt. This part of the parable, I grant, is to be vnderſtood of them which enter into the Church by the profeſſion of faith, but are not clothed with the ſanctification of Chriſt. Such diſhonors and as it were botches of his Church, the Lord will not ſuffer for euer: but, as their filthineſſe deſerueth he will caſt them out. Therefore few are choſen out of a great number of them that are called, but yet not with that calling by which we ſay that the faithfull ought to iudge their election. For, that generall calling is alſo common to the wicked: but this ſpeciall calling bringeth with it the ſpirit of regeneration, which is the earneſt and ſeale of the inheritance to come, wherewith our harts are ſealed vp againſt the day of the Lord. In a ſumme, ſith hypocrites boaſt of godlineſſe as well as the true worſhippers of God, Chriſt pronounceth that at length they ſhall be caſt out of the place which they wrongfully poſſeſſe: as it is ſaid in the Pſalme, Lord, who ſhall dwell in thy tabernacle? The innocent in hands, and a man of a pure heart. Againe, in another place. This is the generation of them that ſeeke God, of them that ſeeke the face of the God of Iacob. And ſo doth the Spirit exhort the faithfull to ſufferance, that they take it not grieuouſly that the Iſraelites be mingled with them in the Church: for at length their vizor ſhall be plucked from them and they ſhall be caſt out with ſhame.

Ephe. 1. 13. Pſal. 15. 1.

9 The ſame reaſon is of the exception euen now alleadged, where Chriſt ſaith that none periſhed but the ſonne of perdition. It is in deed an vnproper ſpeech, but yet not darke. For he was not accounted among the ſheepe of Chriſt, for that he was one in deed, but becauſe hee kept the place of one. And where in another place the Lord affirmeth that he was choſen with the Apoſtles, that is ſpoken onely in reſpect of the miniſterie. Twelue (ſaith he) haue I choſen, and one of them is a Diuell: that is, he had choſen him to the office of an Apoſtle. But when he ſpeaketh of chooſing to ſaluation, hee driueth him farre away from the number of the choſen, ſaying: I ſpeake not of all: I know whom I haue choſen. If a man doe in both places confound the woord of Chooſing, hee ſhall miſerably entangle himſelfe: if he make difference, nothing is more plaine. Therefore Gregorie teacheth very ill and peſtilently when he ſaith that wee know onely our calling, but are vncertaine of our election: whereby hee mooueth all men to feare and trembling: vſing alſo this reaſon, but becauſe wee know what wee be to day, but what we ſhall bee we know not. But in that place he ſufficiently declareth, how he ſtumbled at this blocke. For, becauſe he hanged election vpon the merits of workes, he had matter enough, and more to diſcourage the mindes of men: but hee could not ſtrengthen them, which did not remooue them from themſelues to the affiance of the goodneſſe of God. Heereof the faithfull haue ſome taſte of that which we haue determined at the beginning that predeſtination if it be rightly thought vpon, bringeth not a ſhaking of faith, but rather the beſt ſtrengthning of it. And yet I denie not, that the holy Ghoſt framed his talke to the ſmall meaſure of our ſenſe. As when he ſaith, In the ſecret of my people they ſhall not be, and in the roule of my ſeruants they ſhall not be written. As though God did begin to write in the booke of life, them whom hee reckoneth in the number of his: whereas yet we know, euen by the witneſſe of Chriſt, that the names of the children of God are from the beginning written in the booke of life. But in theſe words is onely expreſſed the caſting away of them which ſeemed the chiefe among the elect: as it is ſaid in the Pſalme. Let them be blotted out of the booke of life, and let them not be written with the righteous.

10 But the elect are neither immediately from the wombe, nor all at one time, by calling gathered together into the flocke of Chriſt, but as it pleaſeth God to diſtribute his grace to them. But ere they bee gathered together to that chiefe ſhepheard, they are ſcattered abroad and ſtray in the common deſert, and differ nothing from other, ſauing that they be defended by the ſingular mercie of God, from falling into the extreame headlong downe-fall of death. Therefore if you looke vpon them ſelues, you ſhall ſee the ofſpring of Adam, which ſauoureth of the common corruption of the whole maſſe. That they be not carried into extreame and deſpaired vngodlineſſe, godlineſſe, this commeth not to paſſe by any goodneſſe naturally planted in them, but becauſe the eye of God watcheth, and his hand is ſtretched out to their ſaluation. For they that dreame that from their very natiuitie there is planted in their harts I wot not what ſeed of election, by the vertue whereof they are alway inclined to godlineſſe and to the feare of God, they both are not holpen to prooue it by the authoritie of Scripture, and alſo are confuted by experience it ſelfe. They doe in deede bring foorth a few examples to prooue that the elect euen before their enlightening, were not vtterly ſtrangers from religion: that Paul in his being a Phariſee liued vnrepooueable, that Cornelius was by almes and prayers accepted of God: and ſuch other. Of Paul, we graunt to them: of Cornelius, we ſay, that they are deceiued. For it appeareth that he was then alreadie enlightened and regenerate, ſo that he wanted nothing but the cleere reuealing of the Goſpell. But what will they wring out by theſe few examples? that all the elect are alway endued with the ſpirit of godlineſſe? No more than if a man by ſhewing the vprightneſſe of Ariſtides, Socrates, Zenocrates, Scipio, Curius Camillus, and other, ſhould thereof gather, that all they that are left in blindneſſe of idolatrie, were deſirous followers of holineſſe and honeſtie. Yea and the Scripture in more places than one, openly crieth out againſt them. For, the ſtate which Paul deſcribeth of the Epheſians before their regeneration, ſheweth not one graine of this ſeede. Ye were (ſaith he) dead with defaults and ſinnes, in which ye walked according to the time of this world, according to the prince of the aire, which now worketh in the obſtinate children: among whom we all alſo were ſometime conuerſant in the luſts of our fleſh, doing thoſe things that liked our fleſh and minde. And wee were by nature the children of wrath, as other alſo were. Againe, remember that yee were ſometime without hope, and lacked God in the world. Againe, Yee were ſometime darkeneſſe: but now yee are light in the Lord, walke as the children of light. But peraduenture they will haue theſe things to be referred to the ignorance of the true God, wherewith they denie not that the elect are holden, before that they be called. Albeit this were a ſhameleſſe cauilling, ſith he thereof concludeth, that they ought now no more either to lie or to ſteale: yet what will they anſwere to other places? as is that place to the Corinthians, where when he had pronounced that neither whoremongers, nor idolaters, nor adulterers, nor weakelings, nor buggerers, nor theeues, nor couetous men, ſhall be heires of the kingdome of God: he by and by addeth that they were wrapped in the ſame hainous offences before that they knew Chriſt: but now that they are both waſhed by his blood and made free by his ſpirit. Againe another place to the Romanes: As yee haue giuen your members ſeruants to vncleanneſſe, and to iniquitie to commit iniquitie, now yeeld them in bondage to righteouſneſſe. fect the ſaluation, whereunto he had by eternall counſell appointed them: ſo he hath his iudgements againſt the reprobate, whereby he executeth his counſell of them. Whom therefore hee hath created vnto the ſhame of life, and deſtruction of death, that they ſhould bee inſtruments of his wrath, and examples of his ſeueritie: from them, that they may come to their end, ſometime he taketh away the power to heare his word, and ſometime by the preaching of it he more blindeth and amaſeth them. Of the firſt maner, whereas there be innumerable examples, let vs chooſe out one more cleere and notable than all the reſt. There paſſed away about foure thouſand yeeres before Chriſt, in which hee hid from all the Gentiles the light of his health bringing doctrine. If any man anſwer that he therefore made them not to enioy ſo great a benefite becauſe he iudged them vnworthy, they which come after ſhall not be prooued any more worthy. Of which thing, beſide the experience, Malachie is a ſubſtantiall witneſſe, which reprooving Infidelity mingled with groſſe blaſphemies, yet declareth that there ſhall come a Redeemer. Why therefore is he rather giuen to theſe than to thoſe? He ſhall trouble himſelfe in vaine, that ſhall heare ſearch for a cauſe higher than the ſecret and vnſearchable counſell of God. Neither is it to be feared leaſt any ſcholler of Porphyrie, ſhould freely gnaw at the righteouſneſſe of God while we anſwer nothing in defence of it. For when we ſay that none periſh vndeſeruing, and that it is of the free bountifulneſſe of God that ſome be deliuered, there is largely enough ſaid for the ſetting foorth of his glory, ſo that it needeth not our ſhifting. The ſoueraigne iudge therefore maketh a way for his predeſtination, when whom hee hath once reiected, them being depriued of the communicating of his light hee leaueth in blindneſſe. Of the other maner there are both dailie examples, and alſo many contained in the Scripture. One ſelfeſame preaching is commonly made to a hundred, twenty receiue it with ready obedience of faith: the reſt doe either ſet naught by it, or ſcorne it, or hiſſe it out, or abhorre it. If any man anſwer that this diuerſity proceedeth of their malice and peruerſeneſſe, hee ſhall not yet ſatisfie vs: becauſe the others wit alſo ſhould bee poſſeſſed with the ſame malice, vnleſſe God did amend it with his goodneſſe. Therefore wee ſhall ſtill bee encombred, vnleſſe wee call to minde that which Paul ſaith, Who maketh thee to differ? Whereby he ſignifieth that ſome excell other ſome, not by their owne vertue, but by the onely grace of God.

The meanes whereby reprobates come to their ends: ſome debarred of the power of hearing the word ſome by the light thereof blinded.

13 Why therefore doth he in granting grace to thoſe paſſe ouer theſe? Of thoſe Luke ſheweth a cauſe, Becauſe they are ordained to life. Of theſe, what ſhall wee thinke, but becauſe they are the veſſels of wrath vnto diſhonor? Wherefore let it not greeue vs to ſay with Auguſtine. God (ſaith hee) might turne the will of the euill into good, becauſe he is almighty. He might indeed. Why therefore doth he not? becauſe he would not. Why he would not, is in himſelfe. For we ought to be no more wiſe than we ought to be. And that is much better, than to ſhift with Chryſoſtome, and ſay that he draweth him that is willing and reacheth his hand, that the difference may not ſeeme to ſtand in the iudgement of God, but in the onely will of men. Truely it ſo ſtandeth not in proper motion of man, that euen the goodlie and they that feare God haue neede of a ſingular inſtruction of the ſpirit. Lydia the Purple ſeller feared God, and yet it behooued that her heart ſhould be opened, that ſhee might harken to the doctrine of Paul, and profit in it. This is not ſpoken of one woman alone, but that wee ſhould know that the profiting of euery man in godlineſſe is the ſecret worke of the ſpirit. This verily cannot be brought in queſtion, that the Lord ſendeth his word to many, whoſe blindneſſe he will haue to be more enforced. For, to what purpoſe doth hee bid ſo many commandements to be carried to Pharao? was it becauſe hee hoped that with often repeated meſſages he would be appeaſed? No, but before he began, he foreknew and foretolde the end. Goe (ſaid he to Moſes) and declare to him my will: but I will harden his heart, that hee obey not. So when he ſtirreth vp Ezechiell: he warneth him aforehand that he ſendeth him to a rebellious and ſtubborne people: to the end that hee ſhould not be afraide if he perceiue himſelfe to ſing to deafe men. So he foretelleth to Ieremy, that his doctrine ſhould become a fire, to deſtroy and waſte the people like ſtubble. But the prophecy of Eſay yet

Of which thing, beſide the experience, Malachie is a ſubſtantiall witneſſe, which reprooving Infidelity mingled with groſſe blaſphemies, yet declareth that there ſhall come a Redeemer. Why therefore is he rather giuen to theſe than to thoſe? He ſhall trouble himſelfe in vaine, that ſhall heare ſearch for a cauſe higher than the ſecret and vnſearchable counſell of God. Neither is it to be feared leaſt any ſcholler of Porphyrie, ſhould freely gnaw at the righteouſneſſe of God while we anſwer nothing in defence of it. For when we ſay that none periſh vndeſeruing, and that it is of the free bountifulneſſe of God that ſome be deliuered, there is largely enough ſaid for the ſetting foorth of his glory, ſo that it needeth not our ſhifting. The ſouereigne iudge therefore maketh a way for his predeſtination, when whom hee hath once reiected, them being depriued of the communicating of his light hee leaueth in blindneſſe. Of the other maner there are both dailie examples, and alſo many contained in the Scripture. One ſelfeſame preaching is commonly made to a hundred, twenty receiue it with ready obedience of faith: the reſt doe either ſet naught by it, or ſcorne it, or hiſſe it out, or abhorre it. If any man anſwer that this diuerſity proceedeth of their malice and peruerſeneſſe, hee ſhall not yet ſatisfie vs: becauſe the others wit alſo ſhould bee poſſeſſed with the ſame malice, vnleſſe God did amend it with his goodneſſe. Therefore wee ſhall ſtill bee encombred, vnleſſe wee call to minde that which Paul ſaith, Who maketh thee to differ? Whereby he ſignifieth that ſome excell other ſome, not by their owne vertue, but by the onely grace of God.

The meanes whereby reprobates come to their ends: ſome debarred of the power of hearing the word ſome by the light thereof blinded.

13 Why therefore doth he in granting grace to thoſe paſſe ouer theſe? Of thoſe Luke ſheweth a cauſe, Becauſe they are ordained to life. Of theſe, what ſhall wee thinke, but becauſe they are the veſſels of wrath vnto diſhonor? Wherefore let it not greeue vs to ſay with Auguſtine. God (ſaith hee) might turne the will of the euill into good, becauſe he is almighty. He might indeed. Why therefore doth he not? becauſe he would not. Why he would not, is in himſelfe. For we ought to be no more wiſe than we ought to be. And that is much better, than to ſhift with Chryſoſtome, and ſay that he draweth him that is willing and reacheth his hand, that the difference may not ſeeme to ſtand in the iudgement of God, but in the onely will of men. Truely it ſo ſtandeth not in proper motion of man, that euen the goodlie and they that feare God haue neede of a ſingular inſtruction of the ſpirit. Lydia the Purple ſeller feared God, and yet it behooued that her heart ſhould be opened, that ſhee might harken to the doctrine of Paul, and profit in it. This is not ſpoken of one woman alone, but that wee ſhould know that the profiting of euery man in godlineſſe is the ſecret worke of the ſpirit. This verily cannot be brought in queſtion, that the Lord ſendeth his word to many, whoſe blindneſſe he will haue to be more enforced. For, to what purpoſe doth hee bid ſo many commandements to be carried to Pharao? was it becauſe hee hoped that with often repeated meſſages he would be appeaſed? No, but before he began, he foreknew and foretolde the end. Goe (ſaid he to Moſes) and declare to him my will: but I will harden his heart, that hee obey not. So when he ſtirreth vp Ezechiell: he warneth him aforehand that he ſendeth him to a rebellious and ſtubborne people: to the end that hee ſhould not be afraide if he perceiue himſelfe to ſing to deafe men. So he foretelleth to Ieremy, that his doctrine ſhould become a fire, to deſtroy and waſte the people like ſtubble. But the prophecy of Eſay yet

The difference betweene one ſort and another hangeth vpon the ſecret counſell and will of God, wherefore there is no higher cauſe than his will.

yet more enforceth it. For he is thus ſent of the Lord: Goe and ſay to the children of Iſraell: With hearing heare ye, and vnderſtand not: With ſeeing ſee yee, and know not. Make obſtinate the heart of this people, and make heauie their eares, and ouer plaiſter their eies, leaſt peraduenture they may ſee with their eies, and heare with their eares, and vnderſtand with their heart, that being turned they may be healed. Behold he directeth his voice to them, but that they wax more deafe: he lighteth a light, but that they may be made more blind: he ſheweth foorth doctrine, but that they may be made more dull: he laieth to them a remedie, but not that they may be healed. And Iohn alleaging this prophecie, affirmeth that the Iewes could not beleeue the doctrine of Chriſt, becauſe this curſe of God lay vpon them. Neither can this alſo be in controuerſie, that whom God will not haue to be enlightened, to them he deliuered his doctrine wrapped vp in darke ſpeeches, that they may nothing profit therby but to be thruſt into greater dulnes. Chriſt alſo teſtifieth, that he doth therfore expũd only to the Apoſtles the parables in which he had ſpoken to the multitude, becauſe to them it was giuen to know the myſteries of the kingdom of God, but to the common people not ſo. What meaneth the Lord (wilt thou ſay) in teaching them, of whom he prouideth that he may not be vnnerſtanded? Conſider whence is the fault, and thou wilt ceaſe to aske. For in the word how great darknes ſoeuer there be, yet there is alway light enough to cõuince the conſcience of the wicked.

1.Cor.1.23.

14 Now remaineth for vs to ſee, why the Lord doth that, which it is plaine that he doth. If it be anſwered that it is ſo done becauſe men haue ſo deſerued by their vngodlineſſe, wickednеſſe, and vnthankfulneſſe: the ſame ſhall indeed be well and truly ſaid: But becauſe there appeareth not yet the reaſon of this diuerſitie, why then ſome are bowed to obedience, other ſome continue hardned, in ſearching it, we muſt needs go to that which Paul hath noted out of Moſes, namelie that God hath raiſed them vp from the beginning, that hee might ſhew his name in the whole earth. Whereas therefore the reprobate do not obey the word of God opened vnto them, that ſhall be well imputed to the malice and peruerſneſſe of their heart, ſo that this be therewithall added, that they are therefore giuen into this peruerſneſſe, becauſe by the righteous, but yet vnſearchable iudgement of God they are raiſed vp to ſet forth his glory with their damnation. Likewiſe when it is ſaid of the ſons of Hely, that they harkned not to holſom warnings, becauſe the Lord willed to kill them: it is not denied that their ſtubbornеſſe proceeded of their own naughtineſſe: but it is therewithall touched why they were left in ſtubbornеſſe, when the Lord might haue ſoftned their hearts, namelie becauſe his vnchangeable decree had once appointed them to deſtruction. To the ſame purpoſe ſerueth that ſaying of Iohn, When he had done ſo great ſignes, no man beleeued in him: that the word of Eſay might be fulfilled, Lord, who hath beleeued our ſaying? For though he do not excuſe the ſtifnecked from blame, yet he is content with that reaſon, that the grace of God is vnſauorie to men, till the holy Ghoſt bring taſt. And Chriſt alleaging the prophecie of Eſaie: They ſhall all be taught of God, tendeth to no other end but to prooue that the Iewes are reprobate and ſtrangers from the Church, becauſe they are vnapt to learne: and he bringeth no other cauſe thereof, but for that the promiſe of God doth not pertaine to them. Which thing this ſaying of Paul confirmeth, that Chriſt which to the Iewes is an offence, and to the Gentiles fooliſhneſſe, is to the called the ſtrength and wiſedome of God. For when he hath told what commonly happeneth ſo oft as the Goſpell is preached, namely that ſome it maketh more obſtinate, and of ſome it is deſpiſed, he ſaith that it is had in price of them only which are called. He had indeed a little before named them beleeuers, but he meant not to take away the due degree from the grace of God which goeth before faith, but rather he addeth this ſecond ſaying by way of correction, that they which had imbraced the Goſpell ſhould giue the praiſe of their faith to the calling of God: As alſo a little after he teacheth that they are choſen of God. When the vngodly heare theſe things, they crie out that God with inordinate power abuſeth his poore creatures for a ſport to his crueltie. But we which know that all men are ſo manie waies endangered to the iudgement ſeat of God, that being asked of a thouſand things they can not ſatisfie in one, doe confeſſe that the reprobate ſuffer nothing which agreeth not with the moſt iuſt iudgement of God. Whereas we doe not clearely attaine the reaſon thereof, let vs not be diſcontent to be ignorant of ſomewhat, where the wiſedome of God lifteth vp it ſelfe into ſo great height.

15 But for aſmuch as there are a few places of Scripture wont to be obiected, in which God ſeemeth to denie that it is done by his ordinance that the wicked doe periſh, but by this that, he crying out againſt it, they wilfully bring death vpon themſelues: let vs briefely declaring theſe places, ſhew that they make nothing againſt the ſentence aboue ſet. There is brought foorth a place of Ezechiel, that God will not the death of a ſinner, but rather that he may be turned and liue. If they will extend this to all mankinde: why doth he not mooue many to Repentance, whoſe mindes are more pliable to obedience, than theirs which at his dayly allurements waxe harder and harder? With the Sodomites (as Chriſt witneſſeth) the preaching of the Goſpell and Miracles would haue brought foorth more fruite than in Iurie. How commeth it to paſſe therefore, if God will all to be ſaued, that he openeth not the gate of Repentance to thoſe miſerable men that would haue beene more readie to receiue grace? Hereby we ſee that the place is violently wreſted, if the will of God, whereof the Prophet maketh mention, be ſet againſt his eternall counſell, whereby he hath ſeuered the elect from the reprobate. Now if we ſeeke for the true naturall meaning of the Prophet: his purpoſe is to bring hope of pardon to the penitent. And this is the ſumme, that it is not to be doubted but that God is readie to forgiue ſo ſoone as the ſinner turneth. Therefore he willeth not his death, in ſo much as he willeth his repentance. But experience teacheth that he ſo willeth them to repent whom he generally calleth to him, that yet he toucheth not all their harts. Yet is it not therfore to be ſaid that he dealeth deceitfully, becauſe although the outward voyce doe but make them vnexcuſable which heare and doe not obey it, yet it is truely accounted the teſtimonie of the grace of God, by which teſtimonie he reconcileth men to himſelfe. Therefore let vs hold this for the meaning of the Prophet, that the death of a ſinner pleaſeth not God: that the godly may haue affiance, that ſo ſoone as they ſhall be touched with Repentance, there is pardon readie for them with God, and the wicked may feele that their fault is doubled, becauſe they anſwere not to ſo great mercifull kindneſſe and gentleneſſe of God. The mercie of God therefore will alway meete Repentance, but to whom Repentance is giuen, both all the Prophets, and Apoſtles, and Ezechiel himſelfe doe plainly teach. Secondly, there is alleadged a place of Paul, where he ſaith, that God willeth all men to be ſaued, which although it haue a diuers meaning from the other, yet in ſome thing they agree together. I anſwer, firſt, that by the reſt of the text it is made plaine how he willeth. For Paul coupleth together, that he willeth them to be ſaued, and to come to the acknowledging of the truth. If they will haue this to be determined, by the eternall counſell of God that they receiue the doctrine of ſaluation, what meaneth that ſaying of Moſes, What nation is ſo noble, that God commeth neere to it as he doeth to thee? How came it to paſſe that God reſtrained from many peoples the light of the Goſpell, which other enioyed? How came it to paſſe that the pure knowledge of godlineſſe neuer came to ſome, and ſome ſcarcely taſted ſo much as any darke principles of it? Hereof it ſhall now be eaſie to gather, whereto Paul tendeth. He had commanded Timothie to make ſolemne prayers in the Church for Kings and Princes. But when it ſeemed ſomewhat an abſurditie that prayers ſhould be made to God for a kinde of men in a maner deſperate (becauſe they were not onely ſtrangers from the bodie of Chriſt, but alſo endeuoured with all their forces to oppreſſe his kingdome) he added, that the ſame is acceptable to God, which willeth all men to be ſaued. Whereby verily he ſignifieth nothing elſe but that he hath ſtopped vp the way to ſaluation to no degree of men: but rather that he hath ſo powred out his mercie that he willeth no man to be voide of it. The other ſentences doe not declare what God hath by his ſecret iudgement determined of all men: but do ſhew that there is pardon readie for all ſinners which do onely turne themſelues to require it. For if they more ſtiffely ſtand vpon this that it is ſaid that he will haue mercie vpon all, I will on the contrarie ſide answer them with that which is written in another place. That our God is in heauen where he doth whatsoeuer he will. This word therefore must so be expounded that it may agree with the other, I will haue mercy vpon whom I will haue mercie, and I will shew mercie to whom I will shew mercie. He that chooseth out them whom he will haue mercy on, doth not giue it to all. But sith it clearely appeareth that in that place is spoken not of all particular men, but of degrees of men, we will make no longer disputing about it. Howbeit it is also to be noted, that Paul doth not affirme what God doth alway and euery where and in all men: but leaueth it to him at his liberty at length to make kings and maiestrates partakers of the heauenly doctrine, although by reason of there blindnesse they doe now rage against it. They seeme to presse vs more strongly with obiecting the place of Peter, that God willeth none to perish, but receiueth all to repentance. But the vndoing of this knot doth by and by offer it selfe in the second word, because the will to receiue cannot be vnderstanded to be any other than that which is euery where taught. Truely the turning is in the hand of God: whether he wil turne all or no, let himselfe be asked, when he promiseth that he will giue to a certaine few men a fleshly heart, leauing to othersome a stony heart. It is true indeed, that vnlesse he were ready to receiue them which call vpon his mercie, this saying should be false. Turne to me, and I will turne to you. But I say that none of all mortall men doth come to God but he that is preuented of God: And if repentance were in the will of man, Paul would not say, If peraduenture he giue them repentance. Yea vnlesse the same God which with word exhorteth all men to repentance, did with secret mouing of his spirit bring the chosen to it: Ieremy would not say, Turne me, Lord, and I shall be turned: for when thou hast turned me, I haue repented.

No repugnancy betweene the promises of saluation offered vniuersally vnto all and the purpose of God concerning the condemnation of some.

16 But (thou wilt say) if it be so, there shall be small truth in the promises of the Gospel, which when they testifie of the will of God, affirme that he willeth that which is against his inuiolable decree. Not so. For howsoeuer the promises of saluation be vniuersall, yet they nothing disagree with the predestination of the reprobate, so that we direct our mindes to the effect of them. We know that then and not till then the promises are effectuall to vs, when we receiue them by Faith, on the otherside when Faith is made voide, the promise is therewithall abolished. If this be the nature of them, let vs then see whether these things disagree together: that it is said that God hath from eternitie ordained whom he will embrace with loue, and vpon whom he wil exercise wrath: and that he promiseth saluation to all without difference. Truly I say that they agree verie well. For in so promising he meaneth nothing else than that his mercie is set open for all which doe couet and craue it: which thing none doe but they whom he hath enlightened. And them he enlightneth, whom he hath predestinate to saluation. They (I say) haue the truth of the promises sure and vnshaken, so as it cannot be said that there is any disagreement betweene the eternall election of God, and the testimony of his grace which he offereth to the Faithfull. But why nameth he alwerily that the consciences of the godly may the more safely rest, when they vnderstand that there is no difference of sinners, so that Faith be present: and that the wicked may not cauill for their excuse, that they want a sanctuarie whereunto they may withdraw themselues from the bondage of sinne, when with their owne vnthankfulnesse they refuse it being offered them. Therefore when the mercy of God is by the Gospell offered to both sorts, it is Faith, that it is to say, the enlightning of God, which maketh difference betweene the godly and vngodly, so as the one sort feeleth the effectualnesse of the Gospell, and the other sort obtaine no fruit thereof. The enlightening it selfe also hath the eternall election of God for the rule thereof. The complaint of Christ, which they alleadge, Ierusalem, Ierusalem, how oft haue I willed to gather together thy chickens, but thou wouldest not? maketh nothing for them. I grant that Christ there speaketh not onely in the person of man, but also reprocheth them that in all ages they haue refused his grace. But we must define that will of God which is entreated of. For neither is it vnknowen, how diligently God endeuoured to keepe still that people, and with how great stiffenesse they euen from the first to the last being giuen to their wandring desires refused to be gathered together: but it followeth not therof that the counsel of God was made void by the malice of men

Mat. 23. 37.

They

They anſwer and ſay that nothing leſſe agreeth with the nature of God than to haue a double will in him. Which I grant to them, ſo that they fitly expound it. But why doe they not conſider ſo may teſtimonies, where God putting vpon him the affections of man deſcendeth beneath his owne maieſtie? He ſaith that he hath with ſtretched out armes called the rebellious people, that he hath early and late trauailed to bring them backe to him. If they will apply all theſe things to God, and not conſider the figure, there ſhall ariſe many ſuperfluous contentions, which this one ſolution bringeth to agreement, that the property of man is figuratiuely applied to God. How be it the ſolution which we haue brought in another place largely ſufficeth, that although the will of God be, as to our ſenſe manifold: yet he doth not in himſelfe diuerſly will this and that, but according to this wiſedome, which is diuerſly manifold (as Paul calleth it) he amaſeth our ſenſes, till it ſhall be giuen vs to know that he marueilouſly willeth that which now ſeemeth to be againſt his will. They alſo mocke with cauillations, that ſith God is the Father of all, it is vnrighteous that he ſhould diſherit any that hath not before with his owne fault deſerued this puniſhment. As though the liberality of God ſtretcheth not euen to hogges and dogges. But if they ſpeake onely of mankind, let them anſwer why God bound himſelfe to one people, to be the Father thereof: and why alſo out of the ſame people he picked a ſmall number as it were a floure. But their owne luſt of euill ſpeaking hindereth theſe railers that they conſider not that God ſo bringeth foorth his Sunne to ſhine vpon the good and euill, that the inheritance is laid vp for a few, to whom it ſhall one day be ſaid, Come ye bleſſed of my Father, poſſeſſe the kingdome, &c. They obiect alſo that God hateth none of theſe things that he hath made. Which although I grant them, yet this remaineth ſafe which I teach, that the reprobate are hatefull to God, and that very rightfully, becauſe they being deſtitute of his Spirit can bring foorth nothing but cauſe of curſe. They ſay further, that there is no difference of the Iew and the Gentile, and therefore that the grace of God is without difference ſet before all men: namely, if they grant (as Paul determineth) that God calleth as well out of the Iewes as out of the Gentiles, according to his good pleaſure, ſo that he is bound to no man. After this maner alſo is that wiped away which they obiect in another place, that God hath encloſed all things vnder ſinne, that he may haue mercy vpon all: namely becauſe he will that the ſaluation of all them that are ſaued be aſcribed to his mercy, although this benefit be not common to all. Now when many things are alleaged on both parts, let this be our concluſion, to tremble with Paul at ſo great depth, and if wanton tongues ſhall be buſie, that we be not aſhamed of this his crying out, O man, what art thou that ſtriueſt with God? For Auguſtine truely affirmeth that they doe peruerſly which meaſure the righteouſneſſe of God by the meaſure of the righteouſneſſe of man.

THE XXV. CHAPTER.

Of the laſt Reſurrection:

The vſe and neceſſity of meditating continually vpon the reſurrection of the dead.

ALthough Chriſt the ſonne of righteouſneſſe, hauing ouercome death, ſhining by the Goſpell, giueth vs the light of life (as Paul witneſſeth) whereby alſo it is ſaid that by beleeuing wee haue paſſed from death into life, being now not foreiners and ſtranges, but citizens with the ſaints, and of the houſhold of God, which hath made vs to ſit with the only begotten ſonne himſelfe in heauenly places, that nothing may be wanting to perfect felicity: yet leaſt it ſhould be grieuous vnto vs to be exerciſed vnder this hard warfare, as though we had no fruit of the victory which Chriſt hath gotten, we muſt hold faſt that which is in another place taught of the nature of hope. For, becauſe we hope for thoſe things which appeare not, and (as it is ſaid in another place) faith is a demonſtration of things inuiſible: ſo long as we are incloſed in the priſon of the fleſh, we are wayfaring from the Lord. For which reaſon the ſame Paul ſaith in another place that we are dead, and that our life is hidden with Chriſt in God, and that when he which is our life, ſhall appeare, then ſhall we alſo appeare with him in glory. This therefore is our condition, that with liuing ſoberly and iuſtly and godlie in this world, weelooke for the bleſſed hope, and the comming of the glory of the great God, and of our Sauiour Iesus Christ. Heere we neede a singular patience, that we be not wearied and either turne backe our course or forsake our standing. Therefore whatsoeuer hath beene hitherto set out concerning our saluation, requireth mindes lifted vp to heauen, that we may loue Christ whom we haue not seene and beleeuing in him may reioyce with vnspeakable and glorious ioyfulnesse till we receiue the end of our faith, as Peter telleth vs. After which maner, Paul saith that the faith and charity of the godly hath respect to the hope which is laid vp in heauen. When we thus with our eies fastned vpon Christ doe hang of heauen, and nothing withhold them in earth from carrying vs to the promised blessednesse: then is that truely fulfilled, Our heart is where our treasure is. Hereupon commeth that faith is so rare in the world, because nothing is more hard to our dulnesse than through innumerable steps to climbe vp aboue them with endeuouring forward to the price of our heauenly calling. To the great heape of miseries wherewith we be almost ouerwhelmed, are added the mockings of vngodly men, wherewith our simplicity is rayled at, when voluntarily forsaking the allurements of present good things, wee seeme to follow the blessednesse hidden from vs, as it were a fleeing shadow. Finally aboue and beneath vs, before vs and behinde vs, violent tentations beseege vs, to the sustaining of the feare whereof our courages should be farre too weake, vnlesse being vncumbred of earthly things they were fast bound to the heauenly life, which in seeming is farre from vs. Wherefore onely hee hath soundly profited in the Gospell, which is enured to a continuall meditation of the blessed resurrection.

1. Pet. 1. 8. Col. 1. 5.

Mat. 7. 11.

The felicity or soueraigne good of man, and the cheerefull trauel which he should vndertake for the attaining thereunto.

2 Of the soueraigne end of good things, the Philosophers haue in old time curiously disputed, and also striued among themselues: yet none except Plato acknowledged the soueraigne good of man to be his conioyning with God. But what maner of conioyning that was, he could not perceiue so much as with any small taste, and no maruell, sith he had neuer learned of the holy bond thereof. To vs the onely and perfect felicity is knowen euen in this earthly waifaring: but, such as daily more and more enkindleth our hearts with desire of it, till the full inioying may satisfie vs. Therefore I said that none receiue fruit of the benefits of Christ, but they that lift vp their mindes to the resurrection. For, Paul setteth vp this marke to the faithfull, toward which he saith that he endeuoureth, and forgetteth all things till he come to it. And so much the more cheerefully ought we to trauell toward it, least if this world withhold vs, we suffer grieuous punishment for our slothfulnesse. Wherefore in another place he marketh the faithfull with this marke, that their conuersation is in heauen, from whence also they looke for their Sauiour. And that their courages should not faint in this race, he ioyneth all creatures companions with them. For, because euery where are seene deformed ruines, he saith that all things in heauen and earth doe endeuour to the renewing. For sith Adam by his fall dissolued the perfect order of nature to the creatures, their bondage is painfull and grieuous, whereunto they are subiect by reason of the sinne of man, not for that they are indued with any feeling, but for that they naturally couet the perfect estate from which they are fallen. Therefore Paul saith that they grone, and are as in paine of child bearing, that we to whom are giuen the first fruites of the spirit, may be ashamed to pine away in our corruption, and not at the least to follow the dead elements, which beare paine of anothers sinne. And the more to pricke vs forward, he calleth the last comming of Christ our redemption. It is true indeed that all the parts of our redemption are already fulfilled: But because Christ hath once beene offered for sinnes, he shall bee seene againe without sinne vnto saluation. With what miseries soeuer we be pressed, let this redemption susteine vs euen vntill the performance of it.

The doctrine of the resurrection of the flesh weighty and hard: the weight a motiue to make vs carefull

3 The very weight of the thing it selfe shall whet our endeuour. For neither doth Paul without cause affirme that the holy Gospell is voide and deceitfull, vnlesse the dead doe rise againe: because our state should be more miserable than the state of all men, namely sith we lying open to the hatreds and reproches of many: are euery houre in danger, yea and are as sheepe appointed to the slaughter: and therefore the authority thereof should fall away not onely in one part, but also in the whole sum which both our adoption and the effect of our ſaluation conteineth. And ſo let vs be heedfully bent to the moſt earneſt thing of all, that no continuance of time may make vs wearie. For which purpoſe I haue deferred to this place that which I had breeflie to intreate of it, that the Readers may learne, when they haue receiued Chriſt the authour of their ſaluation, to riſe vp higher, and may know that he is clothed with heauenly immortalitie and glorie, that the whole body may be made like faſhioned to the head, as alſo the holy Ghoſt oftentimes ſetteth foorth in his perſon an example of the reſurrection. It is a thing hard to be beleeued, that bodies when they haue beene conſumed with rottenneſſe, ſhall at their appointed time riſe vp againe. Therefore where many of the Philoſophers haue affirmed ſoules to be immortall, the reſurrection of the fleſh hath beene allowed of few: wherein although there was no excuſe, yet we are thereby put in minde, that it is too hard a thing to draw mans ſenſes to beleeue it. That faith may ouercome ſo great a ſtop, the Scripture miniſtreth two helps: the one is in the likeneſſe of Chriſt, the other is the almightineſſe of God. Now ſo oft as the reſurrection is thought of, let the image of Chriſt come into our mindes: which in the nature that he tooke of vs, ſo ranne out the race of mortall life, that now hauing obtained immortalitie, he is to vs a pledge of the reſurrection to come. For in the miſeries wherewith we are beſieged, we carie about his mortifying in our fleſh, that his life may be openlie ſhewed in vs. And we may not ſeuer him from vs, neither can we poſſiblie, but that he muſt be torne in ſunder. Whereupon commeth that argument of Paul, If the dead doe not riſe againe, then neither is Chriſt riſen againe, becauſe verilie he taketh that principle for confeſſed, that Chriſt was not made ſubiect to death, nor obtained victorie of death by riſing againe, priuatlie for himſelfe: but, that that was begun in the head which muſt needs be fulfilled in all the members, according to the degree and order of euerie one. For it were not right that they ſhould in all points be made egall with him. It is ſaid in the Pſalme. Thou ſhalt not ſuffer thy meeke one to ſee corruption: although a portion of this truſt pertaine to vs according to the meaſure of gift, yet the full effect hath not appeared but in Chriſt, which being free from all rotting, hath receiued againe his bodie whole. Now leſt the fellowſhip of bleſſed reſurrection with Chriſt ſhould be doubtfull to vs, that we may be contented with this pledge, Paul expreſſie affirmeth that he therefore ſitteth in heauen, and ſhall come at the laſt day a Iudge, that he may make our baſe and vile bodie like faſhioned to the glorious bodie. In another place alſo he teacheth, that God raiſed not vp his Sonne from death to the intent to ſhew a token of his power: but to ſtretch out the ſame effectuall force of the ſpirit toward vs which are faithfull: whom he therefore calleth life, while he liueth in vs, becauſe he was giuen to this end that he ſhould make aliue that which is mortall in vs. I knit vp in a briefe abridgement thoſe things which might both be more largelie handled, and are worthie to be more gorgeouſlie ſet out: and yet I truſt that the godlie readers ſhall in few words finde matter enough which may ſuffice to edifie their faith. Chriſt therefore is riſen againe, that he might haue vs companions of the life to come. He was raiſed vp of the Father, in ſo much as he was the head of the Church, from which he doth in no wiſe ſuffer himſelfe to be plucked away. He was raiſed vp by the power of the Spirit, which is common to vs vnto the office of quickening. Finally he was raiſed vp, that he ſhould be reſurrection and life. But as we haue ſaid that in this mirrour, there is to be ſeene of vs a liuely image of the reſurrection, ſo let it be to vs a ſure ſubſtance to ſtay our minde, ſo that yet we be not lothfull or wearie of long tarrying: becauſe it is not our part to meaſure the ſeaſons of times by our will, but patiently to reſt, till God at his owne fit time repaire his kingdome. To which purpoſe ſeemeth that exhortation of Paul: The firſt fruites is Chriſt: and then they that are Chriſtes, euery one in his order. But that no queſtion ſhould be moued of the reſurrection of Chriſt, vpon which the reſurrection of vs all is founded, we ſee by how many and how diuerſe meanes he hath made it approoued by witneſſe to vs. Fine noſed men will laugh at the hiſtorie which the Euangeliſts rehearſe, as at a childiſh mockery. For of what importance ſhall the meſſage be which feareſull ſilly women bring, and afterward the diſciples confirme,

being in a maner astonished? Why did not Christ rather set vp the triumphing ensignes of his victorie in the midst of the temple and the market place? Why came he not forth terrible into the sight of Pilate? Why doth he not also proue himselfe to the priests, and to whole Ierusalem that he is risen vp aliue againe? As for the witnesses which he chose, prophane men will scarcely grant them to be sufficient. I answere, that although in these beginnings the weakenesse thereof was contemptible, yet all this was gouerned by the wonderfull prouidence of God: that partly the loue of Christ and zeale of godlinesse, and partly their owne hardnesse of beliefe should carrie them in hast to the sepulchre which had lately beene dismaied for feare, that they might not only be seeing witnesses of the thing, but also should heare of the Angels that which they saw with their eyes. How shall we suspect their credit, who thought it to be a fable which they had heard of the women, till they were brought to the present sight of the thing it selfe? As for all the people and the Ruler himselfe, after that they had been largely conuinced, it is no maruell if as well the sight of Christ, as other signes was not granted them. The sepulchre was sealed vp, the watchmen watched it, the third day the bodie was not found. The souldiers corrupted with mony scattered a rumor that his disciples had stolen him away: As though they had had power to gather a band together, or had armour, or were practised men to enterprise any such feare. If the souldiers had not courage enough to driue them away, why did they not pursue them, that with the help of the people they might haue taken some of them? Pilate therefore with his ring truely sealed the resurrection of Christ: and the watchmen which were set at the sepulchre both in their holding their peace and in their lying, were made publishers of the same resurrection. In the meane time the voyce of Angels sounded, He is risen, he is not heere. The heauenly glistering plainly shewed that they were not men but Angels. Afterward, if there remained any doubting, Christ himselfe tooke it away. The disciples saw him ofter than once, and also felt his feet and his hands, that their hardnesse of beleeuing not a little profited to the strengthening of our faith. He disputeth among them of the mysteries of the kingdome of God, and at the last in their sights beholding him, he ascended into heauen. And not onely this sight was shewed to the xj. Apostles, but also he was seene at once of moe than fiue hundred brethren. Now when he sent the holy Ghost, he shewed a sure proofe not onely of life, but also of the souereigne power: as he had said before, It is profitable for you that I goe: otherwise the holy Ghost shall not come. But now Paul was ouerthrowen by the way, not by the strength of a dead man, but he felt him whom he persecuted to haue most high power. To Stephen he appeared for another end, namely, that with assuredne sse of life he might ouercome the feare of death. To discredit so many authentike witnesses, is not onely a part of distrustfulnesse, but also of froward and furious stubbornnesse.

4 This which we haue said, that in prooving the resurrection our senses must be directed to the infinite power of God, Paul briefely teacheth, that he may make (saith he) our vile bodie like fashioned to the bodie of his brightnesse, according to the working of his power, by which he may subdue all things to himselfe. Wherefore nothing is more vnmeete, than heere to haue respect what may naturally be done, where an inestimable miracle is set before vs, which with the greatnesse thereof swalloweth vp our senses. Yea, Paul by setting forth an example of nature, reproueth their dulnesse which denie the resurrection. Thou foole (saith he) that which thou sowest is not quickened vnlesse it first dye, &c. He saith that in seed is seene a forme of the resurrection, because out of rottennesse groweth corne. Neither were it so hard a thing to beleeue, if we were as heedfull as we ought to be to the miracles which throughout all the coasts of the world do offer themselues to our eyes. But let vs remember that none is truely perswaded of the resurrection to come, but he which being rauished into admiration, giueth to the power of God his glorie. Esay lifted vp with this affiance, crieth out, Thy dead shall liue, my carcase shall rise againe. Awake ye, and praise, ye dwellers of the dust. In despaired case he lifteth vp himselfe to God the author of life, in whose hand are the ends of death, as it is said in the Psalme. Iob also being liker to a carrion than to a man, trusting vpon the power of God, sticketh not as though though he were whole and ſound to lift vp himſelfe to that day, ſaying, I know that my redeemer liueth: and in the laſt day he ſhall riſe vpon the duſt (namely to ſhew forth his power therein) and I ſhall againe be compaſſed with my skin, and in my fleſh I ſhall ſee God, I ſhall ſee him, and none other. For albeit that ſome doe ſubtlely wreſt theſe places, as though they ought not to be vnderſtood of the reſurrection, yet they ſtrengthen that which they couet to ouerthrow: becauſe the holy men in their euils ſeeke comfort from no where elſe than from the likeneſſe of the reſurrection. Which better appeareth by the place of Ezechiel. For when the Iewes beleeued not the promiſe of their returne, and obiected that it was no more likely that a way ſhould be made open for them, than that dead men ſhould come out of their graue: there was a viſion ſhewed to the Prophet, a field full of drie bones: thoſe the Lord commanded to take againe fleſh and ſinewes. Although vnder that figure he raiſeth vp the people to hope of returne: yet the matter of hoping he gathereth of the reſurrection: as it is to vs an exemplar of the deliuerances which the faithful doe feele in this world. So Chriſt when he had taught that the voice of the Goſpell giueth life: becauſe the Iewes receiued not this, he by and by ſaid further: Maruel not at this, becauſe the houre commeth in which all that are in the graues ſhall heare the voice of the ſonne of God, and ſhal come forth. Therefore after this example of Paul, let vs already chearefully triumph in the middeſt of battels, becauſe he which hath promiſed life to come, is mightie to keepe that which is left with him: and ſo let vs glorie that a crowne of righteouſneſſe is laid vp for vs, which the iuſt iudge ſhall deliuer vs. So ſhall it come to paſſe, that whatſoeuer griefes we ſuffer, they ſhall be to vs a ſhewing of the life to come, becauſe it agreeth with the nature of God to render affliction to the wicked which afflict vs: but to vs which are vniuſtly afflicted, reſt at the appearing of Chriſt with the Angels of his power, in a flame of fire. But that is to be holden which he addeth by and by afterward, that hee ſhall come that he may be glorified in his Saints, and be made wonderfull in all them that haue beleeued, becauſe the Goſpell hath beene beleeued.

5 But although the mindes of men ought to haue beene continually occupied in this ſtudie: yet as though they would of ſet purpoſe deſtroy all remembrance of the reſurrection, they haue called death the vttermoſt bond of al things and the deſtruction of man. For verily Salomon ſpeaketh of the common and receiued opinion, when hee ſaith that a liuing dog is better than a dead Lion. And in another place: Who knoweth whether the ſoule of a man goe vpward, and the ſoule of a beaſt downeward? But in all ages this brutiſh ſenſeles error hath been common in the world, yea and hath broken into the Church it ſelfe: for the Sadduces haue preſumed to profeſſe openly that there is no reſurrection, yea and that ſoules are mortall. But that this groſſe ignoranee ſhould not helpe to excuſe any man, the infidels euen by very inſtinct of nature haue alway had an image of the reſurrection before their eies. For to what purpoſe ſerued that holy and inuiolable maner of burying, but to be an earneſt of new life? Neither may it be anſwered that this ſpring of error: becauſe the religiouſneſſe of buriall was alway in vre among the holy Fathers, and God willed the ſame maner to remaine among the Gentiles, that an image of the reſurrection ſet before them might awake their drowſineſſe. But although that ceremonie wanted his vſe of profiting, yet it is profitable for vs if we wiſely marke the end of it, becauſe it is no ſlender confutation of vnbeliefe, that altogether profeſſed that which no man beleeued. But Satan hath not onely aſtoniſhed the ſenſes of men, ſo that they haue buried with the bodies the remembrance of the reſurrection, but alſo hath practiſed to corrupt this part of doctrine with diuers faigned inuentions, that at length it might vtterly die. I paſſe ouer how in Pauls time Satan began to pinch at it: but in a little after there followed the Millenaries, which limited the raigne of Chriſt to a thouſand yeares. This error is childiſh, that it needeth not or is not woorthy of any confutation. Neither doth the Reuelation make on their ſide, by which it is certaine that they coloured their error: for as much as in the place where he mentioneth the number of a thouſand, he entreateth not of the eternall bleſſedneſſe of the Church, but onely of the diuers troubles which were to come vpon the Church while it yet trauelled in earth. But the whole Scripture crieth out that there ſhall be no end of the bleſſedneſſe of the elect, nor of the puniſhment of the reprobate. Now of all things which which both are hidden from our sight and doe far passe the capacitie of our minde, either we must fetch the credit out of the certaine oracles of God, or we must vtterly cast it away. They which assigne to the children of God a thousand yeares to enioy the inheritance of the life to come, doe not marke how great a dishonor they doe both to Christ and his kingdome. For if they shall not be clothed with immortalitie: then neither is Christ himselfe, to whose glory they shall be newly fashioned, receiued into the immortall glorie. If their blessednesse shall haue any end: then the kingdome of Christ, vpon the stedfastnesse whereof it standeth, endureth but for a time. Finally, either they are most vnskilfull of all matter concerning God, or they goe about with crooked maliciousnesse to ouerthrow the whole grace of God, and power of Christ, the fulfilling whereof is no otherwise perfect, but when sinne being blotted out and death swallowed vp, eternall life is fully restored. But very blind men may see how fondly they play the fooles: which feare that they should ascribe to God too great cruelty if the reprobate be condemned to euerlasting paines. The Lord forsooth shall doe wrong, if he denie his kingdome to them which haue by their vnthankfulnesse made themselues vnworthy of it. But (say they) their sinnes endure but for a time. I grant: but the maiestie, yea and the righteousnesse of God which they haue offended by sinning, is eternall. Worthily therefore the remembrance of iniquitie dieth not: But so the paine exceedeth the measure of the fault. This is a blasphemie not to be suffered, when the maiestie of God is so little set by, when the despising thereof is esteemed at no greater value than the destruction of one soule. But let vs leaue these trifles, least contrary to that which we haue before said, we may seeme to iudge their dotages worthy of confutation.

Their error who haue thought that man is vtterly extinguished by death and that the soules shall as well be raised againe as the bodies.

6 Beside these, there haue beene two other doting errors brought in by men peruersly curious. The one sort thought, as though the whole man died, that the soules shall rise againe with the bodies. The other forasmuch as they grant that the soules be immortall spirits, say that they shall be clothed with new bodies: whereby they denie the resurrection of the flesh. Of the first sort, because I haue touched somewhat in speaking of the creation of man, it shall be enough for me to warne the readers againe, how beastly an error it is to make of a spirit fashioned after the image of God, a vanishing blast which doth nothing but quicke the bodie in this fraile life, and to bring the temple of the holy Ghost to nothing. Finally, to spoile that part of vs wherein diuinenesse chiefly shineth and marks of immortalitie appeare, to spoile it (I say) of this gift: so that the estate of the bodie should be better and more excellent than the estate of the soule. The scripture teacheth far otherwise, which compareth the bodie to a cotage, out of which it saith that we remoue when we die, because it esteemeth vs by that part which maketh vs differing from bruit beasts. So Peter being nigh to death, saith that the time is come, when he must lay away his tent. And Paul speaking of the faithfull, after that he hath said: That when our earthly house shall be dissolued, there is a building for vs in heauen, adioyneth that we are way fairing from the Lord so long as we abide in the bodie, but doe desire the presence of God in the absence of the bodie. If the soules doe not ouerliue the bodies, what is it that hath God present when it is seuered from the bodie? But the Apostle taketh away all doubting, when he teacheth that wee are ioyned in fellowship to the spirits of the righteous. By which words hee sheweth, that we are ioyned in fellowship to the holie fathers, which euen being dead doe keepe the same godlinesse with vs, so that wee cannot be the members of Christ vnlesse wee grow together with them. Vnlesse also the soules being vnclothed of the bodies, did keepe still their substance and were able to receiue blessed glorie, Christ would not haue said to the theefe: This day thou shalt bee with me in Paradise. Hauing so cleare testimonies, let vs not doubt after the example of Christ when wee are dying, to commend our soules to God, or after the example of Stephen to commit them to Christ to keepe, which not vnworthily is called a faithfull shepheard and Bishop of them. To enquire of their meane state, is neither lawfull nor expedient. Many doe much comber themselues with disputing what place they keepe, and whether they doe now enioy the heauenly glorie or no. But it is folly and rashnes, to search deeplier of vnknowen things, than God doth giue vs leaue to know.

When

When the Scripture hath ſaid that Chriſt is preſent with them, and receiueth them into Paradiſe that they may enioy comfort, on the other ſide that the ſoules of the reprobate doe ſuffer ſuch paines as they haue deſerued: it goeth no further. What teacher or Maſter ſhall now open to vs that which God hath hidden? Of the place, the queſtion is no leſſe fond and vaine: foraſmuch as we know that there is not the ſame dimenſion of the Soule which is of the bodie. Whereas the bleſſed gathering together of holie Spirits is called the boſome of Abraham, it is enough for vs after this wayfaring to be receiued of the common father of the Faithfull, that he may communicate with vs the fruit of his Faith. In the meane time ſith the Scripture euerie where biddeth vs to hang vpon the expectation of Chriſts comming, and deferreth the crowne of glory till then: let vs be content with theſe bonds appointed vs of God: namely, that the Soules of the godly hauing ended the labor of their warfare doe goe into a bleſſed reſt, where with happie ioyfulneſſe they looke for the enioying of the promiſed glory: and that ſo all things are holden in ſuſpenſe till Chriſt the redeemer appeare. As for the reprobate, it is no doubt that they haue the ſame eſtate which Iude aſſigneth to the diuels, to be holden bound with chaines, till they be drawen to the puniſhment whereunto they are condemned.

Mat. 5. 8 & 26.

Iude 1. 6.

7 No leſſe monſtrous is their error which imagine that Soules ſhall not receiue againe the ſame bodies wherewith they are now clothed, but ſhall haue new and other bodies. And the reaſon of the Manichees was very trifling, that is, that it is not meete that fleſh which is vncleane ſhould riſe againe. As though there were no vncleanneſſe of Soules, which yet they debarred not from the hope of euerlaſting life. It was therefore all one as if they ſhould ſay that that which is infected with the filth of ſinne cannot be cleanſed by God. For I now paſſe ouer that dotage, that fleſh was naturally vncleane, becauſe it was create of the Diuell: Onely I ſhew that whatſoeuer is now in vs vnworthy of heauen, it hindereth not the reſurrection. And firſt whereas Paul biddeth the Faithfull to cleanſe themſelues from all defiling of the fleſh and of the Spirit, thereupon followeth the iudgement which he in another place pronounceth, that euery man ſhall receiue by his bodie either good or euill. Wherewith agreeth that which he writeth to the Corinthians, That the life of Ieſus Chriſt may be openly ſhewed in our mortall fleſh. For which reaſon in another place he doth no leſſe pray that God preſerue the bodies whole vnto the day of Chriſt, than the Soules and Spirits. And no maruell, becauſe it were a moſt great abſurditie that the bodies which God hath dedicate to bee temples to himſelfe, ſhould fall away into rottenneſſe without hope of riſing againe. What ſay we to this, that they are alſo the members of Chriſt? that God commandeth all the parts of them to be ſanctified to himſelfe? that he willeth his name to be praiſed with tongues, pure hands to be lifted vp to him, ſacrifices to be offered? What madneſſe is it therefore that that part to which the heauenly Iudge hath vouchſafed to grant ſo great honor, ſhould be brought from a mortall man into duſt without any hope of reſtoring? Likewiſe when Paul exhorteth vs to ſuffer the Lord as well in bodie as in Soule, becauſe both belong to God, verily he ſuffereth not that which he challengeth to God as holy, to be adiudged to eternall rottenneſſe. Neither is there a plainer determination of the Scripture for any thing, than for the riſing againe of this fleſh which we beare. This corruptible (ſaith Paul) muſt put on vncorruption, and this mortall muſt put on immortalitie. If God did make new bodies, where is this changing of qualitie? If it had beene ſaid that we muſt be renued, the doubtfull ſpeech peraduenture mought haue giuen occaſion to their cauillation. But now when pointing with his finger to the bodies wherewith we are clothed, he promiſeth to them vncorruption, he plainly enough denieth any new bodies to be made. Yea he could not (ſaith Tertullian) ſpeake more plainly, vnleſſe he had holden his owne skin in his hand. And they can by no cauillation eſcape from this, that where in another place he ſaith that Chriſt ſhall be the iudge of the world, he alleadgeth this teſtimonie of Eſay, I liue (ſaith the Lord) euery knee ſhall bow to me: for as much as he plainly pronounceth that they to whom he ſpeaketh ſhall be ſubiect to yeeld an account of their life, which could not agree, if new bodies ſhould be brought before the iudgement ſeate. Now in the words of Daniel there is no doubtfulneſſe: And many of them that ſleepe in the earth of duſt, ſhall awake,

Their error which haue imagined that we ſhall in the day of the reſurrection receiue not the ſame bodies which die but others for them.

awake, some to eternall life, and some to reproches and to euerlasting contempt: sith he fetcheth not new matter out of the foure elements to make men, but calleth dead men out of their graues. And this very plaine reason teacheth. For if mortalitie which tooke beginning at the fall of man, be accidentall: then the repairing which Christ brought, pertaineth to the same bodie which began to be mortall. And truly, whereas the Athenians laughed when Paul affirmed the resurrection, thereupon we may gather what maner of resurrection he preached: and that same laughing not smally availeth to strengthen our faith. The saying of Christ also is woorthie to be noted. Feare them not which kill the bodie, and cannot kill the soule: but feare him which can throw both the soule and the body into hell fire. For there is no cause to feare, vnlesse the body which we now beare be subiect to punishment. And no lesse plaine is another saying of the same Christ. The houre commeth, when all they that are in graues, shall heare the voyce of the Sonne of God, and shall come foorth: they that haue done good, into the resurrection of life: but they that haue done euill, into the resurrection of iudgement. Shall we say that soules rest in the graues, that they lying there may heare Christ? and not rather that at his commandement the bodies shall returne into the liuelinesse which they had lost? Moreouer, if we shall haue new bodies giuen vs, where is the like fashioning of the head & the members? Christ rose againe: was it with forging to himselfe a new body? No, but as he had said before, Destroy this temple, and in three dayes I will build it vp: he tooke againe the same body which he had before borne mortall. For he had not much profited vs, if a new body being put in place, the old body had beene destroyed which was offred vp for a sacrifice of satisfactorie clensing. We must also hold fast that fellowship which the Apostle preacheth. That we rise againe, because Christ hath risen againe: for nothing is lesse probable then that our flesh in which we beare about the mortifying of Christ, should be depriued of the resurrection of Christ. Which verily appeered by a notable example, when at the rising againe of Christ many bodies of the Saints came out of the graues. For it cannot be denied that this was a foreshewing, or rather an earnest of the last resurrection which we hope for: such as was before in Enoch and Elias, whom Tertullian calleth New possessors of the resurrection: because they being in bodie and soule deliuered from corruption, were receiued into the keeping of God.

Col. 2. 12. 2. Cor. 6. 4. & 7. Rom. 8.

8 I am ashamed in so cleere a matter to spend so many words: but the readers shall contentedly beare this trouble with me, that no hole may be open for froward and bold wits to deceiue the simple. The fleeing spirits with whom I now dispute, bring foorth a faigned inuention of their owne braine that at the resurrection there shall be a creation of new bodies. What reason moueth them to thinke so, but because it seemeth to them incredible, that a carion consumed with so long rottennesse should returne into his auncient state? Therefore onely vnbeliefe is the mother of this opinion. But vs on the other side the Spirit of God ech where in the Scripture exhorteth to hope for the resurrection of the flesh. For this reason baptisme (as Paul witnesseth) is to vs a seale of the resurrection to come: and likewise the holie Supper allureth vs to the trust thereof, when we receiue with our mouth the signes of spirituall grace. And truly the whole exhortation of Paul, that we giue our members to be weapons vnto the obedience of righteousnesse, should be cold vnlesse that were ioyned which he addeth afterward. He that hath raised vp Christ from the dead, shall quicken also your mortall bodies. For, what should it profit to applie our feet, hands, eyes, and toongs, vnto the seruice of God, vnlesse they were partakers of the fruite and reward? Which thing Paul plainely confirmeth with his owne words, saying: The body not to fornication, but to the Lord: and the Lord to the body. And he that hath raised vp Christ, shall also raise vs vp by his power. More plaine are those words which follow: That our bodies are the temples of the holie Ghost and the members of Christ. In the meane time we see how he ioyneth the resurrection with chastitie and holinesse, as a little after he saith that the price of redemption pertaineth also to the bodies. Now it were not reasonable that the bodie of Paul, in which he hath borne the prints of Christ, and in which he honorablie glorified Christ, should loose the reward of the crowne. Whereupon also came that glorying. Wee looke for the Redeemer from heauen, which which shall make our vile bodie like fashioned to the bodie of his brightnesse. And if this be true, that we must by many afflictions enter into the kingdome of God, no reason suffereth to debar the bodies from this entrie which God both exerciseth vnder the standerd of the crosse, and honoreth with the praise of victorie. Therefore of this matter there arose among the Saints no doubting, but that they hoped to be companions of Christ, which remoueth into his owne person all the afflictions wherewith we are prooued, to teach that they bring life. Yea and vnder the law he exercised the holy fathers in this faith with an outward ceremonie. For to what purpose serued the vsage of burying, as we haue already shewed, but that they should know that there is new life prepared for the bodies that are laid vp? Heereunto also tended the spices and other signes of immortalitie, wherewith vnder the law the darknesse of faith was holpen euen as it was by the sacrifices. Neither was that maner bred by superstition, forasmuch as we see that the spirit doth no lesse diligently rehearse burials than the chiefe mysteries of faith. And Christ commendeth that worke as a speciall worke, truly for none other reason but because it lifteth vp our eies from beholding of the graue which corrupteth and destroyeth all, to the sight of the renuing. Moreouer the so diligent obseruing of the ceremonie which is praised in the fathers, sufficiently prooueth that it was to them a rare and pretious helpe of faith. For neither would Abraham haue so carefully prouided for the burying place of his wife, vnlesse there had beene set before his eies a religion and a profit higher than the world, namely that garnishing the dead bodie of his wife with the signes of the resurrection he might confirme both his owne faith and the faith of his household. But a clearer proofe of this thing appeareth in the example of Iacob, which to testifie to his posteritie that the hope of the promised land was not euen by death fallen out of his minde, commanded his bones to be carried thither. I beseech you, if he was not to be clothed with a new bodie, should he not haue giuen a fond commandement concerning dust that should be brought to nothing? Wherefore if the authoritie of the Scripture be of any force with vs, there can be required of no doctrine either a more cleare or more certaine proofe. For this euen children vnderstand by the words of resurrection, and raising vp againe. For neither can we call it the resurrection of that which is now first created, neither should that saying of Christ stand fast, Whatsoeuer the Father hath giuen me, it shall not perish but I will raise it vp in the last day. To the same purpose serueth the word of Sleeping, which pertaineth onely to the bodies. Whereupon also burying places were called Cameteria, Sleeping places. Now it remaineth that I speake somewhat of the maner of the resurrection. I vse this word, because Paul calling it a mysterie, exhorteth vs to sobrietie, and bridleth the libertie to dispute like Philosophers freely and subtlely of it. First we must hold, as we haue said, that we shall rise againe in the same flesh which we beare, as touching the substance, but the qualitie shall be other. As when the same flesh of Christ which had beene offered for sacrifice, was raised vp againe, yet it excelled in other qualities as if it had beene altogether another flesh. Which thing Paul declareth by familiar examples. For as there is all one substance of the flesh of a man, and of a beast, but not all one qualitie: as all stars haue like matter, but not like brightnesse: so he teacheth that though we shal keepe still the substance of our bodie, yet there shall be a change, that the state of it may be much more excellent. The bodie therefore, that we may be raised vp againe, shall not perish nor vanish away: but putting off corruption, it shall put on vncorruption. But for as much as God hath all the elements ready at his becke, no hardinesse shall hinder him, but that he may command both the earth and waters and fire, to render that which seemeth to be consumed by them. Which also Esay testifieth though not without a figure, where he saith, Behold, the Lord shall goe forth of his place, that he may visit the iniquitie of the earth: and the earth shall discouer her bloud, and shall no more hide her dead. But there is to be noted a difference betweene them that haue beene dead long before, and those whom that day shall finde aliue. For we shall not all sleepe (as Paul saith) but we shall all be changed: that is to say, it shall not be of necessitie that there be a distance of time betweene death and the beginning of the second life: because in a moment of time, and in the twinkling of an eie the sound of the trumpet shall pearce, to raise vp the dead vncorruptible, and with a sudden change to fashion againe againe the liuing into the same glorie. So in another place he comforteth the faithfull which must die: because they which shall then remaine aliue shall not goe before the dead, but rather they shall first rise againe which haue slept in Christ. If any obiect that saying of the Apostle, that it is appointed to all mortall men once to die, it is easie to answere it, with saying that when the state of nature is changed, it is a kinde of death, and is fitly so called. And therefore these things agree well together, that all shall be renewed by death when they shall put off their mortall bodie: and yet that it is not necessarie that there be a seuering of the bodie and the soule where there shall bee a sudden changing.

Heb. 9. 27.

How it commeth to passe that the wicked are to be raised from the dead, as well as the iust and righteous.

9 But here ariseth a harder question: by what right the resurrection which is the singular benefit of Christ is common also to the wicked and the accursed of God. We know that all were in Adam condemned to the death. Christ came the resurrection and life. Came he to giue life to all mankinde vniuersally without choise? But what is more against reason than that, that they should by their obstinate blindnesse obtaine that which the godly worshippers of God doe obtaine onely by faith? Yet this remaineth certaine, that there shall be one resurrection of iudgement, and another resurrection of life, and that Christ shall come to seuer the Lambes from the goates. I answere, that this ought not to seeme strange, the likenesse whereof we see in daily experience. We see that in Adam we were depriued of the inheritance of the whole world, & that we are by no lesse iust reason debarred from common food, than from the eating of the tree of life. Whence then commeth it to passe, that God doth not onely make his sunne to rise vpon the good and euill, but also as touching the vses of this present life, his inestimable liberalitie continually floweth foorth to them with large plentiousnesse? Hereby verily we know that those things which properly belong to Christ and his members, doe also ouerflow to the wicked, not that it is their rightfull possession, but that they may be made the more inexcusable. So the wicked do oftentimes finde God beneficiall, by more than meane proofes, yea such as sometime doe darken all the blessings of the godly, but yet doe turne to their greater damnation. If any man obiect, that the resurrection is not fitly compared to fading and earthly benefit: here also I answere that so soone as they were estranged from God the fountaine of life, they deserued the death of the Diuell, whereby they should be vtterly destroied. Yet by the maruellous counsell of God there was found a meane state that out of life they might liue in death. No more absurditie ought it to seeme, if the resurrection happen to the wicked, which draweth them against their wils to the iudgement seat of Christ, whom now they refuse to heare for their master and teacher. For it were a small paine to be consumed away with death, if they were not to suffer punishment for their obstinacie, brought before the Iudge, whose vengeance they haue without end, and measure prouoked against themselues. But although we must hold that which we haue said, and which that notable confession of Paul before Fœlix containeth, that he looketh for the resurrection of the righteous, and wicked: yet the Scripture oftentimes setteth foorth election together with the heauenly glorie to the onely children of God: Because Christ properly came not to the destruction, but to the saluation of the world. Therefore in the Creede there is made mention of the blessed life onely.

Math. 5. 45.

The incomprehensible excellencie of that eternall blessednesse whereof we haue here a taste giuen vs, and looke for the perfect fruition hereafter in the world to come.

10 But for as much as the prophecie of death swallowed vp by victorie, shall then and not till then be fulfilled: let vs alway haue in minde the eternall felicitie, the end of the resurrection: of the excellencie whereof, if all things were spoken which the tongues of men were able to speake, yet scarcely the smallest parcell thereof should be expressed. For howsoeuer we truly heare that the kingdome of God shall bee stuffed full with brightnesse, ioy, felicitie, and glorie: yet those things that are spoken of are most far remoued from our sense, and remaine as it were wrapped in darke speeches, vntill that day come when he himselfe shall giue to vs his glory to be seene face to face. We know (saith Iohn) that we are the children of God, but it hath not yet appeared. But when we shall be like to him, then we shall see him such as he is. Wherefore the Prophets, because they could by no words expresse the spiritual blessednesse in it selfe, did in a maner grossely portray it out vnder bodily things. But for as much as the feruentnesse of desire must with some taste of that sweetnes be kindled in vs, let vs chiefely continue in this thought, that if God do as a certaine fountaine which cannot be drawen dry, containe in him the fulneſſe of all good things, nothing is beyond him to be coueted of them that tend toward the ſoueraigne good and the full perfection of felicitie: as we are taught in many places. Abraham, I am thy exceeding great reward. With which ſaying accordeth Danid. The Lord is my portion, the lot hath very well fallen to me. Againe in another place, I ſhall be ſatisfied with thy countenance. But Peter pronounceth that the faithfull are called to this end, that they may be made partakers of the nature of God. How ſo? becauſe he ſhall be glorified in all his Saints, and ſhall bee made wonderfull in them that haue beleeued. If the Lord will impart his glory, power, and righteouſneſſe with his elect, yea and will giue himſelfe to them to be enioyed, and (which is better) will after a certaine maner grow into one with them: let vs remember that vnder this benefit is contained all kinde of felicitie. And when we haue much profited in this meditation, let vs reknowledge that we yet ſtay beneath at the bottome of the rootes, if the conceiuing of our minde bee compared with the highneſſe of this myſterie. Wherefore in this behalfe we muſt keepe ſobrietie, leaſt with how much greater boldnes we ſhall flie vp on high being vnmindfull of our owne ſmall meaſure, ſo much more the brightneſſe of the heauenly glory ouerwhelme vs. We feele alſo how the vnmeaſurable greedineſſe to know more than is lawfull, tickleth vs: from whence both trifling and hurtfull queſtions doe ſpring from time to time: trifling I call thoſe of which there can no profit be gathered. But this ſecond kinde is worſe, becauſe they which giue themſelues to them doe entangle themſelues with pernicious ſpeculations, and therefore I call them hurtfull. That which the Scriptures doe teach, ought to be out of all doubt with vs: namely that as God diuerſly diſtributing his gifts to the Saints in this world, doth vnequally enlighten them, ſo the meaſure of glory ſhall not be equall in heauen where God ſhall crowne his gifts. For neither doth this belong indifferently to all which Paul ſaith: Yee are my glory and crowne in the day of Chriſt: nor alſo that ſaying of Chriſt to the Apoſtles: Ye ſhall ſit iudging the twelue tribes of Iſrael. But Paul (which knew that as God enricheth the holy ones with ſpirituall gifts in earth, ſo hee beautifieth them with glorie in heauen) doubteth not that there is a peculiar crowne laid vp for him according to the rate of his labors. And Chriſt to ſet foorth to the Apoſtles the dignitie of the office which they did beare, telleth them that the fruit thereof is laid vp for them in heauen. So Daniel alſo ſaith, But the wiſe ſhall ſhine as the brightneſſe of the firmament, and they which iuſtifie many, as Starres to the worlds end and for euer. And if a man heedfully conſider the Scriptures, they doe not onely promiſe eternall life to the faithfull, but alſo ſpeciall reward to euery one. Whereupon commeth that ſaying of Paul, The Lord render to him in that day. Which the promiſe of Chriſt confirmeth, Ye ſhall receiue a hundred in the eternall life. Finally, as Chriſt beginneth in this world the glorie of his bodie with manifold diuerſitie of gift, and encreaſeth it by degrees: ſo he ſhall alſo make it perfect in heauen.

Curious queſtions concerning the diſſerent degrees of bleſſedneſſe.

11 But as all the godly will receiue this with one conſent, becauſe it is ſufficently teſtified by the word of God: ſo on the other ſide leauing crabbed queſtions, which they ſhall know to bee a hinderance to them, they will not paſſe their appointed boundes. As for my part, I doe not onely priuately forbeare ſuperfluous ſearching of vnprofitable things, but I alſo thinke that I ought to beware that I doe not with anſwering nouriſh the lightneſſe of other. Men hungry of vaine knowledge doe aske how great ſhall be the diſtance betweene the Prophets and the Apoſtles, and againe betweene the Apoſtles and and the Martyrs: how many degrees Virgins differ from maried folkes: Finally, they leaue no corner of heauen vnſearched. Then it commeth to their mindes to enquire to what purpoſe ſerueth the repairing of the world, ſith the children of God ſhall neede nothing of all this ſo great and incomparable plentie: but ſhall be like to the Angels, whoſe not eating is a ſigne of the eternall bleſſedneſſe. But I anſwere that in the very ſight there ſhall be ſo great pleaſantneſſe, ſo great ſweetneſſe in the onely knowledge without any vſe, that this felicitie ſhall farre paſſe all the helps wherewith wee be now holpen. Let vs imagine our ſelues to bee ſet in the moſt wealthie coaſt of the world, and where wee ſhall want no pleaſure: yet who is there whom his ſickneſſe doe not ſometime hinder, and not ſuffer to vſe the benefits of God? who is there whoſe courſe his owne intemperance doth not oft breake in ſunder? Whereupon followeth that a cleare enioying and pure from all fault, although there be no vſe of corruptible life, is the perfection of felicitie. Some go further and aske whether droſſe and other corruptions in mettals, be not farre from reſtoring and are contrarie to it. Which though in ſome reſpects I graunt, yet I looke with Paul for the repairing of theſe faults which tooke their beginning at ſinne, toward which repairing they grone and are in trauaile. Yet they proceede further, and aske what better eſtate is prepared for man, ſith the bleſſing of iſſue ſhall then be at an end. This knot is alſo eaſie to be looſed. Whereas the Scripture ſo honorably ſetteth out that kinde of bleſſing, that is referred to the encreaſes wherewith God continually draweth forward the order of nature to her marke: but in the perfection it is knowen that there is another maner. But ſith the vnware are eaſily taken with allurements, and then the maze draweth them in deeplier, and at length when euery mans deuiſes pleaſe himſelfe there is no end of ſtriuing: therefore let this be a ſhort way for vs, to be contented with the glaſſe and darke ſpeech vntill we ſhall ſee face to face. For few of a great multitude care which way they may go to heauen: but all do before their time couet to know what is done there. All being commonly ſluggiſh and ſlowe to enter into battailes, do alreadie paint out to themſelues imagined triumphs.

The greeuous torments which God hath prepared for the wicked.
Matt. 8. 12. and 22. 13. Mark. 9. 43. Eſay 66. 24. Eſay 30. 33.

12 Now becauſe no deſcription can match the greeuouſneſſe of the vengeance of God vpon the reprobate, their torments and paines are figured to vs by bodilie things, namely, by darkeneſſe, weeping, gnaſhing of teeth, vnquenchable fire, and a worme endleſſely gnawing the hart. For by ſuch maners of ſpeech it is certaine that the holy Ghoſt meant to trouble all our ſenſes with horrour: as when it is ſaid that there is prepared from eternitie a deepe Hell, that the nouriſhments thereof are fire and much wood: that the blaſt of the Lord, as a ſtreame of brimſtone, doth ſet it on fire. As by ſuch things we muſt be holpen after a certaine maner to conceiue the miſerable ſtate of the wicked, ſo we ought chiefly to faſten our thought vpon this, how wretched a thing it is to be eſtranged from the fellowſhip of God: and not that onely, but alſo to feele the Maieſtie of God ſo bent againſt thee, that thou canſt not eſcape but be faſt ſtrained of it. For firſt his diſpleaſure is like a moſt violent fire, with touching whereof all things are deuoured and ſwallowed vp. Then, all creatures ſo ſerue him to execute his iudgement, that they to whom the Lord ſhall ſo ſhew his wrath, ſhall feele the heauen, earth, ſea, and beaſts, as it were with cruell indignation enflamed againſt them, and armed to their deſtruction. Wherefore it is no ſmall thing that the Apoſtle pronounceth, when he ſaith, that the vnbeleeuing ſhall ſuffer eternall puniſhment by dying from the face of the Lord, and from the glorie of his power. And ſo oft as the Prophets do caſt vs in feare with bodily figures, although they ſpeake nothing exceſſiuely for our dulneſſe, yet they adde forethewings of the iudgement to come, in the Sunne and the Moone and the whole frame of the world. Wherefore the vnhappie conſciences do finde no reſt, from being vexed and toſſed with a terrible whirlewinde, from feeling themſelues to be torne in peeces by God being angerly bent againſt them, from being pearced and launced with deadly ſtings, from trembling at the lightening of God, and beeing brooſed with the weight of his hand: ſo that it is much more eaſe to enter into all bottomleſſe depths and deuouring pits, than to ſtand one moment in thoſe terrours. What and how great then is this, to be preſſed with euerlaſting and neuer ceaſſing ſiege of him? Of which thing the 90. Pſalme contayneth a notable ſentence: that although with onely ſight he ſcatter abroade all mortall men and bring them to nought, yet his worſhippers, how much more fearefull they are in the world, ſo much more he enforceth them and pricketh them forward loaden with the croſſe, vntill he be all in all.

The end of the third Booke.

THE

THE FOVRTH BOOKE OF THE INSTITVTION OF Christian Religion, which intreateth of the outward meanes or helps, whereby God allureth vs into the fellowship of Christ, and holdeth vs therein.

THE FIRST CHAPTER.

Of the true Church with which we ought to keepe vnitie, because it is the mother of all the godly.

The summe of the former Booke, and the drift of this which concerneth the Church.

THAT by Faith of the Gospell, Christ is become ours, and we be made partakers of the saluation brought by him, and of eternall blessednesse, is alreadie declared in the last Booke. But because our rudenesse and slothfulnesse, yea and vanitie of wit, doe neede outward helps whereby Faith in vs may both be ingendred, and grow and increase in proceeding toward the marke whereunto it tendeth: God hath also added them thereby to prouide for our weakenesse. And that the Preaching of the Gospell might florish, he hath left this treasure with the Church. He hath appointed Pastors and Teachers, by whose mouth he might teach them that be his: he hath furnished them with autoritie, finally, he hath left nothing vndone that might auaile to the holie consent of Faith, and right order. First of all he hath ordeined Sacraments, which we feele by experience to be more than profitable helps to nourish and confirme Faith. For because being enclosed in the prison of our flesh, we do not yet attaine to the degree of Angels, God applying himselfe to our capacitie according to his wonderfull prouidence, hath appointed a meane whereby we being farre distant from him might come vnto him. Wherefore the order of teaching requireth that now we intreate of the Church, and of the gouernment, orders and power of it, and then of the Sacraments, and lastly of the ciuill order: and therewithall that we call away the godly readers from those corruptions wherewith Satan and the Papacie hath depraued all things that God hath appointed for our saluation. I will begin at the Church, into whose bosome God will haue his children to be gathered together, not only that they should by her help and ministerie be nourished while they are infants and yoong children, but also be ruled by her motherly care till they grow to riper age, and at length come to the marke of faith. Ephe. 4. 11.

Mat. 10. 9. Gal. 8. 26.

For it is not lawfull that those things be seuered which God hath conioyned, that to whom he is a Father, the Church be also their Mother: and that not onely vnder the Law, but also since the comming of Christ, as Paul witnesseth, which teacheth, that we are the children of the new and heauenly Hierusalem.

The Church inuisible which in the Creed we professe that we beleeue.

2 In the Creede, where we professe that we beleeue the Church, that is not spoken onely of the visible Church whereof we now intreate, but of all the elect of God, in whose number they are also comprehended that are departed by death. And therefore this word Beleeue is there set, because oftentimes there can no other difference be noted betweene the children of God, and the vngodly, betweene his peculiar flocke, and sauage beasts. For whereas many doe interlace this word, In, that is without probable reason. I graunt in deede that it is the more commonly vsed, and also wanteth not the consenting testimonie of antiquitie, forasmuch as euen the Nicen Creede, as it is reported in the Ecclesiasticall historie, addeth the proposition, In. But therewithall we may marke by the writings of the auncient Fathers, that it was receiued without controuersie to say, that they beleeued the Church and not in the Church. For Augustine, and that auncient writer whatsoeuer he was, whose worke remaineth vnder the name of Cyprian concerning the exposition of the Creede, doe not only so speake themselues, but also doe expressely note that it should be an vnproper maner of speaking if the preposition were adioyned, and they confirme their opinion with no trifling reason. For we therefore testifie that we beleeue in God, because vpon him as a true speaker our minde reposeth it selfe, and in him our confidence resteth, which could not so conueniently be spoken to say in the Church no more than it could be said, I beleeue in the forgiuenesse of sinnes, or in the resurrection of the flesh. Therefore although I would not striue about words, yet I had rather follow the proprietie of speaking that should be fittest to expresse the matter, than curiously to seeke for formes of speech whereby the matter may without cause be darkened. But the end is, that we should know that although the diuel attempt all meanes to ouerthrow the grace of Christ, and though the enemies of God be carried with violent rage to the same intent: yet it cannot be extinguished, nor the blood of Christ be made barren, but that it will bring foorth some fruit. And so is boath the secret election of God and his inward calling to be considered: because he alone knoweth who be his, and holdeth them inclosed vnder a seale as Paul tearmeth it: saying that they beare his tokens whereby they may be seuerally knowen from the reprobate. But because a small and contemptible number lieth hid vnder a huge multitude, and a few graines of wheate are couered with a heape of chaffe, to God onely is to be left the knowledge of his Church, the foundation whereof is his secret election. But it is not sufficient to conceiue in thought and minde the multitude of the elect, vnlesse we thinke vpon such an vnity of the Church into which we be truely perswaded that we our selues be ingraffed. For vnlesse we be vnder our head Christ vnited togetherwith all the rest of his members, there abideth for vs no hope of the inheritance to come. It is therefore called Catholike or vniuersall, because we cannot finde two or three Churches but that Christ must be torne in sunder, which cannot be done. But all the elect of God are so knit together in Christ, that as they hange vpon one head, so they may grow together as it were into one body, cleauing together with such a compacting of ioynts as the members of one selfe body: being truely made one, which with one hope, Faith, Charity, with on selfe spirit of God doe liue together, being called not onely into one inheritance of eternall life, but also into one partaking of one God and Christ. Wherefore although the sorrowfull desolation that on each side presenteth it selfe in sight, crieth out that there is nothing left of the Church, yet let vs know that Christs death is fruitfull, and that God marueilously as it were in secret corners preserueth his Church. As it was said to Elias, I haue kept to my selfe seuen thousand men that haue not bowed their knee before Baal.

Ephe. 1. 13.

1. Reg. 19. 18.

The article of the Creed touching the Church, concerneth af-

3 Albeit this article of the Creede doth in some respect belong to the outward Church, that euery one of vs should hold himselfe in brotherly consent with all the children of God, should yeeld vnto the Church that authority which it deserueth, finally should so behaue himselfe as a Sheepe of the flocke. And therefore is adioyned the communion communion of Saints. Which parcell, although commonly the old writers doe leaue it out, yet is it not to be neglected: becauſe it very well expreſſeth the qualitie of the Church: as if it had beene ſaid that the Saints are gathered together into the fellowſhip of Chriſt with this condition, that whatſoeuer benefits God beſtoweth vpon them, they ſhould continually communicate them one to another. Whereby yet the diuerſitie of graces is not taken away. As we know that the gifts of the holy Ghoſt are diuerſlie diſtributed: neither is the order of ciuill gouernment diſturbed, by which it is lawfull for euerie man priuately to enioy his owne poſſeſſions, as it is neceſſarie, that for preſeruation of peace among men, they ſhould haue among themſelues peculiar and diuided properties of things. But there is a communitie affirmed, ſuch as Luke deſcribeth, that of the multitude of the beleeuers there was one hart and one ſoule: and Paul, when he exhorteth the Epheſians to be one body, one ſpirit as they be called in one hope. For it is not poſſible, if they be truly perſwaded that God is the common father, and the common head to them all, but that being conioyned among themſelues with brotherly loue, they ſhould continually communicate thoſe things that they haue. Now it much behoooueth vs to know what profit thereupon returneth vnto vs. For we beleeue the Church to this end, that we may be certainely perſwaded that we are the members of it. For by this meane, our ſaluation reſteth vpon ſure ſound ſtayes, that it, although the whole frame of the world be ſhaken, cannot come to ruine and fall downe. Firſt it ſtandeth with Gods election, neither can it varie or faile but together with his eternall Prouidence. Then, it is after a certaine maner ioyned with the ſtedfaſtneſſe of Chriſt, which will no more ſuffer his faithfull to be plucked from him, than his owne members to be rent and torne in peeces. Beſide that, we are aſſured that truth ſhall alway abide with vs, ſo long as we are holden in the boſome of the Church. Laſt of all, that we feele that theſe promiſes belong to vs, there ſhall be ſaluation in Syon, God ſhall for euer abide in Hieruſalem, that it may not at any time be moued. So much can the partaking of the Church doe, that it holdeth vs in the fellowſhip of God. Alſo in the very word Communion is much comfort: becauſe while it remaineth certaine, that whatſoeuer the Lord giueth to his and our members, belongeth to vs, our hope is by all their good things confirmed. But in ſuch ſort to embrace the vnitie of the Church, it is not needfull (as we haue alreadie ſaid) to ſee the Church it ſelfe with our eies, or feele it with our hands: but rather by this that it conſiſteth in Faith, we are admoniſhed that we ought no leſſe to thinke it to be, when it paſſeth our vnderſtanding, than if it openly appeared. Neither is our Faith therefore the worſe, becauſe it conceiueth it vnknowen: foraſmuch as we are not herein commanded to diſcerne the reprobate from the elect (which is the office of God only, and not ours) but to determine aſſuredly in our minds, that all they that by the merciſull kindneſſe of God the Father through the effectuall working of the holy Ghoſt, are come into the partaking of Chriſt, are ſeuered into the peculiar right and proper poſſeſſion of Chriſt: and that, foraſmuch as we be in the number of thoſe, we are partakers of ſo great a grace.

Beſide that out of her boſome there is no forgiueneſſe of ſinnes, and no ſaluation to be hoped for, as witneſſeth Eſay and Ioel, with whom agreeth Ezechiel when he declareth that they ſhall not be in the number of Gods people whom he putteth away from the heauenly life. As on the contrarie ſide, they are ſaid to write their names among the Citizens of Hieruſalem, that turne themſelues to the following of true godlineſſe. After which maner it is alſo ſaid in an other Pſalme: Remember me Lord, in the good will of thy people: viſit me in thy ſaluation that I may ſee the benefits of thy elect, that I may be merry in the mirth of thy people, that I may reioyce with thy thy inheritance. In which words the fatherly fauour of God, and the peculiar teſtimonie of the Spirituall life is reſtrained to his flocke, ſo that the departing from the Church is alway damnable.

The miniſtery of the church together with the neceſſity and vſe thereof.

5 But let vs proceede to proſecute that which properly belongeth to this place. Paul writeth that Chriſt, that he might fulfill all things, gaue ſome Apoſtles, ſome Prophets, ſome Euangeliſtes, and ſome Paſtors and Teachers, to the reſtoring of the holy ones, into the worke of the miniſtery, vnto the edification of the body of Chriſt, vntill we all come into the vnity of Faith, and of the acknowledging of the Sonne of God, vnto a perfect man, and to the meaſure of the full growen age of Chriſt. We ſee how God, which was able to make them that be his perfect in a moment, yet will not haue them grow into manly age but by the bringing vp the Church. We ſee the meane expreſſed, for that vnto the Paſtors is enioyned the preaching of the heauenly doctrine. We ſee how all, not one excepted, are brought into on rule, that they ſhould with milde Spirit and willing to learne, yeeld themſelues to the teachers appointed for that vſe. And by this marke Eſay had long before ſet out the kingdome of Chriſt, where he ſaith: My ſpirit which is in thee, and the wotds that I haue put in thy mouth ſhall neuer depart, neither out of thy mouth, nor out of the mouth of thy ſeed and thy childrens children. Whereupon followeth that they are woorthy to periſh with famine and pining hunger. whoſoeuer they be that refuſe the Spirituall meate of the Soule reached vnto them of God by the hands of the Church. GOD doth breath Faith into vs, but by the inſtrument of his Goſpell, as Paul ſaith that faith is by hearing. As alſo with God remaineth his power to ſaue, but (as the ſame Paul witneſſeth) he vttereth and diſplaieth the ſame in the preaching of the Goſpell. For this reaſon in old time hee willed that there ſhould be made holy aſſemblies to the ſanctuary, that doctrine vttered by the mouth of the Prieſt ſhould nouriſh the conſent of Faith. And to no other end thoſe glorious titles haue reſpect, where the temple is called the reſt of God, and the ſanctuarie his houſe, where he is ſaid to ſit betweene the Cherubines: but to bring eſtimation, loue, reuerence and dignitie to the miniſtery of the heauenly doctrine, which otherwiſe the ſight of a mortall and deſpiſed man would not a little diminiſh. Therefore that wee ſhould know, that out of earthen veſſels is brought foorth vnto vs ineſtimable treaſure, God himſelfe commeth foorth, and in as much as hee is the author of this degree, ſo he will haue himſelfe to be acknowledged preſent in his inſtitution. Therefore after that he hath forbidden his to giue themſelues to iudgement by flying of birdes, to ſouth-ſayings, magicall arts, necromancie and other ſuperſtitions, he immediately addeth that he will giue them that which ought to ſuffice in ſtead of all, that is to ſay, that they ſhall neuer be deſtitute of Prophets. But like as he ſent not the olde people to Angels, but raiſed vp teachers out of the earth, which might truely performe the office of Angels: ſo at this day alſo his will is to teach vs by men. And as in the olde time he was not content with the onely law, but added Prieſts for expoſitors, at whoſe lips the people ſhould enquire for the true meaning thereof: ſo at this day he not onely willeth vs to be heedfully bent to reading, but alſo appointeth maſters ouer vs, by whoſe trauell we may bee holpen: whereof commeth double profit. For on the one part by a very good triall it prooueth our obedience, when we heare his miniſters ſpeaking euen as it were himſelfe. On the other ſide it alſo prouideth for our weakneſſe, while after the maner of men hee had rather ſpeake vnto vs by interpreters to allure vs vnto him, than with thundring driue vs away from him. And truely how expedient this familiar maner of teaching is for vs, all the godly doe feele by the feare wherewith the maieſtie of God doth worthily aſtoniſh them. But they that thinke that the authority of the doctrine is abaſed by the contempt of the men that are called to teach, do bewray their vnthankfulneſſe, becauſe among ſo many excellent giſts wherwith God hath garniſhed mankind: this is a ſingular prerogatiue, that he vouchſafeth to conſecrate the mouthes and tongues of men to himſelfe, that his owne voice ſhould ſound in them. Wherefore on our behalfes let vs not be greeued obediently to embrace the doctrine of ſaluation ſet foorth by his commandement and by his owne mouth: becauſe although the power of God is not bound to outward meanes, yet he hath bound vs to the ordinarie maner of teaching: which while phrentike men refuse to keepe, they wrap themselues in many deadly snares. Either pride, or disdainfulnesse, or enuie moueth many to perswade themselues that they can sufficiently profit by their owne priuate reading and studie, and so to despise publicke assemblies, and to accompt preaching superfluous. But sith they doe as much as in them is loose or breake in sunder the holy bond of vnitie, no man escapeth the due punishment of this diuorce, but he bewitcheth himselfe with pestilent errors and most wicked dotages. Wherefore, that the pure simplicitie of faith may flourish among vs, let vs not be grieued to vse this exercise of godlinesse, which God by his institution hath shewed to be necessarie for vs and so earnestly commendeth. But there was neuer yet found any euen of the most wanton dogs which would say that we ought to stop our eares against God: But in all ages the Prophets and godly teachers haue had a hard strife against the wicked, whose stubbornnesse can neuer come vnder this yoke, to be taught by the mouth of the ministerie of men. Which is as much as to blot out the face of GOD which shineth to vs in doctrine. For in olde time the faithfull were commanded to seeke the face of God in the Sanctuarie, and the same is so oft repeated in the law for no other cause, but for that the doctrine of the law and the exhortations of the Prophets were to them a liuely image of God: as Paul affirmeth that in his preaching shineth the glorie of God in the face of Christ. How much the more detestable are the Apostates, which greedily seeke to deuide Churches, as though they did driue sheepe from their foldes and cast them into the mouthes of wolues. But wee must hold that which hee hath alleaged out of Paul, that the Church is no otherwise builded but by outward preaching, and that the holy ones are holden together with no other bond but when with learning and profiting with one consent they keepe the order appointed by God to the Church. To this end principally, as I haue said, the faithfull in olde time vnder the law were commanded to resort to the Sanctuarie. Because when Moses speaketh of the dwelling place of God, he doth therewithall call it the place of name, where God hath set the memorie of his name. Whereby he plainly teacheth that without the doctrine of godlinesse there is no vse thereof. And it is not doubtfull but that for the same reason Dauid with great bitternesse of Spirit complaineth that hee is by the tyrannous crueltie of his enemies kept from entring into the Tabernacle. It seemeth commonly to many a childish lamentation, because it should be but a very small losse, and also no great pleasure should be foregone thereby, to want the entry of the temple, so that there were enough of other delightfull things. But hee bewaileth that with this one griefe, anguish and sorrow, he is fretted and vexed and in a maner wasted. For nothing is of greater estimation with the faithfull, than this helpe whereby God by degrees lifteth vp his on high. For this is also to be noted, that God in the mirror of his doctrine alway so shewed himselfe to the holy Fathers, that the knowledge was spirituall. Wherefore the temple is called not onely his face, but also (to take away all superstition) his footestoole. And this is that happie meeting into vnitie of faith, while from the highest euen to the lowest all doe aspire to the head. All the temples that euer the Gentiles vpon any other purpose builded to God, were but a meere prophaning of his worship: whereunto though not with like grossenesse, yet somewhat the Iewes fell. Whereof Stephen out of the mouth of Esay reprocheth them where he saith, that God dwelleth not in temples made with hands, &c. Because onely God doth by his word sanctifie to himselfe temples to the lawfull vse. And if we rashly attempt any thing without his commandement, by and by to an euill beginning doe cleaue new deuises by which the euill is spread abroad without measure. Yet Xerxes, when by the counsell of the Magitians he burned vp or plucked downe all the temples of Greece, vndiscreetly said, that the Gods to whom all things ought to bee freely open were enclosed within walles and tiles. As though it were not in the power of God, to the entent he might be neere vs, after a certaine maner to descend vnto vs, and yet neither to change place, nor to fasten vs to earthly meanes: but rather by certaine chariots to carrie vs vp to his heauenly glory, which with the immeasurable greatnesse thereof filleth all things, yea and in height surmounteth the heauens.

The force of Eccleſiaſticall miniſteri.

6 Now foraſmuch as at this time there hath beene great ſtrife about the effectualneſſe of the miniſterie, while ſome exceſſiuely amplifie the dignitie thereof: and ſome other affirme that that which is properly belonging to the holy Ghoſt is wrongfully giuen away to mortall man, if we thinke that miniſters and teachers doe pearce to the mindes and hearts, to amend as well the blindneſſe of the mindes as the hardneſſe of hearts: it is meete that we giue a right determination of this controuerſie. All that they contend on both parts ſhall eaſily bee accorded by expreſſly noting the places where God the author of preaching ioyning his ſpirit with it promiſeth fruit thereof: or againe, when ſeuering himſelfe from outward helps he challengeth to himſelfe alone as well the beginnings of faith as the whole courſe thereof. It was the office of the ſecond Elias (as Malachie witneſſeth) to enlighten the mindes and to turne the hearts of Fathers to the children, and vnbeleeuers to the wiſedome of the righteous. Chriſt pronounceth that he ſendeth the Apoſtles, that they ſhould bring fruit of their labor. But what that fruit is Peter ſhortly defineth, ſaying that we be regenerate with incorruptible ſeede. And therefore Paul glorieth that hee by the Goſpell begate the Corinthians, and that they were the ſeale of his Apoſtleſhip: yea that hee was not a literall Miniſter: ſuch as did onely beat the eares with ſound of voice, but that there was giuen him an effectualneſſe of Spirit, that his doctrine ſhould not bee vnprofitable. In which meaning alſo in another place hee ſaith, that his Goſpell was not in word onely, but in power. Hee affirmeth alſo that the Galathians by hearing receiued the Spirit of faith. Finally in many places hee maketh himſelfe not onely a worker together with GOD, but alſo aſſigneth himſelfe the office of giuing ſaluation. Truely hee neuer brought foorth all theſe things to this intent to giue vnto himſelfe any thing were it neuer ſo little ſeuerally from God: as in another place hee ſhortly declareth, ſaying, our labor was not vnprofitable in the Lord, according to his power mightily working in mee. Againe in another place, he that was mightie in Peter toward the circumciſion, was alſo mightie in mee toward the Gentiles. But how he leaueth nothing ſeuerally to the miniſters, appeareth by other places, as: he that planteth is nothing, and he that watereth is nothing, but GOD that giueth the encreaſe. Againe: I haue laboured more than all: not I, but the grace of God that was with mee. And truely we muſt hold faſt thoſe ſayings, where God aſcribing to himſelfe the enlightning of the minde, and the renewing of the heart teacheth that it is a robberie of GOD if man take vpon himſelfe any part of either of them. In the meane time if any man offer himſelfe to the miniſters whom GOD ordeineth, willing to learne, hee ſhall know by the fruit, that this maner of teaching not in vaine pleaſed God, and that this yoke of modeſtie was not in vaine laid vpon the faithfull.

The Scripture ſpeaketh both of a viſible Church, and of a Church which is inuiſible.

7 But as for the Church viſible and which is within the compaſſe of our knowledge, what iudgement is meete to be giuen thereof, I thinke it already appeareth euidently by that which we haue before ſaid. For we haue ſaid, that the holy Scripture ſpeaketh of the Church after two ſortes. Sometime, when it nameth the Church, it meaneth that Church which is indeed before God, into which none are receiued but they that are both by grace of adoption the children of God, and by ſanctification of the Spirit the true members of Chriſt. And then truely it comprehendeth not only the holy ones that dwell in earth, but alſo all the elect that haue beene ſince the beginning of the world. But oftentimes vnder the name of the Church it ſignifieth the vniuerſall multitude of men ſcattered abroad in the world, which profeſſe that they worſhip one God and Chriſt, by Baptiſme enter into his faith, by partaking of the ſupper teſtifie their vnity in true doctrine and charitie, haue an agreement in the word of the Lord, and for the preaching thereof doe keepe the miniſtery ordeined by Chriſt. In this Church there be mingled many hypocrites which haue nothing of Chriſt but the name and outward ſhew: there be many ambitious, couetous, enuious, euill ſpeakers, ſome of vncleane life: which be ſuffred for a time, either becauſe they cannot by lawfull order of iudgement be conuinced, or becauſe their is not alway in vre that ſeueritie of diſcipline that ought to be. Therefore as we muſt needs beleeue that the Church which is inuiſible to vs, is to be ſeene with the eyes of God onely so are we commanded to regard this Church which is called a Church in respect of men, and to keepe the communion of it. 2. Tim. 2. 19.

8 Therefore so much as behooued vs to know it, the Lord hath set it out by certaine marks and as it were signes vnto vs. This is indeed the singular prerogatiue of God himselfe, to know who be his, as we haue already alleadged out of Paul. And truly that the rashnesse of men should not creepe so far, it is prouided by the very successe of things daily putting vs in minde, how far his secret iudgements doe surmount our vnderstanding. For euen they that seemed most desperate, and accounted vtterly past hope, are by his goodnesse called back into the way: and they that seemed to stand fast in comparison of other, do oftentimes fall. Therefore according to the secret predestination of God (as Augustine saith) there be many sheepe without, and many wolues within. For he knoweth them, and hath them marked that know neither him nor themselues. But of those that openly beare his badge, his onely eies doe see who bee both holy without faigning, and who will continue euen to the end, which is the very chiefe point of saluation. Yet on the other side, forasmuch as he foresaw it to be some deale expedient, that we should know who were to be accounted his children, he hath in this part applied himselfe to our capacitie. And because the certaintie of faith was not necessarie, he hath put in place thereof a certaine iudgement of charitie: whereby we should acknowledge for members of the Church those that both with confession of faith, and with example of life, and with partaking of Sacraments, doe professe the same God and Christ with vs. But as for the knowledge of the bodie thereof, how much more that he knew it to be necessarie for our saluation, with so much the more certaine marks he hath set it out.

Properly, truly and infallibly God alone knoweth who are his.

Hom. in Io. an. 45.

9 Loe hereupon groweth and ariseth vnto vs, a face of the Church visible to our eies. For whersoeuer we see the word of God to be purely preached and heard, and the sacraments to be ministred according to the institution of Christ, there it is in no wise to be doubted that there is some Church of God: forasmuch as his promise cannot deceiue, Wheresoeuer two or three are gathered together in my name, there I am in the midst of them. But that we may euidently vnderstand the summe of this matter, we must proceede by these as it were by degrees: that is to say, that the vniuersall Church is a multitude gathered together out of all nations whatsoeuer they be, which being sundered and seuerally scattered by distances of places, yet doth agree in one trueth of godly doctrine, and is bound together with the bond of one selfe religion. And that so vnder this are comprehended all particular Churches, which are in all townes and streets according to the order of mens necessitie, so that euery one of them may rightfully haue the name and authoritie of a Church: And that all particular men which by profession of godlinesse are reckoned among such Churches, although they be indeed strangers from the Church, yet doe after a certaine maner belong vnto it, till by publike iudgement they be banished out of it. Howbeit there is somewhat a diuers maner in iudging of priuate men and of Churches. For it may fall in experience, that such men as we shall thinke not to be altogether worthy of the company of the godly, yet we must vse like brethren and account them among the faithfull, for the common consent of the Church, whereby they are suffered and borne withall in the bodie of Christ. We doe not by our testimonie allow such to be members of the Church: but we leaue them the place that they haue among the people of God, till it be by orderly right of law taken away from them. But of the very multitude we must otherwise think: which if it hath and honoreth the ministerie of the word, and the administration of Sacraments, it deserueth without doubt to be esteemed and iudged a Church: because it is certaine that those things are not without fruit. So we doe also preserue to the vniuersall Church her vnitie, which diuelish spirits haue alway trauailed to cut in sunder: neither doe we defraud of their authoritie those lawfull assemblies which are disposed according to the fitnesse of places.

One way to know what Church is true, and another who be the true members of the Church. Mat. 18. 20.

10 We haue set for signes to discerne the Church by, the preaching of the word and the obseruing of the Sacraments. For those can be no where but they must bring foorth fruit, and be prospered with the blessing of God. I doe not say, that whersoeuer the word is preached, there by and by springeth vp fruit: but I say that no where it it is receiued and hath a ſtayed ſeate, but that it bringeth foorth the effectualneſſe thereof. Where the preaching of the Goſpell is reuerently heard, and the Sacraments are not neglected, how ſoeuer it be, therefore that time appeareth, not a deceitfull and doubtfull face of the Church, whereof no man may vnpuniſhed either deſpiſe the authoritie, or refuſe the admonitions, or reſiſt the counſels, or mocke at the corrections: much leſſe to depart from it, and to breake in ſunder the vnitie of it. For the Lord ſo highly eſteemeth the Communion of his Church, that he counteth him for a traiterous run-a way and forſaker of Religion, whoſoeuer ſhall ſtubbornely eſtrange himſelfe from any Chriſtian fellowſhip, ſo that it be ſuch a one as hath the true miniſterie of the Word and Sacraments. He ſo commendeth the Churches authoritie, that when it is violate, hee iudgeth his owne diminiſhed. Neither is it of ſmall importance, that the Church is called the piller and ſtrong ſtay of trueth and the houſe of God. By which words Paul ſignifieth, that to the end the truth of God ſhould not decay in the world, the Church is a faithfull keeper thereof: becauſe Gods will was to haue the preaching of his word kept pure, and to ſhew himſelfe vnto vs a father of houſhold by her miniſterie and labor, while ſhe feedeth vs with ſpirituall nouriſhments, and procureth all things that make for our ſaluation. It is alſo no ſlender praiſe, that it is ſaid, that ſhe is choſen and ſeuered by Chriſt to be his ſpouſe, that ſhould be without wrinkle and ſpot, the bodie and fulneſſe of him. Whereupon followeth, that departing from the Church is a denying of God and of Chriſt. Therefore ſo much the more we muſt beware of ſo wicked diſagreement. For while we goe about, ſo much as in vs lieth, to procure the ruine of Gods truth, we are worthy that he ſhould ſend downe his lightning with the whole violent force of his wrath to deſtroy vs. Neither can there be imagined any fault more hainous, than with wicked breach of faith to defile the marriage that the onely begotten ſonne of God hath vouchſafed to contract with vs.

The face, communion, and reuerence of the Church, & how it is termed the pillar of truth.

1. Tim. 3. 15.

Ephes 5. 23. Ephes. 1. 23.

Satan laboreth either to aboliſh, or to bring in contempt the marks of the true Church, whereupon a double miſchiefe groweth, that either the true Church is deſpiſed, or the falſe reuerenced.

11 Wherefore let vs diligently keepe theſe marks imprinted in our mindes, and let vs eſteeme them according to the Lords will. For there is nothing that Satan more endeuoureth than to take away, and aboliſh the one of theſe, or both ſometime that when theſe marks are raſed and blotted out, he may take away the true and naturall diſtinction of the Church: ſometime that when they are brought in contempt, he may with open falling away plucke vs from the Church. By this craft it is brought about, that in certaine ages paſt, the pure preaching of the word hath vaniſhed away: and now he doth with as great importunacie trauell to ouerthrow the miniſterie, which yet Chriſt hath ſo ſtabliſhed in the Church, that when it is taken away, the edification of the Church periſheth. But now, how dangerous, yea how deadly a tentation is it when it doth but come in our minde to depart from that congregation wherein are ſeene the ſignes and tokens by which the Lord thought his Church ſufficiently deſcribed? We ſee how great heed is to be taken on both ſides. For, that we ſhould not be deceiued vnder the title of the Church, euery congregation that pretendeth the name of the Church muſt be examined by that maner of triall, as by a touchſtone. If it haue in the word and Sacraments the order appointed by the Lord, it will not deceiue vs: let vs boldly yeeld vnto it the honor due to Churches. But contrariwiſe if it boaſt it ſelfe without the word and Sacraments, we muſt no leſſe with fearefull conſcience beware of ſuch deceits, than on the other ſide we muſt flee raſhneſſe and pride.

Where the ſignes of a true church are, from that ſocietie we may not ſeuer our ſelues, and ceaſe to haue communion, though in doctrine and adminiſtration of Sacraments there be ſome fault.

12 Whereas we ſay that the pure miniſterie of the word and the pure vſage in celebrating the Sacraments, is a ſufficient pledge and earneſt, ſo that we may ſafely embrace as the Church any fellowſhip wherein both theſe ſhall be: this extendeth ſo far, that it is neuer to be caſt off, ſo long as it ſhall continue in thoſe although it ſwarme full of many other faults. Yea and there may ſome faultineſſe creepe into it, in the adminiſtration either of doctrine, or of the Sacraments, which ought not to eſtrange vs from the Communion of it. For all the articles of true doctrine be not of one ſort. Some be ſo neceſſarie to be knowen, that they ought to be certaine and vndoubted to all men, as the proper principles of religion: of which ſort are, That there is one God, That Chriſt is God, and the ſonne of God. That our ſaluation conſiſteth in the mercie of God: and ſuch like. There be other that being in controuerſie betweene Churches, yet doe not breake the vnitie of faith. For thoſe Churches that diſagree about this one point, if without luſt of contention, without ſtubbornneſſe of affirming, the one thinke that ſoules when they depart from the bodies doe flee vp into heauen, and the other Church dare determine nothing of the place, but yet certainely holdeth that they liue to the Lord: the words of the Apoſtle are: Let all vs that be perfect thinke all one thing: but if yee thinke any thing otherwiſe, this the Lord ſhall alſo reueale vnto you. Doth he not ſufficiently ſhew that diuerſitie of opinion about theſe matters, that be not ſo neceſſarie, ought to be no ground of diſagreement among Chriſtians: It is indeed a principall point, that we agree in all things. But for as much as there is no man that is not wrapped with ſome little cloud of ignorance, either we muſt leaue no Church at all, or we muſt pardon a being deceiued in ſuch things as may be vnknowen without violating the ſumme of religion, and without loſſe of ſaluation. But I meane not here to defend any errors be they neuer ſo little, ſo as I would thinke that they ſhould bee cheriſhed with flattering and winking at them: but I ſay that we ought not raſhly for euery light diſſenſion forſake the Church, in which at leaſt that Doctrine is retained ſafe and vncorrupted, wherein ſtandeth the ſafetie of godlineſſe, and the vſe of Sacraments is kept as it was inſtitute by the Lord. In the meane time if we endeuour to amend that which diſpleaſeth vs, we doe therein according to our dutie. And hereunto belongeth that ſaying of Paul: If any thing better be reuealed to him that ſitteth, let the firſt hold his peace. Whereby it is euident, that all the members of the Church are euery one charged with endeuour to publike edification, according to the meaſure of his grace, ſo that it be done comely and according to order: that is, that we neither doe forſake the communion of the Church, nor abiding in it, doe trouble the peace and well ordered diſcipline thereof.

Phil. 3. 19.

1. Cor. 14. 30.

13 But in bearing with the imperfection of life, our gentle tenderneſſe ought to goe much further. For herein is a very ſlipperie eaſineſſe to fall: and herein with no ſmall deuiſes doth Satan lay wayt for vs. For there haue beene alway ſome, which filled with falſe perſwaſion of perfect holineſſe as though they were already made certaine aeirie ſpirits, deſpiſed the company of all men, in whom they ſaw remaining any thing of the nature of man. Such in old time were the Cathary, and they that were as mad as they, the Donatiſts. Such at this day are ſome of the Anabiptiſts, which would ſeeme to haue profited aboue the reſt. Some there be that offend more by an vndiſcreet zeale of righteouſneſſe, than by that mad pride. For when they ſee among them to whom the Goſpell is preached, the fruit of life not agreably anſwering to the doctrine thereof, they by and by iudge that there is no Church. It is indeed a moſt iuſt diſpleaſure, and ſuch a one whereunto in this moſt miſerable age of the world, we giue too much occaſion. Neither may we excuſe our accurſed ſlothfulneſſe, which the Lord will not ſuffer vnpuniſhed: as euen already he beginneth with grieuous ſcourges to chaſtiſe it. Woe therefore to vs, which with ſo diſſolute licentiouſneſſe of wicked doings, make that weake conſciences be wounded by reaſon of vs. But in this againe they offend whom I haue ſpoken of, becauſe they cannot meaſure their being diſpleaſed. For where the Lord requireth clemencie, they leauing it, doe giue themſelues wholy to immeaſurable rigorouſneſſe. For, becauſe they thinke that there is no Church where there is no ſound pureneſſe and vprightneſſe of life, for hatred of ſinnes they depart from the lawful Church, while they think that they ſwarue from a company of wicked men. They alleadge that the Church of Chriſt is holy. But that they may alſo vnderſtand that it is mingled of good and euill men, let them heare this parable out of the mouth of Chriſt, wherein it is compared to a net, in which fiſhes of all kindes are gathered together: and are not choſen out till they be laid abroad vpon the ſhoare. Let them heare that it is like vnto a corne field, which being ſowen with good graine, is by the enemies fraud ſcattered with tares, of which it is not cleanſed vntil the crop be brought into the barne floore. Finally, let them heare that it is like vnto a floore, wherein the wheat is ſo gathered together, that it lieth hidden vnder the chaffe, till being cleanſed with fan and ſyeue, it bee at length laid vp in the garner. If the Lord pronounce that the Church ſhall euen to the day of iudgement be troubled with this euill, to bee burdened with mingling of euill men: they doe in vaine ſeeke for a Church ſprinkled with no ſpot.

Imperfection in the liues and corruption in the manners of ſome men, muſt not cauſe vs to leaue the fellowſhip of the Church.

Math. 13. 23.

The state of the Church of Corinth in the Apostles owne times.

14 For they crie out that it is an intolerable thing, that the pestilence of vices so rangeth abroad. What if the saying of the Apostle do heere also answer them? Among the Corinthians not onely a few had gone out of the way, but the infection had in a maner possessed the whole body: There was not onely one kind of sinne, but many: neither were they light offences, but certaine horrible outragious doings: it was not onely corruption of manners, but also of doctrine. What in this case saith the holy Apostle, that is to say, the instrument of the holy Ghost, by whose testimony the church standeth and falleth? Doth he require a diuision from them? Doth he banish them out of the kingdome of Christ? Doth he strike them with the extremest thunderbolt of curse? He not onely doth none of all these things: but he both acknowledgeth and reporteth it a Church of Christ and fellowship of Saints. If there remaine a Church among the Corinthians, where contentions, sects, and enuious partakings doe broile: where quarrels and brawlings be in vre, with a greedinesse of hauing, where that wicked doing is openly allowed, which were abhominable among the very Gentiles: where Pauls name is vniustly railed at, whom they ought to haue honoured as their Father: where some scorne at the resurrection of the dead, with ruine whereof the whole Gospell falleth: where the gracious gifts of God serue to ambition and not to charity: where many things are vncomely and vnorderly done: and if therefore there still remaine a Church, because the ministery of the word and of the Sacraments is there not refused, who dare take away the name of the Church from them that cannot be charged with the tenth part of these faults? They that with so great precisenesse deale so cruelly against the Churches of this present time: what (I pray you) would they haue done to the Galathians, which were almost vtter forsakers of the Gospell, among whom yet the same Apostle found Churches?

Gal. 1.

One thing to shun the priuate company of a wicked man, & another for hatred thereof to forsake the fellowship of the Church.

15 They obiect also, how that Paul grieuously rebuketh the Corinthians for suffering in their company a man that was a hainous sinner, and then he setteth a generall sentence wherein he pronounceth, that it is vnlawfull euen to eat bread with a man of reprochfull life. Heere they cry out: If it be not lawfull to eat common bread, how may it be lawfull to eat with them the bread of the Lord? I confesse indeed that it is a great dishonour, if hogges and dogges haue place among the children of God: it is also a much more dishonour if the holy body of Christ be giuen foorth to them. And truely if they be well ordered Churches, they will not suffer wicked men in their bosome, and will not without choise admit both woorthily and vnworthy together, to that holy banket. But forasmuch as the Pastors doe not alway so diligently watch, yea and sometime are more tender in bearing with men than they ought to be, or are hindered so that they cannot vse that seuerity that they would: it commeth to passe that euen they that are openly euill, are not alway thrust out of the company of the holy ones. This I grant to be a fault: neither will I diminish it, sith Paul doth so sharply rebuke it in the Corinthians. But although the Church be slacke in her duety, it shall not be therefore immediatly in the power of euery priuate man, to take vpon himselfe the iudgement to seuer him. I doe indeed not deny that it is the dooing of a godly man, to withdraw himselfe from all priuate company of euell men, to intangle himselfe in no willing familiarity with them. But it is one thing to flee the company of euill men, and another thing for hatred of them to forsake the communion of the Church. But whereas they thinke it sacriledge to be partakers of the Lords bread with them, they are therein much more rigorous than Paul is. For where he exhorteth vs to a holy and pure partaking, he requireth not that one should examine an other, or euery man the whole Church, but that they should ech one proue himselfe. If it were vnlawfull to communicate with an vnworthy man, then truely Paul would bid vs to looke circumspectly, whether there were any in the multitude, by whose vncleannesse we might be defiled. Now when he requireth onely of euery man the proofe of themselues, he sheweth that it nothing hurteth vs if any vnwoorthy doe thrust themselues in among vs. And nothing else is meant by this which he saith afterward. He that eateth vnwoorthily, eateth and drinketh iudgement to himselfe. He doth not say, to other, but to himselfe. And rightfully. For it ought not to stand in the choise of euery particular man, who be to be receiued, and who to be reiected. The knowledge hereof belongeth to the the whole Church, which knowledge cannot be had without lawfull order, as hereafter ſhall be ſaid more at large. Therefore it ſhould be vnrighteous, that any priuate man ſhould be defiled with the vnworthineſſe of another, whom he neither can, nor ought to keepe backe from comming to it.

16 But although by this vndiſcreete zeale of righteouſneſſe this tentaion doth ſometime alſo enter into good men: yet this we ſhall find that too much preciſeneſſe, groweth rather of pride, diſdainfulneſſe, and falſe opinion of holineſſe, than of true holineſſe and true zeale thereof. Therefore they that are bolder than other, and as it were ſtandard bearers to make any departing from the Church, for the moſt part doe it vpon no other cauſe, but in deſpiſing of all men to boaſt themſelues to be better than other. Therefore Auguſtine ſaith well and wiſely: When godly order and maner of Eccleſiaſtical diſcipline ought principally to haue regard vnto the vnity of Spirit in the bond of peace: which the Apoſtle commanded to be kept by bearing one with another: and which being not kept, the medicine of reuenge is prooued to be not onely ſuperfluous, but alſo pernicious, and therefore now to be no medicine at all: thoſe euill children, which not for hatred of other mens iniquities, but for affection of their owne contentions doe greedily labour either wholy to draw or at leaſt to diuide the weake common people intangled with the boaſting of their name, ſwelling with pride, mad with ſtubbornneſſe, traiterous with ſlanders, troubleſome with ſeditions, leaſt they ſhould ſeeme to want the light of truth, doe pretend a ſhadow of rigorous ſeuerity: and thoſe things that are in the holy Scriptures commanded to be done with a gentler kinde of healing, ſauing the ſinceritie of loue, and keeping the vnitie of peace, to correct the faults of brethren, they abuſe it to ſacriledge of ſchiſme, and to occaſion of cutting off. But to godly and quiet men he giueth this counſell, that they mercifully correct that which they can, and that which they cannot, patiently beare, and grone and mourne with loue, vntill God either amend and correct them, or at the haruеſt roote vp the teares, and fanne out the chaffe. Let the godly trauaile to fortifie themſelues with theſe armoures, leaſt while they ſeeme to themſelues ſtrong and couragious reuengers of righteouſneſſe, they depart from the kingdome of heauen, which is the onely kingdome of righteouſneſſe. For ſith it is Gods will to haue the communion of his Church to be kept in this outward fellowſhip: he that for hatred of euill men doth breake the token of that fellowſhip, entereth into a way wherby is a ſlippery falling from the communion of Saints. Let them thinke that in a great multitude there be many truly holie and innocent before the eies of the Lord, whom they ſee not. Let them thinke that euen of them that be diſeaſed there be many that doe not pleaſe or flatter themſelues in their faults, but being now and then awaked with earneſt feare of God doe aſpire to a greater vprightneſſe. Let them thinke that iudgement ought not to be giuen of a man by one deede: foraſmuch as the holieſt doe ſometime fall away with a moſt grieuous fall. Let them thinke that to gather a Church there leueth more weight both in the miniſtery of the word and in the partaking of the holy myſteries, than that all that force ſhould vaniſh away by the fault of ſome wicked men. Laſt of all let them conſider, that in iudging the Church, the iudgement of God is of greater value than the iudgement of man.

The ſurlineſſe of ſome by reaſon of pride, & a vaine opinion of their owne holineſſe, which by fiue eſpeciall conſiderations may be alated. Contra. Par. lib. 3. cap. 1.

Eiuſd. li. c. 2.

17 Where alſo they pretend that the Church is not without cauſe called holy, it is meet to weigh with what holineſſe it excelleth: leaſt if we will admit no church but ſuch a one as is in all poines perfect, we leaue no Church at all: It is true indeed which Paul ſaith, that Chriſt gaue himſelfe for the Church to ſanctifie it: that he clenſed it with the lauer of water with the word of life, to make her vnto himſelfe a glorious ſpouſe hauing no ſpot, or wrinckle, &c. Yet this is alſo nothing leſſe true, that the Lord daily worketh in ſmoothing her wrinkles and wiping away her ſpots. Whereupon followeth that her holineſſe is not yet fully finiſhed. Therefore the Church is ſo holy, that it daily profiteth and is not yet perfect: daily proceedeth, and is not yet come to the marke of holines: as alſo in another place ſhall be more largely declared. Wheras therfore the Prophets propheeie that there ſhal be a holy Hieruſalem, through which ſtrangers ſhall not paſſe: and a holy temple wherinto vncleane men ſhal not enter: let vs not ſo take it, as if there were no ſpot in the members of the church: but for that with their whole endeuour to aspire to holinesse and sound pureneſſe, by the goodneſſe of God cleanneſſe is aſcribed vnto them, which they haue not yet fully obtained. And although oftentimes there be but rare tokens of ſuch ſanctification among men: yet we muſt determine that there hath beene no time ſince the creation of the world wherein the Lord hath not had his Church, and that there ſhall alſo be no time to the very end of the world, wherein he ſhall not haue it. For albeit immediately from the beginning, the whole kinde of men is corrupted and defiled by the ſinne of Adam: yet out of this, as it were a polluted maſſe, God alway ſanctifieth ſome veſſels vnto honor, that there ſhould be no age without feeling of his mercie. Which he hath teſtified by certaine promiſes, as theſe: I haue ordained a teſtament to my elect: I haue ſworne to Dauid my ſeruant, I will for euer continue thy ſeed: I will build thy ſeate in generation and generation. Againe, the Lord hath choſen Sion, he hath choſen it for a dwelling to himſelfe: This is my reſt for euer, &c. Againe, theſe things ſaith the Lord which giueth the Sunne for the light of the day, the Moone and ſtars for the light of the night. If theſe lawes ſhall faile before me, then the ſeed of Iſrael ſhall alſo faile.

The corruption of the Church in the Prophets times.

18 Hereof Chriſt himſelfe, the Apoſtles, and in a maner all the Prophets haue giuen vs example. Horrible are thoſe deſcriptions wherein Eſay, Hieremie, Ioel, Abacuc, and the other doe lament the ſickneſſes of the Church of Hieruſalem. In the common people, in the magiſtrate, in the Prieſts all things were ſo corrupt, that Eſay doubteth not to match Hieruſalem with Sodom and Gomorrah. Religion was partly deſpiſed, partly defiled: in their maners, are commonly reported thefts, extortions, breaches of faith, murthers and like miſchiefes. Yet therefore the Prophets did neither erect to themſelues new Churches, nor build vp new altars on which they might haue ſeuerall ſacrifices: but of whatſoeuer maner of men they were, yet becauſe they conſidered, that God had left his word with them, and ordained ceremonies whereby he was there worſhipped, in the midſt of the aſſemblie of the wicked they held vp pure hands vnto him. Truely if they had thought that they did gather any infection thereby, they would rather haue died a hundred times than haue ſuffered themſelues to be drawen thereunto. Therefore nothing withheld them from departing, but deſire to the keeping of vnitie. But if the Prophets thought it againſt conſcience, to eſtrange themſelues from the Church for many and great wicked doings, not of one or two men, but in a maner of the whole people: then we take too much vpon vs, if we dare by and by depart from the comunion of that Church, where not all mens maners doe ſatisfie either our iudgement, yea or the Chriſtian profeſſion.

The Church of of Ieruſalem in the daies of Chriſt and his Apoſtles.

19 Now what maner of world was there in the time of Chriſt and the Apoſtles? And yet that deſperate vngodlineſſe of the Phariſees, and the diſſolute licentiouſneſſe of liuing, which then each where reigned, could not hinder, but that they vſed the ſame ceremonies with the people, and aſſembled with the reſt into one temple to the publike exerciſes of religion. Whereof came that, but becauſe they knew that the fellowſhip of euill men did not defile them, which with a pure conſcience did communicate at the ſame ceremonies? If any man bee little moued with the Prophets and Apoſtles, let him yet obey the authoritie of Chriſt. Therefore Cyprian wel ſaith, though there be ſeene tares or vncleane veſſels in the Church, yet there is no cauſe why wee ſhould depart from the Church: we muſt onely labour that we may be wheate: wee muſt vſe diligence and endeuour as much as wee may that we may be a golden or ſiluer veſſell. But to breake the earthen veſſels, is the onely worke of the Lord, to whom alſo is giuen an iron rod. And let no man chalenge to himſelfe that which is properly belonging to the Sonne onely, to bee able alone to fanne the floore, and cleanſe the chaffe, and ſeuer all the tares by mans iudgement. This is a proud obſtinacie, and preſumption full of ſacriledge, which a peruerſe furie taketh to it ſelfe, &c. Therefore let both theſe things remaine certainely fixed. Firſt he that hath no excuſe, that of his owne will forſaketh the outward communion of the Church. Where the word of God is preached and the Sacraments miniſtred: then that the faultes of a few or of many are no hinderance, but that we may therein rightly profeſſe our faith by the Ceremonies inſtitute by God: becauſe a godly conſcience is not hurt by the vnworthines of any other either paſtor or priuate man, and the myſteries are to a holy and vpright man neuertheles pure & wholsom becauſe they are altogether handled of vncleanmen.

20 Their preciſeneſſe and diſdainfulneſſe proceedeth yet further: becauſe they acknowledge no Church but ſuch a one as is pure from all ſpots be they neuer ſo ſmall: yea they are angry with good teachers, for that in exhorting the faithfull to go forward, they teach them all their life long to grone vnder the burden of vices, and to flee vnto pardon. For they prate that by this meane men be led from perfection. I grant indeed, that in earneſt calling vpon perfection we ought not ſlowly or coldly to trauell, much leſſe to be idle, but to fill our mindes with confidence thereof while we be yet in our courſe, I ſay, it is a diueliſh inuention. Therefore in the Creede the forgiueneſſe of ſins is aptly ioyned next after the Church. For none doe attaine it, but onely they that are citizens and of the houſhold of the Church as it is read in the Prophet. Therefore the building of the heauenly Hieruſalem ought to goe before, wherein afterward this mercifulneſſe of God may haue place, that whatſoeuer come vnto it, there iniquitie may be taken away. I ſay that it ought firſt to be builded, not for that there can be any Church without the forgiueneſſe of ſinnes, but becauſe the Lord hath not promiſed his mercie but in the communion of Saints. Therefore the firſt entry for vs into the Church and kingdome of God, is the forgiueneſſe of ſinnes, without which we haue no couenant or conioyning with God. For thus he ſaith by the Prophet, In that day I will ſtrike you a couenant with the beaſt of the field, with the foule of the aire, and with the vermine of the earth. I wil breake the ſword of warre from out of the earth, and I will make men to ſleepe without feare. I will eſpouſe you vnto me for euer. I will eſpouſe you (I ſay) in righteouſneſſe, in iudgement, in mercie, and in compaſſions. We ſee how by his mercie the Lord reconcileth vs to himſelfe. And ſo in another place, when he foreſaith that the people ſhall be gathered together againe, whom he had ſcattered abroad in his wrath, he ſaith, I will cleanſe them from all wickedneſſe wherewith they haue ſinned againſt me. Wherefore by the ſigne of waſhing we enter into the fellowſhip of the Church, whereby we may be taught that there is no entry open for vs into the houſhold of God, vnleſſe our filthineſſe be firſt wiped away with his goodneſſe.

Iere.33.8.

21 But by the forgiueneſſe of ſinnes the Lord doth not onely receiue and adopt vs once into the Church, but by the ſame he alſo preſerueth and maintaineth vs ſtill in it. For to what purpoſe were it, to haue ſuch a pardon granted vs, as ſhould ſerue for no vſe? But euery one of the godly is a witneſſe to himſelfe that the mercie of God ſhould be vaine and mocking, if it ſhould be granted onely but once: becauſe there is none that is not in his owne conſcience priuie throughout his whole life of many weakneſſes, which neede the mercie of God. And truely not in vaine God promiſeth this grace peculiarly to them of his owne houſhold: and not in vaine he commandeth the ſame meſſage of reconciliation to be daily offered vnto them. Therefore as throughout all our life we carry about vs the remnants of ſinne, vnleſſe we be ſuſtained with the continuall grace of the Lord in forgiuing our ſinnes, we ſhall ſcarcely abide one moment in the Church. But the Lord hath called his vnto eternall ſaluation. Therefore they ought to thinke that there is pardon alwaies ready for their ſinnes. Wherefore we ought to hold aſſuredly, that by the liberalitie of God by meane of Chriſts deſeruing through the ſanctification of the Spirit, ſinnes haue beene and are daily pardoned to vs which be called and graffed into the bodie of the Church.

By remiſſion of ſinnes men not onely receiued into; but alſo kept and continued in the Church of Chriſt.

22 To deale this benefit vnto vs, the keies were giuen to the Church. For when Chriſt gaue the Apoſtles commandement, and deliuered them power to forgiue ſinnes, he meant not this onely; that they ſhould looſe them from ſinnes that were from vngodlineſſe conuerted to the faith of Chriſt: but rather that they ſhould continually execute this office among the faithfull. Which thing Paul teacheth, when he writeth that the embaſſage of reconciliation was left with the miniſters of the Church, whereby they ſhould oftentimes in Chriſts name exhort the people to reconcile themſelues to God. Therefore in the communion of Saints, by the miniſterie of the Church it ſelfe, ſinnes are continually forgiuen vs, when the Prieſts or Biſhops, to whom that office is committed, doe with the promiſes of the Goſpell confirme godly conſciences in hope of pardon and forgiueneſſe: and that as well publikely as priuately, according as neceſſitie requireth. For there bee very many, which for their weakneſſe doe neede

The keies committed to the Church, not for remiſſion of ſins to be warranted as well vnto faithfull men when they ſin, as vnto ſinners when they firſt become faithfull.

a ſingular attonement. And Paul reporteth that not onely in common preaching, but alſo in houſes he had teſtified the Faith in Chriſt, and ſeuerally admoniſhed euery one of the doctrine of ſaluation. Therefore we haue heere three things to be noted. Firſt, that with how great holineſſe ſoeuer the children of God doe excell, yet they be alway in this eſtate, ſo long as they dwell in a mortall body, that without forgiueneſſe of ſins they cannot ſtand before God. Secondly, that this benefit is ſo proper to the Church, that we cannot otherwiſe enioy it, but if we abide in the Communion thereof. Thirdly, that it is diſtributed vnto vs by the miniſters and Paſtors, either by preaching of the Goſpell, or by miniſtring of the Sacraments: and that in this behalfe principally appeareth the power of the keies, which the Lord hath giuen to the fellowſhip of the faithfull. Wherfore let euery one of vs thinke this to be his duty, no where elſe to ſeeke forgiueneſſe of ſinnes, than where the Lord hath ſet it. Of publike reconciliation which belongeth to diſcipline we ſhall ſpeake in place fit for it.

The error of Nouatians and Anabaptiſts, who, as if baptiſme did make men Angels, deny pardon vnto ſinners that are baptiſed.

23 But for as much as thoſe phrantike ſpirits that I haue ſpoken of, doe goe about to plucke away from the Church this only anchor of ſaluation, conſciences are the more ſtrongly to be confirmed againſt ſo peſtilent an opinion. The Nouatians in old time troubled the Church with this doctrine: but not much vnlike to the Nouatians our age alſo hath many of the Anabptiſts which fall to the ſame dotages. For they faigne that the people of God are in Baptiſme regenerate into a pure and Angelike life, that is corrupted with no filthineſſe of the fleſh. But if any man offend after baptiſme, they leaue vnto him nothing but the vnappeaſeable iudgement of God. Briefely they grant no hope of pardon to a ſinner fallen after grace receiued: becauſe they acknowledge no other forgiueneſſe of ſinnes but that whereby we be firſt regenerate. But although there be no lie more cleerely confuted by the Scriptures: yet becauſe theſe men finde ſome whom they may deceiue (as alſo in old time Nouatus had many followers) let vs ſhortly ſhew how mad they bee to their owne and others deſtruction. Firſt, whereas by the commandement of the Lord, the holy ones doe daily repeate this praier, forgiue vs our debts: truely they doe confeſſe themſelues debters. Neither doe they craue it in vaine becauſe the Lord hath alway appointed no other thing to be asked, than that which he himſelfe would giue. Yea, whereas he hath teſtified that the whole praier ſhall be heard of his father, yet he hath alſo ſealed this abſolution with a peculiar promiſe. What will we more? The Lord requireth of the holy ones all their life long a confeſſion of ſinnes, yea and that continuall, and promiſeth pardon. What boldneſſe is it, either to exempt them from ſinne, or if they haue ſtumbled, vterly to exclude them from grace? Now whom doth he will vs to forgiue ſeuentie times ſeauen times? not to our brethren? To what end did he command it, but that we ſhould follow his clemency? He forgiueth therefore, not once or twiſe: but as often as being ſtricken downe with the acknowledging of ſins they ſigh vnto him.

Gen. 34. 25.

24 But (that we may begin in a maner at the verie ſwadling clouts of the church) the Patriarches were circumciſed, being allured into partaking of the couenant, hauing vndoubtedly by their fathers diligence beene taught righteouſneſſe and innocencie, when they conſpired to murther their brother: this was a miſcheeuous act, to be abhorred euen of the moſt deſperate theeues. At the laſt being meekned with the monitions of Iudas, they ſould him: this was alſo an intollerable hainouſneſſe. Simeon and Leui with wicked reuenge, and ſuch as was alſo condemned by their owne fathers iudgement, vſed cruelty againſt the Sichemites. Ruben with moſt vncleane luſt defiled his fathers bed. Iudas when he would giue himſelfe to fornication againſt the law of nature, went to his ſonnes wife. And yet ſo far are they from being wiped out of the choſen people, that they be rather raiſed vp to be heads of it. But what did Dauid? when he was a gouernour of iuſtice, with how great wickedneſſe did hee by ſhedding of innocent blood open the way to his blinde luſt? Hee was already regenerate and among the regenerate garniſhed with notable praiſes of the Lord: neuertheleſſe hee committed that hainous offence, which is horrible euen among the Gentiles: and yet hee obtained pardon. And (that wee may not tarrie vpon ſingle examples) how many promiſes there are in the Law and the Prophets of Gods mercie toward the Iſraelites, ſo oft it is prooued that the Lord ſheweth himſelfe appeaſeable to the the offences of his people. For what doth Moſes promiſe to come to paſſe, when the people being fallen into Apoſtaſie ſhall returne vnto the Lord? He ſhall bring thee backe out of captiuitie, and ſhall haue mercie on thee, and ſhall gather thee together out of the peoples to whom thou haſt beene diſperſed. If thou be ſcattered euen to the borders of the heauen, I will from thence againe gather thee together. Deut. 30 3.

25 But I will not begin a recitall that ſhould neuer be ended. For the Prophets are full of ſuch promiſes, which doe yet offer mercy to the people couered with infinite wicked doings. What offenee is there more hainous than rebellion? for it is called a diuorce betweene God and the Church. But this is ouercome by the goodnes of God. What man is there (ſaith he by Ieremie) that if his wife giue foorth her bodie in common to the adulterers, can abide to returne into fauor with her? but with thy fornication all thy waies are polluted, O Iuda, the earth hath beene filled with thy filthy loues. But returne vnto mee, and I will receiue thee. Returne thou, turne away, I will not turne away my face from thee: becauſe I am holy, and am not angry for euer. And truely he can be no otherwiſe minded, which affirmeth that he willeth not the death of a ſinner, but rather that he ſhould be conuerted and liue. Therefore when Salomon did dedicate the temple, he appointed it alſo to this vſe, that the praiers made for obtaining pardon of ſinnes ſhould be heard from thence. If (ſaid he) thy ſonnes ſhall ſinne (for there is no man that ſinneth not) and thou being angry ſhalt deliuer them to their enemies, and they ſhall repent in their heart, and being turned ſhall entreat thee in their captiuitie, ſaying, we haue ſinned, we haue done wickedly, and ſhall pray toward the land which thou haſt giuen to their fathers, and toward this holy temple: thou ſhalt heare their prayers in heauen, and ſhalt be made mercifull to thy people that hath ſinned againſt thee, and to all their wickednesſes wherewith they haue offended thee. And not vainely the Lord ordained in the law daily ſacrifices for ſinnes. For if the Lord had not foreſeene that his people ſhould be troubled with continuall diſeaſes of ſins, he would neuer haue appointed theſe remedies for them.

26 Was this benefit taken away from the faithfull, by the comming of Chriſt, wherein the fulneſſe of grace was ſhewed forth, ſo that they dare not now pray for pardon of ſins? that if they offend the Lord they may not obtaine any mercie? What ſhall this be elſe, but to ſay that Chriſt came to the deſtruction of them that be his, and not to their ſaluation, if that mercifulneſſe of God in pardoning ſinnes which in the olde teſtament was continually readie for the holy ones, be now ſaid to be vtterly taken away? But if we beleeue the Scriptures which expreſly cry out, that in Chriſt onely the grace and kindneſſe of the Lord fully appeared, that the plentifulneſſe of mercie was powred out, that the reconciliation of God and men was fulfilled: let vs not doubt that there floweth vnto vs a more bountifull mercifulneſſe of the heauenly father, than that it is cut off or ſhortned. And hereof there want not examples. Peter which had heard that he ſhould be denied before the Angels of God that confeſſed not the name of Chriſt before men, denied him thriſe in one night, and that not without execration: yet he was not put away from pardon. They that liued inordinately among the Theſſalonians are ſo chaſtiſed, that yet they be gently called to repentance. Euen Simon the Magician himſelfe is not caſt in deſperation, but he is rather commanded to hope well, when Peter counſelleth him to flee to prayer.

Sin after baptisme not onely through ignorance but willingly committed, yet pardonable.

28 Some that be somewhat wiser, when they see the doctrine of Nouatus to be confuted with so great plainenesse of Scripture, make not euery sin vnpardonable, but wilful transgressing of the Law, into which a man wittingly and willingly falleth. Now they that say so, doe vouchsafe to grant pardon to no sinne, but where a man hath erred by ignorance. But whereas the Lord in the law commandeth one sort of Sacrifices to be offered for cleansing of the wilfull sinnes of the faithfull, and other to redeeme their ignorances: how great lewdnesse shall it be to grant no cleansing to wilfull sinne? I say that there is nothing plainer, than that the onely sacrifice of Christ availeth to forgiue the wilfull sins of the holy ones: forasmuch as the Lord hath testified the same by carnall Sacrifices as by signes. Againe who can excuse Dauid by ignorance, whom it is euident to haue beene so well instructed in the Law? Did Dauid not know how great was the fault of adultery and manslaughter, which daily punished the same in other? Did brother slaughter seeme to the Patriarkes a lawfull thing? Had the Corinthians so ill profited that they thought that wantonnesse, vncleanesse, whoredome, hatreds, and contentions pleased God? Did Peter being so diligently admonished not know how great a matter it was to forsweare his master? Therfore let vs not with our owne enuiousnesse stop vp the way against the mercy of God that so gently vttereth it selfe.

In what sense the fathers doe sometimes teach that repentance is no more iterable than baptisme.

29 Truely I am not ignorant that the old writers expound those sinnes that are daily forgiuen to the faithfull, to be the light offences that creepe in by weaknesse of the flesh: and that they thought that the solemne repentance which was then required for hainous misdeeds might no more be iterate than Baptisme. Which saying is not so to be taken, as though they would either throw them downe hadlong into desperation that after their first Repentance had fallen againe, or extenuate those other sinnes as though they were small in the sight of God. For they knew that the holy ones doe oftentimes stagger by infidelity, that superfluous othes doe sometimes fall from them, they now and then are chafed vnto anger, yea that they breake out euen into manifest railings, and beside these be troubled with other euils which the Lord not slenderly abhorreth: but they so called them, to put a difference between them and publike crimes that with great offence came to the knowledge of the Church. But whereas they did so hardly pardon them that had committed any thing worthy of Ecclesiasticall correction, they did not this therefore, because they thought that such should hardly haue pardon with the Lord: but by this seuerity they meant to make other afraid that they should not rashly run into wicked dooings, by the deseruing whereof they might be estranged from the Communion of the Church: howbeit truely the word of the Lord which herein ought to be the onely rule vnto vs, appointeth a greater moderation. For it teacheth that the rigor of discipline is so far to be extended, that he that ought chiefly to be prouided for be not swallowed vp with heauines: as we haue before declared more at large.

THE SECOND CHAPTER.

A comparison of the false Church with the true Church.

Some faults do corrupt and some destroy the Church.

OF how great value the ministery of the word and Sacraments ought to be with vs and how far the reuerence of it ought to proceed, that it be vnto vs a perpetuall token whereby to discerne the Church, it hath beene already declared. That is to say, whersoeuer the ministerie abideth whole and vncorrupted, there the faults or diseases of maners are no impediment but that it may beare the name of a Church. Then, that the verie ministerie it selfe is by small errors not so corrupted, but that it may be esteemed lawfull. Moreouer we haue shewed that the errours that ought so to be pardoned are those whereby the principall doctrine of religion is not hurt, whereby those chiefe points of religion that ought to be agreeably holden among the Faithfull are not destroyed, and in the Sacrament, those that doe not abolish nor impaire the lawfull institution of him that ordained them. But so soone as lying is broken into the the chiefe tower of religion, ſo ſoone as the ſumme of neceſſarie doctrine is peruerted, and the vſe of the Sacraments faileth: truly the deſtruction of the Church followeth: like as a mans life is at an end, when his throate is thruſt through or his hart deadly wounded. And this is clearely prooued by the words of Paul, when he teacheth, that the foundation of the Church is laid vpon the doctrine of the Apoſtles and Prophets, Chriſt himſelfe being the head corner ſtone. If the foundation of the Church be the doctrine of the Prophets and Apoſtles, by which the Faithfull are commanded to repoſe their ſaluation onely in Chriſt: then take away that doctrine, and how ſhall the building ſtand any longer? Therefore the Church muſt needs fall downe where that ſumme of religion falleth which is onely able to vphold it. Againe, if the true Church be the piller and ſtay of the truth, it is certaine, that there is no Church, where lying and falſhood haue vſurped the dominion. Eph. 2. 20. 2. Tim. 3. 15.

2 Sith it is in ſuch caſe vnder the Papiſtrie, we may vnderſtand how much of the Church is there remaining. In ſtead of the miniſterie of the word, there reigneth a peruerſe gouernment and made of lies mingled together, which partly quencheth and partly choaketh the pure light: Into the place of the Lords Supper is entred a moſt filthie ſacriledge: the forme of worſhipping God is deformed with a manifold and intollerable heape of ſuperſtitions: the doctrine, without which Chriſtianitie cannot ſtand, is altogether buried and driuen out: the publike aſſemblies are the ſchooles of idolatrie and vngodlineſſe. Therefore there is no perill leaſt in departing from a damnable partaking of ſo many miſchiefes, we be plucked from the Church of Chriſt. The communion of the Church was not ordained to this end that it ſhould be a bond whereby we ſhould be intangled with idolatrie, vngodlineſſe, ignorance of God, and other kinds of euils: but rather whereby we ſhould be faſt holden in the feare of God and obedience of truth. They doe indeed glorioufly ſet out their Church vnto vs, that there ſhould ſeeme to be no other Church in the world: and afterward, as though the victorie were gotten, they decree that all be Schiſmatikes that dare withdraw themſelues from the obedience of that Church that they paint out: and that all be heretikes that dare once mutter againſt the doctrine thereof. But by what prooſes doe they confirme that they haue the true Church? They alleage out of the ancient Chronicles, what in old time was in Italie, in France, in Spaine. They ſay that they fetch their beginning from thoſe holie men that with ſound doctrine founded and raiſed vp Churches, and ſtabliſhed the ſame doctrine and edifying of the Church with their blood. And that ſo the Church hath beene among them ſo conſecrate both with ſpirituall gifts, and with the blood of Martyrs, and preſerued with continuall ſucceſſion of Biſhops, that it might not fall away. They rehearſe how much Ireneus, Tertullian, Origen, Auguſtine, and other eſteemed this ſucceſſion. But how trifling theſe things be, and how they be but very mockeries, I will make them very eaſie to vnderſtand that will be content a little to weigh them with me. Truely I would alſo exhort themſelues earneſtly to take heed heereunto, if I did truſt that I might any thing preuaile with them by teaching. But for as much as they, leauing all regard of truth, doe bend themſelues to this onely purpoſe, by all the waies that they can, to defend their owne cauſe, I will onely ſpeake a few things whereby good men and thoſe that loue the truth, may winde themſelues out of their ſubtle cauillations. Firſt I aske of them, why they do not alleage Afrike, and Ægypt, and all Aſia? Euen becauſe in all thoſe countries this holie ſucceſſion of Biſhops hath ceaſed, by meane whereof they boaſt that they haue preſerued Churches. They come therefore to this point to ſay, that they therefore haue a true Church, becauſe ſince it firſt began to be, it hath not been deſtitute of Biſhops: for in perpetuall courſe they haue ſucceeded one another. But what if I caſt Greece in their way? Therefore I aske againe of them, why they ſay that the Church is loſt among the Grecians, among whom that ſucceſſion of Biſhops was neuer interrupted, which in their opinion is the onely keeper and preſeruer of the Church. They make the Grecians Schiſmatikes, and by what right? becauſe in departing from the Apoſtolike ſea, they haue loſt their priuiledge. What? Doe not they much more deſerue to looſe it that depart from Chriſt himſelfe? It followeth therefore, that the pretence of ſucceſſion is but vaine, vnleſſe the poſteritie doe keepe faſt and abide in the truth of Chriſt, which

The Church amongſt the Iewes vainely meaſured by outward things, as the glorie of the Temple, the pompe of Ceremonies, the ſucceſſiõ of Prieſts. Iere.7.4.

3 Therefore the Romaniſts at this day doe alleage nothing elſe but that which it appeareth that the Iewes in old time alleaged when they were by the Prophets of the Lord reprooued of blindneſſe, vngodlineſſe, and idolatrie. For they glorioufly boaſted of the Temple, Ceremonies and Prieſthoods, by which things, by great reaſon as they thinke they meaſured the Church. So in ſtead of the Church, they ſhew certaine outward viſors, that oftentimes are far from the Church, and without which the Church may very well ſtand. Therefore we neede to confute them with no other argument, then that wherewith Hieremie fought againſt the fooliſh preſumptuouſneſſe of the Iewes: that is, that they ſhould not boaſt in lying words, ſaying: The temple of the Lord, the temple of the Lord, it is the temple of the Lord. For as much as the Lord doeth no where acknowledge any thing for his, but where his word is heard, and reuerently obſerued. So when the glorie of God did ſit betweene the Cherubins in the Sanctuarie, and he had promiſed them that that ſhould be his ſtedfaſt ſeate: yet when the Prieſts once corrupted the worſhipping of him with peruerſe ſuperſtitions, he remooued elſe where, and left the place without any holineſſe. If the ſame temple which ſeemed to be holily appointed to the perpetuall dwelling of God, might be forſaken of God and become vnholie: there is no cauſe why theſe men ſhould faigne to vs that God is ſo bound to perſons or places, and ſo faſt tied to outward obſeruations, that he muſt needs abide with them that haue onely the title and ſhew of the Church. And this is it about which Paul contendeth in the Epiſtle to the Romanes, from the ninth Chapter to the twelfth. For this did ſore trouble weake conſciences, that the Iewes when they ſeemed to be the people of God, did not onely refuſe the doctrine of the Goſpell, but alſo perſecuted it. Therefore after that he hath ſet out the doctrine, he remooueth this doubt, and denieth that thoſe Iewes being enemies of the truth are the Church, howſoeuer they wanted nothing that otherwiſe might be required to the outward forme of the Church. And therefore he denieth it, becauſe they embrace not Chriſt. But ſomewhat more expreſſely in the Epiſtle to the Galathians: wherein comparing Iſmael with Iſaac, he ſaith that many hold place in the Church, to whom the inheritance belongeth not, becauſe they are not begotten of the free Mother. From whence alſo he deſcendeth to the compariſon of two Hieruſalems. Becauſe as the Law was giuen in the mount Sina, but the Goſpell came out of Hieruſalem: So many being ſeruilely borne and brought vp doe without doubting boaſt themſelues to be the children of God and of the Church, yea they proudly deſpiſe the naturall children of God, when themſelues be but baſtards. On the other ſide alſo, when we heare that it was once pronounced from heauen: Caſt out the bondwoman and her ſonne, let vs, ſtanding vpon this inuiolable decree, boldly deſpiſe their vnſauorie boaſtings. For if they be proud by reaſon of outward profeſſion, Iſmael was alſo circumciſed: if they contend by antiquitie, he was the firſt begotten, and yet we ſee that he is put away. If the cauſe be demanded, Paul aſſigneth it, for that none are accounted children, but they that are begotten of the pure lawfull ſeed of doctrine. According to this reaſon God denieth that he is bound to wicked Prieſts by this that he couenanteth with their Father Leui that he ſhould be his Angell or interpreter: yea, he turneth againſt themſelues their falſe boaſting, wherewith they were wont to riſe vp againſt the Prophets, that the dignitie of Prieſthood was to be had in ſingular eſtimation. This he willingly admitteth, and with the ſame condition he debateth with them, becauſe he is readie to keepe his couenant, but when they doe not mutually performe their part to him, they deſerue to be reiected. Loe what ſucceſſion auaileth, vnleſſe therewithall be alſo ioyned an imitation and euenly continuing courſe: euen to this effect, that the ſucceſſors, ſo ſoone as they be prooued to haue ſwarued from their originall, be depriued of all honor. Vnleſſe perhaps becauſe Caiphas ſucceeded many godly Biſhops (yea there was euen from Aaron to him a continuall vnbroken courſe of ſucceſſion) therefore that ſame miſchieuous aſſembly was worthie the name of the Church. But this were not tolerable euen in earthly dominions, that the tyranie of Caligula, Nero, Heliogabalus, and ſuch other, ſhould be called a true ſtate of Common weale, for that they ſucceeded the Brutes, Scipions, and Camilles. But ſpecially in the gouernement of the Church there is nothing more fond, than leauing the Doctrine to set the succession in the Persons onely. But neither did the holie Doctors whom they falsely thrust in vnto vs, meane any thing lesse, than to proove that precisely as it were by right of inheritance Churches be there, where Bishops are successiuely placed one after another. But where as it was then out of controuersie, that from the very beginning to that age nothing was changed in Doctrine, they alleaged that which might suffice to make an end of all new errours, that is, that by those was that doctrine oppugned, which had beene euen from the Apostles constantly and with one agreeing consent retained. There is therefore no cause, why they should any longer goe forward to deceiue by pretending a false colour vnder the name of the Church, which we do reuerently esteeme as becommeth vs: but when they come to the definition of it, not only water (as the common saying is) cleaueth vnto them, but they sticke fast in their owne myre because they put a stinking harlot in place of the holie spouse of Christ. That this putting in of a changeling should not deceiue vs, beside other admonitions, let vs remember this also of Augustine. For speaking of the Church, he sayeth: It is it that is sometime darkned and couered with multitude of offences as with a cloud: sometime in calmenesse of time appeareth quiet and free: sometime is hidden and troubled with waues of tribulations and temptations. He bringeth forth examples, that oftentimes the strongest pillers either valiantly suffered banishment for the faith, or were hidden in the whole world. Ad Vincent. epist. 48.

4 In like maner the Romanists doe vexe vs, and make afraid the ignorant with the name of the Church, whereas they be the deadly enemies of Christ. Therefore although they pretend the Temple, the Priesthood, and other such outward shewes, this vaine glistering wherewith the eies of the simple be dazeled ought nothing to mooue vs to graunt that there is a Church where the Word of God doth not appeare. For this is the perpetuall marke wherewith God hath marked them that be his. He that is of the truth (saith he) heareth my voice. Againe, I am that good shepheard, and I know my sheep, and am knowen of them. My sheep heare my voice, and I know them, and they follow me. And a little before he had said, that the sheepe follow their shepheard, because they knew his voice: but they follow not a stranger, but run away from him because they knew not the voice of strangers. Why are we therefore wilfullie mad in iudging the Church, whereas Christ hath marked it with an vndoubtfull signe, which wheresoeuer it is seene cannot deceiue, but that it certainely sheweth the Church to be there: but where it is not, there remaineth nothing that can giue a true signification of the Church. For Paul rehearseth that the Church was builded, not vpon the iudgements of men, nor vpon Priesthoods, but vpon the doctrine of the Apostles and Prophets. But rather Hierusalem is to be seuerally knowen from Babylon, and the Church of Christ from the conspiracie of Satan, by that difference wherewith Christ hath made them different one from the other. He that is of God (saith he) heareth the words of God: Ye therefore heare not, because ye are not of God. In a summe, forasmuch as the Church is the kingdome of Christ, and he reigneth not but by his word, can it be now doubtfull to any man, but that those be the words of lying, by which Christs kingdome is faigned to be without his Scepter, that is to say without his holie Word? Like pretenses vsed by Romanists to dazell the eies of the simple, and to vphold the estimation of their Church. Iohn 18. 3. Luk. 20. 14. Ephe. 2. 20. Iohn 8. 47.

5 But now whereas they accuse vs of Schisme and heresie, because we both preach a contrary doctrine to them, and obey not their lawes, and haue our assemblies to praiers, to baptisme, to the ministration of the Supper, and other holy doings, seuerally from them: it is indeed a very sore accusation, but such as needeth not a long or laborsome defence. They are called heretikes and schismatikes, which making a diuision, doe breake in sunder the communion of the Church. And this communion is holden togither with true bounds, that is to say, the agreement of true doctrine, and brotherly charitie. Wherupon Augustine putteth this difference betweene heretikes and schismatikes, that heretikes indeed doe with false doctrine corrupt the pureneſse of faith, but the schismetikes sometime euen where there is like faith, doe breake the bond of fellowship. But this is also to be noted, that this conioyning of charity so hangeth vpon the vnitie of Faith, that faith ought to be the beginning thereof, the end, and finally the only rule Let vs therefore remember that so oft as the vnitie of the Church is commended vnto vs, this is required, that while our mindes agree in Christ, our wils also may Our Churches by Romanists without iust cause accused of heresie and of Schisme. Lib. quæsti. Euang. sec. Matth.

may be ioined together with mutuall well willing in Christ. Therefore Paul when he exhorteth vs to that well willing, taketh for his foundation that there is one God, one Faith, and one Baptisme. Yea whersoeuer he teacheth vs to be of one minde, and of one will, he by and by addeth in Christ, or according to Christ: meaning, that it is a factious companie of the wicked, and not agreement of the faithfull which is without the word of the Lord.

Eph. 4. 5.

Phil. 2. 2. & 5.

The vndiuidable vnitie of the Church: the ground and bond whereof is truth.

6 Cyprian also following Paul deriueth the whole fountaine of the agreement of the Church, from the onely Bishoprick of Christ. He afterward addeth the Church is but one, which spreadeth abroade more largely into a multitude with increase of fruitfulnesse: like as there be many sunne beames, but one light: and many branches of a tree, but one body grounded vpon a fast roote: And when many streames doe flowe from one fountaine, although the number seeme to be scattered abroade by largenesse of ouerflowing plentie, yet the vnitie abideth in the originall. Take away a beame of the sunne from the body, the vnitie can suffer no diuision. Breake a branch from the tree, the broken branch cannot spring. Cut off the streame from the spring head, being cut off it drieth vp. So also the Church being ouerspred with the light of the Lord, is extended ouer the whole world: yet there is but one light that is spred euery where. Nothing could be said more fitly to expresse that vndiuidable knitting together, which all the members of Christ haue one with another. We see how he continually calleth vs backe to the very head. Whereupon he pronounceth that heresies and schismes doe arise hereof, that men doe not returne to the originall of truth, nor doe seeke that head, nor keepe the doctrine of the heauenly Master. Now let them go and cry that we be heretikes that haue departed from their church: sith there hath beene no cause of our estranging from them but this one, that they can in no wise abide the pure professing of the truth: but I tell not how they haue driuen vs out with cursings and cruell execrations. Which very selfe doing doth aboundantly enough acquite vs, vnlesse they will also condemne the Apostles for schismatikes, with whom we haue all one cause. Christ (I say) did foresay to his Apostles, that the time should come when they should be cast out of the Synagogues for his name sake. And those Synagogues of which he speaketh, were then accounted lawfull Churches. Sith therefore it is euident that we be cast out, and we be readie to shew that the same is done for the names sake of Christ, truly the cause ought first to be inquired of, before that any thing be determined vpon vs, either one way or other. Howbeit, if they will, I am content to discharge them of this point. For it is enough for me, that it behooued that we should depart from them, that we might come to Christ.

The Church and the defection of the Church of Israel.

7 But it shall appeere yet more certainely in what estimation we ought to haue all the Churches, whom the tyranie of that Romish idoll hath possessed, if it be compared with the old church of the Israelites, as it is described in the Prophets. There was then a true Church among the Iewes and Israelites, when they continued in the lawes of the couenant, for they obtained those things by the benefit of God, whereupon the Church consisteth. They had the truth of doctrine in the law: the ministerie thereof was among the Priests and Prophets: with the signe of circumcision they entred into religion: by other Sacraments they were exercised to the confirmation of Faith. It is no doubt that those titles wherewith the Lord hath honored his Church, fitly pertained to their fellowship. After that, forsaking the law of the Lord they went out of kind to idolatrie and superstition, they partly lost that prerogatiue. For who dare take away the name of the Church from them, with whom God hath left the preaching of his word and obseruation of his mysteries? Againe, who dare call that the Church without any exception, where the word of the Lord is openly and freely troden vnder foote? where the ministerie thereof, the chiefe sinew, yea the very soule of the Church is destroyed?

What was remaining of the Church in Iuda and Israel whē they were fallen to idolatrie.

8 What then? will some man say: was there therefore no parcell of a Church remaining among the Iewes after that they fell away to idolatry? The answer is easie. First I say that in the very falling away there were certaine degrees. For we will not say that there was all one fall of Iuda, and Israel, at such time as they both first swarued from the pure worshipping of God. When Ieroboam first made calues, against the the open prohibition of God, and did dedicate an vnlawfull place for worshiping, he did vtterly corrupt religion. The Iewes did first defile themselues with wicked and superstitious maners before that they wrongfully changed the order in the outward forme of religion. For although vnder Rechabeam they had already gotten them many peruerse Ceremonies: yet becausse there tarried at Hierusalem both the Doctrine of the Law, and the Priesthood, and the ceremonious vsages in such sort as God had ordained them, the godly had there a tolerable state of Church. Among the Israelites vnto the raigne of Achab, there was no amendment of things, and from thence foorth they fell from worse to worse. They that succeeded afterward, to the very destruction of the kingdome, partly were like vnto him, and partly (when they minded to be somewhat better than he) they followed the example of Ieroboam: but they all euery one were wicked and idolaters. In Iewry there were now and then diuerse changes, while some kings peruerted the worshipping of God with false and forged superstition, some other restored religion that was decaied: vntill the verie priests themselues defiled the Temple of God with prophane and habhominable vsages.

9 Now let the Papists if they can how much soeuer they extenuate their owne faults, deny that among them the state of religion is as corrupt & defiled as it was in the kingdome of Israel vnder Ieroboam. But they haue a grosser Idolatrie: and in doctrine they are not one drop purer: vnlesse peraduenture euen in it also they be more vnpure. God, yea all men that are endued but with a meane iudgement, shall be witnesses with me, and the thing it selfe also declareth, how herein I tell nothing more than truth. Now when they will driue vs to the communion of the Church, they require two things of vs: first, that we should communicate with all their praiers, sacraments, and Ceremonies: then that whatsoeuer honour, power and iurisdiction Christ giueth to his Church we should giue the same to their Church. As to the first point, I grant that all the Prophets that were at Hierusalem, when things were there very much corrupted, did neither seuerally sacrifice, nor had assemblies to pray seuerall from other men. For they had a commandement of God, whereby they were commanded to come together into Salomons temple: they knew that the Leuiticall Priests, howsoeuer they were vnworthy of that honour, yet becausse they were ordained by the Lord ministers of the holy ceremonies, and were not as then deposed, did yet still rightfully possesse that place. But (which is the cheife point of this question) they were compelled to no superstitious worshipping, yea they tooke in hand to doe nothing but that which was ordained by God. But among these men, I meane the Papists, what like thing is there? For we can scarcelie haue any meeting together with them, wherein we shall not defile our selues with open idolatrie. Truely the principall bond of their communion is in the Masse, which we abhorre as the greatest sacriledge. And whether we doe this rightfullie or wrongfully, shall be seene in another place. At this present it is enough to shew that in this behalfe we are in other case than the Prophets were, which although they were present at the ceremonies of the wicked, were not compelled to behold or vse any ceremonies but such as were instituted by God. And, if they will needs haue an example altogether like, let vs take it out of the kingdome of Israel. After the ordinance of Ieroboam Circumcision remained, the sacrifices were offered, the Law was accounted holy, the same God was called vpon whom they had receiued of their fathers: but for the forged and forbidden formes of worshipping, God disallowed and condemned all that was there done. Shew me one Prophet, or any one godly man that once worshipped or sacrificed in Bethell. For they knew they could not doe it, but that they should defile themselues with some sacriledge. Wee haue then thus much, that the communion of the Church ought not so farre to be of force with the godly, that if it should degenerate to prophane and filthy vsages, they should foorthwith of necessitie follow it.

The Church of Rome more corrupt than the Church of Israel vnder Ieroboam.

1. King. 12. 31.

10 But about the other point we contend yet more earnestly. For if the Church be so considered to be such, whose iudgement we ought to reuerence, whose authority to regard, whose monitions to obey, with whose chastisements to be moued, whose communion in all things we ought religiously to obserue: then we cannot grant them a Church, but that we must of necessity be bound to subiection and obedience vnto it.

A Church degenerated and made prophane is no such church as we ought of neceſſitie to haue communion with and fellowſhip.

Yet we will willingly grant them that which the Prophets granted to the Iewes and Iſraelites of their time: when things were there in as good, yea or better ſtate. But we ſee how each where they crie out, that their aſſemblies are vnholy, to which it is no more lawfull to conſent than it is to deny God. And truely if thoſe were Churches, it followeth therefore that in Iſrael Helias, Micheas, and ſuch other: In Iurie, Eſay Ieremy, Oſee, and ſuch other of that ſort, whom the Prophets, Prieſts, and people of that time hated and deteſted worſe than any vncircumciſed men, were ſtrangers from the Church of God. If thoſe were Churches, than the Church was not the piller of trueth, but the ſtay of lying: not the tabernacle of the liuing God, but the receptacle of idols. Therfore it was needfull for them to depart from the conſent of thoſe aſſemblies, which was nothing elſe but a wicked conſpiracy againſt God. In like maner if any man acknowledge the aſſemblies at theſe daies being defiled with idolatrie, ſuperſtition, and wicked doctrine, to be ſuch in whoſe full communion a Chriſtian man ought tō continue euen to the conſent of Doctrine, he ſhall greatly erre. For if they be Churches, then they haue the power of the keies. But the keies are vnſeperably knit with the word, which is from thence quite driuen away. Againe, if they be Churches, then the promiſe of Chriſt is of force among them, whatſoeuer ye binde, &c. But they contrariwiſe doe baniſh from their communion all ſuch as doe profeſſe themſelues not fainedly the ſeruants of Chriſt. Therefore either the promiſe of Chriſt is vaine, or at leaſt in this reſpect they are not Churches. Finally, inſtead of the miniſtery of the word they haue ſchooles of vngodlineſſe, and a ſinke of all kinds of errours. Therefore either in this reſpect they are not Churches, or there ſhall remaine no token whereby the lawfull aſſemblies of the faithfull may be ſeuerally knowen from the meeting of Turkes.

Matt. 16. 19. and 18. 18. Iohn 20. 23.

The ſteps of a Church remaining as of old in the corrupt ſtate of Iſrael, ſo at this day amōgſt the Romaniſts.

11 But as in the old time there yet remained among the Iewes certaine peculiar prerogatiues of the Church, ſo at this day alſo we take not from the Papiſts ſuch ſteps as it pleaſed the Lord to haue remaining among them after the diſſipation of the Church. The Lord had once made his couenant with the Iewes. That ſame rather being vpholden by the ſtedfaſtneſſe of it ſelfe did continue with ſtriuing againſt their vngodlineſſe, than was preſerued by them. Therefore (ſuch was the aſſuredneſſe and conſtancie of Gods goodneſſe) there remained the couenant of the Lord, neither could his faithfulneſſe be blotted out by their vnfaithfulneſſe: neither could Circumciſion be ſo prophaned with their vncleane hands, but that it ſtill was the ſigne and ſacrament of that couenant. Whereupon the children that were borne of them, the Lord called his owne, which vnleſſe it were by ſpeciall bleſſing, belonged nothing to him. So when he hath left his couenant in France, Italie, Germanie, Spaine, England: ſince thoſe prouinces haue beene oppreſſed with the tyrannie of Antichriſt, yet that his couenant might remaine inuiolable, firſt he there preſerued Baptiſme, the teſtimonie of his couenant, which being conſecrate by his owne mouth retaineth her owne force notwithſtanding the vngodlineſſe of man: then, with his prouidence he hath wrought that there ſhould remaine other remnants, leaſt the Church ſhould be vtterly deſtroyed. And as oftentimes buildings are ſo pulled downe, that the fouudations and ruines remaine: ſo he hath not ſuffered his Church either to be ouerthrowen by Antichriſt from the very foundation, or to be laid euen with the ground (howſoeuer to puniſh the vnthankfulneſſe of men that had deſpiſed his word, he ſuffereth horrible ſhaking and diſſipation to chance) but euen after the very waſting he willed that the building halfe pulled downe ſhould yet remaine.

The Church of Rome not ſimple a Church, nor vtterly no Church, but a Church prophaned and vnlawfully ordered.

Dan. 9. 27. 2. Theſ. 2. 4.

12 Whereas therefore wee will not ſimply graunt to the Papiſts the title of the Church, we doe not therefore denie that there be Churches among them: but only we contend of the true and lawfull ordering of the Church: which is required in the communion both of the Sacraments which are the ſignes of profeſſion, and alſo ſpecially of doctrine. Daniel and Paul foretold that Antichriſt ſhould ſit in the temple of God. With vs we account the Biſhop of Rome the Captaine and Standard-bearer of that wicked and abhominable kingdome. Whereas his ſeate is placed in the temple of God, thereby is meant that his kingdome ſhall be ſuch as cannot aboliſh the name of Chriſt nor of his Church. Heereby therefore appeereth, that we doe not denie but that euen vnder his tyrannie remaine Churches, but ſuch as he hath prophaned with with vngodlineſſe full of ſacrilege, ſuch as he hath afflicted with outragious dominion, ſuch as he hath corrupted and in maner killed with euill and damnable doctrines, as with poiſoned drinks: ſuch wherein Chriſt lieth halfe buried, the Goſpell ouerwhelmed, godlineſſe baniſhed, the worſhipping of God in a maner aboliſhed: ſuch finally wherein all things are ſo troubled, that therein rather appeereth the face of Babylon than of the holie city of God. In a ſumme, I ſay that they be Churches, in reſpect that the Lord there maruellouſly preſerueth the remnants of his people howſoeuer they were diſperſed and ſcattered abroade, in reſpect that there remaine ſome tokens of the Church, eſpecially theſe tokens, the effectualneſſe whereof neither the craft of the diuell, nor the malicioufneſſe of man can deſtroy. But on the other ſide becauſe theſe marks are blotted out, which in this diſcourſe we ought principally to haue reſpect vnto, I ſay, that euery one of their aſſemblies and the whole bodie wanteth the lawfull forme of a Church.

THE THIRD CHAPTER.

Of the Teachers and Miniſters of the Church, and of their election and office.

NOw it is meet that we ſpeake of the order, by which it was the Lords will to haue this Church gouerned. For although in his Church he only muſt rule and raigne, yea and beare preheminence or excell in it, and this gouernment to be vſed or executed by his onely word: yet becauſe he dwelleth not among vs in viſible preſence, ſo that he can preſently with his owne mouth declare his wil vnto vs, we haue ſaid that in this, he vſeth the miniſtery of men, and as it were the trauell of deputies, not in transferring his right and honour vnto them, but onely that by their mouth he might doe his owne worke, like as a workman to do his worke vſeth his inſtrument. I am compelled to repeate againe thoſe things that I haue alreadie declared. He might in deede do it either by himſelfe without any other help or inſtrument, or alſo by meane of Angels: but there are many cauſes why he had rather do it by men. For by this meane firſt he declareth his good will toward vs, when he taketh out of men them that ſhall do his meſſage in the world, that ſhall be the interpreters of his ſecret will, finally that ſhall repreſent his owne perſon. And ſo by experience he prooueth that it is not vaine that commonly he calleth vs his temples, when out of the mouthes of men, as out of his ſanctuarie, he giueth anſwers to men. Secondly, this is the beſt and moſt profitable exerciſe to humilitie, when he accuſtometh vs to obey his word, howſoeuer it be preached by men like vnto vs, yea ſometime our inferiours in dignitie. If he himſelfe ſpeake from heauen, it were no maruell if his holy Oracles were without delay reuerently receiued with the eares and minds of all men. For who would not dread his power being in preſence? Who would not be throwen downe at the firſt ſight of ſo great Maieſtie? Who would not be confounded with that infinite brightneſſe? But when ſome ſillie man riſen out of the duſt ſpeaketh in the name of God, heere with very good teſtimonie we declare our godlineſſe and reuerent obedience toward God himſelfe, if to his Miniſter we yeeld our ſelues willing to learne, which yet in nothing excelleth vs. Therefore for this cauſe alſo he hath hidden the treaſure of his heauenly wiſedome in brickle and earthen veſſels, that he might haue the certaine proofe how much he is eſteemed of vs. Moreouer there was nothing fitter for the cheriſhing of mutuall charitie, than that men ſhould be bound together one to an other with this bond, when one is made a Paſtor to teach the reſt, and they that are commanded to be ſchollers receiue all one doctrine at one mouth. For if euerie man were able enough to ſerue himſelfe, and needed not the help of an other: ſuch is the pride of mans nature, that euerie one would deſpiſe other, and ſhould againe be deſpiſed of them. Therefore the Lord hath bound his Church with that knot, which he foreſaw to be the ſtrongeſt knot to hold vnitie together, when he hath left with men the doctrine of ſaluation, and of eternall life, that by their hands he might communicate it to the reſt. Heereunto Paul had reſpect when he wrote to the Ephefians, One body one ſpirit, as alſo ye be called in one hope of your calling.

The reaſons why God would haue his Church to be gouerned by mē. Matt. 26. 11.

Aug. lib. 1. de doct. Chriſt.

1. Cor. 4. 7.

Ephe. 4. 4.

One Lord, one faith, one Baptiſme: One God, and the Father of all, which is aboue all, and by all, and in vs all. But vnto euery one of vs grace is giuen according to the meaſure of the gift of Chriſt. Wherefore he ſaith: When he was gone vp on high, he led captiuitie captiue, he gaue gifts to men. He that went downe, is the ſelfe ſame he, that went vp, that he might fulfill all things. And the ſame hath giuen ſome to be Apoſtles, and ſome Prophets, and ſome Euangeliſts, and otherſome Paſtors and teachers, vnto the reſtoring of the holie ones, to the worke of miniſtration, to the edifying of the body of Chriſt, vntill we come all into the vnitie of faith, and of the knowledge of the Sonne of God into a perfect man, into the meaſure of full growne age: that we be no more children that may be caried about with euery wind of doctrine: but following trueth in charitie, let vs in all things grow into him that is the head, euen Chriſt, in whom the whole bodie conioyned and compacted together by all the ioynt of ſubminiſtration, according to the working in meaſure of euery part, maketh encreaſe of the body, vnto the edifying of it ſelfe by charitie.

They ouerthrow the Church that impaire the authoritie of mans miniſterie in the Church.
Ephe.4.10.

2 By theſe words he ſheweth, that that miniſterie of men, which God vſeth in gouerning his Church is the cheefe ſinew, whereby the faithfull cleaue together in one body: and alſo he ſheweth that the Church can not otherwiſe be preſerued ſafe, but if it be vpholden by theſe ſtaies, in which it pleaſed the Lord to repoſe the ſaluation of it. Chriſt (ſaith he) is gone vp on high, that he might fulfill all things. This is the maner of fulfilling, that by his miniſters, to whom he hath committed that office, and hath giuen the grace to execute that worke, he diſpoſeth and diſtributeth his gifts to the Church, yea and after a certaine maner giueth himſelfe preſent, with extending the power of his ſpirit in this inſtitution, that it ſhould not be vaine or idle. So is the reſtoring of the holie ones performed: ſo is the body of Chriſt edified, ſo do we by all things grow into him that is the head, and doe grow together among our ſelues: ſo are we all brought into the vnitie of Chriſt, if prophecie flouriſh among vs, if we receiue the Apoſtles, if we refuſe not the doctrine miniſtred vnto vs. Therefore he goeth about the diſſipation, or rather the ruine and deſtruction of the Church, whoſoeuer he be, that either endeuoureth to aboliſh this order of whom we ſpeake, and this kind of gouernment, or miniſheth the eſtimation of it as a thing not ſo neceſſary. For neither the light and heate of the ſunne, nor meate and drinke are ſo neceſſary to nouriſh and ſuſtaine this preſent life, as the office of the Apoſtles and Paſtors is neceſſary to preſerue the Church in earth.

Ephe.4.12.

The honor and neceſſitie of Church miniſterie.
Eſay 52.7.
Mat.5.15. and 14.
Luk.10.16.

3 Therefore I haue aboue admoniſhed, that God hath oftentimes with ſuch titles as he could, commended the dignitie thereof vnto vs, that we ſhould haue it in moſt high honor and price, as the moſt excellent thing of all. He teſtifieth that he giueth to men a ſingular benefit, in raiſing them vp teachers, where he commandeth the Prophet to crie out, that faire are the feete, and bleſſed is the comming of them that bring tidings of peace: and when he calleth the Apoſtles the light of the world, and ſalt of the earth. Neither could this office be more honourablie aduanced, than it was when he ſayd: He that heareth you, heareth me: He that deſpiſeth you, deſpiſeth me. But there is no place more plaine, than in Paul in his ſecond Epiſtle to the Corinthians, where he as it were of purpoſe intreateth of this matter. He affirmeth therefore, that there is nothing in the Church more excellent or glorious than the Miniſterie of the Goſpell, foraſmuch as it is the adminiſtration of the Spirit, and of righteouſneſſe, and of eternall life. Theſe and like ſayings ſerue to this purpoſe, that that order of gouerning and preſeruing the Church by Miniſters, which the Lord hath ſtabliſhed for euer, ſhould not grow out of eſtimation among vs, and ſo at length by very contempt grow out of vſe. And how great is the neceſſitie thereof, he hath declared not onely by words, but alſo by examples. When his will was to ſhine more fully to Cornelius with the light of his truth, he ſent an Angell from heauen to ſend Peter vnto him. When his will was to call Paul to the knowledge of himſelfe, and to engraffe him into the Church, he ſpake not to him with his owne voyce, but ſent him to a man, of whom he ſhould receiue both the doctrine of ſaluation, and the ſanctification of baptiſme. If it be not done without cauſe, that an Angell which is the interpreter of God, do himſelfe abſtaine from declaring the will of God,

but commandeth that a man be ſent for, to declare it: and not without cauſe that Chriſt the only Schoolemaſter of the Faithful committeth Paul to the ſchooling of a man, yea euen that ſame Paul whom he had determined to take vp into the third heauen, and to vouchſafe to grant him miraculous reuelation of things vnſpeakeable: who is there now that dare deſpiſe that miniſterie, or paſſe it ouer as a thing ſuperfluous, the vſe whereof it hath pleaſed God to make approued by ſuch examples? 2. Cor. 12. 2.

4 They that haue rule of the gouernment of the Church according to the inſtitution of Chriſt, are named of Paul firſt Apoſtles, then Prophets, thirdly Euangeliſts, fourthly Paſtors, laſt of all Teachers. Of which, the two laſt alone haue ordinarie office in the Church: the other three the Lord raiſed vp at the beginning of his kingdome, and ſometime yet alſo raiſeth vp, as the neceſſitie of times requireth. What the Apoſtles office is, appeareth by that commandement: goe, preach the Goſpell to euery creature. There are not certaine boundes appointed vnto them: but the whole world is aſſigned them, to be brought into the obedience of Chriſt: that in ſpreading the Goſpell among all nations whereſoeuer they ſhall be able, they may each where raiſe vp his Kingdome. Therefore Paul, when he went about to prooue his Apoſtleſhip, rehearſeth that hee hath gotten to Chriſt not ſome one Citie, but hath far and wide ſpread abroad the Goſpell: and that he hath not laid his hands to another mans foundation, but planted Churches where the name of the Lord had neuer beene heard of. Therefore the Apoſtles were ſent to bring backe the world from falling away, vnto true obedience of GOD, and each where to ſtabliſh his kingdome by preaching of the Goſpell: or (if you like that better) as the firſt builders of the Church, to lay the foundations thereof in all the world. Prophets he calleth, not all expoſitors of Gods will whatſoeuer they be, but thoſe that by ſingular reuelation excelled, ſuch as at this time either bee none, or are leſſe notable. By Euangeliſts I vnderſtand thoſe, which when in dignitie they were leſſe than the Apoſtles, yet in office were next vnto them, yea and occupied their roomes. Such were Luke, Timothie, Titus, and other like: and peraduenture alſo the ſeuentie Diſciples, whom Chriſt appointed in the ſecond place after the Apoſtles. According to this expoſition (which ſeemeth to me agreable both with the words and meaning of Paul) thoſe three offices were not ordained in the Church to this end that they ſhould bee perpetuall, but onely to ſerue for that time wherein Churches were to bee erected, where were none before, or at leaſt to bee remooued from Moſes to Chriſt. Albeit I denie not, but that afterward alſo the Lord hath ſometime raiſed vp Apoſtles, or at leaſt in their places Euangeliſts, as it hath beene done in our time. For it was needfull to haue ſuch, to bring backe the Church from the falling away of Antichriſt. Yet the office it ſelfe I doe neuertheleſſe call extraordinarie, becauſe it hath no place in the Churches alreadie well ſet in order. Next after theſe are Paſtors and Teachers, whom the Church may neuer lacke: betweene whom I thinke that there is this difference, that the teachers are not appointed to beare rule of diſcipline, nor for the miniſtration of Sacraments, nor admoniſhments or exhortations, but onely to expound the Scripture, that pure and ſound doctrine may be kept among the faithfull. But the office of Paſtor containeth all theſe things within it.

Apoſtles, Prophets, Euangeliſts, appointed to haue extraordinarie, Paſtors and teachers to haue ordinarie gouernment of the Church. Ephe. 4. 12. Mark. 16. 15. Rom. 15. 19. & 20. Ephe. 4. 11.

Luke 10. 1. Luke 11.

5 Now we haue, which were thoſe miniſteries in the Church that continued but for a time, and which were thoſe that were ordained to endure perpetually. If wee ioyne the Euangeliſts with the Apoſtles, we ſhall haue remaining two couples after a certaine maner anſwering the one to the other. For as our teachers are like to the olde Prophets, in ſuch ſort are our Paſtors like to the Apoſtles. The office of Prophets was more excellent, by reaſon of the ſingular gift that they had of reuelation: but the office of teachers hath in a maner like order, and altogether the ſame end. So thoſe twelue whom the Lord did chooſe, that they ſhould publiſh abroad to the world the new preaching of the Goſpell, in degree and dignitie went before the reſt. For although by the meaning and propertie of the word, all the miniſters of the Church may bee rightly called Apoſtles, becauſe they are ſent of the Lord, and are his meſſengers: yet becauſe it was much behouefull, that there ſhould bee a certaine knowledge had of the ſending of them that ſhould bring a thing new and vnheard of,

The ſame charge of Apoſtles and Paſtors, ſauing that theſe haue each of them ſeuerall Churches to gouerne. Luk. 6. 13. Gal. 1. 1.

Rom.16.7. it was neceſſarie that thoſe twelue (to whoſe number Paul was afterward added) ſhould be garniſhed with ſome peculiar title aboue the reſt. Paul himſelfe in deede in Matt.10.1. one place giueth this name to Andronicus and Iunias, whom he ſaith to haue beene notable among the Apoſtles: but when he meaneth to ſpeake properly he referreth it to none other but to that principall degree. And this is the common vſe of the Scripture. Yet the Paſtors (ſauing that each of them doe gouerne ſeuerall Churches appointed to them) haue all one charge with the Apoſtles. Now what maner of thing this is, let vs heare it more plainely.

Matt.28.9. The office which the Apoſtles did performe to the whole world, and which Paſtors ought to performe to their ſeuerall flocks, conſiſteth in preaching the word, and miniſtring the ſacraments. 1.Cor.4.1. Tit.1.9. 6 The Lord when he ſent the Apoſtles, gaue them commandement (as we ſaid euen now) to preach the Goſpell, and to baptiſe them that beleeue vnto forgiueneſſe of ſinnes. He had before commanded, that they ſhould diſtribute the holie ſignes of his bodie and bloud, as he had done. Loe heere is a holie, inuiolable, and perpetuall lawe laid vpon them that ſucceede in the Apoſtles place, whereby they receiue commandement to preach the Goſpell, and miniſter the Sacraments. Whereupon we gather, that they which neglect both theſe things, doe falſely ſay that they beare the perſon of the Apoſtles. But what of the Paſtors? Paul ſpeaking not of himſelfe onely, but of them all, when he ſaith: Let a man ſo eſteeme vs as the miniſters of Chriſt, and diſtributers of the myſteries of God. Againe in another place, A Biſhop muſt be a faſt holder of that faithfull word which is according to doctrine: that he may be able to exhort by ſound doctrine, and to conuince the gainſayers. Out of thoſe and like places, which are each where to be found, we may gather, that alſo in the office of the Apoſtles theſe be the two principall parts, to preach the Goſpell, and to miniſter the Sacraments. As for the order of teaching, it conſiſteth not onely in publike ſermons, but belongeth alſo to priuat admonitions. So Paul calleth the Epheſians to witneſſe that he hath not fled from doing of any of thoſe things that were for their profit, but that he preached and taught them both openlie and in euery houſe, teſtifying both to the Iewes and Grecians, repentance and faith in Chriſt. Againe a little after: that he hath not ceaſed with teares to admoniſh euery one of them. Neither yet belongeth it to my purpoſe at this preſent to expreſſe all the qualities of a good Paſtor, but onely to point out what they profeſſe that call themſelues Paſtors: that is, that they are ſo made rulers of the Church, not that they ſhould haue an idle dignitie, but that they ſhould with the doctrine of Chriſt inſtruct the people to true godlineſſe, miniſter the holie myſteries, and preſerue and exerciſe vpright diſcipline. For who ſoeuer be ſet to be watchmen in the Church, the Lord declareth vnto them, that if any by their negligence periſh through ignorance, he will require the bloud at their hands. That alſo pertaineth to them all, which Paul ſaith of himſelfe: Woe to me vnleſſe I preach the Goſpell, foraſmuch as the diſtributing thereof is committed to me. Finally, what the Apoſtles performed to the whole world, the ſame ought euery Paſtor to performe to his flocke, to which he is appointed.

Act.20.20. Act.20.31. Ezec.13.17. 1.Cor.9.16.

How far foorth men are tied vnto ſeuerall charges. 7 Albeit when we aſſigne to euery one their ſeuerall Churches, yet in the meane while we do not denie but that he which is bound to one Church may help other Churches, if any troubleſome thing do happen that requireth his preſence, or if he be asked counſell of any darke matter. But foraſmuch as for the keeping of the peace of the Church, this policie is neceſſarie, that there be ſet foorth to euery man what he ſhould do, leaſt all be confuſedly diſordred, run about without calling, or raſhly run altogether into one place, and leaſt ſuch as are more carefull for their owne commoditie than for the edification of the Church, ſhould at their owne will leaue their Churches vacant: this ordering ought commonly to be kept ſo neere as may be, that euery man contented with his owne bounds, ſhould not breake into another mans charge. And this is no inuention of man, but the ordinance of GOD himſelfe. For wee reade that Paul and Barnabas created Prieſts in all the ſeuerall Churches of Lyſtra, Antioch, Iconium: and Paul himſelfe commandeth Titus that he ſhould appoint Prieſts in euerie towne. So in one place he ſpeaketh of the Biſhops of Philippes, and in another place of Archippus Biſhop of the Coloſſians. And there remaineth a notable Sermon of his in Luke, to the Prieſts of the Church of Epheſus. Whoſoeuer therefore ſhall take vpon him the gouerment and charge of the Church, let him know that he is bound to this law of Gods calling: not that as bound to the soyle (as the Lawyers tearme it) that is, made bound and fastened vnto it, he may not once moue his foote from thence, if the common profit do so require, so that it be done well and orderly: but he that is called into one place ought not himselfe to thinke of remouing, nor seeke to be deliuered as he shall thinke to be good for his commoditie. Then if it be expedient that any be remooued to another place, yet he ought not to attempt it of his owne priuate aduise, but to tary for publike authoritie.

With officers appointed for teaching, elders ioyned to gouerne the Church. Tit.1.5. Phil.1.1. Act.20.7.

8 But whereas I haue without difference called them Bishops, and Priests, and Pastors, and Ministers, that rule Churches: I did that according to the vsage of the Scripture, which indifferently vseth these words. For whosoeuer do execute the Ministerie of the word, to them he giueth the title of Bishops. So by Paul, where Titus is commanded to appoint Priests in euery towne, it is immediately added. For a Bishop must be vnreproueable, &c. So in another place he saluteth many Bishops in one Church. And in the Acts it is rehearsed, that he called together the Priests of Ephesus, whom he himselfe in his own sermon calleth Bishops. Heere now it is to be noted, that hitherto we haue recited none but those offices that stand in the Ministerie of the word: neither doth Paul make mention of any other in that fourth Chapter which we haue alleaged. But in the Epistle to the Romanes, and in the first Epistle to the Corinthians, he reckoneth vp other offices, as powers, the gift of healing, interpretation, gouernement, caring for the poore. Of the which I omitted those that endured but for a time, because it is to no profitable purpose to tary vpon them. But there are two that doe perpetually abide, that is to say, gouernment and care of the poore. Gouernours I thinke were the Elders chosen out of the people, that should together with the Bishops haue rule of the iudgement of maners, and the vsing of discipline. For a man cannot otherwise expound that which he saith: Let him that ruleth doe it with carefulnesse. Therefore at the beginning euery Church had their Senate, gathered of godly, graue, and holie men: which had that same iurisdiction in correcting of vices, whereof we shall speake heereafter. And that this was the order of more than one age, experience it selfe declareth. Therefore this office of gouernment is also necessarie for all ages.

Rom.12.8.

Deacons and widowes chosen to care for the poore and sicke. Rom.12.9.

9 The care of the poore was committed to the Deacons. Howbeit to the Romanes there are set two kindes. Let him that giueth (saith Paul in that place) do it in simplicitie: let him that hath mercie, doe it in cheerefulnesse. For as much as it is certaine that he speaketh of the publike offices of the Church, it must needs be that there were two seuerall degrees. Vnlesse my iudgement deceiue me, in the first point he meaneth Deacons, that distributed the almes: in the other he speaketh of them that had giuen themselues to looking to the poore and sicke: of which sort were the widowes of whom he maketh mention to Timothie. For women could execute no other publike office, but to giue themselues to the seruice of the poore. If we graunt this, (as we must needs graunt it) then there shall be two sorts of Deacons: of which, one sort shall serue in distributing the things of the poore, the other in looking to the poore of the Church themselues. But although the very word Diacenia, Deaconrie extendeth further: yet the Scripture specially calleth them Deacons, to whom the Church hath giuen the charge to distribute the almes, and to take care of the poore, and hath appointed them as it were stewards of the common treasurie of the poore: whose beginning, institution, and office, is described of Luke in the Acts. For when a murmuring was raised by the Grecians: for that in the ministerie of the poore their widowes were neglected, the Apostles excusing themselues with saying that they could not serue both offices, both the preaching of the word and the ministring at tables, required of the multitude, that there might be chosen seuen honest men, to whom they might commit that doing. Loe what maner of Deacons the Apostolike Church had, and what Deacons it were meete for vs to haue according to their example.

Order and seemlinesse especially required in church gouernment.

10 Now whereas in the holie assemblie all things are to be done in order and comely, there is nothing wherein that ought to be more diligentlie obserued, than in stablishing the order of gouernment: because there is no where greater perill if any thing be done vnorderly. Therefore to the end that vnquiet and troublesome men (which otherwise would happen) should rashly thrust in themselues to teach or to rule, it is expreſly prouided, that no man ſhould without calling take vpon him a publike office in the Church. Therefore that a man may be iudged a true miniſter of the Church, firſt he muſt be orderly called, then he muſt anſwere his vocation, that is to ſay, take vpon him and execute the duties enioyned him. This we may oftentimes marke in Paul: which when he meaneth to approoue his Apoſtleſhip, in a maner alway with his faithfulneſſe in executing his office he alleadgeth his calling. If ſo great a miniſter of Chriſt dare not take vpon himſelfe the authoritie that hee ſhould bee heard in the Church, but becauſe he both is appointed thereunto by the commandement of the Lord, and alſo faithfully performeth that which is committed vnto him: how great ſhamefulneſſe ſhall it be, if any man wanting both or either of theſe, ſhall challenge ſuch honor to himſelfe? But becauſe we haue aboue touched the neceſſitie of executing the office, now let vs entreat onely of the calling, Inward and outward calling of men to execute the miniſterie of the Church.

11 The diſcourſe thereof ſtandeth in fower points: that we ſhould know, what maner of miniſters, how, and by whom, miniſters ought to be inſtitute, and with what vſage or what ceremonie they are to be admitted. I ſpeake of the outward and ſolemne calling, which belongeth to publike order of the Church: as for that ſecret calling, whereof euery miniſter is priuie in his owne conſcience before God, and hath not the Church witneſſe of it, I omit it. It is a good witneſſe of our heart, that not by any ambition, nor couetouſneſſe, nor any other greedie deſire, but with pure feare of God and zeale to edifie the Church, we receiue the office offered vnto vs. That indeed is (as I haue ſaid) neceſſarie for euery one of vs, if we will approoue our miniſterie allowable before God. Neuertheleſſe he is rightly called in preſence of the Church, that commeth vnto it with an euill conſcience, ſo that his wickedneſſe be not open. They are woont alſo to ſay that euen priuate men are called to the miniſterie, whom they ſee to bee meete and able to execute it: becauſe verily learning ioyned with godlineſſe and with the other qualities of a good Paſtor, is a certaine preparation to the very office. For whom the Lord hath appointed to ſo great an office, he firſt furniſheth them with thoſe armours that are required to fulfill it, that they ſhould not come emptie and vnprepared vnto it. Whereupon Paul alſo to the Corinthians, when he meant to diſpute of the very offices, firſt rehearſed the gifts which they ought to haue that execute the offices. But becauſe this is the firſt ſort of thoſe fower points that I haue propounded, let vs now goe forward vnto it.

Act. 1 8.
1. Tim. 5. 22.

12 What maner of Biſhops it is meete to chooſe, Paul doth largely declare in two places, but the ſumme commeth to this effect, that none are to bee choſen, but they that are of ſo ſound doctrine, and of holy life, and not notable in any vice, which might both take away credit from them, and procure ſlander to the miniſterie. Of Deacons and Elders there is altogether like conſideration. It is alway to bee looked vnto, that they be not vnable or vnfit to beare the burden that is laid vpon them, that is to ſay, that they may be furniſhed with thoſe powers that are neceſſarie to the fulfilling of their office. So when Chriſt was about to ſend his Apoſtles, he garniſhed them with thoſe weapons and inſtruments which they could not want. And Paul when he had painted out the image of a good and true Biſhop, warneth Timothie, that he would not defile himſelfe with chooſing any man that differeth from it. I refer this word How, not to the Ceremonie of chooſing, but to the reuerent feare that is to be kept in the chooſing. Hereupon come the faſtings and praiers, which Luke recireth that the faithfull vſed when they made Prieſts. For whereas they vnderſtood that they medled with a moſt earneſt matter, they durſt attempt nothing, but with great reuerence and carefulneſſe. But they chiefly applied themſelues to praiers, whereby they might craue of God the ſpirit of counſell and diſcretion.

Apoſtles elected of God himſelfe.

13 The third thing that we haue ſet in our diuiſion was, by whom miniſters are to be choſen. Of this thing no certaine rule can be gathered out of the inſtitution of Apoſtles, which had ſome difference from the common calling of the reſt. For becauſe it was an extraordinarie miniſterie, that it might be made diſcernable by ſome more notable marke, it behooued that they which ſhould execute it, ſhould be called and appointed by the Lords owne mouth. They therefore tooke in hand their doing, being furniſhed by no mans election, but by the only commandement of God and of Chriſt.

Heereupon

Heereupon commeth that when the Apoſtles would put another in the place of Iudas, they durſt not certainly name any one man, but they brought foorth two, that the Lord ſhould declare by lot, whether of them he would haue to ſucceed. After this maner alſo it is meete to take this, that Paul denieth that he was create Apoſtle of men or by man, but by Chriſt and God the father. That firſt point, that is to ſay of men, he had common with all the godly miniſters of the word. For no man could rightly take vpon him that execution, but he that were called of God. But the other point was proper and ſingular to himſelfe. Therefore when he glorieth of this, he doth not only boaſt that he hath that which belongeth to a true and lawfull Paſtor, but alſo bringeth foorth the ſignes of his Apoſtleſhip. For when there were ſome among the Galathians, which trauelling to diminiſh his authoritie, made him ſome meane diſciple, put in office vnder them by the principall Apoſtles: hee, to defend in ſafetie the dignitie of his preaching, which hee knew to be ſhot at by thoſe ſubtile deuiſes, needed to ſhew himſelfe in all points nothing inferiour to the other Apoſtles. Therfore hee affirmeth that hee was choſen, not by the iudgement of men, like ſome common Biſhop, but by the mouth and maniſeſt Oracle of the Lord himſelfe. Act. 1. 13.

Gal. 1. 12.

14 But no man that is ſober will deny, that it is according to the order of lawfull calling, that Biſhops ſhould be appointed by men: foraſmuch as there are ſo many teſtimonies of the Scripture for proofe thereof. Neither doth that ſaying of Paul make to the contrary, as it is ſaid, that he was not ſent of men, nor by men: for aſmuch as he ſpeaketh not there of the ordinary chooſing of Miniſters, but chalengeth to himſelfe that which was ſpeciall to the Apoſtles. Howbeit God alſo appointed Paul by himſelfe by ſingular prerogatiue, that in the meane time he vſed the diſcipline of Eccleſiaſticall calling. For Luke reporteth it thus, when the Apoſtles were faſting and praying, the Holy Ghoſt ſaid: Separate vnto me Paul and Barnabas to the worke to which I haue ſeuerally choſen them. To what purpoſe ſerued that ſeparation and putting on of hands, ſith the holy Ghoſt hath teſtified his owne election, but that the diſcipline of the Church in appointing miniſters by men, might be preſerued? Therefore the Lord could by no plainer example approoue ſuch order, than he did when hauing firſt declared that he had ordained Paul an Apoſtle for the Gentiles, yet he willeth him to be appointed by the Church. Which thing we may ſee in the chooſing of Mathias. For becauſe the office of Apoſtleſhip was of ſo great importance, that they durſt not by their owne iudgement chooſe any one man vnto that degree, they did ſet two men in the middeſt, vpon the one of whom the lot ſhould fall: that ſo both the election might haue an open teſtimony from heauen, and yet the policy of the Church ſhould not be paſſed ouer.

Biſhops lawfully called by men.

Gal. 1. 1.

Act. 13. 2.

Act. 1. 23.

15 Now it is demanded whether the miniſter ought to be choſen of the whole Church, or onely of the other of the ſame office, and of the Elders that haue the rule of diſcipline, or whether he may be made by the authority of one man. They that giue this authority to one man, alleage that which Paul ſaith to Titus: Therefore I haue left thee in Creta, that thou ſhouldeſt appoint in euery towne Prieſts. Againe to Timothy: laie not hands quickly vpon any man. But they are deceiued if they thinke that either Timothy at Epheſus, or Titus in Creta, vſed a kingly power, that either of them ſhould diſpoſe all things at his owne will. For they were aboue the reſt, onely to goe before the people with good and wholſome counſels: not that they onely, excluding all other, ſhould doe what they liſted. And that I may not ſeeme to faine any thing, I will make it plaine by a like example. For Luke rehearſeth that Paul and Barnabas appointed Prieſts in diuers Churches: but he alſo expreſſeth the order or maner how, when he ſaith that it was done by voices ordeining Prieſts (ſaith he) by lifting vp of hands in euery Church. Therefore they two did create them: but the whole multitude, as the Grecians maner was in elections, did by holding vp their hands, declare whom they would haue. Euen in like maner the Roman hiſtories doe oftentimes ſay that the Counſell which kept the aſſemblies, created new officers, for none other cauſe but for that he receiued the voices and gouerned the people in the election. Truely it is not likely that Paul granted more to Timothy and Titus than he tooke to himſelfe. But we ſee that he was wont to create Biſhops by voices of the people. Therefore the places aboue are so to be vnderstanded, that they minish nothing of the common right and libertie of the Church. Therfore Cyprian saith well, when he affirmeth that it commeth from the authoritie of God, that the Priest should be chosen in presence of the people before the eies of all men, and should by publike iudgement and testimony be allowed for worthy and meet. For we see that this was by the commandement of the Lord obserued in the Leuiticall Priests, that before their consecration they should be brought into the sight of the people. And no otherwise is Mathias added to the fellowship of the Apostles: and no otherwise the seuen Deacons were created: but the people seeing and allowing of it. These examples (saith Ciprian) doe shew, that the ordering of a Priest ought not to be done, but in the knowledge of the people standing by: that the ordering may be iust and lawful, which hath beene examined by the witnesse of all. We are therefore come thus far, that this is by the word of God a lawfull calling of a minister, when they that seeme meet are created by the consent and allowance of the people and that other pastors ought to beare rule of the election, that nothing be done amisse of the multitude, either by lightnesse, or by euill affections, or by disorder.

Act. 1. 15. & 6. 2.

The forme of ordaining ministers in the church by laying on of hands.

16 Now remaineth the forme of ordering, to which we assigned the last place in the calling. It is euident that the Apostles vsed no other ceremony when they admitted any man to the ministery, but the laying on of hands. And I thinke that this vsage came from the maner of the Hebrwes, which did as it were present vnto God by laying on of hands that which they would haue blessed and hallowed. So when Iacob was about to blesse Ephraem and Manasse, he laid his hands vpon their heads. Which thing our Lord followed, when he praied ouer the infants. In the same meaning (as I thinke) the Iewes by the ordinance of the law, laid hands vpon the Sacrifices. Wherefore the Apostles by laying on of hands did signifie that they offered him to God, whom they admitted into the ministery. Albeit they vsed it also vpon them to whom they applied the visible graces of the spirit. Howsoeuer it be, this was the solemne vsage, so oft as they called any man to the ministerie of the Church. So they consecrated Pastors and teachers, and so also Deacons. But although there be no certaine commandement concerning the laying on of hands, yet because we see that it was continually vsed among the Apostles, their so diligent obseruing of it ought to be to vs insteed of a commandement. And truly it is profitable, that by such a signe, both the dignity of the ministery should be commended to the people, and also that he which is ordained should be, admonished, that he is not now at his owne liberty, but made bound to God and that Church. Moreouer it shal not be a vaine signe, if it be restored to the natural beginning of it. For if the Spirit of God, hath ordained nothing in the Church in vaine, we must thinke that this ceremonie, sith it proceeded from him, is not vnprofitable, so that it be not turned into a superstitious abuse. Last of all this is to be holden, that not the whole multitude did laie their hands vpon the ministers, but the Pastors onely. Howbeit it was vncertaine whether many did alway lay on their hands or no. But it is euident that that was done in the Decons, in Paul and Barnabas, and a few other. But Paul himselfe in another place reporteth, that he, and not many other, did lay his hands vpon Timothee. I admonish thee (saith he) that thou raise vp the grace which is in thee by laying on of my hands. For, as for that which in the other Epistle is spoken of the laying on of the hands of the degree of Priests, I doe not so take it, as though Paul did speake of the company of the Elders, but I vnderstand by that word the verie ordinance it selfe: as if he had said: Make that the Grace, which thou hast receiued by laying on of hands when I did create thee a Priest, may not be voide.

THE FOVRTH CHAPTER.

Of the state of the old Church, and of the maner of gouerning that was in vse before the Papacie.

The ministers of the ancient Church of Christ

HItherto we haue intreated of the order of gouerning the Church, as it hath beene deliuered vs out of the pure word of God, and of the ministeries, as they were instituted by Christ. Now that all these things may be more clearely and familiarly opened, opened, and also be better fastened in our mindes: it shall be profitable in these things to consider the forme of the old Church, which shall represent to our eies a certaine image of Gods institution. For although the Bishops of those times did set foorth many Canons, wherein they seemed to expresse more than was expressed in the holy Scripture: yet they with such heedfulnesse framed all their order after the onely rule of Gods word, that a man may easily see that in this behalfe they had in a maner nothing disagreeing from the word of God. But although there might be somwhat wanting in their ordinances, yet because they with syncere zeale endeuoured to preserue Gods institution, and they swarued not much from it, it shall be very profitable here shortly to gather what maner of obseruation they had. As we haue declared that there are three sorts of Ministers commended vnto vs in the Scripture: so all the Ministers that the old Church had, it deuided into three Orders. For out of the order of Elders were partly chosen Pastors and teachers: the rest of them had the rule of the iudgement and correction of manners. To the Deacons was committed the care of the poore, and the distributing of the almes. As for the Readers and Acoluthes, they were not names of certaine offices: but those whom they called Clerkes, they trained from their youth vpward in certaine exercises to serue the Church, that they might the better vnderstand to what purpose they were appointed, and might in time come the better be prepared to their office: as I shall by and by shew more at large. Therefore Hierom, when hee had appointed fiue Orders of the Church, reckoneth vp Bishops, Priests, Deacons, Beleeuers, and Cethecumeni, to the rest of the Cleargie and Monkes hee giueth no proper place.

Presbiters or Priests & Deacons out of the order of Presbiters Pastors & teachers chosen.

In Esa. c. 6.

2 Therefore to whom the office of teaching was inioyned, all them they named Priests. In euery Citie they chose out of their owne number one man, to whom they specially gaue the title of Bishop: that dissentions should not grow of equalitie, as it is wont to come passe. Yet the Bishop was not so aboue the rest in honor and dignitie, that he had a dominion ouer his fellowes. But what office the Consull had in the Senate, to propound of matters, to aske opinions, to goe before the other with counselling, monishing, and exhorting, to gouerne the whole action with his authoritie, and to put in execution that which is decreed by common counsel; the same office had the Bishop in the assembly of the Priests. And the old writers themselues confesse, that the same was by mens consent brought in for the necessitie of the times. Therefore Hierome vpon the Epistle to Titus saith. The same was a Priest which was a Bishop. And before that by the instinction of the Diuell, there were dissentions in religion, and it was said among the people, I am of Paul, I am of Cephas: Churches were gouerned by common counsell of Elders. Afterward, that the seedes of dissentions might be plucked vp, all the care was committed to one man. As therefore the Priests doe know, that by custome of the Church they are subiect to him that is set ouer them: so let the Bishops know, that they are aboue the Priests, rather by custome, than by the trueth of the Lords disposing, and that they ought to gouerne the Church in common together. But in another place he teacheth, how ancient an institution it was. For he saith that at Alexandria, from Marke the Euangelist euen to Heraclas and Dionysius, the Priests did alway choose out one of themselues, and set him in a higher degree, whom they named a Bishop. Therefore euery Citie had a companie of Priests which were Pastors, and Teachers. For they all did execute among the people that office of teaching, exhorting and correcting, which Paul appointeth to the Bishops: and that they might leaue seed after them, they trauailed in teaching the yonger men, that had professed themselues souldiers in the holy warfare. To euery Citie there was appointed a certaine Countrey, that should take their Priests from thence, and be accounted as it were into the body of that Church. Euery companie (as I haue before said) onely for preseruation of policie and peace were vnder one Bishop: which was so aboue the rest in dignitie, that he was subiect to the assemblie of his brethren. If the compasse of ground that was vnder his Bishoprick were so great, that he could not suffice to serue all the offices of a Bishop in euery place of it, in the country it selfe there were in certaine places appointed Priests which in small matters should execute his authoritie. Them they called countrey Bishops, because in the countrey they represented the Bishop.

A colledge or company of Priests in euery Citie, to teach, exhort, and correct the people: out of that company for auoiding of dissention one chosen to be a Bishop, the honor and dignitie which a Bishop so chosen had aboue the rest, the Countrey furnished with priests from the Citie, those Priests vnder the Bishops authority, the compasse of ground committed to the care of one Bishop, tearmed his Bishoprick, in the Primitiue Church. Epi. ad Eua. Tit. 1.9.

3 But,

The office of Bishops and Priests to distribute the word and Sacraments.

3 But, so much as belongeth to the office, whereof we now speake, as well the Bishops as the Priests were bound to apply the distributing of the word and Sacraments. For it was ordained onely at Alexandria, (because Arrius had there troubled the Church) that the Priest should not preach to the people, as Socrates saith in the 9. booke of the Tripartite Historie. Which yet Hierom confesseth that he misliketh not. Truly it should bee counted monstrous, if any man had giuen out himselfe for a Bishop, that had not also in verie deed shewed himselfe a true Bishop. Therefore such was the seuerity of those times, that all Ministers were driuen to the fulfilling of such office, as the Lord requireth of them. Neither doe I rehearse the maner of one age alone. For euen in Gregories time, when the Church was now almost decaied (certainly it was much degenerate from the ancient pureneſſe) it had not been tolerable that any Bishop should abstaine from preaching. The Priest (saith he in one place) dieth if there be no sound heard of him: because he asketh against himselfe the wrath of the secret iudge, if he goe without sound of preaching. And in another place: When Paul testifieth that he is cleane from the blood of all: in this saying we be conuinced, we be bound, we be shewed to be guiltie, which are called Priests, which beside the euils that we haue of our owne, adde also the deaths of other: because we kill so many as we being luke-warme and silent doe daily see to goe to death. He calleth himselfe and other silent because they were lesse diligent in their worke than they ought to be. When he spareth not them, that did halfe performe their duty: what thinke you he would haue done, if a man had altogether sit idle? Therefore this was a great while holden in the Church, that the chiefe duty of the Bishop was to feed Gods people with the word, or both publickely and priuately to edifie the Church with sound doctrine.

Epi. 4. Hom. in Ezec.

Act. 20. 16.

For preseruing of discipline Archbishops & Patriarches: ordained by them who neuer meant to forge another forme of ruling the Church, than God hath appointed in his word.

4 But wereas euery Prouince had among their Bishops one Archbishop: also where in the Nicene Synod there were ordained Patriarches, which should in degree and dignity be aboue the Archbishops, that pertained to the preseruing of discipline. Howbeit in this discourse, that which was most rarely vsed may not he ommitted. For this cause therefore chiefly these degrees were ordained, that if any thing happened in any Church, that could not well be ended by a few, might be referred to a prouinciall Synod. If the greatneſſe or difficultie of the matter required a greater discussing the Patriarches were also called to it with the Synods, from whom there might be no appeale but to a generall Councell. The gouernment so ordered many called a Hierarchie, by a name (as I thinke) vnproper, and truely vnused in the Scriptures. For the holy Ghost willed to prouide, that no man should dreame of a principalitie or dominion when the gouernment of the Church is spoken of. But, if leauing the word we looke vpon the thing, we shall finde that the old Bishops meant to forge no forme of ruling the Church, differing from that which the Lord appointed by his word.

The office of Deacons, the same vnder the Apostles, and in the primitiue Church: the occasion of making Subdeacons and Archdeacons.

5 Neither was the order of the Deacons at that time any other than it was vnder the Apostles. For they receiued the daily offerings of the Faithfull, and the yearely reuenues of the Church, to bestow them vpon true vses, that is to say, to distribute them to feede partly the ministers, and partly the poore: but by the appointment of the Bishop, to whom also they yearely rendered accounts of their distribution. For whereas the Canons doe euery where make the Bishop distributer of all the goods of the Church, it is not so to be vnderstood, as though he did by himselfe discharge that care: but because it was his part to appoint to the Deacon, who should be receiued into the common almes of the Church, and of that which remained, to whom it should be giuen, and how much to euery one: because he had an ouerseeing whether the Deacon did faithfully execute that which belonged to his office. For thus it is read in the Canons which they ascribe to the Apostles: We command that the Bishop haue the goods of the Church in his owne power. For if he be put in trust with the Soules of men, which are more precious, much more it is meete that he haue charge of money: so that by his power all things may be distributed to the poore by the Elders and Deacons: that they may be all ministred with feare and carefulneſſe. And in the Councell of Antioche it is decreed, that the Bishops should be restrained that meddle with the goods of the Church, without the knowledge of the Elders and Deacons. But of that point we neede to make no longer disputation, sith it is euident by many Epistles of

Cap. 35.

Gregorie

Gregory, that euen at that time, when otherwise the ordinances of the Church were much corrupted, yet this obseruation continued, that the Deacons should vnder the Bishop be the stewards of the poore. As for Subdeacons, it is likely that at the beginning they were ioyned to the Deacons, that they should vse their seruice about the poore: but that difference was by little and little confounded. But Archdeacons began then to be created, when the plentie of the goods, required a new and more exact maner of disposing them: Albeit Hierome doth say, that it was euen in his age. In their charge was the sum of their reuenewes, possessions, and store, and the collection of the daylie offerings. Whereupon Gregory declareth to the Archdeacon of Salon, that he should be holden guiltie if any of the goods of the Church, perished either by his fraud or negligence. But whereas it was giuen to them to read the Gospell to the people, and to exhort them to pray: and whereas they were admitted to deliuer the Cup in the holy Supper, that was rather done to garnish their office, that they should execute it with the more reuerence, when by such signes they were admonished that it was no prophane Bayliwike that they exercised, but a spirituall function, and dedicate to God.

Epi. ad Nep. Epi. 10. li. 1.

6 Hereby also we may iudge what vse there was, and what maner of distribution of the Church goods. Each where both in the decrees of Synods, and among the old writers it is to be found, that whatsoeuer the Church possesseth either in lands or in mony, is the patrimony of the poore. Therefore oftentimes there, this song is sung to the Bishops and Deacons, that they should remember, that they meddle not with their owne goods, but the goods appointed to the necessity of the poore: which if they vnfaithfully suppresse or waste, they shall be guiltie of blood. Whereby they are admonished, with great feare and reuerence, as in the sight of God, without respect of parsons, to distribute them to whom they be due. Heereupon also come those graue protestations in Chrisostome, Ambrose, Augustine, and other like Bishops, whereby they affirme their owne vprightnesse to the people. But sith it is equity, and established by the Law of the Lord, that they which employ their seruice to the Church, should be fed with the common charges of the Church, and also many Priests in that age, consecrating their patrimonies to God, were willingly made poore: the distributing was such, that neither the Ministers wanted sustenance, nor the poore were neglected. But yet in the meane time it was prouided, that the Ministers themselues, which ought to giue example of honest sparing to other should not haue so much, whereby they might abuse it to riotous excesse or deliciousnes, but only wherewith to sustaine their owne neede. For those of the Cleargie (saith Hierom) which are able to liue of the goods of their Parents, if they take that which is the poores, doe commit sacriledge, and by such abuse they eat and drinke to themselues damnation.

The bestowing of Church goods.

7 First the ministration was free and voluntarie, whereas the Bishops and Deacons were of their owne will faithfull, and vprightnesse of conscience and innocencie of life were to them instead of the Lawes. Afterward when euill examples grew of the greedinesse or peruerse affections of some, to correct those faults, the Canons were made, which diuided the reuenewes of the Church into foure parts: of which they assigned one part to them of the Cleargy, the second to the poore, the third to the maintenance and reparation of Churches, and other holy buildings; the fourth to the poore as well strangers as of their owne countrey. For whereas the other Canons, giue this last part to the Bishop, that varieth nothing from my abouesaid diuision. For they meane not that that part should be his owne, that either he himselfe alone should deuoure it, or powre it out, vpon whom or what he list, but that it should suffice to maintaine the Hospitalitie which Paul requireth of that order. And so do Gelasius and Gregorie expound it. For Gelasius bringeth no other reason why the Bishop should challenge any thing to himselfe, but that he might giue it prisoners and strangers. And Gregorie speaketh yet more plainly. It is the maner (saith he) of the sea Apostolike, to giue commandement to the Bishop when he is ordered, that of all the reuenue that ariseth, there be made foure portions: that is to say, the one to the Bishop and his Familie for Hospitalitie, and entertainement: the second to the Clergie: the third to the poore: the fourth to the repairing of Churches. Therefore it was lawfull for the Bishop to take

Church goods diuided into foure parts: one assigned to the maintenance of the Cleargie, the rest to other vses.

nothing to his owne vse, but so much as were enough for moderate and meane foode and clothing. If any began to exceed either in riotous expense, or in ostentation and pompe, he was by and by represſed by his fellowes, and if he obeyed not, he was put from his dignitie.

The treasures and implements of the church made away to helpe the necessities of the poore, which could not otherwise be prouided for. Tripar. hist. lib. 5. Lib. 11. cap. 16.

8 As for that which they bestowed vpon garnishing of holy things, at the first it was very litle. Afterward when the Church became somewhat richer, yet in that behalfe they still kept a meane. And yet all the money that was bestowed thereupon remained safe for the poore, if any great necessitie happened. So when famine possessed the prouince of Hierusalem, and the need could not otherwise be relieued, Cyrillus sold the vessels and garments and spent them vpon sustenance of the poore. Likewise Acatius Bishop of Amida, when a great multitude of the Persians, in a maner starued for hunger, called together the Cleargie, and when he had made that notable oration, Our God needeth neither dishes nor cups, because he neither eateth nor drinketh, he molt the vessels, to make thereof both meate and ransome for men in miserie. Hierem also, when he inueigheth against the too much gorgeousnesse of temples, doth with honor make mention of Exuperius Bishop of Thelosa in his time, which carried the Lords bodie in a wicker basket, and his blood in glasse, but suffered no poore man to be hungrie. That which I euen now said of Acatius, Ambrose reheatseth of himselfe. For when the Arrians charged him, for that he had broken the holy vessels to ransome prisoners, he vsed this most godly excuse: Hee that sent the Apostles without gold, gathered Churches together without gold. The Church hath gold, not to keepe it, but to bestow it, and to giue relieſe in necessities. What neede is to keepe that which helpeth not? Doe we not know, how much gold and siluer the Assyrians tooke out of the temple of the Lord? Doth not the Priest better to melt them for the sustenance of the poore, if other relieſes doe faile, than an enemie, a robber of God to beare them away? Will not the Lord say: Why hast thou suffered so many needie to die for hunger? and verily thou hadst gold whereof thou mightest haue ministred them sustenance. Why were so many led away captiue, and not ransomed? why were so many slaine by the enemie? It had beene better that thou shouldst saue the vessels of liuing men, than of mettals. To these things thou shalt not bee able to answere. For what wouldst thou say? I feared least Gods temple should want garnishing. He would answer: Sacraments require not gold: neither doe those things please with gold that are not bought with gold. The ransoming of prisoners is a garnishing of Sacraments. In summe, we see that it is most true which the same man saith in another place, that whatsoeuer the Church then possessed was the store of the needie. Againe: that a Bishop hath nothing that is not the poores.

Ad Nepot. Lib de offic. c. 28.

Lib 5. epist. 31. & 33.

The institution of yoong Cleargie men, and clerks in lower functions, to be trained vp for the higher seruices of the Church.

9 These that we haue rehearsed were the ministeries of the old Church. For the other of which the Ecclesiasticall writers make mention, were rather certaine exercises and preparations, than appointed offices. For those holy men, that they might leaue a store for the church after them, receiued into their charge, gouernance and discipline, yoong men which with the consent and authoritie of their parents, professed themselues souldiers of the spirituall warfare: and they so framed them from their tender age, that they should not come vnskilfull and raw to the executing of their office. But all they that were instructed with such beginnings, were called Clerks I would indeed that some other more proper name had rather been giuen them. For this name grew in of error, or of corrupt affection: forasmuch as Peter calleth the whole church the Clergie, that is to say, the Lords inheritance. But the institution it selfe was very holie and profitable, that they which would consecrate themselues and their seruice to the Church, should be so brought vp vnder the keeping of the bishop, that none should minister to the Church, but he that were well informed aforehand, and that had from his very youth both sucked holy doctrine, and by seuere discipline put in a certaine continuing qualitie of grauitie and holy life, and were estranged from worldly cares, and were accustomed to spirituall cares and studies. But as yoong souldiers are by certaine counterfait skirmishes instructed to learne true and earnest fight, so there were also certaine rudiments, whereby they were exercised while they were Clerkes, before that they were promoted to the verie offices. Therefore first they committed to the the Clerkes the charge to open and shut the Church, and they named thhem Ostiarii, dorekeepers. Afterward they called them Acoluthi, followers, which waited vpon the Bishop in his household seruices, and did continually accompanie him, first for honours sake, and then that no suspicion should arise of them. Moreouer that by little and little they might become knowen to the people, and get to themselues commendation: also that they might learne to abide the sight of all men, and to speake before all men: that being made Priests, when they come foorth to teach, they should not be abashed with shame: therefore place was appointed them to read in the Pulpit. After this manner they were promoted by degrees, to shew proofe euerie one of their diligence in all their seuerall exercises, till they were made Subdeacons. This only is my meaning, that those were rather grosse beginnings, than such offices as were accounted among the true ministers of the Church.

1. Pet. 5. 3.

The care which the old Church had in making choise of fit men for church offices.

There order not alwaies one and the same concerning the parsons by whom church ministers were made.

10 Whereas we said that the first and second point in the calling of ministers, are, what maner of men they ought to choose, and how great a religious carefulnesse they ought to vse in that matter: therein the old Church hath followed the prescribed order of Paul, and the examples of the Apostles. For they were wont to come together to choose the pastors with most great reuerence, and carefull calling vpon the name of God. Beside this they had a forme of examination, whereby they tried the life and doctrine of them that were to be chosen by the rule of Paul. Onely they somewhat offended herein with too great seuerity: because they would require more in a Bishop than Paul required, and specially in processe of time they required vnmaried life. But in the other points their obseruation was agreeing with Pauls description. But in this which we made the third point, that is to say, who ought to institute ministers, they kept not alway one order. In old time, none was receiued into the company of Clearks without the consent of all the people: insomuch that Cyprian laboreth earnestly to excuse that hee appointed on Aurelius to be a Reader without asking aduise of the Church, because that was done beside the custome, though not without reason. For this he saith before: In ordering of Clerkes, deere brethren, we are wont first to aske your aduise, and by common counsell to weigh the manners and deseruings of euerie one. But because in these lesser exercises, there was not much perill: because they were chosen to a long proofe, and not to a great office, therefore the consent of the people therein ceased to be asked. Afterward in the other degrees also, except the Bishoprike, the people commonlie left the iudgement and choise of them to the Bishop and the Priests, that they should examine who were meete and woorthie: sauing peraduenture when new Priests were appointed for Parishes: for then it behooued that the multitude of that place namely should consent. Neither is it any maruell, that the people in this behalfe was little carefull in keeping their owne right. For no man was made a Subdeacon, that had not shewed a long proofe of himselfe in his being a Clerke, vnder that seueritie of discipline, which then was vsed. After that he had beene tried in that degree, he was made a Deacon. From thence he came to the honour of Priesthood if he had behaued himselfe faithfully. So no man was promoted, of whom there had not beene indeed a triall had many yeares before the eies of the people. And there were manie Canons to punish their faults: so that the Church could not be troubled with euill Priests or Deacons, vnlesse it neglected the remedies. Howbeit in the Priests also there was alway required the consent of them of the same citie: which the verie first Canon testifieth in the 67. distinction, which is fathered vpon Annacletus. Finally, all the admissions into orders were therefore done at certaine appointed times of the yeare, that no man should priuily creepe in without the consent of the faithfull, or should with too much easinesse be promoted without witnesses.

The consent of the people in the making of Bishops.

11 In choosing of Bishops the people had the libertie long preserued, that none should be thrust in, that were not accepted of all. This therefore was forbidden in the councell at Antioch, that none should be thrust into them against their will. Which thing also Leo the first doth diligently confirme. Heereupon came these sayings: Let him be chosen, whom the Cleargy, and the people, or the greater number shall require. Againe: Let him that shall beare rule ouer all be chosen of all. For it muſt needs be, that he that is made a ruler being vnknowen and not examined, is thruſt in by violence. Againe, Let him be choſen, that is both choſen by the Clerks, and deſired by the people: and let him be conſecrate by them of that Prouince, with the iudgement of the Metropolitane. The holie Fathers tooke ſo great heed that this libertie of the people ſhould by no meane be diminiſhed, that when the generall Synod gathered together at Conſtantinople did order Nectarius, they would not do it without the allowance of the Clergy and people, as they teſtified by their Epiſtle to the Synod of Rome. Therefore when any Biſhop did appoint a ſucceſſor to himſelfe, it was not otherwiſe ſtabliſhed vnleſſe the whole people did confirme it. Whereof you haue not onely an example, but alſo the very forme in Auguſtine in the naming of Eradius. And Theodorite, when he rehearſeth that Peter was named by Athanaſius to be his ſucceſſor, by and by addeth, that the order of Prieſts confirmed it, and the Magiſtrate, and Nobilitie, and the people approoued it with their allowing ſhowt.

Epiſtola 10. Theod. lib. 4. cap. 20.

The order of the Counſell of Laodicia that the election of Byſhops ſhould not be left to multitudes, whereby notwithſtãding the regard of the multitude is not excluded.

12 I graunt in deede that this alſo was by very good reaſon ſtabliſhed in the Councell at Laodicia, that the Election ſhould not be left to multitudes. For it ſcarcely happeneth at any time, that ſo many heads ſhould well order any thing with one meaning: and commonly this is true, that the vncertaine communaltie is diuided into contrarie affections. But for this perill there was vſed a very good remedie. For firſt the Clerks onely did chooſe: whom they had choſen they preſented to the Magiſtrate, or to the Senate and cheefe men of the people. They, after conſultation had, if they thought the election good, confirmed it: if not, they did chooſe an other, whom they did rather allow. Then the matter was mooued to the multitude, which although they were not bound to thoſe fore-iudgements, yet thereby they could the leſſe be diſordered. Or if they began at the multitude: that was done onely to learne whom they did cheefly deſire. When the deſires of the people were heard, then they of the Cleargy did chooſe him. So neither was it lawfull for the Cleargy to appoint whom they liſted, neither were they bound to obey the fooliſh deſires of the people. Leo appointeth this order in another place, when he ſaith: There are to be looked for, both the deſires of the citizens, the peoples teſtimonies, the iudgement of the honourable, and the election of the clerks. Againe, Let there be holden the teſtimonie of the honourable, the ſubſcription of the clerks, the conſent of the order and communaltie. No reaſon (ſayth he) ſuffreth it to be otherwiſe done. And nothing elſe meaneth that decree of the Synod at Laodicia, but that the Clergy and cheefe of the people, ſhould not ſuffer themſelues to be carried away by the vndiſcreete multitude: but rather that with their wiſedome and grauitie they ſhould repreſſe the peoples fooliſh affections, if at any time neede ſhould ſo require.

Cap. 13.

Epiſto. 87.

How long it continued in vſe that the Cleargy, the cheefe rulers, and the people had all to doe in the elections of Byſhops.

13 This order of chooſing was yet in force in the time of Gregory: and it is likely that it endured long after. There remaine many Epiſtles of his, that giue euident teſtimonie of this matter. For ſo oft as he hath to do with the creating of any new Biſhop, he vſeth to write to the cleargy, to the order, and to the people, and ſometime alſo to the ruler, according as the gouernment of the city is appointed. But if by reaſon of the diſordered ſtate of the Church, he committeth to any Biſhop adioyning the charge of ouerſeeing in the election, yet he alway requireth a ſolemne decree ſtrengthened with the ſubſcriptions of all. Yea and when there was one Conſtantius create Byſhop at Millane, and that many of the Millaneis were by reaſon of the inuaſion of the barbarous nations fled to Genua: he thought that the election could not otherwiſe be lawfull, vnleſſe they alſo were called together and gaue their aſſent. Yea there are not yet fiue hundred yeares paſt, ſince Pope Nicholas decreed thus of the election of the Byſhop of Rome: that the Cardinall Biſhops ſhould begin, then that they ſhould ioyne to them the reſt of the cleargy, laſt of all that the election ſhould be confirmed by the conſent of the people. And in the end he reciteth that decree of Leo, which I euen now alleadged, and commandeth it from thence foorth to be in force. But if the malice of wicked men ſhall ſo preuaile, that the clerks to make a true election be compelled to depart out of the city: yet he commandeth that ſome of the people be preſent with them. As for the Emperors conſent, ſo farre as I can perceiue, was required onely in two Churches, that is, Rome, and Conſtantinople: becauſe there there were the two ſeates of the Empire. For whereas Ambroſe was ſent to Millane with a power from Valentinian to gouerne the election of the new Biſhop: that was extraordinarily done, by reaſon of greeuous factions wherewith the citizens then boyled among themſelues. But at Rome in old time the Emperours authority was of ſo great force in creating of the Byſhop: that Gregory ſayeth, that he was ſet by his commandement in the gouernment of the Church: when yet by ſolemne vſage he was deſired by the people. This was the manner, that when the cleargy and the people had appointed any Biſhop, the cleargy ſhould forthwith moue it to the Emperour, that he ſhould either by his allowance confirme the election, or by diſallowance vndo it. Neither are the decrees that Gratian gathereth together, repugnant to this cuſtome: wherein is nothing elſe ſaid, but that it is in no wiſe to be ſuffered, that taking away the canonicall election, a King ſhould appoint a Byſhop after his owne luſt: and that the Metropolitane ſhould conſecrate none that were ſo promoted by violent powers. For it is one thing to ſpoile the Church of her right, that all ſhould be transferred to the luſt of one man: and another thing to graunt this honour to a King or an Emperour, that by his authoritie he may confirme a lawfull election. Epiſt. 5. lib. 1.

14 Now it followeth, that wee entreate with what forme the Miniſters of the Church were admitted into their office after election: this the Latines called Ordination or Conſecration: the Greekes haue called it Cheirotonia, lifting vp of hands, and ſometime alſo Cheirotheſia, laying on of hands. Howbeit Cheirotonia is properly called that kind of election, where mens conſents are declared by holding vp of their hands. There remaineth of the Nicen Councell, that the Metropolitane ſhould meete together with all the Biſhops of the prouince to order him which is choſen. But if ſome of them be hindered either by length of the way, or by ſickneſſe, or by any neceſſitie, that yet three at the leaſt ſhould meete: and that they that are abſent ſhould by letters teſtifie their conſent. And this Canon, when with diſcontinuance it grew out of vſe, was afterward renewed with many Synodes. But all, or at leaſt ſo many as had no excuſe, were therefore commaunded to be preſent, that they might haue the grauer triall of the learning and maners of him that was to be ordered: for the matter was not done without triall. And it appeereth by Cyprians words, that in the old time they were woont not to be called after the election, but to be preſent at the election: and to this end that they ſhould be as it were Gouernours, that nothing ſhould be troubleſomely done in the multitude. For where he ſaid, that the people haue power either to chooſe woorthie Prieſts, or to refuſe vnwoorthie, within a little after he addeth: Wherefore according to the tradition of God and of the Apoſtles, it is to be diligently kept and holden (which is yet holden with vs alſo, and in a manner throughout all Prouinces) that for the right celebration of orderings, all the Biſhops adioyning of the ſame Prouince, ſhould come together to the people for which a Gouernor is ordered, and that the Biſhop be choſen in preſence of the people. But when they were ſometime ſlowly gathered together, and there was perill leaſt ſome would abuſe that delay to occaſion of ambitious ſuing: it was thought that it ſhould be enough if after the election made, they ſhould meete and after allowance vpon lawfull examination conſecrate him. The ancient manner of Byſhops aſſembling themſelues to conſecrate Byſhops choſen. Epiſt. 4. lib. 1.

15 When this was each where done without exception, by little and little a diuers manner grew in vſe, that they which were choſen ſhould reſort to the Metropolitan Citie to fetch their ordering. Which came to paſſe rather by ambition, and by deprauation of the firſt inſtitution, than by any good reaſon. And not long after, when the authoritie of the ſea of Rome was now increaſed, there came in place yet a woorſe cuſtome, that the Biſhops almoſt of all Italie ſhould fetch their conſecration from thence. Which we may note out of the Epiſtles of Gregorie. Onely a few Cities, which did not ſo eaſily giue place, had their ancient right preſerued: as there is an example had of Millane. Peraduenture the onely Metropolitane Cities kept their priuilege. For all the Biſhops of the Prouince were woont to come together to the chiefe Citie to conſecrate the Archbiſhop. But the Ceremonie was laying on of hands. For I read of no other ceremonies vſed: ſauing that in the ſolemne aſſemblie the Biſhops had a certaine apparell whereby they might be diſtinctly knowen from other Prieſts. They The beginning of the cuſtome for Biſhops choſen to repaire to their Metropolitan for conſecration: the corrupt vſe of cõming to Rome for it: the rites and ceremonies therein vſed. Lib. 2. Epiſt. 69. 46.

ordered alſo Prieſts and Deacons with onely laying on of hands. But euery Biſhop with the company of Prieſts ordained his owne Prieſt. But although they did all the ſame thing: yet becauſe the Biſhop went before, and it was all done as it were by his guiding, therefore the ordering was called his. Whereupon the old writers haue oft this ſaying: that a Prieſt differeth from a Biſhop in no other thing, but becauſe he hath not the power of ordering.

THE FIFT CHAPTER.

That the old forme of gouernment is vtterly ouerthrowen, by the tyranny of the Papacy.

The corruption of the Church of Rome inchooſing Biſhops without regard of manners, learning, or as much as yeeres of diſcretion.

NOw it is good to ſet before mens eies the order of gouerning the Church, that the ſea of Rome and all the champions thereof doe keepe at this day, and the whole image of that Hierarchy which they continually haue in their mouth, and to compare it with that order of the firſt and old Church which we haue deſcribed: that by the compariſon it may appeare what maner of Church they haue, which vſe this onely title to charge or rather to ouerwhelme vs. But it is beſt to begin at Calling, that we ſee both how, and what maner of men, and by what order they be called to this miniſtery. And then afterward we ſhall conſider how faithfully they execute their office. We will giue the firſt place to Biſhops: to whom I would to God this might be an honour, to haue the firſt place in this diſcourſe. But the matter it ſelfe doth not ſuffer me, once to touch this thing be it neuer ſo lightly, without their great ſhame. And yet I will remember, in what kinde of writing I am now occupied: and will not ſuffer my talke, which ought to be framed only to ſimple doctrine, to flow abroad beyond due bounds. But let ſome one of them that haue not vtterly loſt all ſhame, anſwer mee, what maner of Biſhops are at this day commonly choſen. Truely it is now growen too much out of vſe, to haue any examination had of their learning: but if there be had any reſpect of learning, they chooſe ſome Lawyer that can rather brawle in a court, than preach in a Church. This is certaine, that theſe hundred yeeres there hath ſcarcely beene euery hundreth man choſen that vnderſtood any thing of holy doctrine. I doe not therefore ſpare the former ages, for that they were much better, but becauſe we haue now onely the preſent Church in queſtion. If iudgement be had of their manners, we ſhall finde that there haue beene few or almoſt none, whom the old Canons would not haue iudged vnworthy. He that was not a drunkard, was a whoremonger: he that was alſo cleane from this wickedneſſe, was either a dycer, or a hunter, or diſſolute in ſome part of his life. For there be lighter faults, which by the old Canons doe exclude a man from being a Biſhop. But this is a moſt great abſurdity, that very children ſcarcely ten yeeres old, are by the Popes grant made Biſhops. They are growen to ſuch ſhameleſneſſe and ſenſles dulneſſe, that they dreaded not that extreame, yea and monſtrous wicked doing, which is vtterly abhorring from the very ſenſe of nature. Heereby appeareth how religious their elections were, where the negligence was ſo careleſſe.

Both magiſtrats and people vtterly excluded in the Church of Rome from medling in the election of Biſhops: the preteníe vnder which they are excluded.

2 Now in election, all that right of the people is taken away. Their deſirings, their aſſentings, their ſubſcribings, and all ſuch things are vaniſhed: the whole power is transferred to the Canons onely. They beſtow the Biſhopricke vpon whom they will, and afterward bring him foorth into the ſight of the people, but to be worſhipped, not to be examined. But Leo cryeth on the otherſide, that no reaſon ſuffereth it, and he pronounceth that it is a violent impoſition. Cyprian, when he teſtifieth that it proceedeth from the law of God that it ſhould not bee done but by the conſent of the people, ſheweth that the contrary maner is repugnant to the word of God. The decrees of ſo many Synodes doe moſt ſeuerely forbid it to be otherwiſe done: and if it be done, they command it to be void. If theſe things be true, there now remaineth in the Papacy no Canonicall election, neither by Gods law nor by the Eccleſiaſticall law. But although there were no other euill, yet how ſhall they be able to excuſe this that they haue ſo ſpoiled the Church of her right? But (ſay they) the corruption of times ſo required, that becauſe in appointing of Biſhops, hatreds and affections more preuailed with the people and the Magiſtrates, than right and ſound iudgement, therfore the rule thereof ſhould be giuen to a few. Admit verily that this were the extreme remedie of a miſchiefe in deſpaired caſe. But ſith the medicine it ſelfe hath appeared more hurtfull than the very diſeaſe, why is not this new euill alſo remedied? But (ſay they) it is exactly preſcribed to the Canons, what they ought to follow in the election. But doe we doubt, but that the people in old time did vnderſtand that they were bound to moſt holy lawes, when they ſaw that they had a rule ſet them by the word of God, when they came together to chooſe a biſhop? For that only voice of God, wherby he deſcribeth the true image of a biſhop, ought woorthily to be of more value than infinite thouſands of Canons. But neuertheleſſe the people, corrupted with a moſt euil affection, had no regard of the law or of equitie. So at this day though there be verie good lawes written, yet they remaine buried in papers. Yet for the moſt part it is vſed in mens maners, yea and allowed as though it were done by good reaſon, that drunkards, whoremongers, dicers, are commonly promoted to this honour: (It is but little that I ſay) that biſhopricks are the rewards of adulteries and bawderies. For when they are giuen but to hunters and faulconers, it is to be thought to be gaily well beſtowed. Any way to excuſe ſo heinous indignitie, it is too much wicked. The people (ſay I) had in old time a very good Canon to whom Gods word preſcribed, that a Biſhop ought to be vnreproueable, a teacher, no fighter, &c. Why therefore is the charge of choſing remooued from the people to theſe men? Becauſe forſooth the word of God was not heard among the tumults and ſeditious partakings of the people. And why ſhould it not at this day be remooued againe from theſe men, which not onely do breake all lawes, but caſting away all ſhame, do wantonly, couetouſly, ambiouſly mingle and confound Gods and mens matters together? 1. Tim. 3. 1.

3 But they lie, when they ſay, that this was deuiſed for a remedie. Wee often read that in old time churches were in tumults at the choſing of Biſhops: yet neuer any man durſt thinke of taking away the authoritie from the people. For they had other waies whereby they might either preuent theſe faults, or amend them if they were alreadie committed. But I will tell what it is. When the people began to be negligent in making the elections, and did caſt that care vpon the Prieſts as little belonging to them, they abuſed this occaſion to vſurpe a tyrannie to themſelues, which afterward they ſtabliſhed by new canons ſet foorth. As for their ordering, it is nothing elſe but a meere mockage. For the ſhew of examination that they there ſet out is ſo vaine and hungrie, that it wanteth euen all colour. Therefore whereas in ſome places Princes haue by couenant obteined of the biſhops of Rome, that they themſelues might name biſhops, therein the Church ſuffered no new loſſe: becauſe the election was taken away, onely from the Canons, which had by no right violently taken it, or verily ſtolen it. Truely this is a moſt foule example, that out of the court are ſent biſhops to poſſeſſe churches: and it ſhould be the worke of godly Princes to abſteine from ſuch corruption. For it is a wicked ſpoiling of the Church, when there is thruſt vnto any people a biſhop, whom they haue not deſired, or at leaſt with free voice allowed. But that vnorderly maner which hath long agoe beene in the Churches, gaue occaſion to Princes to take the preſentation of biſhops into their owne hands. For they had rather that it ſhould be their gift, than thoſe mens, to whom it nothing more belonged, and which did no leſſe wrongfully abuſe it? What occaſion the Roman clergie hath taken to deſpoile the Church of her right in elections, and paines to get into their own hands that which they ſaw ſo groſſely abuſed.

4 Loe heere is a noble calling, by reaſon whereof the biſhops boaſt themſelues to be the ſucceſſors of the Apoſtles. But they ſay that the authoritie to create Prieſts belongeth to them onely. But in this they moſt lewdly corrupt the old inſtitution: becauſe they doe not by their ordering create Prieſts to rule and feede the people, but Sacrificers to Sacrifice. Likewiſe when they conſecrate Deacons, they doe nothing of their true and proper office, but they ordaine them onely to certaine Ceremonies about the chalice and the paten. But in the Synode at Chalceden, it is contrariwiſe decreed, that the orderings ſhould not be abſolutely giuen, that is to ſay, but that a place ſhould be therewithall aſſigned to them that are ordered, where they ſhall exerciſe their office. This decree is for two cauſes verie profitable. Firſt, that the Church ſhould not be burdened with ſuperfluous charges, nor that that ſhould bee The abuſes of the Church of Rome in making Prieſts and Deacons. Diſt. 70. ca. 1.

ſpent vpon idle men which ſhould be giuen to the poore: Secondly, that they which be ordered, ſhould thinke that they be not promoted to an honor, but that there is an office committed vnto them, to the execution wherof they are bound by ſolemn proteſtation. But the Romiſh maſters (which thinke that there is nothing in religion to be cared for, but their bellie) firſt doe expound title to be the reuenue that may ſuffice to ſuſtaine them, whether it be by their own liuelyhood or by benefice. Therefore when they order a Deacon or a Prieſt, without taking care where they ought to miniſter, they giue them the order, if they be rich enough to find themſelues. But what man can admit this, that the title which the decree of the Councell requireth, ſhould bee the yeerelie reuenue for their ſuſtenance? But now becauſe the later Canons condemned the Biſhops with penaltie to finde them whom they had ordered without ſufficient title, by this meane to reſtraine their too much eaſie admitting: there hath been alſo a ſubtletie deuiſed to mock out this penaltie. For he that is ordered, naming anie title whatſoeuer it be, promiſeth that he will be content therewith: by this ſhift he is driuen from his action for his finding. I paſſe ouer a thouſand fraudes that are herein vſed: that when ſome doe falſlie name vaine titles of benefices, whereupon they cannot make fiue ſhillings by yeere: other ſome vnder ſecret couenant doe borrow benefices, which they promiſe that they will by and by reſtore againe, but ſometime they reſtore not at all. And ſuch other myſteries.

The diſguiſing ceremonies which the Church of Rome vſeth in making her Prieſts.

5 But although theſe groſſer abuſes were taken away, is not this alway an abſurditie, to apoint a Prieſt to whom you aſſigne no place? Alſo they order no man but to ſacrifice. But the true ordinance of a Prieſt is, to bee called to the gouernment of the Church: and a Deacon to be called to the gathering of the almes: they doe indeede with manie pomps ſhadow their doing, that in the very ſhew it may haue a reuerence among the ſimple. But among men that haue their ſound wit, what can theſe diſguiſings auaile, if there be no ſound ſtuffe or truth vnderneath them? For they vſe ceremonies about it, either fetched out of Iewiſhneſſe, or fained of themſelues, which it were better to forbeare. But of true examination, (for I nothing paſſe vpon, that ſhadow which they retaine) of the peoples conſent, and of other things neceſſarie, they make no mention. I call a ſhadow their fooliſh geſturings meet to be laughed at, framed to a fond and cold counterfetting of antiquitie. The Biſhops haue their deputies which before the ordering may enquire of their learning. But what? whether they can read their maſſes, whether they can decline a common noune, that they ſhall light vpon in reading, coniugate a verbe, or doe know the ſignification of one word, for it is not neceſſarie that they be cunning enough to conſtrue a verſe. And yet they be not put backe from Prieſthood which faile euen in the childiſh rudiments, ſo that they bring anie monie or commendation of fauour. Of like ſort it is, that when they are brought to the altar to be ordered, it is asked thrice in a tongue not vnderſtanded, whether they be worthie of that honor. One anſwereth which neuer ſaw them: (but becauſe nothing ſhould want of the forme, he hath part in the plaie). They are worthie. What may a man blame in theſe reuerend fathers, but that which mocking in ſo open ſacrileges, they do without ſhame laugh to ſcorne both God and men? But becauſe they are in long poſſeſſion thereof, they thinke that now it is lawfull for them. For whoſoeuer dare once open his mouth againſt theſe ſo euident and ſo hainous wicked doings, he is forthwith haled by them to puniſhment of death, as though it were one that had in old time diſcloſed abroad the holie myſteries of Ceres. Wold they do this if they thought that there were anie God?

Corruption in beſtowing benefices.

6 Now how much doe they behaue themſelues better in beſtowing of benefices: which thing was once ioined with the ordering, but now it is altogether ſeparate? There is among them a diuerſe manner. For the Biſhops onlie do not confer benefices: and in thoſe whereof they are ſaid to haue the conferring, they haue not the full right, but other haue the preſentation, and they retaine onlie the title of collation for honors ſake. There are alſo nominations out of ſchooles, and reſignations, either ſimple, or made for cauſe of exchange, commendatorie writings, preuentions, and whatſoeuer is of that ſort. But they alſo behaue themſelues that none of them can reproach another with anie thing. So I affirme, that ſcarcelie euerie hundred benefice is beſtowed at this day day in the papacie without Simonie, as the old writers defined Simonie, I do not saie, that they all buie them with readie monie: but shew me one of twentie that commeth to a benefice without some by commendation, some either kindred or alliance promoteth, and some the authoritie of their parents: some by doing of pleasures doe get themselues fauor. Finallie benefices are giuen to this end, not to prouide for the Churches, but for them that receiue them. Therefore they call them benefices, by which words they doe sufficientlie declare, that they make no other account of them, but as the beneficiall gifts of Princes, whereby they either get the fauour of their soldiers or reward their seruices. I omit how these rewards are bestowed vpon Barbers, Cooks, Moile-keepers, and such dreggish men. And now iudiciall courts do ring of no matters more, than about benefices: so that a man may saie that they are nothing else but a pray cast afore dogs to hunt after. Is this tolerable euen to be heard of, that they should be called Pastors, which haue broken into the possession of a Church as into a ferme of their enemie? that haue gotten it by brawling in the law? that haue bought it for monie? That haue deserued it by filthy seruices: which being children yet scantlie able to speake, haue receiued it, as by inheritance from their Vnckles and kinsmen, and some bastards from their fathers?

Epi. 11. lib. 3.

7 Would euer the licentiousnes of the people, though they had bin neuer so corrupt and lawlesse, haue gone so farre? But this is also more monstrous, that one man, (I will not say what maner of man, but trulie such a one as cannot gouerne himselfe) is set to gouerne fiue or six Churches. A man may see in these daies in Princes courts, yong men that haue three Abbaties, two Bishopricks, one Archbishoprick. But there be commonly Canons with fiue, six or seuen benefices, whereof they haue no care at all, but in receiuing the reuenues. I will not obiect, that it is ech where cried out against by the word of God, which hath long ago ceased to be of any estimation at all among them. I will not obiect, that there haue been many most seuere penall ordinances in many Councels made against this wickednesse: for those also they boldlie despise as oft as they list. But I say that both are monstrous wicked doings, which are vtterlie against God and nature and the gouernment of the Church, that one robber shall oppresse many Churches at once, and that he should be called a Pastor, which cannot be present with his flock though he would: and yet (such is their shamefulnesse) they couer such abhominable filthinesse with the name of the Church to deliuer themselues from all blame. But also (and God will) in these lewdnesses is contained that holie succession, by the merit whereof they boast that it is wrought that the Church may not perish.

Many Churches committed to one mans charge vnable to order one.

8 Now (which is the second marke in iudging a lawfull Pastor) let vs see how faithfullie they exercise their office. Of the Priests that be there created, some be Monkes, some be (as they call them) Secular. The first of these two companies was vnknown to the old Church: and it is so against the profession of Monkes, to haue such a place in the Church, that in old time when they were chosen out of Monasteries into the Clergie, they ceased to be Monks. And Gregorie, whose time had much dregs, yet suffered not this confusion to be made. For he willeth that they be put out of the Clergie that be made Abbots, for that no man can rightly be together both a Monk and a Clark: sith the one is a hinderance to the other. Now if I aske, how he well fulfilleth his office, whom the Canons declare to be vnmeet, what I pray you, will they answer? they will forsooth alleage vnto me those vntimelie borne decrees of Innocent and Boniface, whereby Monks are so receiued into the honor and power of Priesthood, that they might still abide in their Monasteries. But what reason is this, that euerie vnlearned Asse, so soone as he hath once possessed the sea of Rome, may with one word ouerthrow all antiquitie? But of this matter we shall speake hereafter. Let this suffice for this time, that in the purer Church it was holden for a great absurditie, if a Monk did execute the office of Priesthood. For Hierome saith that he doth not execute the office of a Priest, while he is conuersant among Monks: and maketh himselfe one of the common people to be ruled by the Priests. But, although we grant them this, what do they of their dutie? Of the Mendicants some do preach, all the other Monks either sing or mumble vp Masses in their dennes. As though either Christ willed, or the nature

Monks in the Church of Rome made Priests and still continuing Monks contrary to the ancient both customes and Canons, yet when they are made, not discharging the duty of Priests neither.
Epi. 11. li. 3.

nature of the office ſuffereth Prieſts to be made to this purpoſe. Whereas the Scripture plainely teſtifieth, that it is the Prieſts office to rule his owne Church, is it not a wicked prophanation, to turne another way, yea vtterly to change the holie inſtitution of God? For when they are ordered, they are expreſſely forbidden to doe the things that God commandeth all Prieſts. For this ſong is ſung to them: Let a Monke content with his cloiſter, not preſume to miniſter the Sacraments, not to execute any thing belonging to publike office. Let them denie, if they can, that it is an open mockerie of God, that any Prieſt ſhould be made to this purpoſe, to abſtaine from his true and naturall office: and that he which hath the name may not haue the thing.

Act. 20. 23.

The abuſes of the Church of Rome in the office of her ſecular Prieſts.

9 I come to the ſecular prieſts: which are partly beneficed men, (as they call them) that is to ſay, haue benefices whereupon to liue: and partly doe let out their daily labour to hire, in maſſing, or ſinging, and liue as it were of a ſtipend gathered thereupon. Benefices haue either care of ſoules, as Biſhoprikes and cure of Paroches: or they be the ſtipends of deintie men, that get their liuing with ſinging, as Prebends, Canonſhips, Parſonages, and dignities, Chaplainſhips, and ſuch other. Howbeit, ſince things are now turned vpſide downe, Abbaies and Priories are giuen to very boies, by priuilege, that is to ſay by common and vſuall cuſtome. As concerning the hirelings, that get their liuing from day to day, what ſhould they doe otherwiſe than they doe? that is in ſeruile and ſhamefull maner to giue out themſelues for gaine, ſpecially ſith there is ſo great a multitude as now the world ſwarmeth with. Therefore when they dare not beg openly, or for as much as they thinke they ſhould but little profit that way, they goe about like hungrie dogs, and with their importunacie, as with barking, they enforce out of men againſt their wils ſomewhat to thruſt into their belly. Heere if I would goe about to expreſſe in words, how great a diſhonour it is to the Church, that the honour and office of Prieſthood is come to this point, I ſhould haue no end. Therefore it is not meete that the Readers ſhould looke for at my hand ſuch a long declaration as may be proportionall to ſo hainous indignitie. Briefly I ſay, if it be the office of Prieſthood, (as the word of God preſcribeth, and the ancient Canons require) to feede the Church, and to gouerne the ſpirituall kingdome of Chriſt: all ſuch ſacrificers as haue none other worke or wages, but in making a market of Maſſes, are not onely idle in their office, but alſo haue no office at all to exerciſe. For there is no place aſſigned them to teach: they haue no flocke to gouerne: Finally, there is nothing left to them, but the Altar, whereupon to ſacrifice Chriſt: which is not to offer to God, but to diuels, as we ſhall ſee in another place.

1. Cor. 4. 21.

Other idle ſorts of Prieſts neither gouerning the Church, nor diſtributing at all the word or Sacraments.

10 I doe not heere touch the outward faults, but onely the inward euill, which ſticketh faſt by the roote in their inſtitution. I will adde a ſaying, which will ſound ill in their eares: but becauſe it is true, I muſt ſpeake it: that in the ſame degree are to be accounted Canons, Deanes, Chaplaines, Prouoſts, and all they that are fed with idle benefices. For what ſeruice can they doe to the Church? For they haue put from themſelues the preaching of the word, the care of diſcipline, and miniſtration of Sacraments, as too much troubleſome burdens. What then haue they remaining, whereby they may boaſt themſelues to be true Prieſts? Singing forſooth, and a pomp of Ceremonies. But what is that to the purpoſe? If they alleage cuſtome, if vſe, if preſcription of long time: I againe on the other ſide doe lay vnto them the definition of Chriſt, whereby he hath expreſſed vnto vs both true Prieſts, and what they ought to haue that will be accounted ſuch. But if they cannot beare ſo hard a lawe, to ſubmit themſelues to Chriſtes rule: at the leaſt let them ſuffer this matter to be determined by the authoritie of the Primitiue Church. But their caſe ſhall be neuer the better, if their ſtate be iudged by the old Canons. They that haue degenerate into Canons ſhould haue beene Prieſts, as they were in old time, that ſhould rule the Church in common with the Biſhop, and be as it were his companions in the office of Paſtor. Thoſe Chapter dignities as they call them, doe nothing at all belong to the gouerning of the Church: much leſſe Chaplainſhips, and the other dregs of like names. What account then ſhall wee make of them all? Truely both the word of Chriſt, and the vſage of the Church excludeth them from the honor of Prieſthood. Yet they ſtiffely hold that they be Prieſts: but we muſt plucke off their viſour: ſo ſhal we find that their whole profeſſion is moſt ſtrange and far remooued from that office of Prieſts, both which the Apoſtles deſcribe vnto vs, and which was required in the primitiue Church. Therefore all ſuch orders, with what titles ſoeuer they be notified, ſith they be new, being verily neither vpholden by the inſtitution of God, nor by the ancient vſage of the Church, ought to haue no place in the deſcription of the ſpirituall gouernment, which the Church hath receiued conſecrate with the Lords owne mouth. Or (if they will rather haue me to ſpeake more ſimply and groſſely) for as much as Chaplaines, Canons, Deacons, Prouoſts, and other idle bellies of the ſame ſort, doe not ſo much as with their little finger touch any ſmall parcell of that office, which is neceſſarily required in Prieſts. It is not to be ſuffered, that in wrongfully taking a falſe honor vpon themſelues, they ſhould breake the holy inſtitution of Chriſt.

11 There remaine Biſhops, and Parſons of Paroches: who I would to God they did ſtriue to retaine their office. For we would willingly grant vnto them, that they haue a godly and excellent office, if they did execute it. But when they will be accounted Paſtors, while they forſake the Churches committed to them, and caſt the care of them vpon other, they do, as if it were the Paſtors office to doe nothing. If an vſurer that neuer ſtirred his foote out of the Citie, would profeſſe himſelfe a Plowman, or a keeper of a vineyard: if a ſouldier that had beene continually in the battell and in the campe, and had neuer ſeene iudiciall court or bookes, would boaſt himſelfe for a Lawyer, who could abide ſuch ſtinking follies? But theſe men doe ſomewhat more abſurdly, that will ſeeme and be called lawfull Paſtors of the Church, and yet will not be ſo. For how many a one is there, that doth ſo much, as in ſhew, exerciſe the gouernment of his Church? Many doe all their life long deuour the reuenues of Churches, to which they neuer come ſo much as to looke vpon them. Some other doe once by yeere either come themſelues, or ſend their ſteward, that nothing ſhould be loſt in the letting to farme. When this corruption firſt crept in, they that would enioy this kinde of vacation, exempted themſelues by priueledges: a bare example to haue one reſident in his owne Church. For they eſteeme them none otherwiſe than farmes ouer which they ſet their Vicars as bailiſes or farmers. But this very naturall reaſon reiecteth, that he ſhould be Paſtor of a flocke, that neuer ſaw one ſheepe thereof.

Abuſes in the office of Biſhops and parſons in pariſhes belonging to the church of Rome.

12 It appeareth that euen in the time of Gregorie, there were certaine ſeedes to this miſchiefe, that the rulers of Churches, began to be negligent in teaching: for he doth in one place grieuouſly complaine of it. The world (ſaith he) is full of Prieſts, but yet in the haruеſt there are ſeldome workemen found: becauſe indeed we take vpon vs the office of Prieſt, but we fulfill not the worke of the office. Againe, becauſe they haue not the bowels of charitie, they will ſeeme Lords: they acknowledge not themſelues to be Fathers. They change the place of humilitie into the aduancing of Lordlineſſe. Againe, but what doe we, O Paſtors which receiue the reward, and are no workmen? We are fallen to outward buſineſſe, and we take in hand one thing, and performe another. We leaue the miniſterie of preaching: and to our puniſhment, as I ſee, we are called Biſhops, that keepe the name of honor and not of vertue. Sith he vſeth ſo great ſharpneſſe of words againſt them, which were but leſſe continuing, and leſſe diligent in their office: What I pray you, would he ſay, if he ſaw of the Biſhops almoſt none, or truly very few, and of the reſt ſcarcely euery hundreth man once in all his life to goe vp into a pulpit? For men be come to ſuch madneſſe, that it is commonly counted a thing too baſe for the dignitie of a Biſhop, to make a ſermon to the people. In the time of Bernard, things were ſomewhat more decaied: but wee ſee alſo with how ſharpe chidings he inueigheth againſt the whole order: which yet it is likely to haue beene then much purer than it is now.

Hom. 17. Negligence of Biſhops and paſtors in the office of preaching the word.

13 * But if a man doe well weigh and examine this outward forme of Eccleſiaſticall gouernment that is at this day vnder the Papacie, he ſhall finde that there is no theeuiſh corner wherein robbers doe more licentiouſly range without law and meaſure. Truely all things are there ſo vnlike the inſtitution of Chriſt, yea ſo contrarie to it, they are ſo degenerate from the ancient ordinances and maners of the Church, they are ſo repugnant to nature and reaſon, that there can be no greater iniurie done to Chriſt, than when they pretend his name to the defence of ſo diſordered gouernment. We (ſay they they) are the pillars of the Church, the chiefe Bishops of religion, the vicars of Christ, the heads of the faithfull: because the power of the Apostles is by succession come vnto vs. They are alway bragging of these follies, as though they talked vnto stockes. But so oft as they shal boast of this, I will aske of them again, what they haue common with the Apostles. For we speake not of any inheritably descending honour that may be giuen to men euen while they lie sleeping: but of the office of preaching, which they so much flee from. Likewise when we affirme that their kingdome is the tyranny of Antichrist, by and by they answer, that it is that reuerend Hierarchie, so oft praised of notable and holy men. As though the holy fathers, when they commended the Ecclesiasticall Hierarchie or spirituall gouernment, as it was deliuered them from hand to hand from the Apostles, did dreame of this mishapen and wast disordered heape, where the Bishops are for the most part either rude asses, which know not the very first and common principles of faith, or sometime children yet new come from the nurse: and if any be learneder (which yet is a rare example) they thinke a Bishopricke to be nothing else but a title of gloriousnesse and magnificence: where the parsons of Churches thinke no more of feeding the flocke, than a shoo-maker doth of plowing: where all things are confounded with more than Babylonicall dispersing, that there remaineth no more any one stept whole of that ordinance of the fathers.

The manners of Romaine Priests. Mat. 5. 14.

14 What if we descend to their maners? where shall be that light of the world, which Christ requireth? where is the salt of the earth? where is that holinesse, which may be as a perpetuall rule to iudge by? There is no degree of men at this day more ill spoken of, for riot, wantonnesse, daintinesse, finally all kinde of lusts. There are of no degree of men either fitter, or cunninger masters of all deceit, fraud, treason, and breach of faith: there is no where so great cunning or boldnesse to doe hurt. I passe ouer their disdainefulnesse, pride, extortion, cruelty. I passe ouer the dissolute licentiousnesse in all the parts of their life. In suffering whereof the world is so wearied, that it is not to be feared, that I should seeme to enforce any thing too much. This one thing I say, which they themselues shall not be able to denie: that of Bishops there is almost none, of the Parsons of Parishes not the hundreth man: but if iudgement should be giuen of his maners according to the olde Canons, he should be either to be excommunicate: or at least to bee put from his office. I seeme to say somewhat incredible: so farre is that ancient discipline growen out of vse, that commanded an exacter triall to bee had of the manners of the Cleargie: but the truth is so. Now let them goe, that fight vnder the standerd and guiding of the sea of Rome, and let them boast among themselues of the order of Priesthood. As for the order that they haue, truely it is euident, that it is neither of Christ, nor of his Apostles, nor of the Fathers, nor of the old Church.

What Deacons do in the church of Rome.

15 Now let the Deacons come foorth, and that most holy distributing that they haue of the goods of the Church. Howbeit they doe not now create their Deacons to that purpose, for they enioyne them nothing else but to minister at the altar, to read and sing the Gospell, and doe I wote not what trifles. Nothing of the almes, nothing of the care of the poore, nothing of all that function which they in old time executed. I speake of the very institution. For if we haue respect what they doe, indeed it is not to them an office, but onely a step toward Priesthood. In one thing, they that keepe the Deacons place at the masse, doe represent a voide image of antiquitie. For they receiue the offerings before the consecration. This was the ancient maner, that before the communion of the Supper, the faithfull did kisse one another, and offer their almes at the altar: so first by a signe, and afterward by very liberalitie they shewed their charitie. The Deacon, that was the poore mens steward, receiued that which was giuen, to distribute it. Now of those almes, there commeth no more to the poore, than if they were throwen into the sea. Therefore they mocke the Church with this lying Deaconrie. Truely therein they haue nothing like, neither to the institution of the Apostles, nor to the ancient vsage. But the very distribution of the goods they haue conueyed another way: and haue so framed it, that nothing can bee deuised more vnorderly. For as theeues, when they haue cut mens throtes, doe deuide the pray among them: so these, after the quenching of the light of Gods word, as though though the Church were ſlaine, doe thinke that whatſoeuer was dedicate to holy vſes is laid for pray and ſpoile. Therfore making a diuiſion, euery one hath ſnatched to himſelfe as much as he could.

The ſpoile they haue made of Church goods, and the iniury they doe thereby to the poore.

16 Heere all theſe old orders, that we haue declared, are not onely troubled, but vtterly wiped out and raſed. The Biſhops and Prieſts of Cities, which being made rich by this pray, were turned into Canons, haue made hauocke of the chiefe part among them. But it appeareth that the partition was vnorderly, becauſe to this day they ſtriue about the bounds. Whatſoeuer it be, by this prouiſion it is prouided, that not one halfe-pennie of the goods of the Church ſhould come to the poore, whoſe had been the halfe part at leaſt. For the Canons doe giue them the fourth part by name: and the other fourth part they doe therefore appoint to the Biſhops, that they ſhould beſtow it vpon hoſpitality, and other duties of Charity, I ſpeake not what the Clearkes ought to doe with their portion, and to what vſe they ought to beſtow it. For we haue ſufficiently declared, that the reſt which is appointed for temples, buildings and other expenſes, ought to be open for the poore in neceſſity. I pray you, if they had one ſparke of the feare of God in their heart would they abide this burden of conſcience, that all that they eat, and wherewith they be clothed, commeth of theft, yea of ſacriledge? But ſith they are little mooued with the iudgement of God, they ſhould at leaſt thinke, that thoſe be men endued with wit and reaſon, to whom they would perſwade, that they haue ſo goodly and well framed orders in their Church, as they are wont to boaſt. Let them anſwer me ſhortly, whether Deaconry be a licence to ſteale and rob. If they deny this, they ſhall alſo be compelled to confeſſe, that they haue no Deaconry left, foraſmuch as among them all the diſpoſition of the goods of the Church is openly turned into a ſpoiling full of ſacriledge.

The pretenſe which they haue, as if the kingdome of Chriſt, were by theſe meanes made more glorious.

17 But heere they vſe a very faire colour. For they ſay, that the dignity of the Church is by that magnificence not vncomlily vpholden. And they haue of their ſect ſome ſo ſhameleſſe, that they dare openly boaſt, that ſo onely are fulfilled thoſe prophecies, whereby the old Prophets deſcribe the glorioufneſſe of the kingdome of Chriſt, when that kingly gorgeouſneſſe is ſeene in the prieſtly order. Not in vaine (ſay they) God hath promiſed theſe things to his Church. Kings ſhall come, they ſhall worſhip in thy ſight, they ſhall bring thee gifts. Ariſe, ariſe, cloth thee with thy ſtrength, O Syon: cloth thee with the garments of thy glory, O Hieruſalem: All ſhall come from Saba, bringing gold and incenſe, and ſpeaking praiſe to the Lord. All the cattle of Cedar ſhall be gathered together to thee. If I ſhould tarry long vpon confuting this lewdneſſe, I feare leaſt I ſhould ſeeme fond. Therefore I will not looſe words in vaine. But I aske: if any Iew would abuſe theſe teſtimonies, what ſolution would they giue? Verily they would reprehend his dulneſſe, for that he transferred thoſe things to the fleſh and the world, that are ſpiritually ſpoken of the ſpirituall kingdome of Chriſt. For wee know, that the Prophets, vnder the image of earthly things, did paint out vnto vs the heauenly glorie of God, that ought to ſhine in the Church. For the Church had neuer leſſe aboundance of theſe bleſſings, which their words expreſſe, than in the time of the Apoſtles: and yet all confeſſe, that the force of the kingdome of Chriſt then chiefly floriſhed abroad. What then meane theſe ſayings? Whatſoeuer is any where precious, high, excellent, it ought to be made ſubiect to the Lord. Whereas it is namely ſpoken of Kings, that they ſhall ſubmit their ſcepters to Chriſt, that they ſhall throw downe their Crownes before his feete, that they ſhall dedicate their goods to the Church: when (will they ſay) was it better and more fully performed, than when Theodoſius, caſting away his purple robe, leauing the ornaments of the Empire, as ſome one of the common people: ſubmitted himſelfe before God and the Church, to ſolemne penance? then when he, and other like godly Princes beſtowed their endeuours and their cares to preſerue pure doctrine in the Church, and to cheriſh and defend ſound teachers? But how Prieſts at that time exceeded not in ſuperfluous riches, that onely ſentence of the Synode at Aquileia, where Ambroſe was chiefe, ſufficiently declareth: Glorious is pouertie in the Prieſts of the Lord. Truly the Biſhops had at that time ſome riches, wherewith they might haue ſet out the Churches honor, if they had thought thoſe to be the true ornaments of the Church. But when they knew

knew that there was nothing more against the office of Pastors, than to glister and shew themselues proudly with daintinesse of fare, with gorgiousnesse of garments, with great traine of seruants, with stately Palaces, they followed and kept the humblenesse and modestie, yea the very pouertie which Christ holily appointed among his Ministers.

How far their bestowing of Church goods differeth from that which either the Apostles, or the ancient Fathers vsed.

18 But that we may not be too long in this point, let vs againe gather into a short summe, how far that dispensation or dissipation of the goods of the Church, that is now vsed, differeth from the true Deaconrie, which both the word of God commendeth vnto vs, and the ancient Church obserued. As for that which is bestowed vpon the garnishing of Temples, I say it is ill bestowed, if that measure be not vsed, which both the very nature of holy things appointeth, that the Apostles and other holy Fathers haue prescribed both by doctrine and examples. But what like thing is there seene at this day in the Temples? whatsoeuer is framed, I will not say after that ancient sparing, but to any honest meane it is reiected. Nothing at all pleaseth, but that which sauoureth of riot and the corruption of times. In the meane time they are so far from hauing due care of the liuely Temples, that they would rather suffer many thousands of the poore to perish for hunger, than they would breake the least chalice or cruit, to relieue their neede. And that I may not pronounce of my selfe any thing more grieuously against them, this onely I would haue the godly Readers to thinke vpon: if it should happen that same Exuperius Bishop of Tholosa, whom we euen now rehearsed, or Acatius, or Ambrose, or any such to be raised from death, what would they say? Truly they would not allow that in so great necessitie of the poore, riches in a maner superfluous should be turned another way. Admit I speake nothing how these vses vpon which they be bestowed, (although there were no poore) are many waies hurtfull, but in no behalfe profitable. But I leaue to speake of men. These goods are dedicate to Christ: therefore they are to be disposed after his will. But they shall in vaine say, that this part is bestowed vpon Christ, which they haue wasted otherwise than he commanded. Howbeit, to confesse the truth, there is not much of the ordinarie reuenue of the Church abated for these expenses. For there are no Bishopricks so wealthy, no Abbaties so fat, finally neither so many, nor so large benefices that may serue to fill the gluttonie of Priests. But while they seeke to spare themselues, they perswade the people by superstition, to turne that which should be bestowed vpon the poore, to build Temples, to set vp Images, to buy Iewels, to get costly garments. So with this gulfe are the daily almes consumed.

The word of God, and the ancient Canons, against the pride of the Romane Clergie.

19 Of the reuenue, that they receiue of their lands and possessions, what else shall I say, but that which I haue already said, and which is before all mens eies? We see with what faithfulnesse they which are called Bishops and Abbots do dispose the greatest part. What madnesse is it, to seeke heere for an ecclesiasticall order? Was it meete that they, whose life ought to haue beene a singular example of frugalitie, modestie, continence, and humilitie, should contend with the royaltie of Princes in number of goods, in gorgiousnesse of houses, in daintinesse of apparell and fare? And how much was this contrarie to their office, that they, whom the eternall and inuiolable commandement of God forbiddeth to be desirous of filthy gaine, and biddeth to be content with simple liuing, should not onely lay hands vpon townes and castles, but also violently enter vpon the greatest Lordships, finally possesse forceably very Empires? If they despise the word of God: what will they answere to those ancient decrees of the Synods: whereby it is decreed that the Bishop should haue a small lodging not far from the Church, meane fare and houshold stuffe? what will they say to that praise of the Synod at Aquileia: where pouertie is reported glorious in the Priests of the Lord? For perhaps they will vtterly refuse as too much rigorous, that which Hierom aduiseth Nepotianus, that poore men and strangers: and among them Christ as a guest, may know his table. But that which he by and by addeth, they will be ashamed to deny that it is the glorie of a Bishop to prouide for the good of the poore: that it is the shame of all Priests to studie for their owne riches. But they cannot receiue this, but they must all condemne themselues of shame. But it is not needfull in this place to speake more hardly gainst them, sith my meaning was nothing else, but to shew, that among them the lawfull order of Deaconrie is long agoe taken away: that they may no more glorie of this title to the commendation of their Church: which I thinke I haue alreadie sufficiently shewed.

THE SIXT CHAPTER.

Of the Supremacie of the Sea of Rome.

The Supremacie of the Sea of Rome, neither deriued from Christes institution, nor from the vse of the old Church.

HItherto we haue rehearsed those orders of the Church, which were in the gouernment of the old Church: but afterward corrupted in times, and from thencefoorth more and more abused, doe now in the Popish Church retaine onely their name, and indeed are nothing else but visours: that by comparison the godly reader might iudge what maner of Church the Romanists haue, for whose sake they make vs schismatikes, because we haue departed from it. But as for the head and top of the whole order, that is to say, the Supremacie of the Sea of Rome, whereby they trauell to proone that they onely haue the Catholike Church, we haue not yet touched it: because it tooke beginning neither from the institution of Christ, nor from the vse of the old Church, as those former parts did: which we haue shewed to haue so proceeded from antiquitie, that by wickednesse of times they are vtterly degenerate, and haue put on altogether a new forme. And yet they goe about to perswade the world, that this is the chiefe and in a maner onely bond of the vnitie of the Church, if we cleaue to the Sea of Rome, and continue in the obedience thereof. They rest (I say) principally vpon this stay, when they will take away the Church from vs, and claime it to themselues, for that they keepe the head, vpon which the vnitie of the Church hangeth, and without which the Church must needs fall asunder and be broken in peeces. For thus they thinke that the Church is as it were a maimed and headlesse bodie, vnlesse it be subiect to the Sea of Rome, as to her head. Therefore when they talke of their Hierarchie, they alway take their beginning at this principle: that the Bishop of Rome (as the Vicar of Christ, which is the head of the Church) is in his stead President of the vniuersall Church: and that otherwise the Church is not well ordered, vnlesse that Sea doe hold the Supremacie aboue all other. Therefore this also is to be examined of what sort it is: that we may omit nothing that pertaineth to a iust gouernment of the Church.

The high priests authoritie amongst the Iewes, no proofe for the soueraigne dignitie of Rome.

2 Let this therefore be the principall point of the question: Whether it be necessarie for the true forme of Hierarchie (as they call it) or Ecclesiasticall order, that one Sea should be aboue the rest both in dignitie and in power, that it may be the head of the whole body. But we make the Church subiect to too vniust lawes, if we lay this necessitie vpon it, without the word of God. Therefore if the aduersaries will proone that which they require, they must first shew that this disposition was ordained by Christ. For this purpose they alleadge out of the Law the high Priesthood, also the high iudgement, which God did institute at Hierusalem. But it is easie to giue a solution, and that many waies, if one way doe not satisfie them. First no reason compelleth to extend that to the whole world, which was profitable in one nation: yea rather, the order of one nation and of the whole world shall be farre different. Because the Iewes were on each side compassed with Idolaters: that they should not be diuersly drawne with varietie of religions, God appointed the place of worshipping him in the middest part of the land: there he ordained ouer them one head Bishop, whom they should haue all regard vnto, that they might be the better kept together in vnitie. Now when religion is spred abroad into the whole world, who doth not see that it is altogether an absurditie, that the gouernement of the East and West be giuen to one man? For it is in effect as much as if a man should affirme that the whole world ought to be gouerned by one Ruler, because one peece of land hath no moe rulers but one. But there is yet another reason, why that ought not to be made an example to be followed. No man is ignorant that the high Bishop was a figure of Christ. Now, since the Priesthood is remooued, that right must also be remooued. But to whom is it remooued? Truely not to the Pope (as he himselfe is so bold shamelesly to boast) when he draweth this title to himselfe: but to Christ, which as he alone sustaineth this office, without any Vicar or Successor, so he resigneth the honor to none other. For the Priesthood consisteth not in doctrine onely, but in the appeasing of God, which Christ hath fully wrought by his death, and in that intercession which he now vseth with his Father.

Things in the new Testament spoken to Peter, proue not the power which the Bishop of Rome challengeth.

3 There is therefore no cause why they should binde vs by this example, as by a perpetuall rule, which we haue seene to be enduring but for a time. Out of the new Testament they haue nothing to bring foorth for proofe of their opinion, but that it was said to one: Thou art Peter, and vpon this stone I will build my Church. Againe, Peter, Louest thou me? Feede my sheepe. But admitting that these be strong proofes, they must first shew, that he which is commanded to feede the flocke of Christ, hath power committed to him ouer all Churches: and that to binde and to loose is nothing else but to be ruler of all the world. But as Peter had receiued the commandement of the Lord, so he exhorteth all other Priests to feede the Church. Heereby we may gather, that by this saying of Christ, there was either nothing giuen to Peter more than to the rest, or that Peter did equally communicate with other the power that he had receiued. But, that we striue not vainely, we haue in another place a cleare exposition out of the mouth of Christ, what is to binde and loose: that is to say, to retaine and to forgiue sinnes. But the maner of binding and loosing, both the whole Scripture each where sheweth, and Paul very well declareth, when he saith that the ministers of the Gospell haue commandement to reconcile men to God, and also haue power to punish them that refuse this benefit.

What keies Christ gaue vnto Peter.

4 How shamefully they wrest those places, that make mention of binding and loosing, I both haue already shortly touched, and a little after I shall haue occasion to declare more at large. Now it is good to see onely, what they gather of that famous answere of Christ to Peter. He promised him the keies of the kingdome of heauen: he said that whatsoeuer hee bound in earth, should be bound in heauen. If wee agree vpon the word keies, and the manner of binding, all contention shall by and by cease. For the Pope himselfe will gladly giue ouer the charge inioyned to the Apostles, which beeing full of trauell and griefe, should shake from him his pleasures, without gaine. For as much as the heauens are opened vnto vs by the doctrine of the Gospell, it is with a very fit Metaphor expressed by the name of keies. Now men are bound and loosed in no otherwise, but when faith reconcileth some to God, and their owne vnbeliefe bindeth other some. If the Pope did take this onely vpon him: I thinke there will bee no man that would either enuie it or striue about it. But because this succession being trauelsome and nothing gainefull pleaseth not the Pope, heereupon groweth the beginning of the contention, what Christ promised to Peter. Therefore I gather by the very matter it selfe, that there is nothing meant, but the dignitie of the office of an Apostle, which cannot be seuered from the charge. For if that definition which I haue rehearsed, be receiued (which cannot but shamelesly be reiected) here is nothing giuen to Peter, that was not also common to his other fellowes: because otherwise there should not onely wrong be done to the persons, but the very maiestie of doctrine should halt. They cry out on the other side: what auaileth it, I pray you, to runne vpon this rocke? For they shall not proue, but as the preaching of one same Gospell was enioyned to all the Apostles, so they were also all alike furnished with power to binde and loose. Christ (say they) appointed Peter prince of the whole Church, when he promised that he would giue him the keies. But that which he then promised to one, in another place he gaue it also to all the rest, and deliuered it as it were into their hands. If the same power were granted to all, which was promised to one, wherein shall he be aboue his fellowes? Herein (say they) he excelleth, because he receiued it both in common together with them, and seuerally by himselfe, which was not giuen to the other, but in common. What if I answere with Cyprian and Augustine, that Christ did it not for this purpose, to preferre one man before other, but so to set out the vnitie of the Church. For thus saith Cyprian, that God in the person of one gaue the keies to all, to signifie the vnitie of all: and that the rest were the same thing that Peter was, endued with like partaking both of honor and power: but that the begining is taken at vnitie, that the church of Christ may be shewed to be one. Augustine saith: If there were not in Peter a mysterie of the Church, the Lord would not say to him, I will giue thee the keies. For if this was said to Peter, the Church hath them not: but but if the Church haue them, then Peter, when he receiued the keies, betokened the whole Church. And in another place. When they were all asked, onely Peter answered, thou art Christ: and it is said to him, I will giue thee the keies, as though he alone had receiued the power of binding and loosing: whereas both he being one, said that one for all, and he receiued the other with all, as bearing the person of vnitie. Therefore one for all, becauſe there is vnitie in all.

5 But this, Thou art Peter, and vpon this rocke I will build my Church, is no where read ſpoken to any other. As though Chriſt ſpake there any other thing of Peter, than that which Paul and Peter himſelfe ſpeaketh of all Chriſtians. For Paul maketh Chriſt the chiefe and corner ſtone, vpon which they are builded together, that grow into a holie temple to the Lord. And Peter biddeth vs to be liuely ſtones which being founded vpon that choſen and pretious ſtone, doe by this ioyne and coupling together with our God, cleaue alſo together among our ſelues. He (ſay they) aboue the reſt: becauſe he hath the name peculiarly. Indeed I doe willingly grant this honor to Peter, that in the building of the Church he be placed among the firſt, or (if they will haue this alſo) the firſt of all the faithfull: but I will not ſuffer them to gather thereupon, that he ſhould haue a Supremacie ouer the reſt. For what maner of gathering is this? He excelleth other in feruentneſſe of zeale, in learning, and courage: therefore he hath power ouer them. As though we might not with better colour gather, that Andrew is in degree before Peter, becauſe he went before him in time, and brought him to Chriſt. But I paſſe ouer this. Let Peter truely haue the firſt place, yet there is great difference betweene the honour of degree and power. We ſee that the Apoſtles commonly granted this to Peter, that he ſhould ſpeake in aſſemblies, and after a certaine maner goe before them with propounding, exhorting, and admoniſhing: but of his power we read nothing at all.

6 Howbeit we be not yet come to diſpute of that point: onely at this preſent I would proue, that they doe too fondly reaſon, when by the onely name of Peter, they would build an Empire ouer the whole Church. For thoſe old follies wherewith they went about to deceiue at the beginning, are not woorthie to be rehearſed, much leſſe to be confuted, that the Church was builded vpon Peter, becauſe it was ſaid, vpon this rock, &c. But ſome of the Fathers haue ſo expounded it. But when the whole Scripture crieth out to the contrarie, to what purpoſe is their authoritie alleaged againſt God? Yea, why doe we ſtriue about the meaning of theſe words, as though it were darke or doubtfull, when nothing can be more plainly nor more certainly ſpoken? Peter had confeſſed in his owne and his brethrens name that Chriſt is the Sonne of God. Vpon this rocke Chriſt buildeth his Church: becauſe it is (as Paul ſaith) the onely foundation, beſide which there can be laid none other. Neither doe I heere therefore refuſe the authoritie of the Fathers, becauſe I want their teſtimonies, if I liſted to alleage them: but (as I haue ſaid) I will not with contending about ſo cleere a matter trouble the Readers in vaine, ſpecially ſith this point hath been long agoe diligently enough handled and declared by men of our ſide.

the Embaſſage committed to him, he did thereby confeſſe that he had a fellowſhip with them, and not an authoritie ouer them. If none of theſe things were, yet the onely Epiſtle to the Galathians may eaſily take all doubting from vs: where almoſt in two Chapters together, Paul trauelleth to prooue nothing elſe, but that he himſelfe was equall to Peter in honour of Apoſtleſhip. Then he rehearſeth that he came to Peter, not to profeſſe ſubiection, but onely to make their conſent of doctrine approoued by teſtimonie to all men: and that Peter himſelfe required no ſuch thing, but gaue him his right hand of fellowſhip, to worke in common together in the Lords Vineyard: and that there was no leſſer grace giuen to him among the Gentiles, than to Peter among the Iewes: Finally, that when Peter dealt not very faithfully, he was corrected by him, and obeyed his reprooving. All theſe things doe make plaine, either that there was an equalitie betweene Paul and Peter, or at leaſt that Peter had no more power ouer the reſt, than they had ouer him. And (as I haue alreadie ſaid) Paul of purpoſe laboureth about this, that none ſhould preferre before him in the Apoſtleſhip either Peter, or Iohn, which were fellowes, not Lords.

Gal. 1. 18. & 2. 8.

If Peter, were the Prince of the Apoſtles, it followeth not hereupon that the whole world ſhould be ſubiect to the Biſhop of Rome.

8 But, to grant them that which they require concerning Peter, that is, that he was the Prince of the Apoſtles, and excelled the reſt in dignitie: yet there is no cauſe why they ſhould of a ſingular example make an vniuerſall rule, and drawe to perpetuitie that which hath beene once done: ſith there is a farre differing reaſon. One was cheefe among the Apoſtles: forſooth, becauſe they were few in number. If one were the cheefe of twelue men, ſhall it therefore follow that one ought to be made ruler of a hundred thouſand men? It is no maruell that twelue had one among them that ſhould rule them all. For nature beareth this, and the wit of men requireth this, that in euery aſſembly, although they be all equall in power, yet there be one as a gouernour, whom the reſt may haue regard vnto. There is no Court without a Conſull, no Seſſion of Iudges without a Pretor, or Propounder, no companie without a Ruler, no fellowſhip without a Maiſter. So ſhould it be no abſurditie, if we confeſſed that the Apoſtles gaue to Peter ſuch a ſupremacie. But that which is of force among few, is not by and by to be drawen to the whole world, to the ruling whereof no one man is ſufficient. But (ſay they) this hath place no leſſe in the whole vniuerſalitie of nature, than in all the parts, that there be one ſoueraigne head of all. And hereof (and God will) they fetch a proofe from Cranes and Bees, which alway chooſe to themſelues one guide, not many. I allow in deede the examples which they bring foorth: but doe Bees reſort together out of all the world to chooſe them one king? euery ſeuerall king is content with his owne hyue. So among Cranes, euery heard hath their owne king. What elſe ſhall they proue hereby, but that euery Church ought to haue their owne ſeuerall Biſhop appointed them? Then they call vs to ciuill examples. They alleage that ſaying of Homer, It is not good to haue many gouernours: and ſuch things as in like ſenſe are read in prophane writers to the commendation of Monarchie. The anſwere is eaſie. For Monarchie is not praiſed of Vlyſſes in Homer, or of any other, in this meaning, as though one ought to be Emperour of the whole world: but they meane to ſhew that one kingdome cannot hold two kings: and that power (as he calleth it) can abide no companion.

No head of the whole Church but only Chriſt.

9 But let it be as they will, that it is good and profitable that the whole world be holden vnder Monarchy, which yet is a very great abſurditie: but let it be ſo: yet I will not therefore grant that the ſame ſhould take place in the gouernment of the Church. For the Church hath Chriſt her onely head, vnder whoſe dominion we all cleaue together, according to that order and that forme of pollicie which he hath preſcribed. Therefore they doe a great wrong to Chriſt, when by that pretence they will haue one man to be ruler of the vniuerſall Church, becauſe it cannot be without a head. For Chriſt is the head of whom the whole body coupled and knit together in euery ioynt, wherewith one miniſtreth to an other, according to the working of euery member in the meaſure thereof, maketh increaſe of the bodie. See you not, how he ſetteth all men without exception in the body, and leaueth the honor and name of head to Chriſt alone? See you not how he giueth to euery member a certaine meaſure, and a determined, and limited function: whereby both the perfection of the grace and the Ephe. 4. 15.

ſoueraigne power of gouernance may remaine with Chriſt onely? Neither am I ignorant what they are wont to cauill, when this is obiected againſt them: they ſay that Chriſt is properly called the onely head, becauſe he alone raigneth by his owne authoritie and in his owne name: but that this nothing withſtandeth, but that there may be vnder him another miniſteriall head (as they terme it) that may be his vicegerent in earth. But by this cauillation they preuaile nothing, vnleſſe they firſt ſhew that this miniſtery was ordained by Chriſt. For the Apoſtle teacheth, that the whole miniſtration is diſperſed through the members, and that the power floweth from the one heauenly head. Or if they will haue it any plainer ſpoken, ſith the Scripture teſtifieth that Chriſt is the head, and claimeth that honour to him alone, it ought not to be transferred to any other, but whom Chriſt himſelfe hath made his vicar. But that is not onely no where read, but alſo may be largely confuted by many places.

Eph.1.22.& 4. 17.& 5.23. Col.1.18.& 2.10. Eph.4.10.

10 Paul ſometimes depainteth vnto vs a liuely image of the Church. Of one head he maketh there no mention. But rather by his deſcription we may gather, that it is diſagreeing from the inſtitution of Chriſt. Chriſt at his aſcending tooke from vs the viſible preſence of himſelfe: yet he went vp to fulfill all things. Now therefore the Church hath him yet preſent, and alway ſhall haue. When Paul goeth about to ſhew the meane whereby he preſenteth himſelfe, he calleth vs backe to the miniſteries which he vſeth. The Lord (ſaith he) is in vs all, according to the meaſure of grace that hee hath giuen to euery member. Therefore he hath appointed ſome Apoſtles, ſome Paſtors, ſome Euangeliſts, otherſome Teachers, &c. Why doth he not ſay, that he hath ſet one ouer all, to be his vicegerent? For the place required that principally, and it could by no meanes haue beene omitted, if it had beene true. Chriſt (ſaith he) is with vs. How? by the miniſtery of men, whom he hath appointed to gouerne the Church. Why not rather by the miſteriall head, to whom he hath committed his ſteed? He nameth vnitie: but in God, and in the faith of Chriſt. Hee aſſigneth to men nothing but common miniſterie, and to euery one a particular meaſure. In that commendation of vnitie, after that he had ſaid that there is but one body, one ſpirit, one hope of calling, one God, one Faith, one Baptiſme, why hath he not alſo immediately added one chiefe biſhop, that may hold the Church together in vnitie? For nothing could haue beene more fitly ſpoken, if it had bene true. Let that place be diligently weighed. It is no doubt but that he meant there altogether to repreſent the holy and ſpirituall gouernment of the Church, which they that came after called Hierarchie. As for Monarchie among miniſters, he not onely nameth none, but alſo ſheweth that there is none. It is alſo no doubt but that he meant to expreſſe the maner of conioyning, whereby the faithfull cleaue together with Chriſt their head. There he not onely ſpeaketh of no miniſteriall head, but appointeth to euery of the members a particular working according to the meaſure of grace diſtributed to euery one. Neither is there any reaſon why they ſhould ſubtlely diſpute of the compariſon of the heauenly and earthly Hierarchie. For it is not ſafe to know beyond meaſure of it. And in framing this gouernment we muſt follow no other figure, than the Lord himſelfe hath painted out in his word.

The Apoſtles knew no monarchie in the miniſteriall gouernment of the Church. Eph.4.7.& 11.

11 Now although I grant them another thing, which they ſhall neuer winne by proofe before ſober men, that the ſupremacie of the Church was ſo ſtabliſhed in Peter, that it ſhould alway remaine by perpetuall ſucceſſion: yet how will they prooue, that his ſeat was ſo placed at Rome, that whoſoeuer is Biſhop of that Church, ſhould be ſet ouer the whole world? By what right doe they binde this dignitie to the place, which is giuen without mention of place? Peter (ſay they) liued and died at Rome. What did Chriſt himſelfe? Did not he, while he liued, exerciſe his Biſhopricke, and in dying fulfill the office of Prieſthood, at Hieruſalem? The Prince of Paſtors, the ſoueraigne Biſhop, the head of the Church, could not purchaſe honor to the place: and could Peter, that was farre inferior to him? Are not theſe follies more than childiſh? Chriſt gaue the honor of ſupremacie to Peter: Peter ſate at Rome, therefore he there placed the ſea of ſupremacie. By this reaſon the Iſraelites in old time might haue ſet the ſeat of ſupremacie in the deſert, where Moſes the chiefe Teacher and Prince of Prophets executed his miniſterie and died.

If Peter had a ſupremacie not onely to be confirmed vnto him, but alſo conueied vnto others, the title of the biſhop of Rome is not hereby proued

Deut.34.5.

12 Let vs ſee how trimly they reaſon. Peter (ſay they) had the Supremacie among the Apoſtles: therefore the Church where he ſate ought to haue that priuiledge. But where ſate he firſt? At Antioch, ſay they. Therefore the Church of Antioch doth rightly claime to it ſelfe the Supremacie. They confeſſe that it was in old time the firſt: but they ſay, that in remouing thence he remoued to Rome the honour that he brought with him. For there is an Epiſtle vnder the name of Pope Marcellus to the Biſhops of Antioch, where he ſayeth thus: Peters ſeate was at the beginning with you, which afterward by the Lords commandement was remoued hither. So the Church of Antioch, which was once the chiefe, hath giuen place to the Sea of Rome. But by what Oracle had that good man learned, that the Lord ſo commanded? For if this cauſe be to be determined by the Lawe, it is neceſſarie that they anſwere, whether they will haue this priuilege to be perſonall, or reall, or mixt. For it muſt be one of theſe three. If they ſay that it is perſonall, then it belongeth nothing to the place. If they ſay that it is reall, then when it is once giuen to the place, it is not taken away by reaſon either of the death or departure of the perſon. It remaineth therefore that they muſt ſay it is mixt: but then that place ſhall be not ſimply to be conſidered, vnleſſe the perſon doe alſo agree. Let them chooſe which ſoeuer they will, I will by and by inferre and eaſily prooue, that Rome can by no meane take the Supremacie vpon it ſelfe.

If the firſt place be granted to the Church of Rome, why the ſecond vnto Alexandria, before either Antioch, or Epheſus, or Ieruſalem.
Gal.2.9.

13 But be it, that (as they triflingly ſay) the ſupremacie was remoued from Antioch to Rome: yet why did not Antioch keepe the ſecond place? For if Rome haue therfore the firſt place, becauſe Peter ſate there to the end of his life: to whom ſhall the ſecond place rather be granted, than where he had his firſt ſeate? How came it to paſſe then, that Alexandria went before Antioch? How agreeth it, that the Church of one diſciple ſhould be aboue the ſeate of Peter? If honour be due to euery Church, according to the worthineſſe of the founder, what ſhall we ſay alſo of the other Churches? Paul nameth three, that ſeemed to be pillers, Iames, Peter, and Iohn. If the firſt place were giuen to the ſea of Rome in the honour of Peter: doe not the ſeaes of Epheſus and Hieruſalem, where Iohn and Iames ſate, deſerue the ſecond and third place? But among the Patriarches Hieruſalem had the laſt place: Epheſus could not ſit ſo much as in the vttermoſt corner. And other Churches were left out, both all thoſe that Paul founded, and thoſe that the other Apoſtles were rulers of. The ſeate of Marke, which was but one of their diſciples, obtained the honour. Therefore they muſt either confeſſe that that was a prepoſterous order, or they muſt grant vs that this is not a perpetuall rule, that there be due to euery Church the ſame degree of honour which the founder had.

Peters ſitting at Rome ſcarce worthie of credit.
Gal.1.18.
Gal.2.1.

14 Howbeit, as for that which they report of Peters ſitting in the Church of Rome, I ſee not what credit it ought to haue. Truely that which is in Euſebius, that he ruled there fiue and twenty yeeres, is very eaſily confuted. For it is euident by the firſt and ſecond Chapter to the Galathians, that about twentie yeeres after the death of Chriſt, he was at Hieruſalem, and that then he went to Antioch: where how long he was, is vncertaine. Gregorie reckoneth ſeuen yeeres, and Euſebius twentie and fiue. But from the death of Chriſt, to the end of Neroes Empire, (in whoſe time they ſay that he was ſlaine) there ſhall be found but thirtie and ſeuen yeeres. For the Lord ſuffered vnder Tiberius, the eighteenth yeere of his Empire. If you rebate twentie yeeres, during the which Paul is witneſſe that Peter dwelt at Hieruſalem, there will remaine but ſeuenteene yeeres at the moſt, which muſt now be diuided betweene two Biſhopricks. If he taried long at Antioch he could not ſit at Rome but a very little while. Which thing we may yet alſo more plainly prooue. Paul wrote to the Romanes, when he was in his iourney going to Hieruſalem, where he was taken and from thence brought to Rome. It is not likely that this Epiſtle was written foure yeeres before that he came to Rome. Therein is yet no mention of Peter, which ſhould not haue beene left out, if Peter had ruled that Church. Yea and in the end alſo, when he rehearſeth a great number of the godly, whom he biddeth to be ſaluted, where verily he gathereth together all thoſe that he knew, he yet ſaith vtterly nothing of Peter. Neither is it needfull heere to make a long or curious demonſtration to men of ſound iudgement: for the matter it ſelfe, and the whole argument of the Epiſtle crieth out, that he ſhould not haue ouerpaſſed Peter, if he had beene at Rome.

Rom.15.15.

Rom.6.21.

15 Then

15 Then Paul was brought priſoner to Rome. Luke reporteth that he was receiued of the brethren, of Peter he ſaith nothing. He wrote from thence to many Churches: and in ſome places alſo he writeth ſalutations in the names of certaine: but he doth not in one word ſhew that Peter was there at that time. Who, I pray you ſhall thinke it likely, that he could haue paſſed him ouer with ſilence, if he had beene preſent? Yea to the Phillippians, where he ſaid that he had none that ſo faithfully looked vnto the worke of the Lord, as Timothie, he complained that they did all ſeeke their owne. And to the ſame Timothie he maketh a more grieuous complaint, that none was with him at his firſt defence, but all forſooke him: where therefore was Peter then? For if they ſay that he was then at Rome, how great a ſhame doth Paul charge him with, that he was a forſaker of the Goſpell? For he ſpeaketh of the beleeuers: becauſe he addeth, God impute it not vnto them. How long therefore, and in what time did Peter keepe that ſeate? But it is a conſtant opinion of writers, that he gouerned that Church euen to his death. But among the writers themſelues it is not certaine who was his ſucceſſor, becauſe ſome ſay Linus, and otherſome ſay Clement. And they tell many fond fables, of the diſputation had betweene him and Simon the Magician. And Auguſtine ſticketh not to confeſſe, when he entreateth of ſuperſtitions, that by reaſon of an opinion raſhly conceiued, there was a cuſtome growen in vſe at Rome, that they ſhould not faſt that day that Peter got the victorie of Simon the Magician. Finally the doings of that time are ſo entangled with diuerſitie of opinions, that we ought not raſhly to beleeue where we finde any thing written. And yet by reaſon of this conſent of writers, I ſtriue not againſt this, that he died there: but yet that he was Biſhop there, and ſpecially a long time, I cannot be perſwaded, neither doe I much paſſe vpon that alſo: for as much as Paul teſtifieth that Peters Apoſtleſhip did peculiarly belong to the Iewes, and his owne to vs. Therefore that that fellowſhip which they couenanted betweene themſelues, may be confirmed with vs, or rather that the ordinance of the holy Ghoſt may ſtand in force among vs, we ought to haue reſpect rather to the Apoſtleſhip of Paul and Peter. For the holy Ghoſt ſo deuided the prouinces betweene them that he appointed Peter to the Iewes, and Paul to vs. Now therefore let the Romaniſts goe and ſeeke their ſupremacie elſe where than in the word of God, where it is found not to be grounded.

As Peters gouerning the Church of Rome is hardly proued, ſo his ſucceſſor in gouernment is not agreed vpon: his deeds and death at Rome vncertaine: his being Biſhop of Rome and that ſo long moſt improbable.

Act. vlt. 16. Phil. 2. 20. 2. Tim. 4. 16.

Auguſt. ad Sanar.

16 Now let vs come to the olde Church, that it may alſo bee made to appeare plainely that our aduerſaries doe no leſſe cauſeleſly and falſely boaſt of the conſent thereof, than they doe of the witneſſe of the word of God. When therefore they bragge of that principle of theirs, that the vnitie of the Church cannot otherwiſe bee kept together, but if there bee one ſupreame head in earth, to whom all the members may obey, and that therefore the Lord gaue the ſupremacie to Peter, and from thence forth to the ſea of Rome by right of ſucceſſion, that the ſame ſhould remaine in it to the end: they affirme, that this hath beene alway obſerued from the beginning. But forаſmuch as they wrongfully wreſt many teſtimonies, I will firſt ſay this aforehand, that I denie not but that the writers doe each where giue great honor to the Church of Rome, and doe ſpeake reuerently of it. Which I thinke to be done ſpecially for three cauſes. For that ſame opinion, which I wot not how was growen in force, that it was founded and ordeined by the miniſterie of Peter, much auailed to procure fauor and eſtimation vnto it. Therefore in the Eaſt parts it was for honors ſake called the ſea Apoſtolike. Secondly, when the head of the Empire was there, and that therefore it was likely, that in that place were men more excellent both in learning and wiſedome, and skill, and experience of many things, than any where elſe: there was worthily conſideration had thereof, that both the honor of the Citie, and alſo the other more excellent gifts of God ſhould not ſeeme to be deſpiſed. There was beſide theſe alſo a third thing, that when the Churches of the Eaſt, and of Grecia, yea and of Affrica, were in tumults among themſelues with diſagreement of opinions, the Church of Rome was quieter and leſſe full of troubles than the reſt. So came it to paſſe, that the godly and holy Biſhops, being driuen out of their ſeates, did oftentimes flee thither as into a ſanctuarie or certaine hauen. For as the Weſterne men are of leſſe ſharpneſſe and ſwiftneſſe of wit, than the Aſians or Affricans be, ſo much are they leſſe deſirous of alterations.

Three cauſes why the fathers did attribute ſo much to the Church of Rome.

alterations. This therefore added much authoritie to the Church of Rome, that in those doubtfull times it was not so troubled as the rest, and did hold the doctrine once deliuered them, faster than all the rest as we shall by and by better declare. For these three causes (I say) it was had in no small honor, and commended with many notable testimonies of the old writers.

The Fathers of the Church confessing the churches vnitie neuer dreamed that the Bishop of Romes supremacie should be the bond to make it one.

17 But when our aduersaries will thereupon gather that it hath a supremacie and soueraigne power ouer other Churches, they doe too much amisse, as I haue already said, And that the same may the better appeare, I will first briefly shew what the olde Fathers thought of this vnitie which they enforce so earnestly. Hierom writing to Nepotianus, after that he had receiued many examples of vnitie, at the last descended to the Hierarchie of the Church. Each Bishop of euery seuerall Church, each Archpriest, each Archdeacon, and all the Ecclesiasticall order, doe rest vpon their owne rulers. Heere a Romaine Priest speaketh, he commendeth vnion in the Ecclesiasticall order, why doth he not rehearse that all Churches are knit together with one head as with one bond? Nothing could haue more fitly serued the matter that he had in hand: and it cannot bee said that it was for forgetfulnesse, that he omitted it: for he would haue done nothing more willingly if the matter had suffered him. He saw therefore without doubt, that that is the true reason of vnitie which Cyprian excellently well describeth in these words: The Bishoprick is one, wherof each hath a part wholy: and the Church is one, which is with increase of fruitfulnesse more largely extended into a multitude. Like as there are many sun-beames and one light: and many branches of a tree, but one bodie grounded on a fast holding roote: and like as from one fountaine flow many streames, and though the multitude seeme to be diuersly spread abroad with largenesse of ouerflowing plentie, yet the vnitie is kept whole in the originall: so the Church also being ouerspread with the light of the Lord, extendeth her beames abroad througout the whole world, yet it is but one that is each where poured foorth, and the vnitie of the bodie is not seuered: she spreadeth her branches ouer the whole world, she sendeth out her ouerflowing streames: yet is there but one head and one beginning, &c. Afterward: The spouse of Christ cannot be an adulteresse: she knoweth one onely house, she keepeth the holinesse of one onely chamber with chast shamefastnesse. You see how he maketh the vniuersall Bishoprick to be Christs onely, which comprehendeth the whole Church vnder him: and saith that all they that execute the office of Bishop vnder this head, haue their parts thereof wholy. Where is the supremacie of the sea of Rome, if the whole Bishoprick remaine with Christ onely, and each Bishop hath his part thereof wholy? These things therefore make to this purpose, that the Reader may vnderstand by the way, that the old Fathers were vtterly ignorant of that principle, which the Romanists doe take for confessed and vndoubted, concerning the vnitie of an earthly head in the Hierarchie of the Church.

De sim. prær.

THE SEVENTH CHAPTER.

Of the beginning and encreasing of the Papacie of Rome, vntill it aduanced it selfe to this height, whereby both the libertie of the Church hath beene oppressed, and all the right gouernment thereof ouerthrowen.

Sundry ancient Councels wherein the Bishop of Rome had not the chiefest place.

AS concerning the ancientnesse of the supremacie of the sea of Rome, there is nothing had of more antiquitie to stablish it, than the decree of the Nycene Synod, wherein the Bishop of Rome both hath the first place among the Patriarches giuen vnto him, and is commanded to looke vnto the Churches adioyning to the Citie. When the Councell maketh such diuision betweene him and the other Patriarches, that it assigneth to euery one their bounds: truely, it doth not appoint him the head of all, but maketh him one of the chiefe. There were present Vitus and Vincentius in the name of Iulius, which then gouerned the Church of Rome: to them was giuen the fourth place. I beseech you, if Iulius were acknowledged the head of the Church, should his Legates be thrust into the fourth seate? Should Athanasius bee chiefe in the Councell, where principally the image of the Hierarchicall order ought to bee seene? In the Synod at Ephesus it appeareth, that Celestinus which was then Bishop of Rome, vſed a crooked ſubtle meane to prouide for the dignitie of his ſeate. For when he ſent his deputies thither, he committed his ſteede to Cyrillus of Alexandria, which ſhould notwithſtanding otherwiſe haue beene the chiefe. To what purpoſe was that ſame committing, but that his name might by what meane ſoeuer abide in the firſt place? For his Legates ſate in a lower place, and were asked their opinion among the reſt, and ſubſcribed in their order: in the meane time the Patriarch of Alexandria ioyned Celeſtines name with his owne. What ſhall I ſay of the ſecond Councell at Epheſus: where when Leos Legates were preſent, yet Dioſcorus Patriarch of Alexandria ſate the chiefe as by his owne right? They will take exception that it was no vpright Councell, by which both the holy man Flauianus was condemned, and Eutyches acquited, and his vngodlineſſe allowed. But when the Synod was gathered, when the Biſhops tooke their places in order, verily the Legates of the Biſhop of Rome ſate there among the reſt none otherwiſe than in a holy and lawfull Counſell. Yet they ſtriued not for the firſt place, but yeelded it to another: which they would neuer haue done, if they had thought it to be theirs of right. For the Biſhops of Rome were neuer aſhamed to enter into the greateſt contentions for their honors: and for this onely cauſe oftentimes to vex and trouble the Church with many and hurtfull ſtrifes. But becauſe Leo ſaw that it ſhould be a too much vnreaſonable requeſt, if he ſhould ſeeke to get the chiefe place for his Legates, therefore he ſurceaſed it.

Rome

2 Then followed the Councell of Chalcedon, in which by the grant of the Emperour the Legates of the Church of Rome ſate in the chiefe place. But Leo himſelfe confeſſeth that this was an extraordinarie priuiledge. For when he made petition for it to the Emperor Marcianus, and Pulcheria the Empreſſe, he did not affirme that it was due to him, but onely pretended, that the Eaſterne Biſhops, which ſate as chiefe in the Councell at Epheſus, troubled all things and ill abuſed their power. Whereas therefore it was needfull to haue a graue gouernour, and it was not likely that they ſhould be meete for it, which had once beene ſo light and diſordered: therefore he praied, that by reaſon of the default and vnfitneſſe of other, the office of gouerning might be remooued to him. Truely that which is gotten by ſingular priuiledge and beſide order, is not by common law. Where this onely is pretended, that there needeth ſome new gouernour, becauſe the former gouernours had behaued themſelues ill, it is euident that it neither was ſo before, nor ought to continue ſo for euer, but is done onely in reſpect of preſent danger. The Biſhop of Rome therefore had the firſt place in the Councell of Chalcedon: not becauſe it was due to his ſea, but becauſe the Synode was at that time deſtitute of a graue and fit gouernour, while they that ought to haue beene the chiefe, did through their owne intemperance and corrupt affection, thruſt themſelues out of place. And this that I ſay, Leos ſucceſſour did indeed prooue. For when he ſent his Legates to the fift Synode at Conſtantinople, which was holden long time after, he brauled not for the firſt ſeate, but eaſily ſuffered Menna the Patriach of Conſtantinople to ſit as chiefe. So in the Councell of Carthage, at which Auguſtine was preſent, we ſee that not the Legates of the ſea of Rome, but Aurelius Archbiſhop of that place ſat as chiefe: when yet the contention was about the authoritie of the Biſhop of Rome. Yea there was alſo a generall Councell holden in Italy it ſelfe, at which the Biſhop of Rome was not preſent. Ambroſe was chiefe there, which was in very great authoritie with the Emperour, there was no mention made of the Biſhop of Rome. Therefore at that time it came to paſſe by the dignitie of Ambroſe, that the ſea of Millane was more noble than the ſea of Rome.

The chiefeſt place in the Councell of Chalcedon granted by the Emperour, at requeſt vpon ſpeciall occaſion for that time to the biſhop of Rome, which place in Synodes afterwards held other Biſhops had as before.

The Councell at Aquileia.

3 As concerning the title of Supremacie, and other titles of pride, whereupon it now maruellouſly boaſteth it ſelfe, it is not hard to iudge, when and in what ſort they crept in, Cyprian oftentimes maketh mention of Cornelius. He ſetteth him out with no other name, but by the name of brother, or fellow Biſhop, or fellow in office. But when he writeth to Stephen the ſucceſſor of Cornelius, he doth not only make him equall with himſelfe and the reſt, but alſo ſpeaketh more hardly to him, charging him ſometime with arrogancie, ſometime with ignorance. Since Cyprian we haue with all the Church of Africa iudged of that matter. The Councell at Carthage did forbid that any ſhould be called Prince of Prieſts or chiefe Biſhop, but onely Biſhop of the chiefe ſea. But if a Cap.47. a man turne ouer the ancienter monuments, he ſhall finde that the Biſhop of Rome at that time was content with the common name of Brother. Certainely ſo long as the face of the Church continued true and pure, all theſe names of pride, wherewith ſince that time the ſea of Rome hath begun to waxe outragious, were vtterly vnheard of: it was not knowen, who was the higheſt Biſhop and the onely head of the Church in earth. But if the Biſhop of Rome had beene ſo bold to haue taken ſuch a thing vpon him, there were ſtout and wiſe men that would haue by and by repreſſed his folly.

Ep.ad Euag. Hierom foraſmuch as he was a Prieſt at Rome, was not ill willing to ſet out the dignitie of his owne Church, ſo much as the matter and ſtate of his time ſuffered: yet we ſee how he alſo bringeth it downe into fellowſhip with the reſt. If authoritie (ſaith he) be ſought for, the world is greater than a Citie. Why doſt thou alleadge to me the cuſtome of one Citie? Why doſt thou defend ſmalneſſe of number, out of which hath growen pride, againſt the lawes of the Church? Whereſoeuer there be a Biſhop, either at Rome, or at Eugubium, or at Conſtantinople, or at Rhegium, he is of the ſame merit and of the ſame Prieſthood. The power of riches, or baſeneſſe of pouertie maketh not a Biſhop higher or lower.

The Biſhop of Conſtantinople ſhalenging a ſupremacie, reſiſted by Gregorie.

4 About the title of vniuerſall Biſhop the contention firſt began in the time of Gregorie, which was occaſioned by the ambition of Iohn Biſhop of Conſtantinople. For he (which thing neuer any man before had attempted) would haue made himſelfe vniuerſall Biſhop. In that contention Gregorie doth not alleadge that the right is taken away which was due to himſelfe: but ſtoutly crieth out againſt it, that it is a prophane name, yea full of ſacriledge, yea the forewarner of Antichriſt. The whole Church (ſaith he) falleth downe from her ſtate, if he fall which is called vniuerſall. In another place: It is very ſorrowfull, to ſuffer patiently, that our brother and fellow Biſhop, deſpiſing all other, ſhould only be named Biſhop. But in this his pride what elſe is betokened but the times of Antichriſt neere at hand? becauſe verily he followeth him, that deſpiſing the fellowſhip of Angels, went about to climbe vp to the top of ſingularitie. In another place he writeth to Eulolius of Alexandria and Anaſtaſius of Antioch. None of my predeceſſors at any time would vſe that prophane word: for if one bee called vniuerſall Patriarch, the name of Patriarches is abated from all the reſt. But farre may this be from a Chriſtian minde, that any ſhould haue a will to take that vpon him, whereby he may in any part, be it neuer ſo little, diminiſh the honor of his brethren. To conſent in this wicked word is nothing elſe but to looſe the faith. It is one thing (ſaith he) that we owe to the preſeruing of the vnitie of faith, and another thing that we owe to the keeping downe of pride. But I ſay it boldly, becauſe whoſoeuer calleth himſelfe, or deſireth to be called vniuerſall Biſhop, he doth in his proud aduancing run before Antichriſt, becauſe he doth with ſhewing himſelfe proud prefer himſelfe aboue the reſt. Againe to Anaſtius Biſhop of Alexandria: I haue ſaid that he cannot haue peace with vs, vnleſſe he amended the aduancing of the ſuperſtitious and proud word, which the firſt Apoſtate hath inuented. And (to ſpeake nothing of the wrong done to your honor) if one be called vniuerſall Biſhop, the vniuerſall Church falleth when that vniuerſall one falleth. But whereas he writeth, that this honor was offered to Leo in the Synod at Chalcedon, it hath no colour of trueth. For neither is there any ſuch thing read in the actes of that Synod. And Leo himſelfe, which with many Epiſtles impugneth the decree there made in honor of the ſea of Conſtantinople, without doubt would not haue paſſed ouer this argument, which had beene moſt to be liked of all other, if it had beene true, that he refuſed that which was giuen him: and being a man otherwiſe too much deſirous of honor, he would not haue omitted that which made for his praiſe. Therefore Gregorie was deceiued in this, that he thought that that title was offered to the ſea of Rome by the Synod of Chalcedon: to ſpeake nothing, how fond it is, that he both teſtifieth it to haue proceeded from the holy Synod, and alſo at the ſame time called it wicked, prophane, abhominable, proud, and full of ſacriledge, yea deuiſed by the Diuel, and publiſhed by the crier of Antichriſt. And yet he addeth that his predeceſſor refuſed it, leaſt all Prieſts ſhould be depriued of their due honor, when any thing were priuately giuen to one. In another place: no man at any time hath willed to be called by that word. No man hath taken to himſelfe that preſumptuous name: leaſt if he ſhould in the degree of Biſhopricke take to himſelfe a glorie of ſingularitie, he ſhould ſeeme to haue denied the ſame to all his brethren.

5 Now I come to the iuriſdiction, which the biſhop of Rome affirmeth that he hath ouer all Churches. I know how great contentions haue beene in old time about this matter: For there hath beene no time wherein the ſea of Rome hath not coueted to get an empire ouer other Churches. And in this place it ſhall not be out of ſeaſon, to ſearch by what meanes it grew then by little and little to ſome power. I doe not yet ſpeake of that infinite empire, which it hath not ſo long ago taken by force to it ſelfe: for we will deferre that to a place conuenient. But heere it is good to ſhew briefly, how in old time and by what meanes it hath aduanced it ſelfe, to take to it ſelfe any power ouer other Churches. When the Churches of the Eaſt were diuided and troubled with the factions of the Arrians vnder the Emperours Conſtantius, and Conſtans the ſonnes of Conſtantine the Great, and Athanaſius the chiefe defender there of the true faith was driuen out of his ſea: ſuch calamitie compelled him to come to Rome, that with the authoritie of the ſea of Rome, he might both after a ſort repreſſe the rage of his enemies, and confirme the godly that were in diſtreſſe. He was honorablie receiued of Iulius then Biſhop, and obtained that the Biſhops of the Weſt tooke vpon them the defence of his cauſe. Therefore when the godly ſtood in great need of forren aid, and ſaw that there was very good ſuccour for them in the Church of Rome, they willingly gaue vnto it the moſt authoritie that they could. But all that was nothing elſe, but that the communion thereof ſhould be highly eſteemed, and it ſhould be counted a great ſhame to be excommunicate of it. Afterward euill and wicked men alſo added much vnto it. For, to eſcape lawfull iudgements, they fled to this ſanctuarie. Therefore if any Prieſt were condemned by his Biſhop, or any Biſhop by the Synode of his Prouince, they by and by appealed to Rome. And the Biſhops of Rome receiued ſuch appellations more greedily than was meete: Becauſe it ſeemed to be a farme of extraordinarie power, ſo to entermeddle with matters farre and wide about them. So when Eutyches was condemned by Flauianus Biſhop of Conſtantinople, he complained to Leo that he had wrong done vnto him. Leo without delay, no leſſe vndiſcreetly than ſuddenly, tooke in hand the defence of an euill cauſe, he greeuouſly inueyed againſt Flauianus, as though he had, without hearing the cauſe, condemned an innocent: and by this his ambition he cauſed that the vngodlineſſe of Eutyches was for a certaine ſpace of time ſtrengthened. In Affrica it is euident that this oftentimes chanced. For ſo ſoone as any lewd man had taken a foyle in ordinary iudgement, he by and by flew to Rome, and charged his countriemen with many ſlanderous reports: and the ſea of Rome was alway ready to entermeddle. Which lewdnes compelled the biſhops of Affrica to make a law, that none vnder paine of excommunication ſhould appeale beyond the ſea.

The ground whereupon the ſouereignitie of the Biſhop of Rome did firſt take roote was his intermedling in thoſe cauſes, and his readineſſe to aide thoſe perſons, which being bad were readie any where to ſeeke maintenance.

6 But whatſoeuer it were, let vs ſee what authoritie or power the ſea of Rome then had. Eccleſiaſticall power is contained in theſe fower points, ordering of Biſhops, ſummoning of Councels, hearing of appeales or iuriſdiction, chaſtiſing, admonitions or cenſures. All the old Synods command Biſhops to be conſecrate by their owne Metropolitanes: and they neuer bid the biſhop of Rome to be called vnto it, but in his owne Patriarchie. But by little and little it grew in vſe, that all the Biſhops of Italie came to Rome to fetch their conſecration, except the Metropolitanes, which ſuffered not themſelues to be brought into ſuch bondage: but when any Metropolitane was to be conſecrate, the biſhop of Rome ſent thither one of his Prieſts, which ſhould onely be preſent but not preſident. Of which thing there is an example in Gregory: at the conſecration of Conſtantius biſhop of Millane after the death of Laurence. Howbeit I doe not thinke that that was a very ancient inſtitution: but when at the beginning for honour and good wils ſake they ſent one to another their Legates, to be witneſſes of the conſecration, and to teſtifie their communion with them, afterward that which was voluntarie, began to be holden for neceſſarie. Howſoeuer it be, it is euident that in old time the Biſhop of Rome had not the power of conſecrating, but in the prouince of his owne Patriarchie, that is to ſay, in the Churches adioyning to the citie, as the canon of the Nicene Synode ſaith. To the conſecration was annexed the ſending of a Synodicall Epiſtle, in which he was nothing aboue the reſt. For the Patriarches were woont immediately after their consecration, by solemne writing to declare their faith, whereby they professed that they subscribed to the holy and catholike Councels. So rendring an account of their faith, they did approoue themselues one to another. If the Bishop of Rome had receiued of other, and not himselfe giuen this confession, he had thereby beene acknowledged superiour, but when he was no lesse bound to giue it, than to require it of other, and to be subiect to the common law: truely that was a token of fellowship, not of dominion. Of this thing there is an example in Gregories Epistle to Anastasius and to Cyriacus of Constantinople, and in other places to all the Patriarches together.

Patriarches

Lib.1.Epist.25. Lib 6.ep.169. Lib.1.ep.24.

The Bishop of Rome as well censured by others, as others by him.

7 Then follow admonitions or censures: which as in old time the Bishops of Rome vsed toward other, so they did againe suffer them of other. Irenæus greeuously reproued Victor, because he vndiscreetly for a thing of no value, troubled the Church with a pernitious dissention. Victor obeied, and spurned not against it. Such a libertie was then in vre among the holy Bishops, that they vsed a brotherly authoritie toward the Bishop of Rome, in admonishing and chastising him if he at any time offended. He againe, when occasion required did admonish other of their dutie: and if there were any fault, rebuked it. For Cyprian, when he exhorteth Stephen to admonish the Bishops of France, fetcheth not his argument from the greater power, but from the common right that Priests haue among themselues. I beseech you, if Stephen had then beene ruler ouer Fraunce, would not Cyprian haue said: Restraine them, because they be thine? but he saith farre otherwise. This (saith he) the brotherly fellowship, wherwith we be bound one to another requireth that we should admonish one another. And we see also with how great sharpnesse of words he being otherwise a man of a milde nature inueieth against Stephen himselfe, when he thinketh him to be too insolent. Therefore in this behalfe also there appeereth not yet, that the Bishop of Rome had any iurisdiction ouer them that were not of his owne prouince.

Ad pomp. Contr. Epist. Stephani.

8 As concerning the calling together of Synodes, this was the office of euery Metropolitane, at certaine appointed times to assemble a prouinciall Synode. There the Bishop of Rome had no authoritie. But a generall Councell the Emperour onely might summon. For if any of the Bishops had attempted it, not onely they that were out of his prouince, would not haue obeied his calling, but also there would by and by haue risen an vprore. Therefore the Emperour indifferently warned them all to be present. Socrates indeed reporteth, that Iulius did expostulate with the Bishops of the East, because they called him not to the Synod of Antioch, wheras it was forbidden by the Canons, that any thing should be decreed without the knowledge of the Bishop of Rome. But who doth not see that this is to be vnderstanded of such decrees as binde the whole vniuersall Church? Now it is no maruell, if thus much be granted both to the antiquitie and honour of the citie, and to the dignitie of the sea, that there should be no generall decree made of religion, in the absence of the bishop of Rome, if he refuse not to be present. But what is this to the dominion ouer the whole Church? For we deny not that he was one of the chiefe: but we will not graunt, that which the Romanists now affirme, that he had a dominion ouer all.

Generall Councels summoned onely by the Emperour: prouinciall as well by other Bishops in their territories as by the Bishop of Rome.

Tripart.hist. lib.4.

9 Now remaineth the fourth kinde of power, which standeth in appeales. It is euident that he hath the chiefe power, to whose iudgement seate appellation is made. Many oftentimes appealed to the Bishop of Rome, and he himselfe also went about to draw the hearing of causes to himselfe: but he was alway laughed to scorne, when he passed his owne bounds. I will speake nothing of the East and of Grecia: but it is certain that the bishops of Fraunce stoutly withstood him, when he seemed to take to himselfe an empire ouer them. In Affrica there was long debate about that matter. For where at the Milleuitane Councell, at which Augustine was present, they were excommunicate that appealed beyond the sea, the bishop of Rome trauailed to bring to passe, that that decree might be amended. He sent his Legates to shew that that priuiledge was giuen to him by the Nicene Councell. The Legates brought foorth the actes of the Nicene Councell, which they had fetched out of the storehouse of their owne Church. The Affricans withstood it, and denied that the bishops of Rome ought to be credited in their owne cause: and said that therefore they would send to Constantinople, and into to other cities of Grecia, where coppies were to be had that were leſſe ſuſpicious. It was found, that therein was no ſuch thing written, as the Romans had pretended. So was that decree confirmed, which tooke the chiefe hearing of cauſes from the biſhop of Rome: In which doing the lewd ſhameleſneſſe of the biſhop of Rome appeared. For when he guilefully did thruſt in the Synode at Sardis in ſteed of the Nicene Synode, he was ſhamefully taken in a manifeſt falſehood. But yet greater and more ſhameleſſe was their wickedneſſe, that added a forged Epiſtle to the Councell, wherin I wot not what biſhop of Carthage, condemning the arrogance of Aurelius his predeceſſour, for that he was ſo bold to withdraw himſelfe from the obedience of the ſea Apoſtolike, and yeelding himſelfe and his Church, humbly craueth pardon. Theſe be the goodly monuments of antiquitie, wherupon the maieſtie of the ſea of Rome is founded, while they ſo childiſhly lie, vnder the pretence of antiquitie, that very blinde men may finde it out by groping. Aurelius (ſaith he) puffed vp with diueliſh boldneſſe and ſtubbornneſſe, rebelled againſt Chriſt, and ſaint Peter, and therefore to be condemned with curſe. What ſaid Auguſtine? But what ſaid ſo many fathers that were preſent at the Miléuitane Councell? But what need is it to ſpend many words in confuting that fooliſh writing, which the Romaniſtes themſelues, if they haue any face left, cannot looke vpon without great ſhame? So Gratian, I can not tell whether of malice or of ignorance, where he rehearſed that decree that they ſhould be excommunicate that appeale beyond the ſea, addeth an exception: Vnleſſe peraduenture they appeale to the ſea of Rome. What may a man doe to theſe beaſts, which are ſo voide of common reaſon, that they except that onely thing out of the law, for whoſe cauſe euery man ſeeth that the law was made? For the Councell when it condemneth appeales beyond the ſea, forbiddeth onely this, that none ſhould appeale to Rome. Heere the good expoſitour excepteth Rome out of the common law. 2. queſt. c. 4.

10 But (to determine this queſtion at once) one hiſtorie ſhall make plaine what maner of iuriſdiction the biſhop of Rome had in old time. Donate of the black-houſes had accuſed Cecilian biſhop of Carthage. The man accuſed was condemned, his cauſe not heard. For when he knew that the biſhops had conſpired againſt him, he would not appeare. Then the matter came to the Emperor Conſtantine. He for as much as he willed to haue the matter ended by eccleſiaſticall iudgement, committed the hearing of it to Melciades biſhop of Rome. To whom he adioined fellow commiſſioners, many biſhops of Italie, France and Spaine. If that belonged to the ordinary iuriſdiction of the ſea of Roma, to heare an appeale in an Eccleſiaſticall cauſe: why doth hee ſuffer other to be ioined with him at the will of the Emperour? Yea why did he himſelfe take the iudgement vpon him rather by the Emperours commandement, than by his owne office? But let vs heare what hapned afterward. There Cecilian got the victorie. Donate of the black-houſes was condemned for ſlaunder: he appealed: Conſtantine committed the iudgement of the appeale to the biſhop of Orleance. He ſate as iudge, to pronounce what he thought, after the biſhop of Rome. If the ſea of Rome hath the chiefe power without appellation: why doth Melciades ſuffer himſelfe to receiue ſo great a ſhame, that the biſhop of Orleance ſhould be preferred aboue him? And what Emperor doth this? euen Conſtantine of whom they boaſt that he employed not onely all his endeuour, but in a maner all the riches of the Empire to increaſe the dignitie of their ſea. We ſee therefore now, how farre the biſhop of Rome was at time by all meanes from the ſupreme dominion, which he affirmeth to be giuen vnto him by Chriſt ouer all the churches, and which he lyingly ſaith that he hath in all ages poſſeſſed by the conſent of the whole world.

The Biſhop of Rome appointed and others ioyned with him by Conſtantine to heare an appeale made by a biſhop of Carthage: and in the ſame cauſe the biſhop of Orleance appointed by the ſame Emperour to heare an appeale made from the biſhop of Rome. Aug. ep. 162.

11 *I know how many Epiſtles there be, how many writings and decrees, wherein the biſhops doe giue much, and boldly chalenge much vnto it. But this alſo all men that haue a very little wit and learning doe know, that the moſt part of thoſe are ſo vnſauorie, that by the firſt taſte of them a man may ſoone finde out of what ſhop they came. For what man of ſound wit and ſober, will thinke that that goodly interpretation is Anacletus his owne, which is in Gratian reported vnder the name of Anacletus: that is, that Cephas is a head? The Romaniſtes doe at this day abuſe for defence of their ſea, many ſuch trifles, which Gratian hath patched together without iudgement:

*Forged helps to bolſter out the Romiſh ſupremacie, the ambitious humour of Leo, whoſe power notwithſtanding was not ſuch as the ſea of Rome now chalengeth. Diſt. 11. cap. Sacroſanct.

and yet ſtill in ſo great light they will ſell ſuch ſmokes, wherewith in old time they were woont to mocke out the ignorant in darkeneſſe. But I will not beſtow much labour in confuting thoſe things, which doe openly confute themſelues by reaſon of their vnſauorie tollie. I grant that there remaine alſo true Epiſtles of the old Biſhops, wherein they ſet foorth the honour of their ſea with glorious titles, of which ſort are ſome Epiſtles of Leo. For that man, as he was learned and eloquent, ſo was hee alſo aboue meaſure deſirous of glorie and dominion: but whether the Churches then beleeued his teſtimonie when he ſo aduanced himſelfe, that indeed is it that is in controuerſie. But it appeareth that many offended with his ambition, did alſo withſtand his greedy deſire. Sometimes hee appointed in his ſteed the biſhop of Theſſalonica throughout Grecia and other countries adioining, ſomtime he appointed the biſhop of Orleance, or ſome other throughout France. So he appointed Hormiſdas biſhop of Hiſpalis to be his vicar in Spain: but euery where he excepteth, that he giueth out ſuch appointments vpon this condition, that the Metropolitanes may haue there ancient priuiledges remaining ſafe and whole. But Leo himſelfe declareth, that this is one of their priuiledges, that if any doubt happen about any matter, the Metropolitane ſhoud firſt be asked his aduiſe. Therfore thoſe appointments of vicars in his ſteed were vpon this condition, that neither any biſhop ſhould be letted in his ordinarie iuriſdiction, nor any Metropolitan in being iudge of appeales, nor any prouincial Councell in ordering of their Churches. What was this elſe but to abſtaine from all iuriſdiction: but to intermeddle to the appeaſing of diſcordes, onely ſo farre as the law and nature of the communion of the Church ſuffereth?

Epi. 86.

The calamitie of other places in Gregories time exalted the dignitie of the Church of Rome, but without ouerthrowing the ordinary iuriſdiction which others had.

12 In Gregories time that ancient order was already much changed. For when the Empire was ſhaken, and torne in peeces, when Fraunce and Spaine were afflicted with many ouerthrowes receiued, Slauonia waſted, Italy vexed, and Affrica in a maner deſtroied with continuall calamities, that in ſo great a ſhaking of ciuill affaires, at leaſt the integritie of Faith might remaine, or yet not vtterly periſh, all the Biſhops from ech part did the rather ioyne themſelues to the Biſhops of Rome. Thereby it came to paſſe, that not onely the dignitie, but alſo the power of that Sea greatly increaſed. Howbeit I doe not ſo much paſſe by what meanes it was brought about. Truely it appeareth that it was then greater than in the ages before. And yet it then greatly differed from being an vnbrideled dominion, that one man might beare rule ouer other after his owne will. But the Sea of Rome had this reuerence, that it might with her authoritie ſubdue and repreſſe, the lewde and obſtinate that could not by the other biſhops be kept within their dutie. For Gregorie doth oftentimes diligently teſtifie this, that he doth no leſſe faithfully preſerue to other men their rights, than hee requireth his owne of them. Neither doe I (ſaith he) pricked on by ambition, plucke from any man that which is his right: but I deſire in all things to honor my brethren. There is no ſaying in his writings wherein he doth more proudly boaſt of the largeneſſe of his Supremacie, than this: I know not what Biſhop is not ſubiect to the Sea Apoſtolike when he is found in fault. But he by and by adioyneth. Where fault requireth, not all according to the order of humilitie are equall. He giueth to himſelfe power to correct them that haue offended: if all doe their dutie, he maketh himſelfe equall with the reſt. But he himſelfe giueth himſelfe this power: and they aſſented to it that would: and other that liked it not, might freely gainſay it, which it is well knowne that the moſt part of them did. Beſide that he ſpeaketh there of the Primate of Conſtantinople: which when he was condemned by the principall Synode, refuſed the whole iudgement. His fellow Biſhops informed the Emperor of this ſtubbornneſſe of him. The Emperor willed Gregorie to be Iudge of the cauſe. We ſee therefore that he both attempteth nothing, whereby he may breake the ordinarie iuriſdiction, and the ſame thing that he doth for the helping of other, he doth not but by the Commandement of the Emperour.

Lib. 1. Ep. 68.

Lib. 2. Ep. vlt. Lib. 7. Ep. 64.

Gregorie how farre vnlike the Romane Biſhops at this day.

13 This therefore was then all the power of the Biſhop of Rome, to ſet himſelfe againſt obſtinate and vntamed heads, when there needed any extraordinarie remedie: and that to helpe and not to hinder other biſhops. Therefore he taketh no more to himſelfe ouer all other, than in another place he granteth to all other ouer himſelfe, when when he confeſſeth that he is readie to be corrected of all, to be amended of all. So in another place he doth in deede command the Biſhop of Aquileia to come to Rome, to pleade his cauſe in a controuerſie of Faith that was riſen betweene him and other: but he doth not command him of his owne power, but becauſe the Emperor had ſo commanded. Neither doth he giue warning that he alone ſhall be Iudge, but promiſed that he will aſſemble a Synod by whom the whole matter may be iudged. But although there was yet ſuch moderation, that the power of the Sea of Rome had her certaine bounds, which it might not paſſe, and the Biſhop of Rome himſelfe was no more aboue than vnder other: yet it appeareth how much Gregorie miſliked ſuch ſtate. For he now and then complaineth, that vnder colour of Biſhoprike he was brought backe to the world: and that he was more entangled with earthly cares, than euer he had beene while he was a lay man: that he was in that honor oppreſſed with tumult of worldly affaires. In another place: ſo great burdens (ſaith he) of buſineſſe doe hold me downe, that my minde can nothing at all be raiſed vp to things aboue. I am ſhaken with many waues of cauſes: and after thoſe leaſures of reſt I am toſſed with tempeſts of troubleſome life, ſo that I may rightlie ſay, I am come into the depth of the ſea, and the tempeſt hath drowned me. Hereby gather, what he would haue ſaid, if he had happened to be in theſe times. Although he fulfilled not the office of a Paſtor, yet he was doing it. He abſtained from the gouernment of the ciuill Empire, and confeſſed himſelfe to be ſubiect to the Emperor as other were. He did not thruſt himſelfe into the cure of other Churches, but being compelled by neceſſitie. And yet he thinketh himſelfe to be in a maze, becauſe he cannot apply himſelfe altogether onely to the office of a Biſhop.

14 At that time the Biſhop of Conſtantinople ſtriued with the Biſhop of Rome for the Supremacie, as it is alreadie ſaid. For after that the ſeate of the Empire was ſtabliſhed at Conſtantinople, the maieſtie of the Empire ſeemed to require that that Church alſo ſhould haue the ſecond place of honour after the Church of Rome. And truely at the beginning, nothing more auailed to cauſe the Supremacie to be giuen to Rome, but becauſe the head of the Empire was there at that time. There is in Gratian a writing vnder the name of Pope Lucinus, where he ſaith, that Cities were no otherwiſe diuided, where Metropolitanes and Primates ought to ſit, than by the reaſon of the ciuil gouernment that was before. There is alſo an other vnder the name of Pope Clement, where he ſaith, the Patriarches were ordained in thoſe Cities that had had the chiefe Flamines in them. Which, although it be falſe, yet it is taken out of a truth. For it is certaine, that to the end there ſhould be made as little change as might be, the Prouinces were diuided according to the ſtate of things that then were: and that Primates & Metropolitanes were ſet in thoſe Cities that excelled the other in honors and power. Therefore in the Councel at Taurinum it was decreed, that thoſe Cities which in the ciuill gouernment were the chiefe Cities of euery Prouince, ſhould be the chiefe Seas of Biſhops. And if it happened the honor of the ciuill gouernment to be remooued from one Citie to another, that then the right of the Metropolitane citie ſhould therewithall be remooued thither. But Innocentius Biſhop of Rome, when he ſaw the ancient dignitie of his citie to grow in decay, after that the ſeate of the Empire was remooued to Conſtantinople, fearing the abacement of his Sea, made a contrarie law: wherein he denieth it to be neceſſarie that the Eccleſiaſticall mother cities ſhould be changed as the Imperiall mother cities change. But the authoritie of a Synod ought of right to be preferred aboue one mans ſentence. Alſo we ought to ſuſpect Innocentius himſelfe in his owne cauſe. Howſoeuer it be, yet by his owne proniſo he ſheweth, that from the beginning it was ſo ordered, that the Metropolitane cities ſhould be diſpoſed according to the outward order of the Empire.

Cap. 1.

15 According to this ancient ordinance, it was decreed in the firſt Councell at Conſtantinople, that the Biſhop of the citie ſhould haue the priuiledges of honor next after the Biſhop of Rome, becauſe it was a new Rome. But a long time after, when a like decree was made at Chalcedon, Leo ſtoutly cryed out againſt it. And he not onely gaue himſelfe leaue to eſteeme as nothing that which ſixe hundred Biſhops or moe had decreed: but alſo bitterly taunted them, for that they tooke from other Seas that honour which they were so bold to giue to the Church of Constantinople. I beseech you, what other thing could mooue a man to trouble the world for so small a matter, but meere ambition? He sayeth that, that ought to be inuiolable, which the Nicene Synod hath once decreed. As though forsooth the Christian faith were endangered, if one Church be preferred before an other: or as though Patriarcheies were there diuided to any other end, but for policies. But we know that policie receiueth, yea requireth diuers changes, according to the diuersitie of times. Therefore it is fond that Leo pretendeth, that the honour, which by the authoritie of the Nicene Synod was giuen to the sea of Alexandria, ought not to be giuen to the sea of Constantinople. For common reason telleth this, that it was such a decree, as might be taken away according to the respect of times. Yea none of the Bishops of the East withstood it, whom that thing most of all concerned. Truely Proterius was present, whom they had made Bishop of Alexandria in the place of Dioscorus. There were present other Patriarches, whose honour was diminished. It was their part to withstand it, not Leos which remained safe in his owne place. But when all they hold their peace, yea assent vnto it, and onely the Bishop of Rome resisteth: it is easie to iudge, what mooueth him: that is, he foresaw that which not long after happened, that it would come to passe, that, the glory of old Rome decaying, Constantinople not contented with the second place, would striue with Rome for the Supremacie. And yet with his crying out he did not so much preuaile, but that the decree of the Councell was confirmed. Therefore his successors, when they saw themselues ouercome, quietly gaue ouer that stiffenesse: for they suffered that he should be accounted the second Patriarch.

The pride of the Bishop of Constantinople, seeking to equall his Bishopricke with the bounds of the Empire, constantly resisted by Gregory.
Lib. 7. epi. 30.

16 But within a little after, Iohn which in Gregories time ruled the Church of Constantinople, brake foorth so farre that he called himselfe the vniuersall Patriarch. Heere Gregorie, least he should in a very good cause faile to defend his owne sea, did constantly set himselfe against him. And truely both the pride, and madnesse of Iohn was intollerable, which desired to make the bounds of his Bishopricke equall with the bounds of the Empire. And yet Gregorie doth not claime to himselfe, that which he denieth to an other: but abhorreth that name as wicked, and vngodly, and abhominable, whosoeuer take it vpon him. Yea and also in one place he is angrie with Eulelius Bishop of Alexandria, which had honored him with such a title. Behold (saith he) in the Preface of the Epistle which ye directed to my selfe that haue forbidden it, ye haue cared to imprint the word of proud calling, in naming me vniuersall Pope, which I pray that your holinesse will no more doe, because that is withdrawen from you, which is giuen to another more than reason requireth. I count it no honour, wherein I see the honour of my brethren to be diminished. For my honour is the honour of the vniuersall Church, and the sound strength of my brethren. But if your holinesse call me the vniuersall Pope, it denieth it selfe to be that which it confesseth me to be wholly. Truely Gregorie stood in a good and honest cause. But Iohn holpen by the fauour of Maurice the Emperour, could neuer be remooued from his purpose. Cyriacus also his successor neuer suffered himselfe to be intreated in that behalfe.

The headship of the Church granted by Phocas to the bishop of Rome, and the Churches of France by Pipin made subiect to his authoritie.

17 At the last Phocas, which when Maurice was slaine, was set in his place (I wot not for what cause being more friendly to the Romans, but because he was there crowned without strife) granted to Boniface the third, that which Gregory neuer required, that Rome should be the head of all Churches. After this manner was the controuersie ended. And yet this benefite of the Emperour, could not so much haue profited the Sea of Rome, vnlesse other things also had afterward happened. For Grecia and all Asia were within a little after cut off from the communion of Rome. France so much reuerenced him, that it obeyed no further than it listed. But it was then first brought into bondage when Pipine vsurped the kingdome. For when Zachary Bishop of Rome had beene his helper to the breach of his faith, and to robbery, that thrusting out the lawfull King, he might violently enter vpon the kingdome as laid open for a pray: he receiued this reward that the sea of Rome should haue iurisdiction ouer the Churches of France: As robbers are wonted in parting to diuide the common spoile: so these good men ordered the matter betweene themselues, that Pipine should haue the earthly and ciuill dominion, spoyling the true King: and Zachary should bee made made head of all Bishops and haue the spirituall power: which, when at the beginning it was weake: (as it is wont to be in new things) was afterward confirmed by the authoritie of Charles, in maner for a like cause. For he was also indebted to the Bishop of Rome, for that by his endeuour he had attained to the honour of the Empire. But although it be credible, that churches ech where were before that time much deformed, yet it is certaine that the old forme of the Church was then first vtterly defaced in Fraunce and Germanie. There remaine yet in the records of the Court of Paris, breefe notes of these times, which, where they intreat of the matters of the Church, make mention of the couenant both of Pipine and of Charles with the bishop of Rome. Thereby we may gather that then there was an alteration made of the old state.

18 Since that time, when things did each where daily fall from worse to worse, the tyrannie of the sea of Rome was now and then also stablished and increased, and that partly by the ignorance, and partly by the slothfulnesse of the bishops. For when one man tooke all things vpon him, and without measure proceeded more and more to aduance himselfe against law and right: the bishops did not with such zeale as they ought, endeuour themselues to restraine his lust, and though they wanted not courage, yet they were destitute of true learning, and knowledge: so that they were nothing fit to attempt so great a matter. Therefore we see what and how monstrous an vnholy defiling of all holy things, and a scattering abroad of the whole order of the Church, was in Bernards time. He complaineth that there resort by heapes to Rome out of all the world, ambitious men, couetous, Simonians, robbers of God, keepers of concubines, committers of incest, and all such monsters, to obtaine, or retaine ecclesiastical honors by the Apostolike authoritie: and that fraud and vnderminding, and violence were growen in force. He saith that that maner of iudging which then was vsed, was abhominable, and vnseemely, not onely for the Church, but also for a iudiciall court. He crieth out that the Church is full of ambitious men: and that there is that more dreadeth to commit mischieuous acts, than robbers doe in their caue, when they diuide the spoiles of waifairing men. Few (saith he) doe looke vnto the mouth of the Law-giuer, but vnto his hands. But not without cause. For those hands doe all the Popes businesse. What a thing is this, that they are bought of the spoiles of Churches, that say to thee, oh well done, well done! The life of the poore is sowen in the streets of the rich: siluer glistereth in the mire: men runne to it from all places: not the poore, but the stranger taketh it vp, or hee peraduenture that runneth fastest before. But this maner, or rather this death, came not of thee, I would to God it might end in thee. Among these things thou a Pastor goest forward, compassed with much and precious array. If I durst say it, these are rather the Pastors of diuels, than of sheepe. Forsooth Peter did thus, Paul plaied thus. Thy court is more accustomed to receiue men good, than to make men good. For the ill doe not there profit, but the good doe decay. Now as for the abuses of appeales that he rehearseth, no godly man can read them without great horror. At the last he thus concludeth of that vnbrideled greedinesse of the sea of Rome, in the vsurping of iurisdiction: I speake the murmur and common complaint of the Churches. They cry out that they be mangled and dismembred. There are either none or few, that doe not either bewaile, or feare this plague. Askest thou what plague? The Abbots are plucked from the Bishops, the Bishops from the Archbishops, &c. It is maruellous if this may be excused. In so doing, ye prooue that yee haue fulnesse of power, but not of righteousnesse. Yee doe this because ye can doe it: but whether ye also ought to do it, is a question. Ye are set to preserue, not to enuie to euery man his honour and his owne degree. These few things of many I listed to rehearse, partly that the Readers may see, how sore the Church was then decayed, and partly that they may know in how great sorrow and mourning this calamitie held all the godly.

The state of the Church of Rome in Bernards time.

Li. 1. de consi. ad Eug.

Lib. 3.

19 But now, albeit that we graunt to the bishop of Rome at this day the preeminence and largenesse of iurisdiction, which that sea had in the meane times, as in the times of Leo and of Gregorie: what is that to the present state of the Papacie? I doe not yet speake of the earthly dominion, nor of the ciuill power thereof, which we wil afterward consider in place fit for it: but the very spirituall gouerment that they boast of, what what hath it like to the ſtate of thoſe times? For they define the Pope none otherwiſe than the Supreme head of the Church in earth, and the vniuerſall Biſhop of the whole world. And the Biſhops themſelues, when they ſpeake of their owne authoritie, doe with great ſtourneſſe of countenance, pronounce that to them belongeth the power to command, and other are bound to the neceſſitie to obey, that ſo all their decrees are to be holden as confirmed with the diuine voice of Peter, that the prouinciall Synods are without force, becauſe they want the preſence of the Pope: that they may order clerks of any Church that they will: and may call them to their Sea that haue been ordered elſe where. Innumerable of that ſort are in Gratians packe, which I doe not now rehearſe, leaſt I ſhould be too tedious to the Readers. But this is the ſumme of them, that onely the Biſhop of Rome hath the ſupreme hearing and determining of all Eccleſiaſticall cauſes, whether it be in iudging and defining of doctrines, or in making of lawes, or in ſtabliſhing of diſcipline, or in executing of iudgements: It were alſo long and ſuperfluous to rehearſe the priuileges that they take to themſelues in reſeruations, as they call them. But (which is moſt intollerable of all other) they leaue no iudgement in earth to reſtraine and bridle their outragious luſt, if they abuſe ſo immeaſurable power. It is lawfull for no man (ſay they) to reuoke the iudgement of that Sea, becauſe of the Supremacie of the Church of Rome. Againe, The iudge ſhall be iudged neither by the Emperor, nor by Kings, nor by all the Clergie, nor of the people. That is indeede too imperiouſly done that one man maketh himſelfe iudge of all men, and ſuffereth himſelfe to obey the iudgement of no man. But what if he vſe tyrannie ouer the people of God? if he ſcatter abroad and waſte the kingdome of Chriſt? if he trouble the whole Church? if he turne the office of Paſtor into robberie? Yea though he be neuer ſo miſchieuous, he ſaith, that he is not bound to yeeld account. For theſe be the ſayings of the Biſhops: Gods will was to determine the cauſes of other men by men, but he hath without queſtion reſerued the Biſhop of this Sea to his owne iudgement. Againe, The doings of ſubiects are iudged of vs, but ours of God onely.

The vsurped power ecclesiastical which the Bishop of Rome holdeth and doth exercise at this day.

Decret. 17. quæſt. 3. cap. Nemini. Innoc. 9. quæſti. 3. ca. nemo. Sym. 9. quæ. 3. cap. Aliorum. Anther. Ibid. c. facta.

20 And that ſuch decrees might haue the more weight, they haue falſely thruſt in the names of the old Biſhops, as though things had beene ſo ordained from the beginning: whereas it is moſt certaine, that it is new and lately forged whatſoeuer the Biſhop of Rome giueth to himſelfe more than we haue rehearſed to be giuen him by the ancient Councels. Yea, they are come to ſo great ſhameleſneſſe, that they haue ſet foorth a writing vnder the name of Anaſtaſius Patriarch of Conſtantinople, wherein he teſtifieth that it was decreed by the old rulers, that nothing ſhould be done euen in the furtheſt prouinces, that were not firſt mooued to the Sea of Rome. Beſide this, that it is certaine that is moſt vaine, what man ſhall thinke it likely, that ſuch a commendation of the Sea of Rome proceeded from the aduerſarie and enuier of honour and dignitie thereof? But verily it behooued that theſe Antichriſts ſhould be carried on to ſo great madneſſe and blindneſſe, that their lewdneſſe might be plaine for all men to ſee, at leaſt ſo many as will open their eies. But the decretall Epiſtles heaped together by Gregory the ninth, againe the Clementines, and Extrauagants of Martine, doe yet more openly and with fuller mouth each where breath foorth their outragious fierceneſſe, and as it were the tyrannie of barbarous kings. But theſe be the oracles, by which the Romaniſts will haue their Papacie to be weyed. Heereupon aroſe thoſe notable principles, which at this day haue euery where in the Papacie the force of oracles: that the Pope cannot erre: that the Pope is aboue the Councels: that the Pope is the vniuerſall Biſhop of all Biſhops, and the ſupreme head of the Church in earth: I paſſe ouer the much abſurder follies, which the fooliſh Canoniſts babble in their Schooles, to which yet the Romiſh diuines doe not onely aſſent, but doe alſo clap their hands at them, to flatter their idoll.

The forgeries vſed in the Papacie to make the world beleeue that they claime at this day no more than they haue had in ancient times. Ibid. ca. Ant.

21 * I will not deale with thē by extremitie of right. Some other man would againſt this their ſo great inſolencie ſet the ſaying of Cyprian, which he vſed among the Biſhops, at whoſe Councell he ſat as chiefe. None of vs calleth himſelf Biſhop of Biſhops, or with tyrannous feare compelleth his fellow Biſhops to neceſſitie to obey. He would obiect that, which a little after was decreed at Carthage. That none ſhould be called Prince, Prieſt, or chiefe Biſhop. Hee would gather many teſtimonies out of Hiſtories, ſtories, Canons out of Synods, and many ſentences out of the bookes of old writers, by which the Biſhop of Rome ſhould be brought downe into the fellowſhip of the reſt. But I paſſe ouer all theſe, leaſt I ſhould ſeeme too preciſely to preſſe them. But leaſt the beſt Patrones of the ſea of Rome anſwere me, with what face they dare defend the title of vniuerſall Biſhop, which they ſee ſo oft to be condemned with curſe by Gregorie. If Gregories teſtimonie ought to be of force, they doe thereby declare that Antichriſt is there Biſhop, becauſe they make him vniuerſall. The name alſo of head was no more vſuall. For thus he ſaith in one place: Peter is the chiefe member in the bodie, Iohn, Andrew, and Iames the heads of particular peoples: yet they all are members of the Church vnder one head: yea the holie ones before the law, the holie ones vnder the law, and the holie ones vnder grace, are ſet among members, altogether making vp the bodie of the Lord: and no man euer willed to haue himſelfe called vniuerſall. But whereas the Biſhop of Rome taketh vpon himſelfe the power of commanding, that thing ſmally agreeth with that which Gregorie ſaith in another place. For whereas Eulolius Biſhop of Alexandria, had ſaid that he was commanded by him, he anſwered in this wiſe, I pray yee, take away this word of commanding from my hearing. For I know what I am, and what ye be. In place, ye be to me brethren, in manners ye be to me Fathers. Therefore I commanded not, but I cared to tell you thoſe things that I thought profitable. Whereas he ſo extendeth his iuriſdiction without end, he doth therein great and hainous wrong, not onely to the other Biſhops, but alſo to all particular Churches, which he ſo teareth and plucketh in peeces, that he may build his ſeate of their ruines. But whereas he exempteth himſelfe from all iudgements, and will ſo raigne after the maner of Tyrants, that he accounteth his owne onely luſt for law, that verily is ſo hainous, and ſo farre from Eccleſiaſticall order, that it may in no wiſe be borne: for it vtterly abhorreth not only from all feeling of godlineſſe, but alſo from all humanitie.

The Popes vſurpatiō not only againſt the iudgement of all antiquitie, againſt the mind of Gregorie, but euen repugnant to all humanitie.*

Lib. 4. Ep. 92.

Lib. 7. Epiſ. 28.

22 But that I be not compelled to goe through and examine all things particularly, I doe againe appeale to them, that will at this day be accompted the beſt and moſt faithfull Patrones of the ſea of Rome, whether they be not aſhamed to defend the preſent ſtate of the Papacie: which it is certaine to be a hundred times more corrupt, than it was in the time of Gregorie and Bernard: which ſtate yet did then ſo much diſpleaſe thoſe holy men. Gregorie each where complaineth, that he is too much diuerſly drawen away with forraine buſineſſe: that he is vnder the colour of Biſhopricke brought backe to the world: wherein he ſerueth ſo many cares of the world as he neuer remembreth that he ſerued when he was a Lay man: that he is preſſed downe with tumult of wordly affaires, that his minde is nothing raiſed vp to things aboue, that he is ſhaken with many waues of cauſes, and toſſed with tempeſts of troubleſome life: ſo that he may worthily ſay, I am come into the depth of the ſea. Truely among thoſe earthly buſineſſes, he might yet teach the people with Sermons, priuately admoniſh and correct ſuch as it behooued, order the Church, giue counſell to his fellow Biſhops and exhort them to their dutie: beſide theſe things there remained ſome time to write: and yet he lamenteth his calamitie, that he is drowned in the deepeſt ſea. If the gouernment of that time was a ſea: what is to be ſaid of the Papacie at this time? For what likeneſſe haue they together? Heere be no preachings, no care of diſcipline, no zeale to the Churches, no ſpirituall doing, finally nothing but the world. Yet this maze is praiſed, as though there could nothing be found more orderly and better framed. But what complaints doth Bernard poure out, what groanes doth he vtter, when he looketh vpon the faultes of his age: What then would he doe if he beheld this our age of iron, and worſe if any be worſe than iron? What obſtinate wickedneſſe is this, not onely ſtiffely to defend as holy and diuine, that which all the holy men haue with one mouth condemned: but alſo to abuſe their teſtimonie to the defence of the Papacie, which it is certaine that they neuer knew of? Howbeit of Bernards time I confeſſe, that then the corruption of all things was ſo great, that it was not much vnlike our time. But they are without all ſhame, that fetch any pretence for it, out of that meane age, that is the time of Leo, Gregorie, and ſuch other. For they doe like as if one, to ſtabliſh the Monarchie of Emperors, would praiſe the old ſtate of the Empire of Rome: that is, would would borrow the praises of libertie, to set forth the honor of Tyrannie.

The ſtate of Rome an hundred times more corrupt now than in the daies of Gregorie or Bernard. Lib. 1. epi. 5. 7. & 25. & alibi.

The Bishop of Rome no Bishop.

23 Finally, although all these things were granted them: yet there ariseth of fresh a new strife for them, when we deny that there is a Church at Rome, in which such benefits may be resident: when we denie that there is a Bishop, which may beare these prueledges of dignitie. Admit therefore all those things to be true, (which yet we haue already wrung from them) that Peter was by the mouth of Christ appointed head of the vniuersall Church: and that he left the honor that was giuen him in the sea of Rome: that the same was stablished by the authoritie of the ancient Church, and confirmed with long continuance: that the Supreme power hath beene alway by one consent giuen of all men to the Bishop of Rome, that he hath beene the Iudge of all both causes and men, and himselfe subiect to the iudgement of none: let them haue also more, if they will: yet I answere in one word, that none of these things auaile, vnlesse there be at Rome a Church and a Bishop. This they must needes grant me, that it cannot be the mother of Churches, which is not it selfe a Church: that he cannot be chiefe of Bishops, which is not himselfe a Bishop. Will they therefore haue the sea Apostolike at Rome? Then let them shew me a true and lawfull Apostleship. Will they haue the chiefe Bishop? Then let them shew me a Bishop. But what? where will they shew vs any face of a Church? They name one indeed, and haue it oft in their mouth. Truly the Church is knowen by her certaine marks: and Bishopricke is a name of office. I speake not heere of the people: but of the gouernment it selfe, which ought continually to shine in the Church. Where is the ministerie in their Church, such as Christs institution requireth? Let vs call to remembrance that which hath before beene spoken of the office of Priests and of a Bishop. If we shall bring the office of Cardinals to be tried by that rule, we shall confesse that they are nothing lesse than Priests. As for the chiefe Bishop himselfe, I would faine know what one thing at all he hath Bishoplike. First it is the principall point in the office of a bishop, to teach the people with the word of God: another and the next point to that is, to minister the Sacraments: the third is to admonish and exhort, yea and to correct them that offend, and to hold the people together in holy discipline. What of these things doth he? yea, what doth he faigne himselfe to doe? Let them tell therefore, by what meane they would haue him to be counted a bishop, that doth not with his little finger, no not once so much as in outward shew, touch any part of a bishops office.

In the Bishop of Rome all things contrarie vnto that which should be in a Bishop.

24 It is not so of a Bishop as it is of a King. For a King although he doe not execute that which belongeth to a King, doth neuertheless retaine the honor and title. But in iudging of a bishop respect is had to Christes commandement, which alway ought to be of force in the Church. Therefore let the Romanists loose me this knot. I denie that there high Bishop is the chiefe of Bishops, forasmuch as he is no Bishop. They must needes proue this last point to be false, if they will haue the victorie in the first. But how say they to this, that he not onely hath no propertie of a bishop, but rather all things contrarie? But heere, O God, whereat shall I begin? at his learning, or at his maners? What shall I say, or what shall I leaue vnsaid? where shall I make an end? This I say: that whereas the world is at this day stuffed with so many peruerse and wicked doctrines, full of so many kindes of superstitions, blinded with so many errors, drowned in so great idolatrie: there is none of these any where, that hath not either flowed from thence: or at least beene there confirmed. Neither is there any other cause, why the Bishops are carried with so great rage against the doctrine of the Gospell newly springing vp againe, why they bend all their strengthes to oppresse it, why they kindle vp Kings and Princes to crueltie, but because they see that their whole kingdome decayeth and falleth downe, so soone as the Gospell of Christ commeth in place. Leo was cruell: Clement was bloodie: Paul is a fierce murtherer. But nature hath not so much moued them to fight against the trueth, as for that this was their onely meane to maintaine their power. Therefore sith they cannot be safe, till they haue driuen away Christ, they trauell in this cause, as if they did fight for their religion and countries, and for their owne liues. What then? Shall that be to vs the sea Apostolike, where we see nothing but horrible Apostasie? Shall hee be Christes vicar which by persecuting the Gospell with furious enterprises, doth openly professe himselfe himselfe to be Antichrist? Shall he be Peters successor, that rangeth with sword and fire, to destroy all that euer Peter hath builded? Shall he be head of the Church that cutting off, and dismembring the Church from Christ the onely true head thereof, doth in it selfe plucke and teare it in pieces. Admit verily that in the old time Rome was the mother of all Churches: yet since it hath begun to be the seate of Antichrist, it hath ceased to be that which it was.

The Pope Antichrist.

25 We seeme to be too much euill speakers and railers, when we call the Bishop of Rome Antichrist. But they that so thinke, doe not vnderstand that they accuse Paul of immodestie, after whom we so speake, yea out of whose mouth we so speake. And lest any man obiect, that we doe wrongfully wrest against the Bishop of Rome these words of Paul that are spoken to another intent, I will briefly shew, that they cannot be otherwise vnderstood, but of the Papacie. Paul writeth, that Antichrist shall sit in the Temple of God. In another place also the holy Ghost describing his image in the person of Antiochus, sheweth that his kingdome shall consist in hawtinesse of speech, and blasphemings of God. Hereupon we gather, that it is rather a Tyrannie ouer soules, than ouer bodies, that is raised vp against the spirituall kingdome of Christ. Then, that it is such, as doth not abolish the name of Christ and the Church: but rather should abuse the pretence of Christ, and lurke vnder the title of the Church, as vnder a disguised visour. But although all the heresies and sects that haue beene from the beginning, belong to the kingdome of Antichrist: yet whereas Paul prophecieth, that there shall come a departing, by this description he signifieth, that that seare of abhomination shal then be raised vp, when a certaine vniuersall departing shall possesse the Church: howsoeuer many members of the Church here and there continue in the true vnitie of faith. But where he addeth, that in his time he began in a mysterie to set vp the worke of iniquitie, which he would afterward shew openly: thereby we vnderstand, that this calamitie was neither to be brought in by one man, nor to be ended in one man. Now whereas he doth set out Antichrist by this marke, that he should plucke away from God his due honour, to take it to himselfe: this is the chiefe token that we ought to follow in seeking out of Antichrist, specially where such pride proceedeth euen to the publike dissipation of the Church. Sith therefore it is certaine that the Bishop of Rome hath shamelesly conueyed away to himselfe that which was the chiefe proper thing to God alone and Christ, it is not to be doubted but that he is the Captaine and Standard-bearer of the wicked and abhominable kingdome.

2. Thes. 2. 4. Dan. 7. 25.

Nothing left in the Papacie but onely the place where the order of a Church hath beene.

26 Now let the Romanists goe and obiect antiquitie against vs: As if in so great alteration of all things, the honor of the sea might stand where there is no sea. Eusebius telleth, how God, that there might be place for his vengeance, remooued the church that was at Hierusalem to Pella. That which we heare to haue beene once done, might bee ofter done. Therefore so to binde the honour of supremacie to a place, that hee which is indeed the most hatefull enemie of Christ, the highest aduersarie of the Gospell, the greatest waster and destroier of the Church, the most cruell slaughterman and butcher of the Saints, should neuertheless be accounted the vicar of Christ, the successor of Peter, the chiefe Bishop of the Church, only because he occupieth the Sea that was once the chiefest of all: that verily is too much to be scorned and foolish. I speake not, how great difference there is betweene the Popes Chauncery, and a well framed order of the Church. Howbeit this one thing may well take away all doubt of this question. For no man that hath his right wit, will thinke the Bishopricke enclosed in lead and bulles: much lesse in that schoole of fraudes and deceites, in which things the Popes spirituall gouernment consisteth. Therfore it was very well said by a certaine man, that that Church of Rome which is boasted of, is long agoe turned into a court, which onely is now seene at Rome. Neither doe I heere accuse the faults of men: but I shew that the Papacy it selfe is directly contrary to the true order of a Church.

Euseb. lib. 3. cap. 5.

The Atheisme of Popes.

27 But if we come to the persons of men, it is well enough knowen what maner of Vicars of Christ we shall finde. Iulius forsooth, and Leo, and Clement and Paul, shall be pillers of the Christian faith, and the chiefe expositors of religion, which neuer knew any other thing of Christ, than that which they had learned in Lucians schoole. But why doe I recken vp three or foure Popes? as though it were doubtfull, what maner of of forme of religion the Popes with their whole Colledge of Cardinals haue ſince long agoe profeſſed, and at this day doe profeſſe. For firſt this is the principle article of that ſecret Diuinitie that raigneth among them, That there is no God: the ſecond, That all things that are written and taught concerning Chriſt, are lies and deceits: the third, That the doctrine of the life to come, and of the laſt reſurrection are meere fables. They doe not all thinke ſo: and few of them ſpeake ſo. I grant. But this hath long agoe begun to be the ordinarie religion of Popes. Whereas this is very well knowen to all that know Rome, yet the Romiſh Diuines ceaſe not to boaſt, that by Chriſtes priueledge it is prouided, that the Pope cannot erre, becauſe it was ſaid to Peter: I haue praied for thee, that thy faith ſhould not faint. What, I pray you, winne they by mocking ſo ſhameleſly, but that the whole world may vnderſtand, that they are come to that extremitie of wickedneſſe, that they neither feare God, nor ſtand in awe of men.

Luke 22.32.

The fall of Iohn the xxii.

28 But let vs imagine, that the vngodlineſſe of thoſe Popes whom I haue ſpoken of, is hidden, becauſe they haue neither publiſhed it by preaching, nor by writings: but onely haue bewraied it at their table, and in their chamber, or at leaſt within walles of houſes. But if they will haue this priueledge to be of force, which they pretend, they muſt needes wipe Iohn the xxii out of the number of Popes, who openly affirmed that ſoules are mortall, and that they die together with the bodies vntill the day of reſurrection. And that you may perceiue that the whole ſea with her principall ſtayes was then wholy fallen: none of all the Cardinals withſtood ſo great a madneſſe, but the Schoole of Pariſe mooued the King of France to compell him to recant it. The King forbad his ſubiects to communicate with him, vnleſſe he did out of hand repent: and the ſame, as the maner is, he proclaimed by a Herald. The Pope compelled by this neceſſitie, abiured his error. This example maketh that I neede not to diſpute any more with my aduerſaries about this that they ſay, that the ſea of Rome and the Biſhops thereof, cannot erre in the faith, becauſe it was ſaid to Peter, I haue prayed for thee, that thy faith may not faint. Truely, he fell with ſo foule a kinde of fall from the right faith, that he is a notable example to them that come after, that they are not all Peters which ſucceede after Peter in the Biſhopricke. Howbeit this is alſo of it ſelfe ſo childiſh, that it needeth no anſwere. For if they will draw to Peters ſucceſſors whatſoeuer was ſpoken to Peter, it ſhall follow that they are all Satans, foraſmuch as the Lord ſaid this alſo to Peter: Go behind, thou Satan, becauſe thou art an offence to me. For it ſhall be as eaſie for vs to turne backe this latter ſaying againſt them, as it ſhall be for them to obiect the other againſt vs.

Gerſon which liued then.

Luke 22.32.

Mat. 16.23.

The vncleane manners of the Romane Biſhops.

29 But I liſt not to ſtriue with them in playing the foole. Therefore I returne thither from whence I made digreſſion. So to binde the place, and Chriſt, and the holie Ghoſt, and the Church together, that whoſoeuer ſit in that place, although he be the Deuill, yet he muſt be iudged the Vicar of Chriſt and the head of the Church, becauſe it was once the ſeate of Peter: I ſay this is not onely wicked and ſlanderous to Chriſt, but alſo too great an abſurditie, and againſt common reaſon. It is alreadie long agoe ſince the Biſhops of Rome are either without all religion, or the greateſt enemies of Religion. Therefore they are no more made the Vicars of Chriſt, by reaſon of the ſeate which they occupie, than an Idol, when it is ſet in the Temple of God, is to be taken for God. Now if their manners be to be iudged vpon, let the Popes themſelues anſwere for themſelues: what one thing at all there is in them, wherein they may be knowen for Biſhops? Firſt whereas there is ſuch life at Rome, they not onely winking at it, but alſo as it were with ſecret countenance allowing it, this is vtterly vnmeete for Biſhops, whoſe dutie is with ſeueritie of diſcipline to reſtraine the licentiouſneſſe of the people. But I will not be ſo rigorous againſt them, to charge them with other mens faults. But whereas they themſelues, with their owne houſhold, with almoſt the whole Colledge of Cardinals, with the whole flocke of their Cleargie, are ſo giuen foorth to all wickedneſſe, filthineſſe, vncleanneſſe, to all kindes of lewd and miſchieuous doings, that they reſemble rather monſters than men: therein truely they bewray themſelues to be nothing leſſe than Biſhops. And yet they neede not feare leaſt I ſhould further diſcloſe their filthineſſe. For both I am wearie to haue to doe in ſo ſtinking mire, and I muſt fauour chaſt eares, and I thinke that I haue already enough and more prooued that that which I went about: that is, that although Rome had in olde time beene the head of Churches, yet at this day ſhe is not woorthy to be iudged one of the ſmalleſt toes of the Churches feete.

30 As concerning the Cardinals, (as they call them) I cannot tell how it is come to paſſe, that they be ſo ſuddenly riſen vp to ſo great dignitie. This name in Gregories time belonged to Biſhops onely. For ſo oft as he maketh mention of Cardinals, hee meaneth it not of them of the Church of Rome, but of any other: ſo that briefely, a Cardinall Prieſt is nothing elſe but a Biſhop. In the writers before that age I finde not this name at all. But I ſee that they were then leſſe than Biſhops, whom they be now farre aboue. This ſaying of Auguſtine is well knowen: Although according to the names of honor, which the vſe of the Church hath already obtained, Biſhoprike is greater than Prieſthood, yet in many things Auguſtine is leſſe than Hierome. Heere indeed he maketh difference betweene a Prieſt of the Church of Rome and other: but he indifferently ſetteth them all behinde the Biſhops. And that was ſo long obſerued, that in the Councell of Carthage, when there were preſent two Legates of the ſea of Rome, the one a Biſhop, the other a Prieſt, the Prieſt was thruſt backe into the laſt place. But not to follow too old examples, there remaineth a Councell holden vnder Gregorie at Rome, at which the Prieſts ſate in the loweſt place, and ſubſcribed ſeuerally by themſelues: as for the Deacons, they had no place at all in ſubſcribing. And truely they had then no office, but to be preſent and vnder the Biſhop at miniſtring of doctrine and of the Sacraments. Now the caſe is ſo changed, that they are become the couſins of Kings and Emperors. And it is no doubt but that they grew vp by little and little together with their head, till they were aduanced to this high top of dignitie. But this alſo I thought good to touch ſhortly by the way that the Readers might the better vnderſtand, that the Sea of Rome, ſuch as it is at this day, doth much differ from that ancient one, vnder pretence whereof, it doth now maintaine and defend it ſelfe. But of what ſort ſoeuer they were in olde time, foraſmuch as they haue now nothing of the true and lawfull office in the Church, they retaine onely a deceitfull colour and vaine viſour: yea foraſmuch as they haue all things vtterly contrarie, it was neceſſary that that ſhould happen to them, which Gregorie writeth ſo oft. I ſay it (ſaith he) weeping: I giue warning of it, groning: that ſith the order of Prieſthood is fallen within, it ſhall alſo not be able to ſtand long without. But rather it behooued that this ſhould be fulfilled in them which Malachie ſaith of ſuch: Yee haue gone backe out of the way, and haue made many to ſtumble in the law. Therefore yee haue made voide the couenaut of Leui, ſaith the Lord. Therefore behold, I haue giuen you out of eſtimation, and vile to all the people. Now I leaue it to all the godly to thinke of what ſort is that ſupreme height of the Hierarchie of Rome, whereunto the Papiſts with abhominable ſhameleſneſſe ſticke not to make ſubiect the very word of God, which ought to haue beene honorable and holy both to heauen, and earth, men and Angels.

THE EIGHT CHAPTER.

Of the power of the Church as touching the articles of faith: and with how vnbridled licentiouſneſſe, it hath in the Papacie beene wreſted to corrupt all pureneſſe of doctrine.

NOw followeth the third place of the power of the Church, which partly conſiſteth in all the Biſhops, and partly in the Councels, and thoſe either prouinciall or generall. I ſpeake onely of the ſpirituall power, which is proper to the Church. That conſiſteth either in doctrine, or in iuriſdiction, or in making of Lawes. Doctrine hath two parts, the authoritie to teach articles of Doctrine, and the expounding of them. Before that we begin to diſcourſe of euery one of theſe in ſpecialtie, we wil that the godly readers be warned, that whatſoeuer is taught concerning the power of the Church, they muſt remember to apply it to that end, whereunto (as Paul teſtifieth) it was giuen: that is, to edification, and not to deſtruction: which who ſo lawfully vſe, they thinke themſelues no more than the miniſters of Chriſt, and therewithall the miniſters of the people in Chriſt. Now of the edifying of the Church, this is the onely way, if

A caution touching things ſpoken of the power of the Church.

1. Cor. 10. 8. & 13. 10.

if the Ministers themselues endeuour to preserue to Christ his authoritie, which can not otherwise be safe vnlesse that be left vnto him, which he receiued of his Father: that is, that he be the onely Schoolemaster of the Church. For it is written, not of any other but of him alone, Heare him. The power of the Church therefore is not to be sparingly set foorth, but yet to be enclosed within certaine bounds, that it be not drawen hither and thither after the lust of men. Hereunto it shall be much profitable to note, how it is described of the Prophets and Apostles. For if we simplie grant vnto men such power as they list to take vpon them, it is plaine to all men, what a slipperie readinesse there is to fall into tyranie, which ought to be farre from the Church of Christ.

Matt. 17. 5.

All the Priests authoritie depended wholie vpon him whose priests they were.

2 Therefore heere it must be remembred, that whatsoeuer authoritie or dignitie the holie Ghost in the Scripture giueth either to the Priests or to the Prophets, or to the Apostles, or to the successors of the Apostles, all that same is giuen, not properlie to the men themselues, but to the ministerie ouer which they are appointed, or (to speake it more plainely in one word) whereof the ministerie is committed to them. For if we goe through them all in order, we shall not finde that they had any authoritie to teach or to answer, but in the name and word of the Lord. For when they are called to the office, it is also enioyned them, that they should bring nothing of themselues, but speake out of the mouth of the Lord. And he himselfe doth not bring them foorth to be heard of the people, before that he haue giuen them instructions what they ought to speake, to the intent that they should speake nothing beside his word. Moses himselfe, the prince of all the Prophets, was to be heard aboue the rest: but he was first instructed with his commandements, that he might not declare any thing at all, but from the Lord. Therefore it is said, that the people when they embraced his doctrine, beleeued in God, and in his seruant Moses. Also that the authoritie of the Priests should not grow in contempt, it was stablished with most greeuous penalties. But therewithall the Lord sheweth vpon what condition they were to be heard, when he saith, that he hath made his couenant with Leui, that the law of the truth should be in his mouth. And a little after he addeth: The lips of the priest shall keepe knowledge, and they shall require the law at his mouth: because he is the angell of the God of hosts. Therefore if the priest will be heard, let him shew himselfe the messenger of God: that is, let him faithfully report the commandements that he receiued of his author. And where it is specially entreated of the hearing of them, this is expressely set, That they may answer according to the law of God.

Deut. 17. 10.

The power of prophets consisted in deliuering that which God had giuen them in charge.

3 What maner of power the Prophets generally had, is very well described in Ezechiel: Thou sonne of man (saith the Lord) I haue giuen thee to be a watchman to the house of Israel. Therefore thou shalt heare the word out of my mouth, and thou shalt declare it to them from me. He that is commanded to heare out of the mouth of the Lord, is he not forbidden to inuent any thing of himselfe? But what is to declare from the Lord, but so to speake as he may boldly boast, that it is not his owne, but the Lords word that he hath brought? The selfe same thing is in Hieremie, in other words. Let the prophet (saith he) with whom is a dreame, tell a dreame: and let him that hath my word speake my word true. Certainely he appointeth a law to them all. And that is such, that he permitteth not any to teach more than he is commanded. And after he calleth it chaffe, all that is not from himselfe onely. Therefore none of the Prophets themselues opened his mouth, but as the Lord told him the words before. Whereupon these sayings are so oft found among them: the word of the Lord, the burden of the Lord, so saith the Lord, the mouth of the Lord hath spoken. And worthily. For Esay cried out that he had defiled lips. Ieremie confessed that he could not speake, because he was a childe: What could proceede from the defiled mouth of the one, and the foolish mouth of the other, but vncleane and vnwise, if they had spoken their owne speech? But his lips were holie and pure, when they began to be the instruments of the holie Ghost. When the Prophets are bound with this religion, that they deliuer nothing, but that which they haue receiued, then they be garnished with notable power and excellent titles. For when the Lord testifieth, that he hath set them ouer nations and kingdomes, to pluck vp and to roote out, to destroy and pluck downe, to build and to plant, he by and by adioyneth the cause: because he hath put his words in their mouth.

4 Now

4 Now if you looke to the Apoſtles: they are indeed commended with many and notable titles, that they are the light of the world, and the ſalt of the earth, that they are to be heard in ſtead of Chriſt, that whatſoeuer they bind or looſe in earth ſhall bee bound or looſed in heauen. But in their very name they ſhew how much is permitted them in their office: that is, if they be Apoſtles, that they ſhould not prate whatſoeuer they liſt: but ſhould faithfully report his commandements from whom they are ſent. And the words of Chriſt are plaine enough, in which he hath determined their embaſſage: when he commanded them to go and teach all nations, all thoſe things that he had commanded. Yea, and he himſelfe alſo receiued this law, and laid it vpon himſelfe, that it ſhould be lawfull for no man to refuſe it. My doctrine (ſaith he) is not mine, but his that ſent mee, my Fathers. Hee that was alway the onely and eternall counſeller of the Father, and he that was appointed by the father the Lord and ſchoolmaſter of all men, yet becauſe he executed the miniſterie of teaching, preſcribed by his owne example to all miniſters, what rule they ought to follow in teaching. Therefore the power of the Church is not infinite, but ſubiect to the word of the Lord, and as it were encloſed in it.

The Apoſtles authoritie reſtrained and limited within the bounds of his Commandement which gaue them authoritie.

Mat 28.9.

Iohn 7.16.

5 But ſith this hath from the beginning beene of force in the Church, and at this day ought to be in force, that the ſeruants of God ſhould teach nothing which they haue not learned of him: yet according to the diuerſitie of times they haue diuers orders of learning. But that order which is now, much differeth from thoſe that were before. Firſt if it be true which Chriſt ſaith, that none hath ſeene the Father, but the Sonne, and he to whom it hath pleaſed the Sonne to ſhew him, it behooued verily that they ſhould be alway directed by the eternall wiſedome of the Father, which would come to the knowledge of God. For how ſhould they either haue comprehended in minde, or vttered the myſteries of God, but by his teaching to whom alone the ſecrets of the Father are open? Therefore the holy Fathers in olde time knew God no otherwiſe but beholding him in the Sonne as in a glaſſe. When I ſay this, I meane that God did neuer by any other meane diſcloſe himſelfe to men but by the Sonne, that is, his onely wiſedome, light and truth. Out of this fountaine did Adam, Noe, Abraham, Iſaac, Iacob, and the other draw all the knowledge that they had of heauenly doctrine. Out of the ſame fountaine haue alſo all the Prophets themſelues drawen all the heauenly Oracles that they vttered. For verily this wiſedome hath alway diſcloſed it ſelfe by moe waies than one. To the Patriarches he vſed ſecret reuelations: but therewithall to confirme their mindes, he adioyneth ſuch ſignes, that it could not be doubtfull to them, that it was God that ſpake. The Patriarches conueied ouer from hand to hand to poſteritie, that which they had receiued. For the Lord left it with them to this intent, that they ſhould ſo ſpread it abroad. But the children and childrens children, by God ſecretly informing them, did know that that which they heard was from heauen, and not from the earth.

Mat.11.27.

Mala.2.7.

6 But when it pleaſed God, to raiſe a more apparant forme of a Church hee willed to haue his word put in writing and noted, that the Prieſts ſhould fetch from thence what they might deliuer to the people, and that all the doctrine that ſhould be taught ſhould be tried by that rule. Therefore after the publiſhing of the law, when the Prieſts are commanded to teach out of the mouth of the Lord, the meaning is, that they ſhould teach nothing ſtrange or differing from that kinde of learning, which the Lord comprehended in the law: and to adde and to diminiſh was vnlawfull for them. Then followed the Prophets, by whom indeed the Lord publiſhed new Oracles to bee added to the law: but yet not ſo new, but that they came out of the Law, and had reſpect vnto it: For, as touching doctrine, they were onely expoſitors of the Law, and added nothing vnto it, but Prophecies of things to come. Thoſe excepted, they vttered nothing elſe but a pure expoſition of the Law. Becauſe it pleaſed the Lord that there ſhould be a plainer and larger doctrine, that weake conſciences might be the better ſatisfied: he commanded that the Prophecies alſo ſhould be put in writing, and accounted part of his word. And hereunto were added the hiſtories which are alſo the works of the Prophets, but made by the enditing of the holy Ghoſt. I reckon the Pſalmes among the Prophecies, becauſe that which we attribute to the Prophecies is also common to the Psalmes. Therefore that whole bodie compacted of the Law, Prophecies, Psalmes and Histories, was the word of the Lord to the old people, by the rule whereof the Priests and Teachers euen vnto Christes time were bound to examine their doctrine: neither was it lawfull for them to swarue either to the right hand or to the left: because all their office was inclosed within these bounds, that they should answere the people out of the mouth of God. Which is gathered of a notable place of Malachie, where he biddeth them to be mindfull of the law, and to giue heede to it, euen to the preaching of the Gospell. For thereby he forbiddeth them all new found doctrines, and granteth them no leaue to swarue neuer so little out of the way which Moses had faithfully shewed them. And this is the reason why Dauid so honorably setteth out the excellencie of the law, and rehearseth so many praises of it: that is, that the Iewes should couet no forren thing without it, sith within it was all perfection inclosed.

The doctrine which Chriſt taught the Fathers without booke, in the law committed vnto writing: vpon the law the Prophets grounded their doctrine.

Mala. 4. 4.

Christ manifested in the flesh hath added the last hand to the reuelation of trueth.

7 But when at last the wisedome of God was openly shewed in the flesh, that same wisedome with full mouth declared vnto vs all that euer can with mans wit bee comprehended, or ought to be thought concerning the heauenly Father. Now therefore, since Christ the Son of righteousnes hath shined, we haue a perfect brightnesse of the truth of God, such as the clearenesse is wont to be at mid-day, when the light was before but dim. For verily the Prophet meant not to speake of any meane thing, when he wrote that God in olde time spake diuersly and many waies to the Fathers by the Prophets: but that in these last daies he began to speake to vs by his beloued Sonne. For he signifieth, yea he openly declareth, that God will not hereafter, as he did before, speake sometime by some, and sometime by other, nor will adde Prophecies to Prophecies, or reuelations to reuelations: but that he hath so fulfilled all the parts of teaching in the Sonne, that they must haue this of him for the last and eternall testimonie. After which sort all this time of the new Testament wherein Christ hath appeared to vs with the preaching of his Gospell euen to the day of iudgement, is expressed by the last houre, the last times, the last daies: to the end verily that contented with the perfection of the doctrine of Christ, we should learne neither to faigne vs any new beside it, or receiue it faigned of other. Therefore not without cause the Father hath by singular prerogatiue ordained the Sonne to bee our teacher: commanding him, and not any man, to be heard. He did indeed in few words set out his schoole-maistership vnto vs, when he said, Heare him: but in which there is more weight and force than men commonly thinke. For it is as much in effect, as if leading vs away from all doctrines of men, he should bring vs to him onely, and command vs to looke for all the doctrine of saluation at him alone, to hang vpon him alone, to cleaue to him alone, finally (as the very words doe sound) to hearken to the voice of him alone. And truely what ought there now to be either looked for or desired at the hand of man, when the very word of life hath familiarly and openly disclosed himselfe vnto vs? Yea but it is meete that the mouthes of all men be shut, after that he, in whom the heauenly Father willed to haue all the treasures of knowledge and wisedome to be hidden, hath once spoken, and so spoken as became both the wisedome of God (which is in no part vnperfect) and Messias at whose hand the reuelation of all things is hoped for: that is to say, that he left nothing afterward for other to be spoken.

Heb. 1. 1.

Math. 17. 5.

Iohn 4. 25.

The written word the onely rule of sound teaching.

8 Let this therefore be a stedfast principle: that there is to be had no other word of God, whereunto place should be giuen in the Church, than that which is contained first in the Law and the Prophets, and then in the writings of the Apostles: and that there is no other manner of teaching rightly, but according to the prescription and rule of that word. Hereupon also we gather, that there was no other thing granted to the Apostles, but that which the Prophets had had in olde time: that is, that they should expound the olde Scripture, and shew that those things that are therein taught are fulfilled in Christ: and yet that they should not doe the same but of the Lord, that is to say, the spirit of Christ going before them, and after a certaine manner enditing words vnto them. For Christ limited their embassage with this condition when he commanded them to goe and teach, not such things as they themselues had rashly forged, but all those things that he had commanded them, and nothing could be more plainly spoken, than that which he saith in another place: but be not ye called maſters, for onely one is your maſter, Chriſt. Then, to imprint this more deepely in their minde, he repeateth it twiſe in the ſame place. And becauſe their rudeneſſe was ſuch, that they could not conceiue thoſe things that they had heard and learned of the mouth of their maſter, therefore the ſpirit of trueth is promiſed them by whom they ſhould be directed to the true vnderſtanding of all things. For that ſame reſtraining is to be diligently noted, where this office is aſſigned to the holy Ghoſt, to put them in minde of all thoſe things that he before taught them by mouth. Mat.23.8. Iohn.14.26. & 16.13.

9 Therefore Peter who was very well taught how much hee might lawfully doe, leaueth nothing either to himſelfe or other, but to diſtribute the doctrine deliuered of God. Let him that ſpeaketh (ſaith he) ſpeake as the wordes of God, that is to ſay, not doubtingly, as they are wont to tremble whoſe owne conſcience miſgiueth them, but with ſure confidence, which becommeth the ſeruant of God furniſhed with aſſured inſtructions. What other thing is this, but to forbid all inuention of mans minde, from what head ſoeuer they haue proceeded, that the pure word of God may be heard and learned in the Church of the faithfull? to take away the ordinances or rather the faigned deuiſes of all men, of what degree ſoeuer they be, that the decrees of God onely may remaine in force? Theſe bee thoſe ſpirituall armours, mightie through God to caſt downe holds: by which the faithfull ſeruants of God may throw downe counſels, and all height that aduanceth it ſelfe againſt the knowledge of God, and may lead all knowledge captiue to obey Chriſt. Loe this is the ſoueraigne power, wherewith it behoooueth the Paſtors of the Church to be endued, by what name ſoeuer they bee called, that is, that by the word of God they may with confidence bee bolde to doe all things: may compell all the ſtrength, glorie, wiſedome and height of the world to yeeld and obey to his maieſtie: being vpholden by his power, may command, all euen from the higheſt to the loweſt: may build vp the houſe of Chriſt and pull downe the houſe of Satan: may feede the ſheepe and driue away the wolues: may inſtruct & exhort the willing to learne: may reproue, rebuke and ſubdue the rebellious and ſtubborne: may binde & looſe: finally may thunder and lighten, if need be: but all things in the word of God. Howbeit there is, as I haue ſaid, this difference betweene the Apoſtles and their ſucceſſors, that the Apoſtles were the certaine and authentike ſecretaries of the holy Ghoſt, and therefore their writings are to be eſteemed for the oracles of God: but the other haue none other office, but to teach that which is ſet foorth and written in the holy Scriptures. We determine therfore, that this is not now left to faithfull miniſters, that they may coine any new doctrine, but that they ought ſimply to cleaue to the doctrine, whereunto the Lord hath made all men without exception ſubiect. When I ſay this, my meaning is not onely to ſhew what is lawfull for all particular men, but alſo what is lawfull for the whole vniuerſall Church. Now as touching all particular men: Paul verily was ordained by the Lord, Apoſtle to the Corinthians: but he denieth that he hath dominion ouer their faith. Who now dare take a dominion vpon himſelfe, which Paul teſtifieth that it belonged not to him? If he had acknowledged himſelfe to haue this libertie of teaching, that whatſoeuer the Paſtor teacheth he may therein of right require to be beleeued: he would neuer haue taught the Corinthians this diſcipline, that while two or three Prophets ſpeake, the reſt ſhould iudge, and if it were reuealed to any that ſate, the firſt ſhould hold his peace. For ſo he ſpared none, whoſe authority he made not ſubiect to the iudgement of the word of God. But, will ſome man ſay, of the vniuerſall church the caſe is otherwiſe. I anſwere that in another place Paul meeteth with this doubt alſo, where he ſaith, that faith is by hearing, & hearing by the word of God. Truly, if faith hang of the word of God only, if it hath reſpect vnto & reſteth vpon it alone, what place is there now left to the word of the whole world? For herein no man may doubt that hath wel knowen what faith is. For Faith ought to bee ſtayed vpon ſuch aſſuredneſſe, whereby it may ſtand inuincible againſt Satan, and all the engines of the hels, and againſt the whole world. This aſſuredneſſe we ſhall no where finde but in the onely word of God. Againe, it is a generall rule which wee heere ought to haue reſpect vnto: that God doth therefore take from men the power to ſet foorth a new doctrine, that hee onely may bee our ſchoolemaſter in heauenly learning, as hee onely is true which can neither lie nor deceiue deceiue. This rule belongeth no leſſe to the whole Church than to euery one of the faithfull.

Their Tyranny who binde the world to beleeue whatſoeuer pleaſeth them to teach.

10 But if this power of the Church, which we haue ſpoken of, be compared with that power, whereof the ſpirituall tyrants, that haue falſly called themſelues Biſhops and Prelates of Religion, haue in certaine ages paſt boaſted themſelues among the people of God, the agreement ſhall be no better than Chriſt hath with Belial. Yet it is not in this place my purpoſe to declare in what ſort and with how wicked meanes they haue exerciſed their tyranny: I will but rehearſe the doctrine, which at this day they defend, firſt with writings, and then with ſword and fire. Becauſe they take it for a thing confeſſed, that a generall Councell is the true image of the Church, when they haue taken this principle, they doe without doubt determine, that ſuch Counſels are immediately gouerned of the holy Ghoſt, and that therefore they cannot erre. But whereas they themſelues doe rule the Councels, yea and make them, they doe indeed challenge to themſelues whatſoeuer they affirme to be due to the Councels. Therefore they will haue our faith to ſtand and fall at their will that whatſoeuer they ſhall determine on the one ſide, or the other, may be ſtabliſhed and certaine to our mindes: ſo that if they allow any thing we muſt allow the ſame without doubting: if they condemne any thing we muſt alſo hold it for condemned. In the meane time after their owne luſt, and deſpiſing the word of God, they coine doctrins, to which afterward they require by this rule to haue faith giuen. For they alſo ſay, that he is no Chriſtian, that doth not certainely conſent to all their doctrine as well affirmatiue as negatiue: if not with expreſſed yet with vnexpreſſed faith: becauſe it is in the power of the Church to make new articles of the Faith.

Promiſes made to the Church abuſed to bolſter vp a moſt vnlawfull power in the church

11 Firſt let vs heare, by what arguments they proone that this authority is giuen to the Church: and then we ſhall ſee how much that maketh for them which they alleage of the Church. The Church (ſay they) hath notable promiſes, that it ſhall neuer be forſaken of Chriſt her ſpouſe, but that it ſhall be guided by his ſpirit into all truth. But of the promiſes which they are wont to alleage, many are giuen no leſſe to euerie one of the faithfull particularly, than to the whole Church vniuerſally. For

Mat. 28. 20. Ioh. 1. 14. 19.

though the Lord ſpake to the twelue Apoſtles, when he ſaid: Behold, I am with you euen to the end of the world: Againe: I will aske my father, and he ſhall giue you another comforter, namely the Spirit of truth: yet he made the promiſe not only to the whole number of the twelue, but alſo to euery one of them: yea to the other diſciples likewiſe, either thoſe that he had alreadie receiued, or thoſe that ſhould afterward be added to them. But when they expound ſuch promiſes full of ſingular comfort, as though they were giuen to none of the Chriſtians, but to the whole Church together: what doe they elſe, but take away from all Chriſtians that confidence which they all ought to receiue thereby to encourage them? Yet I doe not heere deny, but that the whole fellowſhip of the faithfull furniſhed with manifold diuerſitie of gifts, is endued with much larger and more plentifull treaſure of the heauenly wiſedome, than each one ſeuerally: neither is it my meaning, that this is ſpoken in common to the faithfull, as though they were all alike endued with the ſpirit of vnderſtanding and doctrine: but becauſe it is not to bee granted to the aduerſaries of Chriſt, that they ſhould for the defence of an euill cauſe wreſt the Scripture to a wrong ſenſe. But, omitting this, I ſimply confeſſe that which is true, that the Lord is perpetually preſent with his, and ruleth them with his Spirit. And that this ſpirit is not the ſpirit of error, ignorance, lying or darkneſſe: but of ſure reuelation, wiſedome, trueth, and light, of whom they not deceitfully may learne thoſe things that are giuen them, that is to ſay, what is the hope of their calling, and what be the riches of the glorie of the inheritance of God in the Saints. But whereas the faithfull, euen they that are endued with more excellent gifts aboue the reſt, doe in this fleſh receiue onely the firſt fruits and a certaine taſte of that Spirit: there remaineth nothing better to them than knowing their owne weakneſſe, to hold themſelues carefully within the boundes of the word of God: leaſt, if they wander farre after their owne ſenſe, they by and by ſtray out of the right way, inſomuch as they be yet voide of that Spirit, by whoſe onely teaching trueth is diſcerned from falſhood. For all men doe confeſſe with Paul, that they haue not yet attained to the marke. Therefore they more endeuour to daily profiting, than glorie of perfection.

12 But they will take exception, and say that whatsoeuer is particularly attributed to euery one of the holie ones, the same doth throughly and fully belong to the Church it selfe. Although this hath some seeming of truth, yet I deny it to be true. God doth indeed so distribute to euery one of the members the gift of his spirit by measure, that the whole body wanteth nothing necessarie, when the gifts are giuen in common. But the riches of the Church are alway such, that there euer wanteth much of that highest perfection, which our aduersaries doe boast of. Yet the Church is not therefore so left destitute in any behalfe, but that she alway hath so much as is enough. For the Lord knoweth what her necessitie requireth. But, to hold her vnder humility and godly modesty, he giueth her no more than he knoweth to be expedient. I knowe what here also they are wont to obiect, that is, that the Church is clensed with the washing of water in the word of life, that it might be without wrinckle and spot, and that therefore in another place it is called the piller and stay of truth. But in the first of these two places is rather taught, what Christ dayly worketh in it, than what he hath already done. For if he daily sanctifieth, purgeth, polisheth, wipeth from spots all them that be his: truly it is certaine that they are yet besprinkled with some spots and wrinkles, and that there wanteth somewhat of their sanctification. But how vaine and fabulous is it, to iudge the Church already in euery part holy and spotles, whereof all the members are spoty and very vncleane? It is true therefore that the Church is sanctified of Christ. But onely the beginning of that sanctifying is heere seene: but the end and full accomplishment shall be, when Christ the holiest of holy ones shall truly and fully fill it with his holinesse. It is true also that the spots ane wrinkles of it are wiped away: but so that they be daily in wiping away, vntill Christ with his comming doe vtterly take away all that remaineth. For vnlesse we grant this, we must of necessity affirme with the Pelagians, that the righteousnesse of the Faithfull is perfect in this life: and with the Cathari and Donatists we must suffer no infirmity in the Church. The other place, as we haue else where seene, hath a sense vtterly differing from that which they pretend. For when Paul hath instructed Timothee, and framed him to the true office of a Bishop, he saith that he did it to this purpose, that he should know how he ought to behaue himselfe in the Church. And that he should with the greater religiousnesse and endeuour bend himselfe thereunto, he addeth that the Church is the very piller and stay of truth. For what else doe these words meane, but that the truth of God is preserued in the Church, namely by the ministery of preaching? As in another place he teacheth, that Christ gaue Apostles, Pastors, and Teachers, that wee should no more be carried about with euery winde of doctrine, or be mocked of men: but that being enlightened with the true knowledge of the Sonne of God, we should altogether meete in vnity of Faith. Whereas therefore the truth is not extinguished in the world, but remaineth safe, that same commeth to passe becaufe it hath the Church a faithfull keeper of it, by whose helpe and ministery it is sustained. But if this keeping standeth in the Ministery of the Prophets and Apostles, it followeth that it hangeth wholly heerupon, if the word of the Lord be faithfully preserued and doe keepe his purity.

The Church not so perfect by vertue of any promise made vnto it but that still it remaineth in this world subiect as to other infirmities so to error.

13 But that the readers may better vnderstand, vpon what point this question chiefly standeth, I will in few words declare what our aduersaries require, and wherein we stand against them. Where they say that the Church can not erre, it tendeth heereunto, and thus they expound it, that forasmuch as it is gouerned by the Spirit of God, it may goe safely without the word: that whithersoeuer it goeth, it cannot thinke nor speake any thing but truth: that therefore if it determine any thing without or beside Gods word, the same is no otherwise to be esteemed than as a certaine Oracle of God. If we grant that first point, that the Church cannot erre in things necessary to saluation, this is our meaning, that this is therefore becaufe forsaking all her owne wisedome, she suffereth herselfe to be taught of the holy Ghost by the word of God. This therefore is the difference. They set the authority of the Church without the word of God, but wee will that it be annexed to the word, and suffer it not to be ſeuered from it. And what maruell is it, if the ſpouſe and ſcholler of Chriſt be ſubiect to her husband and ſchoolemaſter, that ſhe continually and earneſtly hangeth of his mouth? For this is the order of a well gouerned houſe, that the wife ſhould obey the authoritie of the husband: and this is the rule of a well ordered ſchoole, that the teaching of the ſchoolemaſter alone ſhould there be heard. Wherefore let the Church not be wiſe of her ſelfe, nor thinke any thing of her ſelfe: but determine the end of her wiſedome where he hath made an end of ſpeaking. After this maner ſhe ſhall alſo diſtruſt all the inuentions of her owne reaſon: but in thoſe things wherein it ſtandeth vpon the word of God, ſhe ſhall wauer with no diſtruſtfulneſſe or doubting, but ſhall reſt with great aſſuredneſſe and ſtedfaſt conſtancie. So alſo truſting vpon the largeneſſe of thoſe promiſes that ſhe hath, ſhe ſhall haue whereupon abundantly to ſuſtaine her faith: that ſhe may nothing doubt that the beſt guide of the right way, the holie ſpirit, is alway preſent with her: but therewithall ſhe ſhall keepe in memorie what vſe the Lord would haue vs to receiue of his holie ſpirit. The ſpirit (ſaith he) which I will ſend from my father ſhall lead you into all truth. But how? becauſe (ſaith he) he ſhall put you in mind of all thoſe things that I haue told you. Therefore he giueth warning that there is nothing more to be looked for of his ſpirit, but that he ſhould enlighten our minds to perceiue the truth of his doctrine. Therefore Chryſoſtome ſaith excellently well. Many (ſaith he) doe boaſt of the holie ſpirit: but they which ſpeake their owne doe falſly pretend that they haue him. As Chriſt teſtified that he ſpake not of himſelfe: becauſe he ſpake out of the law and the Prophets: ſo if any thing beſide the Goſpell be thruſt in vnder the title of the ſpirit, let vs not beleeue it, becauſe as Chriſt is the fulfilling of the law and the Prophets: ſo is the ſpirit of the goſpel. Theſe be his words. Now it is eaſie to gather how wrongfully our aduerſaries doe, which boaſt of the holy Ghoſt to no other end but to ſet foorth vnder his name ſtrange and forraine doctrines from the word of God, whereas he will with vnſpeakable knot be conioined with the word of God, and the ſame doth Chriſt profeſſe of him when he promiſeth him to his Church. So is it truely. What ſobrietie the Lord hath once preſcribed to his Church, the ſame he will haue to be perpetually kept. But he hath forbidden her, that ſhe ſhould not adde any thing to his word, nor take any thing from it. This is the inuiolable decree of God and of the holy Ghoſt, which our aduerſaries goe about to abrogate, when they faigne that the Church is ruled of the ſpirit without the word.

In doctrine nothing to be added by the Church vnto that which the Apoſtles haue left in writing. Iohn 16. 2.

14 Heere againe they murmure againſt vs, and ſay that it behooued that the Church ſhould adde ſome things to the writings of the Apoſtles, or that they themſelues ſhould afterward with liuely voyce ſupply many things which they had not clearly enough taught, namely ſith Chriſt ſaid vnto them. I haue many things to be ſaid to you, which you cannot now beare, and that theſe be the ordinances, which without the ſcripture haue beene receiued onely in vſe and maner. But what ſhameleſneſſe is this? I grant the diſciples were yet rude, and in a maner vnapt to learne, when the Lord ſaid this vnto them. But were they then alſo holden with ſuch dulneſſe, when they did put their doctrine in writing, that they afterward needed to ſupply with liuely voyce that which they had by fault of ignorance omitted in their writings. But if they were already led by the ſpirit of truth into all truth when they did ſet foorth their writings: what hindered that they haue not therein contained, and left written a perfect knowledge of the doctrine of the Goſpel? But go to: let vs grant them that which they require. Only let them point out what be thoſe things that it behooued to be reuealed without writing. If they dare enterpriſe that, I will aſſaile them with Auguſtines words: that is, When the Lord had ſaid nothing of them, which of vs dare ſay, theſe they be, or thoſe they be? or if any dare ſay ſo, whereby doth he prooue it? But why doe I ſtriue about a ſuperfluous matter? For a very child doth know, that in the writings of the Apoſtles, which theſe men doe make in a maner lame and but halfe perfect, there is the fruite of that reuelation which the Lord did then promiſe them.

Hom. in Iohn 96.

The Church not authoriſed to coine new doctrines, becauſe Chriſt doth

15 What? ſay they, did not Chriſt put out of controuerſie whatſoeuer the Church teacheth and decreeth, when he commandeth him to be taken for a heathen man and a Publicane that dare ſay againſt her? Firſt in that place is no mention made of doctrine, but onely the authoritie of the cenſures is eſtabliſhed for correcting of vices, that that they which haue beene admoniſhed or rebuked ſhould not reſiſt her iudgement. But omitting this, it is much maruell, that thoſe loſels haue ſo little ſhame, that they dare be proud of that place. For what ſhall they get thereby, but that the conſent of the Church is neuer to be deſpiſed, which neuer conſenteth but vnto the trueth of the word of God? The Church is to be heard, ſay they. Who denieth it? foraſmuch as it pronounceth nothing but out of the word of the Lord. If they require any more let them know that theſe words of Chriſt doe nothing take their part therein. Neither ought I to be thought too much contentious becauſe I ſtand ſo earneſtly vpon this point, That it is not lawfull for the Church to make any new doctrine, that is, to teach and deliuer for an Oracle any more than that which the Lord hath reuealed by his word. For men of ſound wit doe ſee how great a danger there is, if ſo great authoritie be once granted to men. They ſee alſo how wide a window is opened to the mockings and cauillations of the wicked, if we ſay that that which men haue iudged is to bee taken for an Oracle among Chriſtians. Beſide that, Chriſt ſpeaking according to the conſideration of his owne time, giueth this name to the Synagogue, that his Diſciples ſhould afterward learne to reuerence holie aſſemblies of the Church. So ſhould it come to paſſe that euery Citie and Village ſhould haue equall authoritie in coyning of doctrines.

number them with heathens that deſpiſe the iudgement of the Church. Mat. 18. 17.

16 The examples which they vſe, doe nothing helpe them. They ſay that the Baptiſing of Infants, proceeded not ſo much from the expreſſe commandement of the Scripture as from the decree of the Church. But it were a very miſerable ſuccour, if we were compelled to flee to the bare authoritie of the Church for defence of the Baptiſme of Infants: but it ſhall in another place ſufficiently appeare that it is farre otherwiſe. Likewiſe whereas they obiect that that is no where found in the Scripture, which was pronounced in the Nicene Synod, that the Sonne is conſubſtantiall with the Father: therein they doe great wrong to the Fathers, as though they had raſhly condemned Arrius, becauſe hee would not ſweare to their words, when he profeſſed all that doctrine which is comprehended in the writings of the Prophets, and Apoſtles. This word, I grant, is not in the Scripture: but when therein is ſo oft affirmed, that there is but one God: againe, Chriſt is ſo oft called the true and eternall God, one with the Father: what other thing doe the Fathers of the Nicene Councell when they declare that hee is of one ſubſtance, but ſimply ſet out the naturall ſenſe of the Scripture? But Theodorite reporteth that Conſtantine vſed this preface in their aſſemblie, In diſputations (ſaith he) of Diuine matters, there is a preſcribed doctrine of the holie Ghoſt: the Bookes of the Goſpels and of the Apoſtles, with the Oracles of the Prophets, doe fully ſhew vs the meaning of God. Therefore laying away diſcord, let vs take the diſcuſſings of queſtions out of the words of the Spirit. There was at that time no man that ſpake againſt theſe holy monitions. No man tooke exception, that the Church might adde ſomewhat of her owne: that the Spirit reuealed not all things to the Apoſtles, or at leaſt vttered them not to thoſe that came after: or any ſuch thing. If it be true which our aduerſaries would haue: firſt, Conſtantine did euill, that tooke from the Church her authoritie: then, whereas none of the Biſhops at that time roſe vp to defend it, this was not without breach of their Faith? for ſo they were betrayers of the right of the Church. But ſith Theodorite rehearſeth that they willingly embraced that which the Emperor ſaid, it is certaine that this new doctrine was then vtterly vnknowen.

Baptiſing of infants and the conſubſtantialitie of Chriſt with God the Father, are not warranted by the ſole authoritie of the Church, but haue their ſufficient grounds in Scripture.

Hiſto. Eccle. lib. 1. cap. 5.

THE NINTH CHAPTER.

Of Councels and of their authoritie.

NOw, although I grant them all things concerning the Church: yet they ſhall thereby not much preuaile for their intent. For whatſoeuer is ſaid of the Church, the ſame they by and by giue to the Councels, foraſmuch as in their opinion thoſe repreſent the Church. Yea, where they ſo ſtiffely contend for the power of the Church, they doe it of no other purpoſe, but to giue all that they can get to the Biſhop of Rome and his guard. But ere I beginne to diſcuſſe this queſtion, I muſt needs here make proteſtation testation of two things aforehand. First, that where I shall in this point be somewhat rough, it is not because I lesse esteeme the olde Councels than I ought to doe. For I reuerence them from my heart, and wish them to be had in their due honor with all men. But herein is some meane, that is, that there be nothing withdrawen from Christ. Now this is the right of Christ, to be the head in all Councels, and to haue no man fellow with him in this dignitie. But I say that then onely he is the head, when he gouerneth the whole assembly with his word and spirit. Secondly, whereas I giue lesse to Councels than the aduersaries require: I doe it not for this cause that I am afraid of the Councels, as though they did make for their side, and were against ours. For as we are abundantly furnished with the word of the Lord to the full proofe of our doctrine, and to the ouerthrow of the whole Papistrie that we neede not much to desire any other thing beside it: so if the matter require, the olde Councels doe for a great part minister vnto vs so much as may suffice for both.

Christ in the midst of Councels, but not except they be gathered in his name. Mat.18.20.

2 Now let vs speake of the thing it selfe. If it be sought of the Scriptures, what is the authoritie of Councels: there is no plainer promise than in this saying of Christ: Where two or three shall bee gathered together in my name, there I am in the middest of them. But that doth no lesse belong to euery particular assembly than to a generall Councell. But the doubt of the question standeth not therein: but because there is a condition added, that God will so onely be in the middest of the Councell, if it be gathered together in his name. Therefore although our aduersaries doe a thousand times name Councels of Bishops, they shall little preuaile: neither shall they make vs to beleeue that which they affirme, that is, that they be gouerned of the holy Ghost, vntill they haue prooued that they are gathered together in the name of Christ. For it is as possible that wicked and euill Bishops may conspire against Christ, as good and honest Bishops may come together in his name. For a very cleare proofe heereof are many decrees that haue proceeded from such Councels. But this shall be seene hereafter. Now I doe but answere in one word that Christ promiseth nothing, but to them that are gathered together in his name. Let vs therefore define what that is. I denie that they be gathered together in the name of Christ, which casting away the commandement of God, wherein he forbiddeth any thing to be added to his word, or taken from it, doe decree euery thing after their owne will: which being not contented with the Oracles of the Scripture, that is to say the onely rule of perfect wisedome, doe imagine some new thing of their owne head. Surely, sith Christ hath not promised that he will be present at all Councels, but hath adioyned a peculiar marke, whereby to make true and lawfull Councels different from other: it is meete that wee should not neglect this difference. This is the couenant, which in old time God made with the Leuiticall Priests, that they should teach out of his mouth. This he alway required of the Prophets: this law also we see to haue beene laid vpon the Apostles. Who so breake this couenant, God doth not vouchsafe, to let them haue the honor of Priesthood, nor any authoritie. Let the aduersaries vndoo me this knot, if they will make my faith bound to the decrees of men beside the word of God.

Truth may be in the Church, although the Pastors of the Church be corrupt as in the times of the Prophets they were. Esay.56.10. Osee.9.8.

3 For whereas they thinke not that truth remaineth in the Church vnlesse it bee among the Pastors: and that the Church it selfe standeth not, vnlesse it appeare in generall Councels: that is farre from hauing beene alway true, if the Prophets haue left vnto vs true testimonies of their owne times. There was in the time of Esay a Church at Hierusalem, which God had not yet forsaken. But of the Pastors he saith thus: The watchmen are blinde, neither know they any thing. They are all dumbe dogs, neither are they able to barke. They lie along and sleepe, and loue sleeping: and the Pastors themselues know nothing, nor doe vnderstand: and they doe altogether looke backe vnto their owne waies. After the same maner Osee saith: The watchman of Ephraim with God, the snare of the fouler, hatred in the house of God. Where ioyning them with God by way of mockage, he teacheth that their pretence of the Priesthood is vaine. The Church also endured vnto the time of Hieremie. Let vs heare what hee saith of the Pastors. From the Prophet euen to the Priest, euery one followeth lying. Againe: The Prophets doe prophecie a lie in my name, when I haue not sent them nor commanded them. And least we should be too long in reciting his words, let those things be read that he hath written in the whole xxiij. and xl. Chapters. At that time on the other side Ezechiel did no more gently inuey against the same men. The conspiracy (saith he) of the Prophets in the mids of hir as a roaring Lion, & that violently taketh his pray. Hir Priests haue broken my law, and haue defiled my holy things, and haue made no difference betweene holy and prophane: and the rest that he adioyneth to the same effect. Like complaints are euery where in the prophets, so that nothing is ofter found in them. Eze. 22. 25.

4 But perhaps it might be that it was so among the Iewes: but our age is free from so great an euill. I would to God indeed it were so: but the holy Ghost hath giuen warning that it shall be farre otherwise. The words of Peter are plaine. As (saith he) there were in the old people false Prophets, so shall there also be among you false Teachers slily bringing in sects of perdition, see you not how he saith, that there is danger to come, not by men of the common people; but by them that shall boast themselues with the title of Teachers and Pastors? Moreouer how often hath it been foretspoken by Christ and his Apostles, that there should very great dangers hange ouer the Church by the Pastors? Yea, Paul plainely sheweth, that Antichrist shall sit in no other place than in the Temple of God. Whereby hee signifieth, that the horrible calamity of which he there speaketh, shall come from no where else but from them that shall sit in steed of Pastors in the Church. And in another place he sheweth, that the beginnings of so great a mischiefe are euen already neere at hand. For when he speaketh to the Bishop of Ephesus, I know (saith he) that after my departure there shall enter into you rauening wolues not sparing the flocke. And they shall be of your owne selues, that shall speake peruerse things, to lead away disciples after them. How much corruption might a long course of yeeres bring among Pastors, when they could so far goe out of kind in so small a space of time? And, not to fill much paper with rehearsing them by name: we are admonished by the examples in a manner, of all ages, that neither the truth is alway nourished in the bosome of the Pastors, nor the safety of the Church doth hang vpon their state. They ought indeed to haue beene the gouernors and keepers of the peace and safety of the Church, for preseruation whereof, they are ordained: but it is one thing for a man to performe that which he ought, and another thing to owe that which he performeth not.

Act. 20. 19.

5 Yet let no man take these our words in such part, as though I would euery where and rashly without any choise diminish the authority of Pastors. I doe but onely admonish that euen among Pastors themselues there is a choise to be had, that we should not immediately thinke them to be Pastors that are so called. But the Pope withall his flocke of Bishops, vpon none other reason, but because they are called Pastors, shaking away the obedience of the word of God, do tumble and tosse all things after their owne lust: and in the meane time they trauaile to perswade, that they cannot be destitute of the light of truth, that the spirit of God perpetually abideth in them, that the Church consisteth in them and dieth with them. As though there be now no iudgements of the Lord, whereby he may punish the world at this day with the same kinde of punishment wherewith sometime he tooke vengeance of the vnthankefulnesse of the old people, that is, to strike the pastors with blindnesse and amased dulnesse. Neither doe they, most foolish men vnderstand, that they sing the same song, which those in old time did sing that warred against the word of God. For the enemies of Hieremy did thus prepare themselues against the truth: Come, and wee will imagine imaginations against Hieremy: forasmuch as the law shall not perish from the Priest, nor Counsell from the wise man, nor the word from the Prophet.

Her. 18. 18.

6 Heereby it is easie to answere to that other obiection concerning generall Councles. It can not be denied but that the Iewes had a true Church in the time of the Prophets. But if there had then beene a generall Councell gathered together of the Priests, what maner face of the Church had there appeared? We heare what God saith, not to one or two of them but to the whole order: The Priests shall be astonied, and the Prophets shall be made afraide. Againe, the law shall perish from the Priest, and counsell from the Elders. Againe, Night shall be to you in steeed of a vision, and darkenesse in steed of prophecying: and the sun shall fall downe vpon the prophets and be darkened vpon vpon theſe daies &c. Well: if all ſuch had then beene gathered together in one, what Spirit ſhould haue gouerned in that aſſembly? Of that thing we haue a notable example in that Counſell which Achab called together. There were preſent foure hundred Prophets. But becauſe they were come together of no other minde but to flatter the wicked King: therefore Satan was ſent of the Lord to be a lying ſpirit in the mouth of them all. There, by all their voices the trueth was condemned. Micha was condemned for an heretike, ſtriken and caſt in priſon: So was done to Hieremy, ſo to the other Prophets.

A Counſell of Biſhops and phariſies aſſembled together againſt Chriſt in Ieruſalem. Ioh. 11. 47.

7 But let one example ſuffice for all, which is more notable than the reſt. In that Councell which the Biſhops and Phariſees gathered at Hieruſalem againſt Chriſt, what can a man ſay that there wanted, in ſo much as pertained to the outward ſhew? For if there had not then beene a Church at Hierusalem, Chriſt would neuer haue communicate with their ſacrifices and other ceremonies. There was made a ſolemne ſummoning of them together: the high Biſhop ſat as chiefe: the whole order of Prieſts ſate by him: yet Chriſt was there condemned, and his doctrine driuen away. This doing is a proofe that the Church was not encloſed in that Councell. But there is no perill that any ſuch thing ſhould happen to vs. Who hath giuen vs aſſurance thereof? For it is not without fault of ſluggiſhneſſe, to be too careles in ſo great a matter. But where the wholy Ghoſt doth with expreſſe words prophecy by the mouth of Paul, that there ſhal come a departing (which cannot come but that the Paſtors muſt be the firſt that ſhall forſake God) why are we herein wilfully blinde to our owne deſtruction? Wherefore it is in no wiſe to be granted, that the Church conſiſteth in the company of Paſtors, for whom the Lord hath no where vndertaken that they ſhall perpetually be good, but he hath pronounced that they ſhall ſometime be euill. But when he warneth vs of the danger, he doth it to this intent to make vs the warer.

2. Theſ. 2. 3.

How far Councels to be receiued.

8 What then? wilt thou ſay: Shal the Councels haue no authoriry in determining? Yes forſooth. For neither doe I here argue that all Councels are to be condemned, or all their actes to be repelled, or (as the ſaying is) to be defaced with one blot. But (thou wilt ſay to me) thou bringeſt them all into ſubiection, that it may be free for euery man to receiue or refuſe that which the Councels haue determined. Not ſo. But ſo oft as the decree of any Councell is brought forth, I would haue it firſt to be diligently weighed, at what time it was holden, for what cauſe it was holden, what maner of men were preſent: and then the very thing that is intreated of, to be examined by the rule of the Scripture: and that in ſuch ſort as the determination of the Councell may haue his force, and be as a foreiudged ſentence, and yet not hinder the aforeſaid examination. I would to God all men did keepe that moderation which Auguſtine preſcribeth in the third booke againſt Maximinus. For when he minded briefly to put to ſilence this heretike contending about the Decrees of Counſels: Neither (ſaith he) ought I to obiect againſt thee the Synode of Nice, nor thou againſt me the Synode of Arminum, as to the entent to conclude oneanother by foreiudged ſentence, neither am I bound by the authority of the one, nor thou of of the other. By authorities of Scriptures, not ſuch as are proper to either one, but ſuch as are common to both, let there ſtriue matter with matter, cauſe with cauſe, reaſon with reaſon. So ſhould it come to paſſe, that Councels ſhould haue the maieſty that they ought: but in the meane ſeaſon the Scripture ſhould be alone in the higher place that there might be nothing that ſhould not be ſubiect to the rule thereof. So theſe old Synodes, as of Nice, of Conſtantinople, the firſt of Epheſius, of Chalcedon, and ſuch other, which were holden for confuting of errours, we willingly embrace and reuerence as holy, ſo much as belongeth to the doctrines of faith: for they containe nothing but the pure and naturall expoſition of Scripture, which the holy fathers with ſpirituall wiſedome applied to the ſubduing of the enimies of Religion that then roſe vp. In ſome of the latter Councels alſo, we ſee to appeare a true zeale of godlineſſe, and plaine tokens of wit, learning, and wiſdome. But as things are wont commonly to grow to worſe, we may ſee by the latter Councels, how much the Church hath now and then degenerate from the pureneſſe of that golden age. And I doubt not but that in theſe corrupter ages alſo, Councels haue had ſome Biſhops of the better ſort. But in theſe the ſame happened which the Senators themthemſelues complained to be not well done in making of ordinances of the ſenate of Rome. For while the ſentences are numbred, not weighed, it is of neceſſitie that oftentimes the better part is ouercome of the greater. Truly they brought foorth many wicked ſentences. Neither is it here needfull to gather the ſpeciall examples, either becauſe it ſhould be too long, or becauſe other haue done it ſo diligently, that there cannot much be added.

The diſagreement betweene the Counell of Conſtantinople and Nice, of Chalcedon and Epheſus.

9 Now, what neede I to rehearſe, Councels diſagreeing with Councels? And it is no cauſe that any ſhould murmure againſt me, and ſay, that of thoſe Councels that diſagree the one is not lawfull. For, how ſhall we iudge that? By this, if I be not deceiued, that we ſhall iudge by the Scriptures, that the decrees therof are not agreable with true doctrine. For this is the only certaine law to diſcerne them by. It is now about nine hundred yeeres agoe, ſince the Synode of Conſtantinople gathered together vnder Leo the Emperor, iudged that images ſet vp in Churches ſhould be ouerthrowen, and broken in peeces. A little afterward, the Councell of Nice, which Irene the Empreſſe aſſembled in ſpite of him, decreed that they ſhould be reſtored. Wherether of theſe two ſhall we acknowledge for a lawfull Councell? The latter which gaue images a place in Churches, hath preuailed among the people. But Auguſtine ſaith that that cannot be done without moſt preſent perill of idolatry. Epiphanius which was before in time, ſpeaketh much more ſharpely: for he ſaith that it is wickedneſſe and abhomination to haue images ſeene in a Church of Chriſtians. Would they that ſo ſpeake, allow that Councell, if they were aliue at this day? But if both the Hiſtorians tell truth, and the very actes be beleeued, not onely images themſelues, but alſo the worſhipping of them was there receiued. But it is euident that ſuch a decree came from Satan. How ſay you to this, that in deprauing and tearing the Scripture, they ſhew that they made a mocking ſtocke of it? Which thing I haue before ſufficiently made open. Howſoeuer it be, we ſhall no otherwiſe be able to diſcerne betweene contrary and diſagreeing Synodes, which were many, vnleſſe we trie them all by that balance of all men and Angels, that is, by the word of the Lord. So we imbrace the Synode of Chalcedon, refuſing the ſecond Synode of Epheſus, becauſe in this latter one the wickedneſſe of Eutiches was confirmed, which the other former condemned. This thing holy men haue iudged none otherwiſe but by the ſcripture: whom we ſo follow in iudging; that the word of God which gaue light to them doth alſo now giue light to vs. Now let the Romaniſtes goe and boaſt, as they are wont, that the Holy Ghoſt is faſtened and bound to their Councels.

The great weakneſſe of the Fathers aſſembled in the Councell of Nice againſt Arrius

10 Howbeit there is alſo ſomewhat which a man may well thinke to be wanting in thoſe ancient and purer Councels: either becauſe they that then were at them, being otherwiſe learned and wiſe men, wholy bent to the buſineſſe then in hand, did not foreſee many other things, or for that many things of lighter improtance eſcaped them being buſied with weightier and more earneſt matters: or for that ſimply, as being men they might be deceiued with vnskilfulneſſe: or for that they were ſometime carried headlong with too much affection. Of this laſt point (which ſeemeth the hardeſt of all) there was a plaine example in the Nicene Synode, the dignity whereof hath by conſent of all men, as it was woorthy, beene receiued with moſt high reuerence. For when the principall article of our faith was there in danger, Arrius the enimie was preſent in readineſſe, with whom they muſt fight hand to hand, and the chiefe importance lay in the agreement of them that came prepared to fight againſt the errour of Arrius, this notwithſtanding, they careleſſe of ſo great dangers, yea, as it were hauing forgotten grauity, modeſty & al humanity, leauing the battel that they had in hand, as if they had come thither of purpoſe to doe Arrius a pleaſure, began to wound themſelues with inward diſſentions, and to turne againſt themſelues the ſtile that ſhould haue been bent againſt Arrius. There were heard foule obiectings of crimes, there were ſcattered bookes of accuſations, and there would haue beene no end made of contentions, vntill they had with mutuall wounds one deſtroyed another, vnleſſe the Emperour Conſtantine had preuented it, which profeſſing that the examining of their life was a matter aboue his knowledge, and chaſtiſed ſuch intemperance rather with praiſe than with rebuking. How many waies is it credible that the other Councels alſo failed, which followed afterward? Neither doth this matter neede long proofe. For if a man read ouer the actes of of the Councels, he ſhall note therein many infirmities: though I ſpeake of nothing more grieuous.

The Synode of Chalcedon charged with ambition and vnaduiſed raſhneſſe infirmities apparent in holy Synodes leaſt we ſhould too much reſt vpon men.

11 And Leo Biſhop of Rome ſticketh not to charge with ambition and vnaduiſed raſhneſſe, the Synode of Chalcedon, which yet he confeſſeth to be ſound in doctrines. Hee doth indeed not denie that it was a lawfull Synode: but he openly affirmeth, that it might erre. Some man peraduenture will thinke me fond, for that I buſie my ſelfe in ſhewing ſuch errors: for as much as our aduerſaries doe confeſſe, that Councells may erre in thoſe things that are not neceſſary to ſaluation. But this labour is not yet ſuperfluous. For although becauſe they are compelled, they doe indeed confeſſe it in word: yet when they thruſt vnto vs the determination of all Councels in euery matter whatſoeuer it be, for an Oracle of the holy Ghoſt, they do therin require more than they tooke at the beginning. In ſo doing what doe they affirme, but that Councels cannot erre: or if they erre, yet it is not lawfull for vs to ſee the truth, or not to ſooth their errors? And I intend nothing elſe, but that it may thereby be gathered that the holy Ghoſt, ſo gouerned the godly and holy Synodes, that in the meane time he ſuffered ſomewhat to happen to them by the nature of men, leaſt we ſhould too much truſt to men. This is a much better ſentence, than that of Gregory Nazianzene that he neuer ſaw a good end of any Councell. For he that affirmeth that all without exception ended ill doth not leaue them much authority. It is now nothing needfull to make mention ſeuerally of prouinciall Councels: foraſmuch as it is eaſie to iudge by the generall, how much authority they ought to haue to make new articles of faith and to receiue what kinde of doctrine ſoeuer it pleaſeth them.

Spiritual rulers no further to be followed than themſelues doe follow the conduct of their heauenly guide Iolua. 2. 7.

12 But our Romaniſts, when they ſee that in defence of their cauſe all helpe of reaſon doth faile them, doe reſort to that extreame and miſerable ſhift: that although the men themſelues be blockiſh in wit and Counſell, and moſt wicked in minde and will, yet the word of God remaineth, which commandeth to obey Rulers. Is it ſo? what if I deny that they be Rulers that are ſuch? For they ought to take vpon themſelues no more than Ioſua had, which was both a Prophet of the Lord, and an excellent Paſtor. But let vs heare with what words he is ſet by the Lord into his office. Let not (ſaith he) the volumne of this law depart from thy mouth: but thou ſhalt ſtudie vpon it daies and nights. Thou ſhalt neither bow to the right hand nor to the left: then ſhalt thou direct thy way and vnderſtand it. They therefore ſhall be to vs ſpirituall Rulers which ſhall not bow from the law of the Lord, neither to the one ſide nor to the other. But if the doctrine of all Paſtors whatſoeuer they be, is to be receiued without any doubting, to what purpoſe was it that we ſhould ſo oft and ſo earneſtly be admoniſhed not to harken to the ſpeech of falſe Prophets. Heare not (ſaith he by Hierimy) the words of the Prophets that Prophecy vnto you. For they teach you vanity, and not out of the mouth of the Lord. Againe, Beware you of falſe Prophets, that come vnto you in ſheeps clothing, but inwardly are rauening wolues. And Iohn ſhould in vaine exhort vs, that we ſhould prooue the ſpirits, whether they be of God. From which iudgement the very Angels are not exempted, much leſſe Satan with all his lies. What is to be ſaid of this ſaying: if the blinde leade the blinde they ſhall both fall into the ditch? Doth it not ſufficiently declare, that it is of great importance what maner of Prophets be hard, and that not all are raſhly to be heard. Wherefore there is no reaſon that they ſhould make vs afraid with their titles, therby to draw vs into partaking of their blindneſſe: foraſmuch as we ſee on the otherſide, that the Lord had a ſingular care to fray vs away from ſuffering our ſelues to be led with other mens errour, vnder what viſor of name ſoeuer it lurketh. For if the anſwer of Chriſt be true, then all blinde guides, whether they be called Fathers of the Church, or Prelates, or Biſhops, can doe nothing but draw their partners into the ſame headlong downefall. Wherefore let no names of Councels, Paſtors, Biſhops (which may as well be falſely pretended as truely vſed) hinder vs, but that being taught by leſſons both of words and examples, we may examine all ſpirits of all men by the rule of the word of God, that we may prooue whether they be of God or no.

13 For as much as we haue prooued that there is not giuen to the Church a power to ſet vp a new doctrine, now let vs ſpeake of the power which they attribute vnto it in in expounding of ſcripture. Truly wee doe willingly graunt, that if there happen debate about any doctrine, there is no better, nor ſurer remedy than if a Synod of true Biſhops aſſemble together, where the doctrine in controuerſie may be diſcuſſed. For ſuch a determination, whereunto the Paſtors of Churches ſhall agree in common together, calling vpon the ſpirit of Chriſt, ſhall haue much greater force, than if euery one ſeuerally ſhould conceiue it at home, and ſo teach it to the people, or if a few priuate men ſhould make it. Againe, when Biſhops are gathered in one, they doe the more commodiouſly take aduiſe in common, what and in what forme they ought to teach, leaſt diuerſity ſhould breed offence. Thirdly Paul preſcribeth this order in diſcerning of doctrines: For whereas he giueth to euery ſeuerall Church a power to diſcerne, hee ſheweth what is the order of doing in weightier cauſes, that is, that the Churches ſhould take vpon them a common triall of the matter together. And ſo doth the very feeling of godlineſſe inſtruct vs, that if any man trouble the Church with an vnwonted doctrine, and the matter proceed ſo far that there be perill of greater diſſention, the Churches ſhould firſt meete together, and examine the queſtion propounded: at laſt, after iuſt diſcuſſing had, bring foorth a determination taken out of the Scriptures, ſuch as may both take away doubting out of the people, and ſtop the mouthes of wicked and greedy men, that they may not be ſo hardy to proceed any further: So when Arrius was riſen, the Nicene Synod was gathered together, which with the authority thereof both did breake the wicked endeuours of the vngodly man, and reſtored peace to the Churches which hee had vexed, and defended the eternall godhead of Chriſt, againſt his blaſphemous doctrine. When afterward Eunomius and Macedonius ſtirred vp new troubles, their madneſſe was reſiſted with like remedy by the Synod of Conſtantinople. In the Councell at Epheſus the wickednelſe of Neſtorius was baniſhed. Finally this hath been from the beginning the ordinary meane in the Church to preſerue vnity, ſo oft as ſatan began to worke any thing. But let vs remember, that not in all ages or in all places are found Athanaſies, Baſiles, Cyrilles, and ſuch defenders of true doctrine whom the Lord then raiſed vp. But let vs thinke what hapned at Epheſus in the ſecond Synode, where the hereſie of Eutiches preuailed, the man of holy memory Flauianus was baniſhed with certaine other godly men, and many ſuch miſchiefes committed: euen becauſe Dioſcorus a ſeditious man and of a very naughty nature, was there the chiefe, and not the ſpirit of the Lord. But there was not the Church. I grant. For this I determine vtterly that the truth doth not therefore die in the Church, although it bee oppreſſed of one Councell: but that the Lord maruellouſly preſerueth it, that it may againe in due time riſe vp, and get the ouerhand. But I deny that this is perpetuall, that that is a true and certaine expoſition of Scripture which hath beene receiued by conſents of a Councell.

true ſenſe of Scripture when controuerſies riſe and trouble the Church.

1. Cor. 14. 29.

14 But the Romaniſts ſhoot at another marke, when they teach that the power to expound the Scripture belongeth to the Councells, yea and that without appellation from them. For they abuſe this colour, to call it an expoſition of the Scripture whatſoeuer is decreed in the Councels. Of purgatory, of the interceſſion of Saints, of auricular confeſſion, and ſuch other there cannot bee found one ſyllable in the Scriptures. But becauſe all theſe things haue beene ſtabliſhed by the authority of the Church, that is to ſay (to ſpeake truly) receiued in opinion and vſe, therefore euery one of them muſt be taken for an expoſition of Scripture. And not that only: But if a Councell decree any thing, though Scripture cry out againſt it, yet it ſhall beare the name of an expoſition thereof. Chriſt commandeth all to drinke of the cup, which hee reacheth in the Supper. The Councell of Conſtance forbad that it ſhould bee giuen to the lay people, but willed that the Prieſt only ſhould drinke of it. That which ſo directly fighteth againſt the inſtitution of Chriſt, they will haue to be taken for an expoſition of it. Paul calleth the forbidding of marriage, the hypocriſie of deuils: And the holy Ghoſt in another place pronounceth that mariage is in all men holy and honorable. Whereas they haue afterward forbidden Prieſts to marrie, they require to haue that taken for the true and naturall expoſition of the Scripture, when nothing can be imagined more againſt it. If any dare once open his mouth to the contrary, he ſhall be iudged an heretike: becauſe the determination of the Church is without appellation: and to doubt of her expoſition, that it is not true, is a hainous offence. Why ſhould I inueigh againſt ſo great ſhameleſneſſe? For the very ſhewing of it is an ouercomming of it. As for that which they teach of the power to allow the Scripture, I wittingly paſſe it ouer. For in ſuch ſort to make the Oracles of God ſubiect to the iudgement of men, that they ſhould therefore be of force becauſe they haue pleaſed men, is a blaſphemie vnworthie to be rehearſed: and I haue before touched the ſame matter alreadie. Yet I will aske them one thing: If the authoritie of the Scripture be founded vpon the allowance of the Church, what Councels decree wil they alleadge of that matter? I thinke they haue none. Why then did Arrius ſuffer himſelfe to be ouercome at Nice with teſtimonies brought out of the Goſpel of Iohn? For after theſe mens ſaying, it was free for him to haue refuſed them, for as much as there had no allowance of a generall Councell gone before. They alleadge the old roll, which is called the Canon, which they ſay to haue proceeded from the iudgement of the Church. But I aske them againe, in what Councell that Canon was ſet foorth. Heere they muſt needs be dumbe. Howbeit I deſire further to know, what maner of Canon they thinke that was. For I ſee that the ſame was not very certainely agreed among the old writers. And if that which Hierom ſaith ought to be of force, the bookes of Machabees, Tobie, Eccleſiaſticus and ſuch other ſhall be thruſt among the Apochrypha: which thoſe Canons doe in no wiſe ſuffer to be done.

Not euery determination of a Councell to be receiued as a true and ſound expoſition of the Scripture, ſome Councels hauing expreſly defined things againſt Scripture: ſo far off it is that Councels ſhould haue power to authoriſe Scripture. Mat. 26. 26. 1. Tim. 4. 1. Heb. 13. 4.

THE TENTH CHAPTER.

Of the power in making of Lawes: wherein the Pope and his, haue vſed a moſt cruell tyrannie and butcherie vpon ſoules.

The tyranny of the Church of Rome in charging the conſciences of men with the burden of their lawes. Math. 23. 6.

NOw followeth the ſecond part, which they will haue to conſiſt in making of lawes, out of which ſpring haue flowed innumerable traditions of men, euen ſo many ſnares to ſtrangle poore ſoules. For they haue had no more conſcience, than had the Scribes and Phariſees to lay burdens vpon other mens ſhoulders, which they themſelues would not touch with one finger. I haue in another place taught how cruell a butcherie is that which they command concerning auricular confeſſion. In other lawes there appeereth not ſo great violence: but thoſe which ſeeme the moſt tolerable of all, doe tyrannouſlie oppreſſe conſciences. I leaue vnſpoken how they corrupt the worſhip of God, and doe ſpoile God himſelfe of his right, which is the onely law-maker. This power is now to be intreated of, whether the Church may binde conſciences with her lawes. In which diſcourſe the order of policie is not touched, but this onely is intended, that God be rightly worſhipped according to the rule which himſelfe hath preſcribed, and that the ſpirituall libertie, which hath regarde vnto God, may remaine ſafe vnto vs. Vſe hath made that all thoſe decrees be called traditions of men, whatſoeuer they be that haue concerning the worſhipping of God proceeded from men beſide his word. Againſt theſe doe we ſtriue, not againſt the holy and profitable ordinances of the Church which make for the preſeruation either of diſcipline, or honeſtie, or peace. But the end of our ſtriuing is, that the immeaſurable and barbarous Empire may be reſtrained, which they vſurpe vpon ſoules, that would be counted Paſtors of the Church, but in verie deed are moſt cruell butchers. For they ſay that the lawes which they make are ſpirituall, and pertaining to the ſoule, and they affirme them to be neceſſarie to eternall life. But ſo (as I haue euen now touched) the kingdome of Chriſt is inuaded, ſo the libertie by him giuen to the conſciences of the faithfull is vtterly oppreſſed and throwen downe. I ſpeake not now with how great vngodlineſſe they ſtabliſh the obſeruing of their lawes, while out of it they teach men to ſeeke both forgiuenes of ſins, and righteouſnes and ſaluation, while they ſet in it the whole ſum of religion and godlines. This one thing I earneſtly hold, that there ought no neceſſitie to be laid vpon conſciences in thoſe things wherein they are made free by Chriſt, and vnleſſe they be made free, as we haue before taught, they cannot reſt with God. They muſt acknowledge one onely king Chriſt their deliuerer, and be gouerned by one law of libertie, euen the holy word of the Goſpell, if they they will ſtill keepe the grace which they haue once obtained in Chriſt: they muſt be holden with no bondage, and bound with no bonds.

2 Theſe Solons doe indeed faine that their conſtitutions are lawes of liberty, a ſweete yoke, a light burden: but who cannot ſee that they be meere lies? They themſelues in deed do feele no heauineſſe of their owne lawes, which caſting away the feare of God, doe careleſly and ſtoutly neglect both their owne and gods lawes. But they that are touched with any care of their ſaluation, are farre from thinking themſelues free ſo long as they be intangled with theſe ſnares. We ſee with how great warineſſe Paul did deale in this behalfe, that he durſt not ſo much as in any one thing lay vpon men any ſnare at all, and that not without cauſe. Truely he foreſaw with how great a wound conſciences would be ſtriken, if they ſhould be charged with a neceſſity of thoſe things whereof the Lord had left them libertie. On the other ſide the conſtitutions are almoſt innumerable, which theſe men haue moſt greeuouſly ſtabliſhed with threatning of eternal death, which they moſt ſeuerely require as neceſſary to ſaluation. And among thoſe there are many moſt hard to be kept, but all of them (if the whole multitude of them be laid together) are impoſſible: ſo great is the heape. How then ſhall it be poſſible, that they vpon whom ſo great a weight of difficultie lieth, ſhould not be vexed in perplexitie with extreme anguiſh and terror? Therefore my purpoſe is heere to impute ſuch conſtitutions, as tend to this end, inwardly to bind ſoules before God, and charge them with a religion, as though they taught them of things neceſſarie to ſaluation.

The libertie which Chriſt hath giuen abridged in the Church of Rome by many harde and beaſtie conſtitutions: which notwithſtanding they call ſweete and eaſie burthens.

1. Cor. 7. 2. 5.

3 This queſtion doth therefore incumber the moſt part of men, becauſe they doe not ſubtlely enough put difference betweene the outward court (as they call it) and the court of conſcience. Moreouer this increaſeth the difficultie, that Paul teacheth that the magiſtrate ought to be obeyed not onely for feare of puniſhment, but for conſcience ſake. Whereupon followeth, that conſciences are alſo bound with the politike lawes. But if it were ſo, then all ſhould fall that we haue ſpoken in the laſt Chapter, and intend now to ſpeake concerning the ſpirituall gouernment. For the looſing of this knot, firſt it is good to learn what is conſcience. The definition is to be gathered of the proper deriuation of the word. For as when men doe with minde and vnderſtanding conceiue the knowledge of things, they are thereby ſaid ſcire, to know, whereupon is deriued the name of ſcience knowledge: ſo when they haue a feeling of Gods iudgements as a witneſſe adioyned with them which doth not ſuffer them to hide their ſinnes, but that they be brought accuſed to the iudgement ſeat of God, that ſame feeling is called conſcience. For it is a certaine meane betweene God and man: becauſe it ſuffereth not man to ſuppreſſe that which hee knoweth, but purſueth him ſo farre till it bring him to guiltineſſe. This is it that Paul meaneth when he teacheth that conſcience doth together witneſſe with men, when their thoughts doe accuſe or acquite them in the iudgement of God. A ſimple knowledge might remaine in man as incloſed. Therefore this feeling which preſenteth man to the iudgement of God, is as it were a keeper ioyned to man, to marke and watch all his ſecrets, that nothing ſhould remaine buried in darkeneſſe. Whereupon alſo commeth that old prouerbe, conſcience is a thouſand witneſſes. For the ſame reaſon alſo Peter hath ſet the examination of a good conſcience, for quietneſſe of minde, when we being perſwaded of the grace of Chriſt, doe without feare preſent our ſelues to God. And the author of the Epiſtle to the Hebrewes vſeth theſe words, to haue no more conſcience of ſinne, in ſteed of, to be deliuered or acquited, that ſinne may no more accuſe vs.

Heb. 10. 2.

4 Therefore as workes haue reſpect to men, ſo the conſcience is referred to God: ſo that conſcience is nothing elſe but the inward pureneſſe of the heart. In which ſenſe Paul writeth that charitie is the fulfilling of the law, out of a pure conſcience, and faith not fained. Afterward alſo in the ſame chapter hee ſheweth how much it differeth from vnderſtanding, ſaying that ſome had ſuffered ſhipwrack from the faith, becauſe they had forſaken a good conſcience. For in theſe words he ſignifieth, that it is a liuely affection to worſhip God, and a ſyncere deſire to liue godlily & holily. Sometime indeed it is referred alſo to men, as in Luke, when the ſame Paul teſtifieth

How a law is ſaid to binde the conſcience.

1. Tim. 1. 5.

testifieth, that he indeuoured himselfe that he might walke with a good conscience Act.24.16. toward God and men. But this was therefore said, because the fruites of good conscience doe flow and come euen to men. But in speaking properly, it hath respect to God onely, as I haue already said. Hereupon commeth that a law is saide to binde conscience, which simply bindeth a man, without regarde of men, or not hauing any consideration of them. As for example. God commaunded not onely to keepe the minde chaste and pure from all lusts, but also forbiddeth all maner of filthinesse of words and outward wantonnesse whatsoeuer it be. To the keeping of this law my conscience is subiect, although there liued not one man in the world. So hee that behaueth himselfe intemperately, doth not onely sinne in this that he giueth euil example to his brethren, but he hath his conscience bound with guiltinesse before God. In things that are of themselues meane, there is another consideration. For we ought to abstaine from them, if they breed any offence: but the conscience still being free. So Paul speaketh of flesh consecrate to idols. If any (saith he) make doubt, touch it
1.Cor.10.28. not, for consciences sake. I say for conscience, not thine own, but the others. A faithfull man should sinne, which being first warned, should neuertheless eate of such flesh. But howsoeuer in respect of his brother, it be necessarie for him to abstaine, as it is prescribed of God, yet he ceaseth not to keepe still the libertie of conscience. We see how this law binding the outward worke, leaueth the conscience vnbound.

How men for conscience sake are bound to obey the lawes of men.

5 Now let vs returne to the lawes of men. If they be made to this end, to charge vs with a religion, as though the obseruing of them were of it selfe necessarie, then we say that that is laide vpon conscience which was not lawfull to be laid vpon it. For our consciences haue not to doe with men, but with God onely: whereunto pertaineth that common difference betweene the earthly court and the court of conscience. When the whole world was wrapped in a most thicke mist of ignorance, yet this small sparkle of light remained, that they acknowledged a mans conscience to be aboue all iudgements of men. Howbeit the same thing that they did with one word confesse, they did afterward in deed ouerthrow: yet it was Gods will that there should then also remaine some testimonie of Christian libertie, which might deliuer consciences from the tyrannie of men. But that difficultie is not yet dissolued, which ariseth out of the words of Paul. For if we must obey Princes not onely for penalties sake, but also for conscience, it seemeth thereupon to follow that Princes lawes haue also dominion ouer conscience. If this be true, then the same also ought to be said of the lawes of the Church: I answer, that first heare we must put a difference betweene the generaltie and specialtie. For though all speciall laws do not touch the conscience, yet we are bound by the generall commandement of God, which commendeth vnto vs
Rom.13.1. the authoritie of magistrates. And vpon this point standeth the disputation of Paul, that magistrates are to be honored because they are ordained of God. In the meane time he teacheth not that those lawes that are prescribed by them, doe belong to the inward gouernment of the soule: whereas he ech where extolleth both the worshiping of God, and the spirituall rule of liuing righteously, aboue all the ordinances of men whatsoeuer they be. Another thing also is woorthie to be noted, (which yet hangeth vpon the former) that the lawes of men, whether they be made by the magistrate or by the Church, although they be necessarie to be kept, (I speake of the good and righteous lawes) yet therefore doe not by themselues binde conscience, because the whole necessitie of keeping them is referred to the generall end, but consisteth not in the things commanded. From this sort doe farre differ both those that prescribe a new forme of the worshiping of God, and those that appoint necessitie in things that be at libertie.

The authoritie which the popish prelacie challengeth in making lawes.

5 But such are those that at this day be called Ecclesiasticall constitutions in the Papacie, which are thrust in, in steede of the true and necessarie worshipping of God. And as they be innumerable: so are there infinite bonds to catch and snare soules. But although in the declaration of the law we haue somewhat touched them: yet because this place was fitter to intreate fully of them, I will now trauell to gather together the whole summe in the best order that I can. And because we haue alreadie discoursed so much as seemed to be sufficient, concerning the tyranny which the the falſe Biſhops doe take vpon themſelues, in libertie to teach whatſoeuer they liſt. I will now omit all that part: and I will heere tarrie onely vpon declaring the power, which they ſay they haue, to make lawes. Our falſe Biſhops therefore doe burden conſciences with new lawes, vnder this pretence, that they are ordained of the Lord ſpirituall law-makers, ſince the gouernment of the Church is committed vnto them. Therefore they affirme that whatſoeuer they command and preſcribe, ought neceſſarily to be obſerued of the Chriſtian people: and that he that breaketh it, is guiltie of double diſobedience, for that he is rebellious both to God and to the Church. Certainly, if they were true Biſhops, I would in this behalfe graunt to them ſome authority, not ſo much as they require, but ſo much as is requiſite to the well ordering of the policie of the Church. Now ſith they are nothing leſſe than that which they would be accounted, they cannot take any thing to them, be it neuer ſo little, but that they ſhall take too much. But becauſe this hath beene elſewhere conſidered, let vs graunt them at this preſent, that whatſoeuer power true Biſhops haue, the ſame rightly belongeth to them alſo: yet I denie that they be therefore appointed law-makers ouer the faithfull, that may of themſelues preſcribe a rule to liue by, or compell to their ordinances the people committed vnto them. When I ſay this, I meane, that it is not lawfull for them, to deliuer to the Church to be obſerued of neceſſitie, that which they haue deuiſed of themſelues without the word of God. For as much as that authoritie both was vnknowen to the Apoſtles, & ſo oft taken away from the miniſters of the church by the Lords owne mouth: I maruell who haue beene ſo bold to take it vpon them, and at this day are ſo bold to defend it, beſide the example of the Apoſtles, and againſt the manifeſt prohibition of God.

All things needfull to the perfect rule of well liuing contained in the law.

7 As touching that, that pertained to the perfect rule of well liuing, the Lord hath ſo contained al that in his law, that he hath left nothing for men that they might adde to that ſumme. And this he did firſt for this purpoſe, that becauſe the whole vprightneſſe of liuing ſtandeth in this point, if all workes be gouerned by his will as by a rule, he ſhould be holden of vs the onely maſter and directer of life: then, to declare that he requireth of vs nothing more than obedience. For this reaſon Iames ſaith: he that iudgeth his brother iudgeth the law: he that iudgeth the law, is not an obſeruer of the law, but a iudge. But there is one onely lawmaker, that can both ſaue and deſtroy. We heare that God doth claime this one thing as proper to himſelfe, to rule vs with the gouernment and lawes of his word. And the ſame thing was ſpoken before of Eſay, although ſomewhat more darkly: the Lord is our king, the Lord is our lawmaker, the Lord is our iudge, he ſhall ſaue vs. Truely in both theſe places is ſhewed, that he that hath power ouer the ſoule, hath the iudgements of life and death. Yea Iames pronounceth this plainly: Now, no man can take that vpon him.. Therefore God muſt be acknowledged to be the onely king of ſoules, to whom alone belongeth the power to ſaue and deſtroy, as thoſe words of Eſay expreſſe, and to be the king, and iudge, and lawmaker and Sauiour. Therefore Peter, when he admoniſheth the Paſtors of their dutie, exhorteth them ſo to feed the flocke, not as vſing a Lordſhip ouer the Clergie, by which word Clergie he ſignifieth the inheritance of God, that is to ſay, the faithfull people. That if we rightly weigh, that it is not lawfull, that that ſhould be transferred to man, which God maketh his owne onely: we ſhall vnderſtand that ſo all the power is cut off whatſoeuer it be, that they challenge, which aduance themſelues to commaund any thing in the Church without the word of God.

The way to iudge what ordinances of men be repugnant to the word of God.

8 Now, for as much as the whole cauſe hangeth thereupon, that if God be the onely law-maker, it is not lawfull for men to take that honour to themſelues: it is meete alſo therewithall to keepe in minde thoſe two reaſons which we haue ſpoken, why the Lord claimeth that to himſelfe alone. The firſt is that his will may be to vs a perfect rule of all righteouſneſſe and holineſſe: and that ſo in the knowing of him may be the perfect knowledge to liue well. The other is, that (when the manner is ſought how to worſhip him rightly and well) he onely may haue authoritie ouer our ſoules, whom we ought to obey, and vpon whoſe becke we ought to hang. Theſe two reaſons being well marked, it ſhal be eaſie to iudge, what ordinances of men are contrarie to the word of God. Of that ſort be all thoſe which are fained to belong to the true worshipping of God, and to the obseruing whereof consciences are bound, as though they were necessary to be obserued. Let vs therefore remember that all lawes of men ought to be weighed with this balance, if wee will haue a sure triall that may neuer suffer vs to erre. The first of these reasons Paul in the Epistle to the Colossians vseth in contending against the false Apostles that attempted to oppresse the churches with new burthens. The second reason he more vseth with the Galathians in the like case. This therefore he trauelleth to prooue in the Epistle to the Colossians, that the doctrine concerning the true worshipping of God is not to be sought at mens hands: because the Lord hath faithfully, and fully instructed vs how he ought to be worshipped. To prooue the same in the first Chapter, he saith that in the Gospel is contained all wisedome, whereby the man of God may be made perfect in Christ. In the beginning of the second Chapter he saith, that all the treasures of wisedome and vnderstanding are hidden in Christ. Thereupon hee afterward concludeth, let the faithfull beware that they be not by vaine Philosophie led from the flocke of Christ, according to the constitutions of men. But in the end of the Chapter, he doth yet with greater boldnesse condemne all Ethelothreskias, that is to say, all fained worshippings, which men deuise to themselues, or receiue of other, and whatsoeuer precepts they dare of themselues giue concerning the worshipping of God. Wee haue therefore, that all those ordinances are wicked, in obseruing whereof the worshipping of God is fained to be. As for the places in the Galathians wherewith he earnestly affirmeth that consciences, which ought to be ruled of God only, ought not to be intangled with snares, they are open enough, specially in the fift Chapter. Therefore let it bee sufficient to haue but noted them.

The cause why the Ecclesiasticall constitutions of the Pope as well concerning ceremonies as discipline are impugned.

9 But because the whole matter shall better bee made open by examples, before that we goe any further, it is good also to apply this doctrine to our owne times. Wee say that the constitutions which they call Ecclesiasticall, wherewith the Pope and his do burden the Church, are pernitious and wicked: our aduersaries defend that they be holy and auaileable to saluation. There be two kinds of them: for some concerne Ceremonies and rites, other some pertaine more to discipline. Is there then a iust cause to moue vs to impugne them both? Truly a iuster than we would. First doe not the authors themselues cleerly define, that the very worshipping of God is contained in them? To what purpose do they apply their ceremonies, but that God should bee worshipped by them? And that commeth to passe not by the only error of the ignorant multitude, but by their allowance that haue the place of teaching. I doe not touch the grosse abhominations, wherewith they haue gone about to ouerthrow all godlinesse. But it should not be imagined among them to be so hainous an offence, to haue failed in any of the least pety traditions, vnlesse they did make the worshipping of God subiect to their fained deuises. What do we then offend, if at this day wee can not beare that which Paul taught to be intollerable, that the lawfull order of the worshipping of God should be reduced to the will of men: specially when they command men to worship according to the elements of the world, which Paul testifieth to bee against Christ? Againe, it is not vnknowen, with how precise necessity they bind consciences to keepe whatsoeuer they command. Here when we crie out to the contrarie, we haue all one cause with Paul, which in no wise suffereth faithfull consciences to be brought into bondage of men.

Colos. 2.20. Gal. 5.1.

A lesse fault in the Papacie to transgresse the law of God than to misse in the keeping of humane constitutions.

10 Moreouer this worst of all is added, that when religion hath once begun to bee defiled with such vaine inuentions, there euer followeth after that peruersinesse, another abominable frowardnesse, whereof Christ reproched the Pharisies that the commandement of God is made voide for the traditions of men. I will not vse mine own words in fighting against our lawmakers at these daies. Let them haue the victorie, if they can by any meane purge themselues from this accusation of Christ. But how should they excuse them, when among them it is thought infinitly more hainous, to haue omitted auricular confession when the time of yeere commeth about, than to haue continued a most wicked life a whole yeere together? to haue infected their tongue with a little tasting of flesh on a Friday, than to haue defiled their body with whoredome all the daies of the weeke? to haue put their hand to an honest work

vpon a day consecrate to Iwot not what pety Saints, than to haue continually exercised their members in most wicked offences? for a Priest to be coupled with one lawfull mariage, than to be entangled with a thousand adulteries? not to haue performed a vowed pilgrimage, than to breake faith in all promises? not to haue wasted somewhat vpon monstrous and no lesse superfluous, and vnprofitable excessiue gorgeousnesse of Temples, than to haue failed to helpe the extreme necessities of the poore? to haue passed by an Idoll without honor, than to haue despightfully intreated all kinds of men? not to haue mumbled vp at certaine howres a great number of words without vnderstanding, than neuer to haue conceiued a true praier in their heart? What is to make void the commandement of God for the traditions of men, if this be not: when commending the keeping of Gods commandements, but coldly and as it were lightly by the way, they doe no lesse earnestly and busily exact the obeying of their owne, than if they contained in them the whole pith of godlinesse? when reuenging the transgressing of Gods law, with light penalties of satisfactions, they punish the very least offence of one of their owne decrees with no lesse paine than with prisonment, banishment, fire or sword? Being not so sharpe and hard to entreat against the despisers of God, they persecute the despisers of themselues with vnappeasable hatred to the extremity, and do so instruct all those, whose simplicity they hold captiue, that they would with more contented mind see the whole law of God ouerthrowen, then one small title (as they call it) in the commandements of the Church to bee broken. First in this point is grieuous offence committed, that for small matters, and such as (if it should be tried by Gods iudgement) are at liberty, one man despiseth, iudgeth and casteth away another. But now as though that were not euill enough, those trifling elements of the world (as Paul calleth them in writing to the Galathians) are weighed of more value than the oracles of God. And he that is in a manner acquited in adulterie, is iudged in meat: hee that hath leaue to vse a harlot, is forbidden to haue a wife. This profit verily is gotten by that transgressing obedience, which is so much turned from God as it declineth to men. Gal. 4. 9.

11 There bee also other two not slender faults, which wee disalow in the same ordinances. First, because they prescribe for the most part vnprofitable, and sometime also fond obseruations: then, because godly consciences are oppressed with the infinit multitude of them, and being rouled backe into a certaine Iewishnesse, they so cleaue to shadowes, that they cannot attaine to Christ. Whereas I call them fond and vnprofitable, I know that that will not seeme credible to the wisedome of the flesh, which so well liketh them, that it thinketh the Church to be vtterly deformed when they be taken away. But this is it, that Paul writeth of, to haue a resemblance of wisedome in counterfet worshipping, in humility, and in this that they thinke that with their sharpnesse they bee able to tame their flesh. This is truly a most wholesome admonition, such as ought neuer to slip away from vs. Mens traditions (saith he) doe deceiue vnder the shew of wisedome, whence haue they this colour? because they are fained of men therefore the wit of man doth therein acknow his owne, and acknowing it doth more, gladly embrace it, than any thing were it neuer so good, that lesse agreed with his vanity. Againe they haue hereby another commendation, because they seeme to be fit introductions to humility, for that with their yoke they hold the minds of men pressed downe to the ground. Last of all, because they seeme to tend to this end to restraine the daintinesse of the flesh, and to subdue it with rigor of abstinence, therefore they are thought to be wisely deuised. But what saith Paul to these things? doth he not shake off those visors: lest the simple should be deceiued with false pretense? Because he iudged this enough for confutation of them, that hee had said that they were the inuentions of men, he passeth ouer all these things without confutation, as though hee esteemed them for nothing: Yea, because he knew that all fained worshippings in the Church were condemned, and are so much more suspitious to the faithfull as they more delight the wit of man: because he knew that the fained image of outward humility doth so much differ from true humility, as it might easily be discerned: finally because hee knew that that childish introduction was no more esteemed than an exercise of the body: therefore he willed that the very same things should be to the faithfull in stead of

of a confutation of mens traditions, by fauor of which they were commended among the ignorant.

Vaine men, hypocrites and fooles delighted, the wiser sort offended with the toyish ceremonies of the Church of Rome.

12 So at this day not only the vnlearned common people, but euery man as hee is most puffed vp with worldly wisedome, so is he most maruellously delighted with beholding of ceremonies. But hypocrites and fooliſh women thinke that there can be nothing deuiſed more glorious nor better. But they which do more deeply ſearch, and more truly weigh according to the rule of godlineſſe, of what value ſo many and ſuch ceremonies are, doe vnderſtand firſt that they are trifles, becauſe they haue no profit: then, that they are deceits, becauſe they doe with vaine pompe beguile the eies of the beholders. I ſpeake of thoſe ceremonies, vnder which the Romiſh maſters will that there be great myſteries: but wee find them by experience to be nothing elſe but mery mockeries. And it is no maruell that the Authors of them haue fallen ſo far as to mocke both themſelues and other with trifling follies: becauſe they partly tooke their examplar out of the dotages of the Gentiles, and partly after the manner of apes did vndiſcreetly counterfet the old vſages of the law of Moſes, which no more pertained to vs than the ſacrifices of beaſts and ſuch other things. Truly although there were none other argument, yet no man that hath his ſound wit will looke for any goodnes of a heape ſo ill patched together. And the thing it ſelfe plainly ſheweth that many ceremonies haue no other vſe but to amaſe the people rather than to teache them. So in theſe new found Canons, that doe rather peruert than preſerue diſcipline, the hypocrites repoſe great importance: but if a man do better looke into them hee ſhall find that they are nothing elſe but a ſhadowiſh and vaniſhing ſhew of diſcipline.

The number of ceremonies growen intollerable in the Church. Ad Ian. Epi. 119.

13 But now (to come to the other point) who doth not ſee that traditions with heaping one vpon another, are ouergrowen into ſo great a number, that the Chriſtian Church may in no wiſe beare them. Hereby it is come to paſſe, that in Ceremonies there appeareth I wot not what Iewiſhneſſe, and the other obſeruations bring a grieuous butchery to Chriſtian ſoules. Auguſtine complained that in his time, the commandements of God neglected, all things were full of ſo many preſumptions, that he was more grieuouſly rebuked that in his Octaues had touched the ground with bare foot, than he that had buried his wit with drunkenneſſe. Hee complaineth that the Church, which the mercy of God willed to be free, was ſo burdened, that the ſtate of the Iewes was much more tolerable. If that holy man had hapned to liue in our age, with what complaints would hee haue bewailed the bondage that now is? For both the number is ten times greater, and euery ſmall title is a hundred times more rigorouſly looked vnto, than at that time. So is wont to be done: when theſe peruerſe lawmakers haue gotten the dominion, they make no end of bidding and forbidding, till they come to extreme peeuiſhneſſe. Which thing Paul hath alſo very well declared in theſe words: If ye be dead to the world, why are ye holden as though ye were liuing with traditions, as eat not, taſt not, handle not? For whereas the Greek word apteſthai, ſignifieth both to eat and to touch, doubtles in this place it is taken in the firſt of theſe two ſignifications, leaſt there ſhould be a ſuperfluous repetition. Therefore he doth here excellently well deſcribe the proceedings of the falſe Apoſtles. They begin at ſuperſtition, ſo that they doe not only forbid to eat, but alſo euen ſlenderly to chaw: when they haue obtained this, they then alſo forbid to taſt. When this is alſo granted them, they reckon it not lawfull ſo much as to touch with a finger.

Col. 2. 20.

Chriſtianity buried vnder heapes of ceremonies.

Epi. 118. ad Ianuar.

14 This tyrannie in the ordinances of men we doe at this day worthilie blame, by which it is come to paſſe that poore conſciences are maruellouſlie tormented with innumerable decrees and immeaſurable exacting of keeping of them. Of Canons pertaining to diſcipline we haue ſpoken in another place. Of the ceremonies what ſhall I ſay, by which it is brought about that Chriſt being halfe buried, we are turned to Iewiſh figures? Our Lord Chriſt (ſaith Auguſtine) hath bound together the fellowſhip of the new people, with Sacraments very few in number, moſt excellent in ſignification, moſt eaſie in obſeruing. How far the multitude and diuerſity of vſages wherewith at this day we ſee the Church to be intangled, doth differ from this ſimplicity, it cannot be ſufficiently declared. I know with what crafty ſhift ſome ſubtle men do excuſe this peruerſneſſe. They ſay that among vs there are many as rude as they were in the people ple of Israell: that such introduction was ordained for their sakes, which although the stronger may well want, yet they ought not to neglect it, for as much as they see it to be profitable for the weake brethren. I answer, that we are not ignorant, what we owe to the weaknesse of our brethren: but on the other side we take exception and say, that this is not the way whereby the weake may be prouided for, that they should be ouerwhelmed with great heapes of ceremonies. The Lord did not in vaine put this difference betweene vs and the old people, that his will was to instruct them like children with signes and figures, but vs more simply without such outward furniture. As (saith Paul) a child is ruled of his schoolmaster, and kept vnder custody, according to the capacity of his age: so the Iewes are kept vnder the law. But wee are like vnto full growen men, which being set at liberty from tutorship and gouernment, haue no more need of childish introductions. Truly the Lord did foresee what manner of common people there should be in his Church, and how they should be ruled. Yet he did in this manner as we haue said, make difference betweene vs and the Iewes. Therefore it is a foolish way, if we will prouide for the ignorant, in raising vp Iewishnesse which is abrogate by Christ: Christ also touched in his owne words this difference of the old and new people, when he said to the woman of Samaria, that the time was come, wherein the true worshippers should worship God in spirit and truth. This verily had alway been done: but the new worshippers differed from the old in this point, that vnder Moses the spirituall worshipping of God was shadowed and in a maner intangled with many ceremonies, which being abolished, he is now more simply worshipped. Therefore they that confound this difference, doe ouerthrow the order institute and stablished by Christ. Shall there then (wilt thou say) no ceremonies bee giuen to the ruder sort to helpe their vnskilfulnesse? I say not so: for I verily thinke that this kind of helpe is profitable for them. I doe here trauell only that such a meane may be vsed, as may brightly set out Christ and not darken him. Therefore there are giuen vs of God few ceremonies, and those not labourſome, that they should shew Christ being present. The Iewes had mo giuen them, that they should be images of him being absent. Absent I say he was, not in power, but in manner of signifying. Therefore, that meane may be kept, it is necessary to keepe that fewnesse in number, easinesse in obseruing, and dignity in signifying, which also consisteth in clearnesse. What need I to say that this hath not been done? For the thing it selfe is in all mens eies.

Gal.4.2.

15 Here I omit with how pernitious opinions mens mindes are filled in thinking that they be sacrifices wherewith oblation is rightly made to God, whereby sinnes are clensed, whereby righteousnesse and saluation is obtained. They will deny that good things are corrupted with such forraine errors: forasmuch as in this behalfe a man may no lesse offend in the very works also commanded of God. But this hath hainousnesse, that so much honor is giuen to works rashly fained by the will of man, that they are thought to be things deseruing eternall life. For the workes commanded of God haue reward therefore, because the lawmaker himselfe in respect of obedience accepteth them. Therefore they receiue not their value of their owne worthinesse, or of their owne deseruing, but because God so much esteemeth our obedience toward him. I speake here of the perfection of workes which is commanded of God, and is not performed of men. For therefore the very works of the law which we doe, haue no thanke but of the free goodnesse of God, because in them our obedience is weake and lame. But because we doe not here dispute, of what value works are without Christ, therefore let vs passe ouer that question. I come backe againe to that which properly belongeth to this present argument, that whatsoeuer commendation works haue in them, they haue it in respect of the obedience, which only the Lord doth looke vpon, as he testifieth by the Prophet: I gaue not commandement of sacrifices and burnt offrings, but only that ye should with hearing heare my voice. But of fained works hee speaketh in another place, saying? Ye way you siluer and not in bread. Againe, They worship me in vaine with the precepts of men. This therefore they can by no waies excuse, that they suffer the silly people to seeke in those outward trifles the righteousnesse whereby they may stand against God and vphold themselues before the heauenly iudgement seat. Moreouer, is not this a fault worthy to be inueied against, that they Righteousnesse sought in the Church of Rome by the obseruation of ceremoniall ordinances seuered from the doctrine that should direct men vnto Christ, and inuented many of them only to make mony of. Hier.7.22. Esa.55.2. & 29.13. Mat.15.9.

they ſhew foorth ceremonies not vnderſtanded, as it were a ſtage play, or a magicall inchantment? For it is certaine that all ceremonies are corrupt and hurtfull, vnleſſe men be by them directed to Chriſt. But the ceremonies that are vſed vnder the Papacie, are ſeuered from doctrine, that they may the more hold men in ſignes without all ſignification: Finally (ſuch a cunning craftſman is the belly) it appeareth that many of them haue been inuented by couetous ſacrificing Prieſts, to be ſnares to catch mony. But what beginning ſoeuer they haue, they are all ſo giuen foorth in common for filthy gaine, that we muſt needs cut off a great part of them, if wee will bring to paſſe that there be not a prophane market, and full of ſacriledge vſed in the Church.

What humane ordinances are, and the inconueniences whereunto they are ſubiect.

16 Although I ſeem not to teach a continuall doctrine concerning the ordinances of men, becauſe this ſpeaking is altogether applied to our owne time: yet there is nothing ſpoken that ſhall not be profitable for all times. For ſo oft as this ſuperſtition creepeth in, that men will worſhip God with their owne fained deuiſes, whatſoeuer the lawes be that are made to that purpoſe, they doe by and by degenerate to thoſe groſſe abuſes. For the Lord threatneth not this curſe to one or two ages, but to all ages of the world, that he will ſtrike them with blindneſſe and amaſed dulneſſe, that worſhip him with the doctrines of men. This blinding continually maketh that they flie from no kind of abſurdity, which deſpiſing ſo many warnings of God, doe wilfully wrap themſelues in thoſe deadly ſnares. But if, ſetting aſide circumſtances, you will haue ſimply ſhewed what be the mens traditions of all ages, which it is meet to be reiected of the Church, and to be diſalowed of all the godly, that ſame ſhall be a ſure and plaine definition which we haue aboue ſet: that all lawes without the word of God are made by men to this end, either to preſcribe a manner of worſhipping God, or to bind conſciences with religion, as though they gaue commandement of things neceſſary to ſaluation. If to the one or both of theſe there bee adioined other faults: as, that with the multitude they darken the brightneſſe of the Goſpell: that they nothing edifie, but be rather vnprofitable and trifling occupations than true exerciſes of godlineſſe: that they be laid abroad to filthineſſe and vnhoneſt gaine: that they be too hard to bee kept: that they be defiled with euill ſuperſtitions: theſe ſhall be helps that we may the more eaſily find how much euill is in them.

Eſa. 29. 13.

The defence which the Church of Rome maketh for traditions, that a great part of them were deliuered by Chriſt and his Apoſtles, that for the reſt the Church is authoriſed to make ordinances, and to inioine men to obſerue them as the Apoſtles did inioine the Gentiles.

17 I heare what they anſwer for themſelues, that their traditions are not of themſelues, but of God. For, they ſay that the Church is gouerned of the holy Ghoſt, that it cannot erre: and that the authority thereof remaineth with them. When this is obtained, it therewithall followeth, that their traditions are the reuelations of the holy Ghoſt, which cannot be deſpiſed but wickedly and with the contempt of God. And that they ſhould not ſeeme to haue attempted any thing without great authority, they will haue it beleeued that a great part of their obſeruations came from the Apoſtles: and they affirme that by one example is ſufficiently declared what the Apoſtles did in other things, when being aſſembled in one Councell, they did by the decree of the Councell command the Gentiles to abſtaine from things offered to idols, from blood and ſtrangled. We haue already in another place declared, how falſly for boaſting of themſelues they lyingly vſurpe the title of the Church. So much as concerning this preſent cauſe: if, plucking away viſors, and deceitfull colours, we truly looke vpon that which we ought principally to care for, and which chiefly is for our behoofe, that is, what manner of Church Chriſt will haue, that we may faſhion and frame our ſelues to the rule thereof: it ſhall eaſily be euident vnto vs, that it is not the Church, which paſſing the bounds of the word of God, doth outrage and runne at riot in making of new lawes. For doth not that law which was once preſcribed to the Church, remaine eternall? What I command thee, that thou ſhalt keepe that thou maiſt do it. Thou ſhalt not adde any thing nor take any thing from it. And in another place: Adde not to the word of the Lord, nor miniſh any thing: leſt he peraduenture reproue thee, and thou be found a lyer. Sith they cannot deny that this was ſpoken to the Church, what doe they elſe but report the ſtubbornneſſe of that Church, which they boaſt to haue been ſo bold as after ſuch prohibitions neuertheleſſe to adde and mingle of her owne with the doctrine of God? But God forbid that we ſhould aſſent to their lies, whereby they burden the Church with ſo great a ſlander: but let vs vnderſtand, that the name of the Church

Act. 15. 20. & 29. Deut. 12. 32. Pro. 30. 6.

Church is falſly pretended,ſo oft as this luſt of mens raſhneſſe is ſpoken of,which cannot hold it ſelfe within the preſcribed bounds of God, but that it wildly rangeth and runneth out into her own inuentions? There is nothing intangled, nothing darke,nothing doubtfull in theſe words,in which the whole Church is forbidden to adde to the word of God,or to take any thing from it,when the worſhipping of God,and precepts concerning ſaluation, are intreated of. But this (ſay they) was ſpoken of the law only, after which followed the prophecies and the whole miniſtration of the Goſpell. I grant indeed: and I adde alſo, which are rather fulfillings of the law,than additions or diminiſhings. But if the Lord ſuffered nothing to be added to,or taken from the miniſtery of Moſes,which was (as I may ſo terme it) darke by reaſon of many doubtfull inwrappings, till by his ſeruants,the Prophets, and at length by his beloued ſonne, hee miniſtred a cleerer doctrine: why ſhould wee not thinke it much more ſeuerely forbidden vs, that we ſhould adde nothing to the law,the Prophets, the Pſalmes, and the Goſpell? The Lord is not gone out of kind from himſelfe, which hath long agoe declared, that he is with nothing ſo highly offended, as when hee is worſhipped with the inuentions of men. Whereof came thoſe notable ſayings in the Prophets, which ought to haue continually ſounded in our eares: I ſpake no words to your fathers, in the day that I brought them out of Ægypt, concerning ſacrifice and burnt offering. But this word I commanded them, ſaying: With hearing heare my voice: And I will be your God,and you ſhall be my people,and you ſhall walke in all the way that I ſhall command you. Againe,I haue with proteſting proteſted vnto your fathers, Heare my voice. And other like ſayings:but this is notable aboue the reſt. Will God haue burnt offerings and ſacrifices, and not rather that his voice be obeied? For obedience is better than ſacrifice, and to harken is better than to offer the fat of Rams. For,to reſiſt is as the ſinne of ſoothſaying: and not to obey is as the wickedneſſe of idolatry. Therefore whatſoeuer inuentions of men are in this behalfe defended with the authority of the Church, foraſmuch as the ſame cannot be excuſed from the crime of vngodlines, it is eaſie to prooue that it is falſly imputed to the Church.

Ier.7.22.

Iere.11.

1.Sam.15.22.

18 After this ſort wee freely inueigh againſt this tyranny of mens traditions,which is proudly thruſt in among vs,vnder the title of the Church. For neither do we ſcorne the Church (as our aduerſaries,to bring vs in hatred, do vniuſtly lie vpon vs) but we giue vnto her the praiſe of obedience,than which ſhe knoweth no greater praiſe. They rather are very ſore wrong doers to the Church,which make her obſtinate againſt her Lord, while they faine that ſhe hath proceeded further than ſhe lawfully might do by the word of God: though I ſpeake nothing how it is a notable ſhameleſneſſe ioined with as great malice,continually to cry out of the authority of the Church,and in the meane time diſſemblingly to hide both what is commanded by the Lord, and what obedience ſhe oweth to the commandement of the Lord. But if we haue a mind,as it is meet we ſhould haue,to agree with the Church,this pertaineth rather to the purpoſe, to haue an eie vnto,and remember what is commanded by the Lord both to vs and the Church, that we ſhould with one agreement obey him. For there is no doubt but we ſhall very well agree with the Church, if we doe in all things ſhew our ſelues obedient to the Lord. But now to father vpon the Apoſtles, the originall of the traditions wherwith the Church hath been hitherto oppreſſed,was a point of meere deceit: foraſmuch as the doctrine of the Apoſtles trauelleth wholly to this end,that conſciences ſhould not be burdened with new obſeruations, nor the worſhipping of God be defiled with our inuentions. Moreouer,if there be any faithfulneſſe in hiſtories and ancient monuments, the Apoſtles not only neuer knew, but alſo neuer heard of this that they attribute vnto them. Neither let them prate, that the moſt part of their decrees were receiued in vſe and in mens behauiours, which neuer were put in writing: euen thoſe things forſooth, which,while Chriſt was yet liuing, they could not vnderſtand, after his aſcending they learned by the reuelation of the holy Ghoſt. Of the expoſition of that place we haue elſewhere already ſeene. So much as is ſufficient for this preſent cauſe: truly they make themſelues worthy to be laughed at, while they faine that thoſe great myſteries,which ſo long time were vnknowen to the Apoſtles,were partly obſeruations either Iewiſh or Gentile (of which all the one ſort had been long before publiſhed published among the Iewes, and all the other sort among the Gentiles, and partly foolish gesturings and vaine pety ceremonies, which fooliſh ſacrificing Prieſts that can neither skill of ſwimming nor of letters, vſe to doe very trimly: yea ſuch as children and fooles do ſo aptly counterfeit that it may ſeeme that there be no fitter miniſters of ſuch holy myſteries. If there were no hiſtories at all: yet men that haue their ſound wit might conſider by the thing it ſelfe, that ſo great a heape of ceremonies and obſeruations did not ſuddenly burſt into the Church, but by little and little crept in. For when thoſe holier Biſhops, which were next in time to the Apoſtles, had ordained ſome things that belonged to order and diſcipline, afterward there followed men, ſome after other, not diſcreet enough, and too curious and greedy, of which the later that euery one was, ſo he more ſtriued with his predeceſſors in fooliſh enuious counterfaitings, not to giue place in inuenting of new things. And becauſe there was perill leſt their deuiſes would ſhortly grow out of vſe, by which they coueted to get praiſe among their poſterity, they were much more rigorous in exact calling vpon the keeping of them. This wrongful zeale hath bred vs a great part of theſe ceremonies which they ſet out vnto vs for Apoſtolike. And this alſo the hiſtories do teſtifie.

The Apoſtles no authors of thoſe things, for which their names are pretended in the Church of Rome.

The acceſſ. of ceremonies vnto that which the Apoſtles themſelues vſed and preſcribed vnto others concerning the Supper of the Lord.

19 Leaſt in making a regiſter of them we ſhould be too tedious: we will be content with one example. In the miniſtring of the Lords ſupper, there was in the Apoſtles time great ſimplicity. The next ſucceſſors, to garniſh the dignity of the myſtery, added ſomewhat that was not to be diſallowed. But afterward there came thoſe fooliſh counterfaiters, which with now and then patching of peeces together, haue made vs this apparrell of the Prieſts which we ſee in the Maſſe, thoſe ornaments of the altar, thoſe geſturings, and the whole furniture of vnprofitable things. But they obiect, that this in old time was the perſwaſion, that thoſe things which were with one conſent done in the vniuerſall Church, came from the Apoſtles themſelues, whereof they cite Auguſtine for witneſſe. But I will bring a ſolution from no other where than out of the words of Auguſtine himſelfe. Thoſe things (ſaith he) that are kept in the whole world, we may vnderſtand to haue been ordained either of the Apoſtles themſelues, or of the generall Councels, whoſe authority is moſt healthfull in the Church: as, that the Lords paſſion, and reſurrection, and his aſcending into heauen, and the comming of the holy Ghoſt, are celebrate with yeerly ſolemnity: and whatſoeuer like thing bee found, that is kept ō of the whole Church, which way ſoeuer it be ſpread abroad. When he reckoneth vp ſo few examples, who doth not ſee that hee meant to impute to authors worthy of credit and reuerence, the obſeruations that then were vſed, euen none but thoſe ſimple, rare, and ſober ones, with which it was profitable that the order of the Church ſhould be kept together? But how far doth this differ from that which the Romiſh maſters would inforce men to grant, that there is no pety ceremony among them that ought not to be iudged Apoſtolike.

Epiſto. 118.

The inſtitution of holy water.

20 That I be not too long, I will bring foorth only one example. If any man aske them, whence they haue their holy water: they by and by anſwer, from the Apoſtles. As though the hyſtories doe not attribute this inuention to I wot not what Biſhop of Rome, which truly, if he had called the Apoſtles to councell, would neuer haue defiled baptiſme with a ſtrange and vnfit ſigne. Albeit I doe not thinke it like to be true, that the beginning of that hallowing is ſo old as it is there written. For, that which Auguſtine ſaith, that certaine Churches in his time did ſhun that ſolemne following of Chriſts example in waſhing of feete, leſt that vſage ſhould ſeeme to pertaine to Baptiſme, ſecretly ſheweth that there was then no kind of waſhing that had any likeneſſe with baptiſme. Whatſoeuer it be, I will not grant that this proceeded from an Apoſtolike ſpirit, that baptiſme, when it is with a daily ſigne brought into remembrance, ſhould after a certaine manner be repeated. And I paſſe not vpon this, that the ſelfe ſame Auguſtine in another place aſcribeth other things alſo to the Apoſtles. For ſith he hath nothing but coniectures, iudgement ought not vpon them to bee giuen of ſo great a matter. Finally, admit that wee grant them alſo, that thoſe things which he rehearſeth came from the time of the Apoſtles: Yet there is great difference between inſtituting ſome exerciſe of godlineſſe, which the faithfull with a free conſcience may vſe, or if the vſe of it ſhall not be profitable for them, they may forbeare forbeare it: and making a law that may ſnare conſciences with bondage. But now, from what author ſoeuer they proceeded, ſith wee ſee that they are ſlidden into ſo great abuſe, nothing withſtandeth, but that we may without offence of him aboliſh them: foraſmuch as they were neuer ſo commended, that they muſt be perpetually immoueable.

The Church of Rome in her ordinances nothing leſſe than a follower of the Apoſtles in theirs.

21 Neither doth it much helpe them, that to excuſe their tyranny they pretend the example of the Apoſtles. The Apoſtles (ſay they) and the Elders of the firſt Church, made a decree beſide the commandement of Chriſt, wherein they commanded all the Gentiles to abſtaine from things offered to idols, from ſtrangled, and from blood. If that was lawfull for them, why is it not alſo lawfull for their ſucceſſors, to follow the ſame ſo oft as occaſion ſo requireth? I would to God, they did both in all other things and in this thing follow them. For I deny that the Apoſtles did there inſtitute or decree any new thing, which is eaſie to be proued by a ſtrong reaſon. For whereas Peter in that Councell pronounceth that God is tempted, if a yoake be laid vpon the neckes of of the Diſciples: he doth himſelfe ouerthrow his owne ſentence, if he afterward conſent to haue any yoke laid vpon them. But there is a yoke laid, if the Apoſtles doe decree of their owne authority that the Gentiles ſhould be forbidden, that they ſhould not touch things offered to idols, blood, and ſtrangled. In deed there yet remaineth a doubt, for that they doe neuertheleſſe ſeeme to forbid. But this doubt ſhall eaſily be diſſolued, if a man doe more neerely conſider the meaning of the decree it ſelfe: in the order and effect whereof the chiefe points is, that to the Gentiles there liberty is to be left, and that they ought not to be troubled, nor accombered about the obſeruations of the law. Hitherto it very well maketh of our ſide. But the exception that immediatly followeth, neither is any new law made by the Apoſtles, but the diuine and eternall commandement of God that charity ought not to be broken, nor doth diminiſh one title of that laberty: but onely admoniſh the Gentiles, how they ſhould temper themſelues to their breathren, that they abuſe not their liberty to the offence of them. Let this therefore be the ſecond point, that the Gentiles ſhould vſe a harmeleſſe liberty, and without offence of their brethren. But yet they preſcribe ſome certaine thing: that is, they teach and appoint, ſo far as was expedient for the time, by what things they might run into the offence of their brethren, that they might beware of thoſe things: but they adde no new thing of their owne to the eternall law of God, which forbiddeth the offending of brethren.

The Apoſtles in their conſtitution about the Gentiles, made no new law of their owne, but applied to the times a law which God had made before.

22 Like as if the faithfull Paſtors which gouerne the Churches not yet well reformed, ſhould command all their people, that till the weake with whom they liue doe grow ſtronger, they ſhould not openly eat fleſh on Friday, or openly labour vpon holy daies, or any ſuch thing. For although theſe things ſetting ſuperſtition aſide, are by themſelues indifferent: yet when there is added offence of brethren, they cannot be done without a fault. But the times are ſuch, that the faithfull cannot ſhew ſuch a ſight to the weake breathren, but that they ſhall ſore wound their conſciences. Who, but a cauiller, will ſay that ſo they make a new law, whereas, it is certaine that they doe onely preuent offences, which are expreſſely enough forbidden of the Lord: And no more can it be ſaid of the Apoſtles, whoſe purpoſe was nothing elſe, but in taking away the matter of offences, to call vpon the law of God concerning the auoiding of offence: as if they had ſaid: It is the Lords commandement that yee offend not a weake brother. Yee can not eat things offered to images, ſtrangled and blood, but that the weake breathren ſhall be offended. Therefore we command you in the word of the Lord, that ye eat not with offence. And that the Apoſtles had reſpect to the ſame thing, Paul himſelfe is a very good witneſſe, which writeth thus, verily none otherwiſe than according to the meaning of the Councell: Concerning meats that are offered to idols, we know that the idoll is nothing. But ſome with conſcience of the Idoll, doe eat it as offered to idols, and their conſcience, foraſmuch as it is weake, is defiled. See that your liberty be not made an offence to the weake. He that ſhall haue well weighed theſe things, ſhall not afterward be deceiued with ſuch a falſe colour as they make, that pretend the Apoſtles for defence of their tyranny, as though the Apoſtles had begun with their decree to breake the liberty of the Church. But, that they may not be able to escape, but be driuen euen with their owne confession to allow this solution, let them answer me, by what right they were so bold to abrogate the same decree. Because there was no more perill of those offences and dissentions: which the Apostles meant to prouide for, and they know that the law was to be weighed by the end thereof. Forasmuch as therefore this law was made in respect of charity, there is nothing prescribed in it, but so much as pertaineth to charitie. When they confesse that the transgressing of this law is nothing but a breakeing of charitie, doe they not therewithall acknowledge, that it is not a forged addition to the law of God, but a naturall and simple appliance to the times and manners whereunto it was directed?

1. Cor. 8. 4.

The commandement of God strictly to be obserued in things appertaining to his honour and seruice.

23 But although such lawes be a hundred times vniust and iniurious vnto vs, yet they affirme that they must be heard without exceptiō: for they say that this is not here intended, that we should consent to errours, but onely that being subiects we should beare the hard commandements of our gouernours, which it is not our parts to refuse. But here also the Lord very well resisteth them with the truth of his word, and deliuereth vs out of such bondage into the liberty, which hee hath purchased for vs with his holy blood, the benefite whereof hee hath more than once confirmed with his word. For that it is not heere onely intended (as they maliciously faigne) that wee should suffer some grieuous oppression in our body, but that our consciences being spoiled of their liberty that is of the benefite of the blood of Christ, should be slaunshly tormented. Howbeit let vs passe ouer this also, as though it made little to the matter. But of how great importance doe we thinke it is, that the Lords kingdome is taken away from him, which he claimeth to himselfe with so great seuerity? But it is taken away so oft as he is worshipped with the lawes of mens inuentions, whereas he will be holden for the onely Law-maker of his owne worship. And least any man should thinke it to be a matter of nothing, let vs heare how much the Lord esteemeth it? Esa. 29. 13. Because (saith he) this people hath feared me with the commandement and doctrine of men: behold I will astonish them with a great and wonderous miracle. For wisedome shall perish from the wise men thereof, and vnderstanding shall depart from the elders. Matth. 15. 9. In another place, They worship me in vaine, teaching doctrines, the commandements of men. And truly whereas the children of Israel defiled themselues with many idolatries, the cause of all that euill is ascribed to this vncleane mixture, that transgressing the commandements of God, they haue forged new worshippings. And therefore the holy History rehearseth that the new strangers that had beene transplanted by the King of Babilon to inhabite Samaria, were torne in peeces and consumed of wilde beasts, because they knew not the iudgements or statutes of the God of that land. Although they had nothing offended in the Ceremonies, yet God would not haue allowed a vaine pompe: but in the meane time hee ceased not to take vengeance of the defiling of his worship, for that men did thrust in deuises strange from his word. Whereupon it is afterward said, that they being made afraid with that punishment, receiued the Ceremonies prescribed in the law: but because they did not yet purely worship the true God, it is twise repeated that they did feare him and did not feare him. Whereupon we gather, that the part of reuerence which is giuen to him, consisteth in this, while in worshiping him we simply follow what he commandeth with mingling 2. Kin. 22. none of our inuentions. And therefore the godly Kings are oftentimes praised, because they did according to all the commandements, and declined not to the right hand nor to the left. I goe yet further: although in some fained worshipping there doe not openly appeare vngodlinesse, yet it is seuerely condemned of the holy Ghost, so 2. King. 16. 10 soone as men depart from the commandement of God. The Altar of Achaz, the paterne whereof was brought out of Samaria, might haue seemed to increase the garnishment of the Temple, whereas his deuise was to offer Sacrifices thereupon to God onely, which he should doe more honourably than vpon the first and old Altar: yet we see how the spirit detesteth that boldnesse, for none other cause but for that the inuentions of men in the worshipping of God are vncleane corruptions. And how much more cleerely the will of God is opened vnto vs, so much the lesse excusable is our forwardnes to attempt any thing. And therfore worthily with this circumstance the the crime of Manasses is inforced, for that he builded a new Altar in Ierusalem, of which God had pronounced, I will there set my name, because the authority of God is now as it were of set purpose refused. 2. King. 21. 3.

24 Many doe maruell why God so sharply threateneth that he will doe things to be wondered at to the people of whom he was worshipped with the commandements of men, and pronounceth that he is worshipped in vaine with the precepts of men. But if they considered, what it is in the cause of religion, that is to say of heauenly wisedome, to hange vpon the onely mouth of God, they would therewithall see, that it is no slender reason why God so abhorreth such peruerse seruices, that are done to him according to the lust of mans wit. For although they that obey such lawes for the worshipping of God, haue a certaine shew of humility in this their obedience, yet they are not humble before God, to whom they prescribe the same lawes which they themselues doe keepe. This is the reason why Paul willeth vs so diligently to be ware, that we be not deceiued by the traditions of men, and that which he calleth Ethelothreskian, that is, Wil-worship inuented of men beside the doctrine of God. This is verily true, both our owne wisedome, and all mens wisdome must be foolish vnto vs, that we may suffer him alone to be wise. Which way they keepe not which doe study with pety obseruations framed by the will of men to commend themselues vnto him, and doe thrust vnto him as it were against his will a transgressing obedience toward him, which is indeed giuen to men. As it hath beene done both in many ages heeretofore, and in the time within our owne remembrance, and is also at this day done in those places where the authority of the creature is more esteemed than of the Creator: where religion (if yet the same be worthy to be called religion) is defiled with more and more vnsauoury superstitions, than euer was any Paynim wickednesse. For what could the wit of men breed but all things carnall and foolish and such as truely resemble their authors? The reason why God abhorreth seruices wherewith men deuise to please him. Col. 2. 4.

25 Whereas also the Patrons of superstitions alleadge, that Samuel sacrificed in Ramatha, and although the same was done beside the law, yet it pleased God: the solution is easie, that it was not a certaine second Altar to set against the one onely Altar: but because the place was not yet appointed for the Arke of the couenant, he appointed the towne where he dwelled for sacrifices, as the most conuenient place. Truly the minde of the holy Prophet was not to make any innouation in holy things, whereas God had so straitly forbidden any thing to be added or minished. As for the example of Manoah, I say that it was an extraordinary and singular case. He being a priuate man offered sacrifice to God and not without the allowance of God: verily because he enterprised it not of a rash motion of his owne minde, but by a heauenly instinction. But how much the Lord abhorreth those things that men deuise of themselues to worship him withall, another not inferior to Manoah Gideon is a notable example, whose Ephod turned to distruction not onely to him and his family, but to the whole people. Finally, euery new, fond inuention, wherewith men couet to worship God, is nothing else but a defiling of true holinesse. Samuel and Manoah no examples to iustifie the church of Rome in her boldnesse, but rather Gideon to condemne her. 1. Sam. 7. 17. Iud. 13. 19. Iud. 8. 27.

26 Why then (say they) did Christ will that those intollerable burdens should be borne, which the Scribes and Pharisees bound vpon men? But why in another place did the same Christ will that men should beware of the leauen of the Pharisees: calling leauen (as Matthew the Euangelest expoundeth it) all their owne doctrine that they mingled with the pureneſſe of the word of God? What would we haue more plaine, than that we be commanded to flee and beware of all their doctrine? Whereby it is made most certaine vnto vs, that in the other place also the Lord willed not, that the consciences of his, should be vexed with the Pharisees owne traditions. And the very words, if they be not wrested, sound of no such thing. For the Lord purposing there to enueigh sharply against the manners of the Phatisees, did first simply instruct them that heard him, that although they saw nothing in their life meete for them to follow, yet they should not cease to doe those things which they taught in words, while they sat in the chaire of Moses, that is, to declare the law. Therefore hee meant nothing else but to prouide that the common people should not with the euill examples of the teachers be brought to dispise the doctrine. But for as much as many The ministeriall authority of Scribes and Pharisees confirmed by Christ but not their presomption to burthen men with what they listed. Matt. 23. 3. & 16. 6.

are nothing at all mooued with reasons, but alway require authority, I will alleadge Augustines words, in which the very same thing is spoken. The Lords sheepefold hath gouernours, some faithfull, and some hirelings. The gouernours that are faithfull, are true Pastors: but heare ye, that the hirelings also are necessary: for many in the Church following earthly profits, doe preach Christ, and by them the voice of Christ is heard: and the sheepe do follow, not a hireling, but a Pastor by the meanes of a hireling. Heare yee that hirelings are shewed by the Lord himselfe. The Scribes (saith he) and the Phariſees sit in the chaire of Moses. Doe yee those things that they say, but doe not those things that they doe. What other thing said he, but heare the voice of the Pastor by the hirelings? For in sitting in the chaire they teach the law of God: therefore God teacheth by them. But if they will teach their owne, heare it not, doe it not. This saith Augustine.

In Ioh. Tract. 46.

In forbiding mens consciences to be charged with humane traditions, laws whereby the Church is set in order are not preiudiced.

27 But whereas many vnskilfull men, when they heare that consciences are wickedly bound and God worshipped in vaine with the traditions of men, doe at once blot out altogether all lawes whereby the order of the Church is set in frame: therefore it is conuenient also to meete with their errour: Verily in this point it is easie to be deceiued, because at the first sight it doth not by and by appeare what difference is betweene the one sort and the other. But I will so plainely in few words set out the whole matter, that the likenesse may deceiue no man. First let vs hold this, that if we see in euery fellowship of men some policy to be necessary, that may serue to nourish common peace, and to reraine concord: if we see that in the doing of things there is alwaay some orderly forme, which is behoouefull for publike honesty and for very humanity not to be refused, the same ought chiefely to be obserued in Churches, which are both best maintained by a well framed disposition of all things, and without agreement are no Churches at all. Therefore if we will haue the safety of the Church well prouided for, we must altogether diligently procure that which Paul commandeth, that all things be done comely and according to order. But forasmuch as there is so great diuersity in the manners of men, so great variety in mindes, so great disagreement in iudgements and wits: neither is there any policy stedfast enough, vnlesse it be stablished by certaine lawes, nor any orderly vsage can be obserued without a certaine appointed forme: Therfore we are so farre off from condemning the lawes that are profitable to this purpose, that we affirme that when those be taken away, Churches are dissolued from their sinewes, and vtterly deformed and scattered abroad. For this which Paul requireth, that all things be done decently and in order, cannot be had, vnlesse the order it selfe and comelinesse be established, with obseruations adioyned as with certaine bonds. But this onely thing is alway to be excepted in those obseruations, that they be not either beeleued to bee necessary to saluation, and so binde consciences with religion, or be applied to the worshipping of God, and so godlinesse be reposed in them.

1. Cor. 14. 40.

The difference betweene wicked obseruations and the lawfull constitutions of the Church.

28 We haue therefore a very good and most faithfull marke, which putteth difference betweene those wicked ordinances, by which we haue said that true religion is darkened and consciences subuerted, and the lawfull obseruations of the Church: if we remember that the lawful obseruations tend alway to one of these two things or to both together, that in the holy assembly of the faithfull all things be done comely and with such dignity as beseemeth: and that the very common fellowship of men should be kept in order as it were by certaine bondes of humanity and moderation. For when it is once vnderstood that the Law is made for publike honesties sake, the superstition is now taken away, into which they fall that measure the worshipping of God by the inuentions of men. Againe, when it is knowen that it pertaineth to common vse, then that false opinion of bond and necessity is ouerthrowen, which did strike a great terrour into consciences, when traditions were thought necessary to saluation. For heerein is nothing required but that charitie should with common duetifull doing bee nourished among vs. But it is good yet to define more plainely, what is comprehended vnder that comelinesse which Paul commendeth, and also what vnder order. The end of comelinesse is, partlie that when such Ceremonies are vsed as may procure a reuerence to holy things, wee may by such helpes be stirred ſtirred vp to godlineſſe: partly alſo that the modeſtie and grauitie which ought to be ſeene in all honeſt doings may therein principally appeare. In order this is the firſt point, that they which gouerne may know the rule and law to rule well: and the people which are gouerned may bee accuſtomed to obeying of God, and to right diſcipline: Then, that the ſtate of the Church being well framed, peace and quietneſſe may be prouided for.

What things they be that ſerue for comelineſſe and order in the Church.

29 Therefore we ſhall not ſay that comelineſſe is, wherein ſhall bee nothing but vaine delectation: ſuch as we ſee in that player-like apparell, which the Papiſts vſe in their ceremonies, where appeareth nothing elſe, but an vnprofitable viſor of gayneſſe, and exceſſe without fruit. But we ſhall account that to bee comelineſſe which ſhall ſo bee meete for the reuerence of holy myſteries, that it be a fit exerciſe to godlineſſe, or at the leaſt ſuch as ſhall ſerue to conuenient garniſhing for the celebrating thereof: and the ſame not without fruit, but that it may put the faithfull in minde with how great modeſtie, religiouſneſſe and reuerence, they ought to handle holy things. Now, that ceremonies may be exerciſes of godlineſſe, it is neceſſarie that they lead vs the ſtraight way to Chriſt. Likewiſe we may not ſay that order conſiſteth in thoſe triſling pompes that haue nothing elſe than a vaniſhing gayneſſe: but that it ſtandeth in ſuch an orderly framing as may take away all confuſion, barbarouſneſſe, obſtinacie, and all ſtrifes and diſſentions. Of the firſt ſort are theſe examples in Paul: that prophane banketings ſhould not bee mingled with the holy Supper of the Lord: that women ſhould not come abroad, but couered: and many other which we haue in common vſe: as this, that we pray kneeling and bare headed: that wee miniſter the Lords Sacraments not vncleanly, but with ſome dignitie: that in the burying of the dead we vſe ſome honeſt ſhew: and other things that are of the ſame ſort. Of the other kinde are the houres appointed for publike prayers, Sermons, and celebrations of myſteries: at Sermons, quietneſſe and ſilence, places appointed, ſinging together of Hymnes, daies prefixed for celebrating of the Lords Supper, that Paul forbiddeth that women ſhould teach in the Church, and ſuch like. But ſpecially thoſe things that concerne diſcipline, as the teaching of the Catechiſme, the cenſures of the Church, excommunication, faſtings, and ſuch as may be reckoned in the ſame number. So all the conſtitutions of the Church, which we receiue for holy and wholeſome, wee may referre to two chiefe titles: for ſome pertaine to rites, and ceremonies, and the other to diſcipline and peace.

1. Cor. 11. 21 & 5.

1. Cor. 14. 34

A rule for Church ordinances.

30 But becauſe heere is perill, leaſt on the one ſide the falſe Biſhops ſhould thereby catch a pretence to excuſe their wicked and tyrannous lawes, and leaſt on the other ſide there bee ſome men too fearefull, which admoniſhed with the foreſaid euils doe leaue no place to lawes be they neuer ſo holie: heere it is good to proteſt, that I allow onely thoſe ordinances of men which be both grounded vpon the authoritie of God, and taken out of the Scripture, yea and altogether Gods owne. Let vs take for an example the kneeling which is vſed in time of common praier. It is demanded, whether it be a tradition of man, which euery man may lawfully refuſe or neglect, I ſay that it is ſo of men, that it is alſo of God. It is of God, in reſpect that it is a part of that comelineſſe, the care and keeping whereof is commended vnto vs by the Apoſtle: it is of men, in reſpect that it ſpecially betokeneth that which had in generalitie rather beene pointed to, than declared. By this one example we may iudge, what is to be thought of that whole kinde: verily becauſe the Lord hath in his holy Oracles both faithfully contained and clearely ſet forth both the whole ſumme of true righteouſneſſe, and all the parts of the worſhipping of his diuine Maieſtie, and whatſoeuer was neceſſarie to ſaluation: therefore in theſe things he is onely to be heard as our Schoolemaſter. But becauſe in outward diſcipline and Ceremonies his will was not to preſcribe each thing particularly what we ought to follow (becauſe he foreſaw this to hang vpon the ſtate of times, and did not thinke one forme to bee fit for all ages) heerein wee muſt flee to thoſe generall rules which he hath ginen, that thereby all thoſe things ſhould be tried which the neceſſitie of the Church ſhall require to bee commanded for order and comelineſſe. Finally, foraſmuch as hee hath therefore taught nothing expreſly, becauſe theſe things both are not neceſſarie to ſaluation, and according to the maners of euery nation and age ought diuerſly to bee applied to the edifying of the Church: therefore as the profit of the Church ſhall require, it ſhall be conuenient as well to change and abrogate thoſe that be vſed, as to inſtitute new. I grant indeed, that we ought not raſhly, nor oft, nor for light cauſes to runne to innouation. But what may hurt or edifie, charitie ſhall beſt iudge: which if we will ſuffer to be the gouerneſſe, all ſhall be ſafe.

1. Cor. 14. 40

The obedience required vnto lawful ordinances of the Church.

31 Now it is the dutie of Chriſtian people, to keepe ſuch things as haue beene ordained according to this rule, with a free conſcience and without any ſuperſtition, but yet with a godly and eaſie readineſſe to obey, not to deſpiſe them, not to paſſe them ouer with careleſſe negligence: ſo farre is it off, that they ought by pride and obſtinacie openly to breake them. What manner of libertie of conſcience (wilt thou ſay) may there bee in ſo great obſeruation and warineſſe? Yea, it ſhall ſtand excellently well when we ſhall conſider, that they are not ſtedfaſt and perpetuall ſtayed lawes, whereunto we be bound, but outward rudiments for the weakneſſe of men: which although we doe not all neede, yet we doe all vſe them, becauſe wee are mutually one bound to another, to nouriſh charitie among vs. This wee may reknowledge in the examples aboue rehearſed. What? Doth religion ſtand in a womans vaile, that it is not lawfull to goe out of dores with her head vncouered? Is that holy decree of his concerning ſilence, ſuch as cannot be broken without moſt hainous offence? Is there any myſterie in kneeling, or in burying of a dead carcaſe, that may not bee omitted without ſinne? No, For if a woman neede, for the helping of her neighbour, to make ſuch haſt as may not ſuffer her to couer her head, ſhe offendeth not if ſhe runne thither with her head vncouered. And it may ſometime befall that it may be no leſſe conuenient for her to ſpeake, than at another time to hold her peace. And there is no cauſe to the contrarie, but that hee which by reaſon of diſeaſe cannot bow his knees may pray ſtanding. Finally, it is better to burie a dead man ſpeedily in time, than when they lacke a winding ſheete, or when there be not men preſent to conuey him, or tarrie till he rot vnburied. But neuertheleſſe in theſe things there is ſomewhat which the maner and ordinances of the country, and finally very naturall honeſtie, and the rule of modeſtie appointeth to bee done or auoided: wherein if a man ſwarue any thing from them, by vnwarineſſe, or forgetfulneſſe, there is no crime committed: but if vpon contempt, ſuch ſtubbornneſſe is to be diſallowed. Likewiſe the daies themſelues, which they be, and the houres, and how the places be builded, and what Pſalmes be ſong vpon which day, it maketh no matter. But it is meete that there be both certaine daies, and appointed houres, and a place fit to receiue all, if there be regard had of the preſeruation of peace. For how great an occaſion of brawlings ſhould the confuſion of theſe things be, if it were lawfull for euery man as he liſt, to change thoſe things that belong to common ſtate: foraſmuch as it will neuer come to paſſe that one ſame thing ſhall pleaſe all men, if things be left as it were in the middeſt to the choiſe of euery man? If any man doe carpe againſt vs, and will heerein be more wiſe than he ought, let him ſee himſelfe by what reaſon he can defend his owne preciſeneſſe to the Lord. As for vs, this ſaying of Paul ought to ſatisfie vs, that we haue not an vſe to contend, nor the Churches of God.

1. Cor. 11. 16.

Cautions touching Church ordinances.

32 Moreouer it is with great diligence to bee endeuoured, that no error creepe in, that may corrupt or obſcure this pure vſe. Which ſhall be obtained, if all obſeruations, whatſoeuer they ſhall be, ſhall haue a ſhew of manifeſt profit, and if very few be receiued: but principally if there be adioyned a faithfull doctrine of the Paſtor, that may ſtop vp the way to peruerſe opinions. This knowledge maketh that in all theſe things euery man may haue his owne libertie preſerued, and neuertheleſſe ſhall willingly charge his owne libertie with a certaine neceſſitie, ſo farre as either this comelineſſe that we haue ſpoken of, or the order of charitie ſhall require. Secondly that both we our ſelues ſhould without any ſuperſtition be buſied in the obſeruing of thoſe things, and ſhould not too preciſely require them of other, ſo as wee ſhould thinke the worſhipping of God to bee the better for the multitude of ceremonies that one Church ſhould not deſpiſe another for the diuerſitie of diſcipline: laſt of all that ſetting heerein no perpetuall law to our ſelues, we ſhould referre the whole vſe and end of obſeruations obſeruations to the edification of the Church, that when it requireth we may without any offence ſuffer not only ſomewhat to be changed, but all the obſeruations that were before in vſe among vs, to be altered. For this age is a preſent experience, that certaine rites, which otherwiſe are not vngodly nor vncomely, may according to the fit occaſion of the matter, be conueniently abrogate. For (ſuch hath beene the blindneſſe and ignorance of the former times) Churches haue heretofore, with ſo corrupt opinion and with ſo ſtiffe affection ſticked in ceremonies, that they can ſcarcely be ſufficiently purged from monſtrous ſuperſtitions, but that many ceremonies muſt be taken away, which in old time were peraduenture ordained not without cauſe, and of themſelues haue no notable vngodlineſſe in them.

THE ELEVENTH CHAPTER.

Of the iuriſdiction of the Church, and the abuſe thereof, ſuch as is ſeene in the Papacie.

The vſe of a policie in the church different from that which is ciuill: the antiquity of eccleſiaſticall iudgements: the difference of authority giuen to the Church in the 18. of Mat. from that which is giuen in the 16. of Matt. and the 21. of Ihon.

NOw remaineth the third part of the power of the Church, yea and the chiefe part in a well ordered ſtate, which we haue ſaid to conſiſt in iuriſdiction. The whole iuriſdiction of the Church pertaineth to the diſcipline of maners of which we ſhall intreate by and by. For as much as no Citie nor towne can ſtand without magiſtrate and policie: ſo the Church of God (as I haue already taught, but now I am compelled to repeat it againe) needeth her certaine ſpirituall policy: but ſuch as is vtterly ſeuered from the ciuill policy, and doth ſo nothing hinder or miniſh it, that it rather doth much helpe and further it. Therefore this power of iuriſdiction ſhall in a ſumme be nothing elſe but an order framed for the preſeruation of ſpirituall policy. To this end from the beginning were ordained iudiciall orders in Churches, which might vſe examination of maners, correct vices and exerciſe the office of the keies. This order Paul ſpeaketh of in the Epiſtle to the Corinthians, when he nameth gouernments. Againe, to the Romans, when he ſaith: let him that ruleth, rule in carefulneſſe. For he ſpeaketh not to the magiſtrates, (for at that time there were no Chriſtian magiſtrates) but to them that were ioyned with the Paſtors for the ſpirituall gouernment of the Church. Alſo in the Epiſtle to Timothee, he maketh two ſorts of Elders: ſome, that labour in the word: other ſome, that doe not vſe the preaching of the word, and yet doe rule well. By this latter ſort it is no doubt that he meaneth them that were appointed to looke vnto manners, and to the whole vſe of the keies. For this power, of which we now ſpeake, hangeth wholy vpon the keies which Chriſt gaue to the Church, in the xviij. Chapter of Mathew: where he commandeth, that they ſhould be ſharply admoniſhed in the name of the whole Church, that haue deſpiſed priuate monitions: but if they goe forward in their obſtinacy, he teacheth that they ſhould be put out of the fellowſhip of the faithfull. But theſe monitions and corrections cannot be without knowledge of the cauſe: therefore there needeth both ſome iudgement and order. Wherefore vnleſſe we will make voide the promiſe of the keies, and take vtterly away excommunication, ſolemne motions and all ſuch things whatſoeuer they be: we muſt needs giue to the Church ſome iuriſdiction. Let the readers marke that that place intreateth not of the generall authority of doctrine as in the xvj. Chapter of Mathew, and the xxj. of Iohn: but that the power of the Synagogue is for the time to come transferred to the flocke of Chriſt. Vntill that day the Iewes had their order of gouerning, which Chriſt eſtabliſheth in his Church, and that with great penalty, ſo much as concerneth the pure inſtitution of it. For ſo it behooued, for aſmuch as otherwiſe the iudgement of an vnnoble and vnregarded congregation might be deſpiſed of raſh and proude men. And that it ſhould not encomber the readers, that Chriſt doth in the ſame words expreſſe things ſomewhat differing one from the other, it ſhall be profitable to diſſolue this doubt. There be therefore two places, that ſpeake of binding and looſing. The one is in the xvj. Chapter of Mathew, where Chriſt, after that he had promiſed that he would giue to Peter the keies of the kingdome of heauen, immediately addeth, that whatſoeuer he ſhall binde or looſe in earth, ſhall be confirmed in heauen. In which words he meaneth none other thing, than he doth by other words in Iohn, when ſending his Diſciples to preach preach, after that he had breathed vpon them he said: whose sinnes yee forgiue, they shall be forgiuen: and whose yee retaine they shall be retained in heauen. I will bring an exposition not suttle, not enforced, not wrested: but naturall, flowing, and offering it selfe. This commandement of forgiuing and retaining sinnes, and that promise of binding and loosing made to Peter, ought to be referred to no other thing but to the ministerie of the word: which when the Lord committed to the Apostles, he did therewith also arme them with this office of binding and loosing. For what is the summe of the Gospell, but that we all being bondseruants of sinne and of death, are loosed and made free by the redemption that is in Christ Iesus: and that they which doe not receiue nor acknowledge Christ their deliuerer and redeemer, are damned and adiudged to euerlasting bonds? When the Lord deliuered this message to his Apostles, to be carried into all Nations: to approoue that it was his owne and proceeding from himselfe, he honoured it with this noble testimony: and that to the singular strengthening both of the Apostles themselues, and of all those to whom it should come. It behooued that the Apostles should haue a steadfast and sound certainty of their preaching, which they should not onely execute with infinite labours, cares, troubles and dangers, but also at the last seale it with their blood. That they might (I say) know the same to be not vaine nor voide, but full of power and force: it behooued that in so great carefulnesse, in so great hardnesse of things, and in so great dangers, they should be perswaded that they did the businesse of God: that when all the world withstood them, and fought against them they should know that God stood on their side: that hauing not Christ the authour of their doctrine present by sight in earth, yet they should vnderstand him to be in heauen to confirme the truth of the doctrine which he had deliuered them. It behooued againe that it should also be most certainely prooued by testimony to the hearers, that that doctrine of the Gospell was not the word of the Apostles, but of God himselfe: not a voice bread in earth, but come downe from heauen. For these things, the forgiuenesse of sinnes, the promise of euerlasting life, the message of saluation, cannot be in the power of man. Therefore Christ hath testified, that in the preaching of the Gospell there is nothing of the Apostles, but the onely Ministery: that it was hee himselfe that spake and promised all things by their mouthes as by instruments: and therefore that the forgiuenesse of sinnes which they preached, was the true promise of God: and the damnation which they pronounced, was the certaine iudgement of God. But this testifying is giuen to all ages, and remaineth in force, to certifie and assure all men, that the word of the Gospell, by what man soeuer it bee preached, is the very sentence of God, published at the soueraigne iudgement seat, written in the booke of life, ratified, firme and fixed in heauen. This we see that in those places the power of the keies is nothing but the preaching of the Gospell: and that it is not so much a power as a Ministery, if wee haue respect to men. For Christ hath not giuen this power properly to men, but to his owne word, whereof he hath made men Ministers.

The power of binding and loosing by discipline committed to the church.
Mat. 18. 17.

2 The other place which we haue said to be concerning the power of binding and loosing, is in the xviij. chapter of Matthew, where Christ saith: If any brother heare not the Church, let him bee to thee as a Heathen man or Publican. Verily I say vnto you: whatsoeuer yee binde vpon earth, shall be bound also in heauen: whatsoeuer yee loose shall be loosed. This place is not altogether like the first, but is a little otherwise to be vnderstood. But I doe not so make them diuerse, that they haue not great affinity together. This first point is like in both, that either of them is a generall sentence, that in both, their is alway all one power of binding and loosing, namely by the word of God all one commandement, all one promise. But herein they differ, that the first place peculiarly belongeth to preaching, which the ministers of the word doe execute: this latter place to the discipline of Excommunication, which is committed to the Church. The Church bindeth, whom she excommunicateth, not that she throweth him into perpetuall ruine and desperation, but because she condemneth his life and maners, and vnlesse he repent, doth already warne him of his damnation. She looseth whom she receiueth into communion: because she doth make him as it were partaker of the vnity which she hath in Christ Iesus. Therefore that no man should obstinately dispise the iudgement of the Church, or little regard that he is condemned by the conſenting voyces of the faithfull: the Lord teſtifieth that ſuch iudgement of the faithfull is nothing elſe but a publiſhing of his owne ſentence: and that whatſouer they doe in earth is confirmed in heauen. For they haue the word of God, whereby they may condemne the peruerſe: they haue the word, whereby they may receiue the repentant into grace. And they cannot erre, nor diſſent from the iudgement of God: becauſe they iudge not but after the law of God, which is not an vncertaine or earthly opinion, but the holy will of God, and a heauenly Oracle. Out of theſe two places, which I thinke I haue both briefely, familiarly, and truly expounded, thoſe furious men without difference as they be carried with their owne giddineſſe, goe about to ſtabliſh ſometime confeſſion, ſometime excommunication, ſometime iuriſdiction, ſometime the power to make lawes, ſometime pardons. But the firſt place they alledge the ſupremacie of the ſea of Rome: they can ſo well skill to fit their keies to all locks and doores, that a man may ſay they haue practiſed Smithes-craft all their life.

The difference betweene eccleſiaſticall iudgement and ciuill, and the neceſſitie as well for the one as the other to continue.

3 For whereas many thinke that thoſe things endured but for a time, when the Magiſtrates were yet ſtrangers from the profeſſion of our religion: they are deceiued in this, that they conſider not, how great difference and what manner of vnlikeneſſe there is of the Eccleſiaſticall and ciuill power. For the Church hath not the power of the ſword to puniſh or reſtraine, no Empire to command, no priſon, no other paines which the Magiſtrate is wont to lay vpon men. Againe, it tendeth not to this end, that he that hath ſinned ſhould bee puniſhed againſt his will, but ſhould with willing chaſtiſement profeſſe his repentance. Therefore there is a farre diuerſe order becauſe neither doth the Church take to it ſelfe any thing which properly belongeth to the Magiſtrate, nor the Magiſtrate can execute that which the Church doth. This ſhall be made plainer by an example. Is any man drunke? In a well ordered Citie, priſon ſhal be his puniſhment. Hath he committed fornication? He ſhall haue like or rather greater puniſhment. So ſhall both the lawes, and the Magiſtrate, and outward iudgement be ſatisfied: But it may be that he ſhall giue no ſignification of repentance, but rather murmure and grudge againſt it. Shall the Church in this caſe doe nothing? But ſuch cannot be receiued to the Supper, without doing wrong both to Chriſt and his holy inſtitution. And reaſon requireth this, that he which offendeth the Church with an euill example, ſhould with ſolemne declaration of repentance take away the offence which he hath raiſed. The reaſon which they bring that are of contrarie opinion, is too cold: Chriſt ſay they committed theſe doings to the Church, when there was no Magiſtrate to execute them. But it happeneth oftentimes that the Magiſtrate is more negligent, yea ſometime peraduenture that himſelfe is to be chaſtiſed, which happened to the Emperour Theodoſius. There may beſide this as much be ſaid of the miniſterie of the word. Now therefore after their ſentence, let Paſtors ceaſe to blame manifeſt wicked doings, let them ceaſe to chide, to reprooue, to rebuke, for there be Chriſtian Magiſtrates, which ought to correct theſe things with the law and with the ſword. But as the Magiſtrate ought by puniſhing, and by reſtraining with force, to purge the Church of offences: ſo likewiſe the Miniſter of the word for his part ought to helpe the Magiſtrate that there may not ſo many offend. So ought their workings to be conioyned that the one may be a helpe, not a hinderance to the other.

Eccleſiaſticall iuriſdiction not aboliſhed by ciuill.

4 And truly if a man more nearely weigh the words of Chriſt, he ſhall eaſily perceiue that in theſe places, is deſcribed a ſtayed ſtate, and a perpetuall order of the Church, not ſuch as endureth but for a time. For it is not meete that wee ſhould accuſe them to the Magiſtrate, that will not obey our monitions: which yet ſhould bee neceſſarie if the Magiſtrate ſucceeded into the office of the Church. What is this promiſe? Shall we ſay that it is a promiſe of one or a few yeares? Verily verily I ſay vnto you, whatſoeuer ye binde on earth, &c. Moreouer Chriſt did here inſtitute no new thing, but followed the cuſtome alway obſerued in the ancient Church of his owne nation: whereby he ſignified that the Church cannot want the ſpirituall iuriſdiction, which had beene from the beginning And this hath beene confirmed by the conſent of all times. For when Emperors and Magiſtrates began to profeſſe Chriſt, the ſpiritual iuriſdiction was not by and by aboliſhed: but only ſo ordered, that it ſhould diminiſh nothing thing of the ciuill iurisdiction, or be confounded with it. And rightfully. For the magistrate, if he be godly, will not exempt himselfe from the common subiection of the children of God, wherof it is not the last part to submit himselfe to the Church, iudging by the word of God: so far is it off, that he ought to take away that order of iudgment.

Epi. 32. ad Valc. For what is more honorable (saith Ambrose) for the Emperor, than to be called the Son of the Church? For a good Emperor is within the Church, not aboue the Church. Therfore they, which to honor the Magistrate doe spoile the Church of her power, do not only with false exposition corrupt the sentence of Christ, but also do not slenderly condemne so many holy Bishops which haue beene from the time of the Apostles, that they haue by false pretence vsurped the honor and office of the Magistrate.

Spirituall power seuered from the power of the sword.

5 But on the other side it is good to see this, what was in olde time the true vse of the iurisdiction of the Church, and how great abuse is crept in, that we may know what is to be abrogate, and what is to be restored of antiquitie, if we will ouerthrow the kingdome of Antichrist, and set vp the true kingdome of Christ againe. First this is the marke to be shot at, that offences be preuented, and if any offence be risen vp, that it may be abolished. In the vse two things are to be considered: first, that this spirituall power be altogether seuered from the power of the sword: then, that it be not executed by the will of one man, but by a lawfull assembly. Both these things were obserued in the purer Church. For the holy Bishops did not exercise their power with fines, or imprisonments, or other ciuill punishments: but they vsed the onely word of the Lord, as they ought to doe. For the seuerest reuenge, and as it were the vttermost thunderbolt of the Church is excommunication, which is not vsed but in necessitie. But this requireth neither force nor strong hand, but is content with the power of the word of God. Finally, the iurisdiction of the old Church was nothing else but a declaration in practise (as I may so call it) of that which Paul teacheth concerning the spirituall power of Pastors. There is (saith he) power giuen to vs, whereby we may throw downe strong holdes, whereby we may make low all height that lifteth vp it selfe against the knowledge of God, whereby wee may subdue all thought, and may lead it captiue into the obedience of Christ, and we haue in readinesse a reuenge against all disobedience. As this is done by the preaching of the doctrine of Christ: so least the doctrine should be scorned, according to that which is taught ought they to be iudged which professe themselues of the household of faith. But that cannot bee done, vnlesse there be ioyned with the ministerie a power to call them that are to be priuately admonished, or to bee more sharpely corrected, and also a power to exclude them from the communion of the Supper, which cannot be receiued without prophaning of so great a mysterie. Therefore when in another place hee saith, that it belongeth not to vs to iudge strangers, he maketh the children subiect to the censures of the Church, which may chastice their faultes, and he secretly signifieth that there were then iudiciall orders in force from which none of the faithfull were free.

2. Cor. 10. 4.

1. Cor. 5. 12.

Spirituall iurisdiction executed by the will not of one: but of many in the time of Cyprian and Ambrose.

6 But such authoritie (as wee haue declared) was not in the power of one man, to doe euery thing according to his owne will: but in the power of the assembly of the Elders, which was the same thing in the Church that a Senate is in a Citie. Cyprian, when he maketh mention by whom it was exercised in his time, vseth to ioyne the whole Cleargie with the Bishop. But in another place also he sheweth, that the very Cleargie so gouerned, that in the meane time the people was not excluded from the hearing of matters. For thus he writeth: Since the beginning of my Bishoprick I haue determined to doe nothing without the counsell of the Cleargie and consent of the people. But this was the common and vsuall maner, that the iurisdiction of the Church should be exercised by a Senate of Elders: of whom (as I haue said) there were two sorts: For some were ordained to teaching, and othersome were onely Iudges in manners. By little and little this institution grew out of kinde from the first beginning of it: so that euen in the time of Ambrose onely Clearkes were Iudges in Ecclesiasticall iudgements. Which thing he himselfe complaineth of in these words: The old Synagoge (saith he) and since that time the Church hath had Elders, without whose counsell nothing was done. Which by what negligence it is growen out of vse I know not, vnlesse peraduenture by the slothfulnesse or rather the pride of the teachers, while they alone would be thought to be somewhat. We see how much the holy man is displeased, that any thing of the better state is decayed, when notwithstanding they had yet continuing an order that was at the least tolerable. What then would he doe if hee saw these deformed ruines that shew almost no signe of the old building? What bewailing would he vse? First, against law and right, the Bishop hath claimed to himselfe alone, that which was giuen to the whole Church. For it is like as if the Consull, driuing out the Senate, should take the Empire vpon himselfe alone. But as he is aboue the rest in honour, so in the whole assembly is more authoritie than in one man. Therefore it was too wicked a deed, that one man, remooving the common power to himselfe, hath both opened an entry to tyrannous lust, and hath taken from the Church that which belonged vnto her, and hath suppressed and put away the assembly ordained by the Spirit of Christ.

The abuse of spirituall Courts.

7 But (as of one euill alway groweth another) Bishops disdaining it as a thing vnworthy of their care, haue committed it ouer to other. Hereupon are created Officials to serue that roome: I doe not yet speake what kinde of men they be, but onely this I say, that they nothing differ from prophane Iudges. And yet they still call it a spirituall iurisdiction, where men contend about nothing but earthly matters. Although there were no more euill, with what face dare they call a brawling Court the iudgement of the Church? But there are monitions, there is excommunication. So verily they mocke with God. Doth a poore man owe a little money? he is cited: if he appeare, he is condemned. When hee is condemned, if hee doe not satisfie it, hee is monished: after the second monition they proceed one step toward excommunication: if he appeare not, he is monished to come and yeeld himselfe to iudgement: if he then make delay, he is monished, and by and by excommunicate. I beseech you, what is there any thing like either to the institution of Christ, or to the ancient manner, or to an Ecclesiasticall order? But there is also correction of vices. But how? verily they not onely suffer but with secret allowance doe after a certaine manner cherish and confirme adulteries, wantonnesse, drunkennesse and such kinde of mischieuous doings: and that not onely in the common people, but also in the Cleargie themselues. Of many they call a few before them, either that they should not seeme slothfull in winking at them, or that they may milke out some money. I speake not of the pillages, robberies, briberies, and sacriledges that are gathered thereby, I speake not what manner of men are for the most part chosen to this office. This is enough and too much, that when the Romanists doe boast that there iurisdiction is spirituall, it is easie to shew that there is nothing more contrarie to the order institute by Christ, and that it hath no more likenesse to the ancient custome than darknesse hath to light.

Spirituall power abused, euill vsurped by the Pope.

8 Although we haue not spoken all things that might bee alleadged for this purpose, and those things that wee haue spoken of, are knit vp in few words: yet I trust that wee haue so sought it out, that there is now no more cause why any man should doubt, that the spirituall power whereof the Pope with all his kingdome proudly glorieth, is wicked against God, and an vniust tyranny ouer his people. Vnder the name of spirituall power I comprehend both boldnesse in framing new doctrines, wherewith they haue turned away the silly people from the naturall pureness of the word of God, and the wicked traditions wherewith they haue snared them, and also the false Ecclesiasticall iurisdiction which they execute by Suffrages and Officials. For if wee grant vnto Christ a kingdome among vs, it is not possible but that all this kinde of dominion must immediately be ouerthrowen and fall downe. As for the power of the sword which they also giue to themselues, because it is not exercised vpon consciences, it pertaineth not to our present purpose to entreat of it. In which behalfe yet it is also to note, that they be alway like themselues, verily nothing lesse than that which they would bee taken for, that is to say, Pastors of the Church. Neither doe I blame the peculiar faults of men, but the common wickednesse of the whole order, yea the very pestilence of the order: forasmuch as it is thought that the same should be maimed, vnlesse it be gloriously set forth with wealth and proud titles. If we require the authoritie of Christ concerning this matter, it is no doubt but that his minde was to debar the ministers of his word from ciuill dominion and earthly gouernment, when he Mat.20.25. Luke 22.25. he ſaid. The Kings of the Gentiles beare rule ouer them: but you ſhall not ſo. For he ſignifieth not onely that the office of a Paſtor is diſtinct from the office of a Prince, but that they be things ſo ſeuered, that they cannot meete together in one man. For whereas Moſes did beare both the offices together: Firſt that was done by a rare miracle: againe, it was but for a time till things were better ſet in order. But when a certaine forme was once preſcribed of God, the ciuill gouernment was left vnto him, and hee was commanded to reſigne the Prieſthood to his brother. And worthily. For it is aboue nature, that one man ſhould ſuffice to beare both burdens. And this hath in all ages beene diligently obſerued in the Church. And there was neuer any of the Biſhops, ſo long as the true forme of the Church endured, that once thought of vſurping the power of the ſword: ſo that this was a common Prouerbe in the time of Ambroſe, that Emperors rather coueted the Prieſthood, than Prieſts the Empire. For this which he afterward ſaith, was imprinted in the mindes of all men, that Palaces pertained to the Emperor, and Churches to the Prieſt.

Exod.18.16.

Hom.de Baſilic.traden.

Neither lamentable for the Church, nor if performance of dutie be reſpected profitable, for Romiſh Prelates to be both Biſhops and Kings.

9 But ſince that a way hath beene deuiſed, whereby Biſhops might hold the title, honor and riches of their office without burden or care: leaſt they ſhould be left altogether idle, the power of the ſword was giuen them, or rather they did by vſurpation take it vpon themſelues. By what colour will they defend this ſhameleſneſſe? Was this the duety of Biſhops to wrap themſelues with iudiciall hearing of cauſes, with the gouernments of Cities and Prouinces, and through large circuits to meddle in buſines ſo vnpertaining to them: which haue ſo much worke and buſineſſe in their owne office, that if they were wholy and continually occupied in it, and were withdrawen with no callings away from it, yet they were ſcarcely able to ſatisfie it? But (ſuch is their waiwardneſſe) they ſticke not to boaſt, that by this meane the Church doth floriſh according to her worthineſſe, and that they themſelues in the meane time are not too much drawen away from the duties of their vocation. As touching the firſt point: if this be a comely ornament of the holy office, that they be aduanced to ſuch height, that the higheſt Monarches may ſtand in feare of them: then they haue cauſe to quarrell with Chriſt, which hath in ſuch ſort grieuouſly pinched their honor. For, at leaſt in their opinion what could haue beene ſpoken more diſhonorably than thoſe words: The Kings of the Gentiles and Princes beare rule ouer them, but you ſhall not ſo? And yet he laid no harder Law vpon his ſeruants than he firſt laid and receiued vpon himſelfe. Who (ſaith he) hath made me a Iudge or diuider among you? We ſee that hee plainly putteth away from himſelfe the office of iudging, which he would not doe if it were a thing agreeing with his office: will not the ſeruants ſuffer themſelues to bee brought into that order, whereunto the Lord hath yeelded himſelfe ſubiect? As for the other point, I would to God they could ſo prooue it in experience as it is eaſie to ſpeake it. But foraſmuch as the Apoſtles thought it not good, to leaue the word of God and miniſter at tables: thereby, becauſe they will not be taught, they are conuinced, that it is not all one mans worke to be both a good Biſhop and a good Prince. For if they (which according to the largeneſſe of the gifts wherewith they were endued, were able to ſatisfie moe and greater cares than any men that haue beene borne ſince them) haue yet confeſſed that they cannot at once apply the miniſterie both of the word and of tables, but that they ſhould faint vnder the burden: how could theſe that be men of no valor in compariſon of the Apoſtles a hundred fold excell the induſtrie of the Apoſtles? Truely, to attempt it was a point of moſt ſhameleſſe and too preſumptuous boldneſſe: yet we ſee that it hath beene attempted: but with what ſucceſſe, it is euident. For it could not otherwiſe come to paſſe, but that forſaking their owne office they ſhould remooue into other mens charge.

Act 6.2.

The ſteps and occaſions whereby Romiſh Biſhops haue riſen vnto more than conuenient power.

10 And it is no doubt but that of ſmall beginning they haue by little and little growen to ſo great increaſes. For it was not poſſible that they ſhould at the firſt ſtep climbe vp ſo high. But ſometime with ſubtletie and crooked craftie meanes they priuily aduanced themſelues, ſo as no man could foreſee that it would come to paſſe till it was done: ſometime when occaſion ſerued they did by terror and threatnings wring from Princes ſome augmentation of their power: ſometime when they ſaw Princes not hard laced to giue, they abuſed their fond and vnaduiſed gentleneſſe. In olde old time if any controuerſie hapned, the godly to eſcape the neceſſitie of going to law, committed the arbitrement to the Biſhop, becauſe they doubted not his vprightneſſe. With ſuch arbitrements the old Biſhops were oftentimes encombred, which indeed greatly diſpleaſed them) as Auguſtine in one place teſtifieth) but leaſt the parties ſhould runne to contentious lawing, they did though againſt their willes take that encumbrance vpon them. Theſe men haue of voluntarie arbitrements, which were altogether differing from the noiſe of iudiciall courts, made an ordinarie iuriſdiction. In a little while after, when cities and countries were troubled with diuers hard diſtreſſes, they reſorted to the protection of Biſhops, to be ſafegarded by their faithfull ſuccour: the Biſhops by maruellous ſubtlety, of protectors made themſelues Lords. Yea, and it cannot be denied that they haue gotten the poſſeſſion of a great part by violent ſeditious partakings. As for the Princes, that willingly gaue iuriſdiction to Biſhops, they were by diuers affections mooued thereunto. But admitting that their gentleneſſe had ſome ſhew of godlineſſe: yet with this their wrongfull liberalitie, they did not verie well prouide for the profit of the Church, whoſe ancient and true diſcipline they haue ſo corrupted, yea (to ſay truth) haue vtterly aboliſhed. But thoſe Biſhops that haue abuſed ſuch goodneſſe of Princes to their owne commoditie, haue by ſhewing of this one example enough and too much teſtified that they are not Biſhops. For if they had had any ſparkle of an Apoſtolike ſpirit, they would without doubt haue anſwered out of the mouth of Paul: the weapons of our warfare are not carnall, but ſpirituall. But they being rauiſhed with blinde greedineſſe, haue deſtroied both themſelues, their ſucceſſors, and the Church.

The ſhifts whith the Biſhops of Rome vſeth to hold the power which by robbery he hath gotten. Liber de Conſid. 25.

11 At length the Biſhop of Rome not contented with meane Lordſhips, firſt laid hand vpon kingdomes, and afterward vpon the verie Empire. And that he may with ſome colour whatſoeuer it be, retaine the poſſeſſion gotten by meere robberie, he ſometime boaſteth that he hath it by the law of God, he ſometime pretendeth the gift of Conſtantine, ſometime ſome other title. Firſt I anſwer with Bernard. Admit that he do by any other reaſon whatſoeuer, claime this vnto him, yet he hath it not by apoſtolike right. For Peter could not giue that which he had not: but he gaue to his ſucceſſors that which he had, the care of Churches. But when the Lord and maſter ſaith, that he is not appointed iudge betweene two, a ſeruant and ſcholler ought not to thinke ſcorne if he be not iudge of all men. But Bernard ſpeaketh of ciuill iudgements. For he addeth: Therfore your power is in crimes, not in poſſeſſions: becauſe for thoſe and not for theſe yee haue receiued the keies of the kingdome of heauen. For which ſeemeth to thee the greater dignitie to forgiue ſinnes, or to diuide landes? There is no compariſon. Theſe baſe and earthly things haue Kings and Princes of the earth their iudges. Why doe yee inuade the bounds of other? &c. Againe, Thou art made a ſuperiour: (he ſpeaketh of Pope Eugenius) but whereunto? Not to beare Lordſhip, I thinke. Therefore how much ſoeuer we thinke of our ſelues, let vs remember that there is a miniſterie laid vpon vs, not a Lordſhip giuen vs. Learne that thou haſt need of a weed-hooke, not of a ſcepter, that thou maiſt doe the worke of a Prophet. Againe, it is plaine: Lordſhip is forbidden to the Apoſtles. Go thou therfore, and preſume to vſurpe to thy ſelfe either being a Lord, an Apoſtleſhip: or being an Apoſtle, a Lordſhip. And by and by after: the forme of an Apoſtleſhip is this, Lordſhip is forbidden them, miniſtery is bidden them. Whereas theſe things are ſo ſpoken by that man, that it is euident to all men that the very truth it ſelfe ſpeaketh to them, yea whereas the very thing it ſelfe is manifeſt without all words: yet the Biſhop of Rome was not aſhamed in the Councell at Orleance to decree that the ſupreme power of both the ſwords belong to him in the law of God.

12 As for the gift of Conſtantine, they that be but meanely practiſed in the hiſtories of thoſe times need not to be taught how much this is not onely fabulous, but alſo to be laughed at. But to paſſe ouer hiſtories, Gregory himſelfe is both a ſufficient and moſt full witneſſe heereof. For ſo oft as he ſpeaketh of the Emperour, he calleth him moſt noble Lord, & himſelfe his vnworthie ſeruant. Againe, in another place: But let not our Lord by the earthly power be the ſooner angry with the prieſts: but with excellent conſideration, for his ſake whoſe ſeruants they be, let him ſo rule ouer them, that he also giue them due reuerence. Wee see how in common subiection he would be accounted as one of the people. For he there pleadeth not any other mans cause but his owne. In another place, I trust in the almightie God, that he will giue a long life to our godly Lords, and will dispose vs vnder your hand according to his mercy. Neither haue I therefore alleadged these things, for that it is my purpose throughly to discusse this question concerning the gift of Constantine: but onely that the Readers should see by the way how childishly the Romanists doe lie, when they goe about to challenge an earthly Empire to their Bishop. And so much the more foule is the shamelesnesse of Augustine Steuchus, which in such a despaired cause hath beene so bold to sell his trauell and tongue to the Bishop of Rome. Valla (as it was not heard for a man learned and of a sharp wit) had strongly confuted that fable. And yet (as a man little exercised in ecclesiasticall matters) he had not said all that might haue made for that purpose. Steuchus burst in, and scattered stinking trifles to ouerpresse the cleere light. And truly he doth no lesse coldly handle the cause of his master, than if some merrie conceited fellow faining himselfe to doe the same, would indeed take Vallas part. But verilie it is a woorthie cause, for which the Pope should hire such patrons for money: and no lesse worthy are those hired losels to be deceiued of their hope of gaine, as it hapned to Eugubinus.

The time when the Pope began first to ouertop the Emperour.

13 But if any man require to know the time, since his fained Empire began to rise vp, there are not yet passed fiue hundred yeeres, since the Bishops yet remained in subiection of the Princes, neither was the Pope created without authoritie of the Emperour. The Emperour Henry the fourth of that name, a light and rash man, and of no forecast, of great boldnesse and dissolute life, gaue first occasion to Gregory the seuenth to alter this order. For when he had in his court the Bishopricks of all Germany partly to be sold, and partly laid open for spoile: Hildebrand, which had receiued displeasure at his hand, caught hold of a goodly colour to reuenge himselfe. But because he seemed to pursue an honest and godly cause, hee was furthered with the fauour of many. And Henry was otherwise, by reason of his insolent maner of gouerning, hated of the most part of Princes. At the length Hildebrand, which called himselfe Gregory the seuenth, as he was a filthie and naughtie man, bewraied the malice of his heart: which was the cause that he was forsaken of many that had conspired with him. But he thus much preuailed, that his successors might freely without punishment not onely shake off the yoke, but also bring Emperours in subiection to them. Hereunto was added that from thenceforth there were many Emperors liker to Henry than to Iulius Cæsar: whom it was no hard thing to subdue, while they sate at home careless of all things and slothfull, when they had most need with vertue and lawfull meanes to represse the greedinesse of the Bishops. Thus we see with what colour that same godly gift of Constantine is shadowed, wherby the Pope faineth that the Empire of the West was deliuered vnto him.

The violent means whereby the power of the Pope hath growen. Reg. lib. 4. cap. 88.

14 In the meane time the Popes ceased not, sometime with fraud, sometime with treason, and sometime with force to inuade other mens dominions: and the verie citie it selfe, which before was free, within a hundred and thirtie yeeres, or there about they brought into their subiection, till they grew to the same power which they haue at this day: and for the obtaining or encreasing whereof, they haue so troubled Christendome by the space of two hundred yeeres, (for they began before that they tooke to them the dominion of the citie) that they haue almost destroied it. In the old time when vnder Gregorie the keepers of the goods of the Church, did take possession of the lands which they reckoned to belong to the Church, and after the maner, of the seasing to the vse of the Prince, did set titles vpon them for token of claim. Gregory assembling a Councell of Bishops, inueighing sore against that prophane maner, asked whether they did not iudge that Clerke accursed which did of his own will by writing of any title attempt to enter vpon any possession. They all pronounced accursed. If to claime a peece of ground by writing of a title be in a Clearke an offence worthie of accursing: when whole two hundred yeeres together Popes doe practise nothing else but battels, shedding of blood, destructions of armies, sackings of some cities, racing of other, ouerthrowes of nations, wastings of kingdomes, onely that they might catch holde of other mens poſſeſſions: what curſings can be enough to puniſh ſuch examples? Truely it is verie plaine that they ſeeke nothing leſſe than the glorie of Chriſt. For if they of their owne will doe wholy reſigne all the ſecular power that they haue, therein is no danger to the glory of God, no danger to ſound doctrine, no danger to the ſafetie of the Church: but they are caried blinde and headlong with onely greedineſſe of dominion: becauſe they thinke nothing ſafe, vnleſſe they may beare rule with rigorouſneſſe (as the Prophet ſaith) and with power. Ezech. 34. 4.

15 To iuriſdiction is annexed immunitie, which the Romiſh Cleargie tooke to themſelues. For they thinke it againſt their dignitie, if they anſwer in perſonall cauſes before a temporall iudge: and therein they thinke both the libertie and dignitie of the Church to conſiſt, if they be exempt from common iudgement and lawes. But the old Biſhops, which otherwiſe were moſt rigorous in defending the right of the Church, iudged themſelues and their order to be nothing hurt, if they were ſubiect to them. And the godly Emperours, without gainſaying of any man, did alway call Clearkes to their iudgement ſeats ſo oft as neede required. For thus ſaith Conſtantine in his Epiſtle to the Nicomedians: If any of the Biſhops ſhall vndiſcreetely diſorder himſelfe, his boldneſſe ſhall be reſtrained by the execution of the miniſter of God, that is by my execution. And Valentinian ſaith: Good Biſhops doe not ſpeake againſt the power of the Emperour, but doe ſincerely both keepe the commandements of God their great King, and alſo obey our lawes. At that time all men were perſwaded of this without controuerſie. But Eccleſiaſticall cauſes were referred to the iudgement of the Biſhop. As if any Clearke had offended nothing againſt the lawes, but onely was accuſed by the Canons: hee was not cited to the common iudgement ſeate, but in that cauſe had the Biſhop for his iudge. Likewiſe if there were a queſtion of Faith in controuerſie, or ſuch a matter as properly pertained to the Church, the iudgement thereof was committed to the Church. So is that to be vnderſtanded, which Ambroſe writeth to Valentinian: Your father of honourable memorie, not onely anſwered in word, but alſo decreed by lawes, that in a cauſe of Faith he ought to be iudge that is neither vnfit in office nor vnlike in right. Againe: If we haue regard to the Scriptures, or old examples, who is there that can denie that in a cauſe of Faith, in a cauſe (I ſay) of Faith, Biſhops are wont to iudge of Chriſtian Emperours, and not Emperours of Biſhops? Againe: I would haue come, O Emperour, to your conſiſtorie, if either the Biſhops or the people would haue ſuffred me to go: ſaying, that the cauſe of Faith ought to be debated in the Church before the people. He affirmeth verily that a ſpirituall cauſe, that is to ſay, the cauſe of religion, ought not to be drawen into the temporall court where prophane cauſes are pleaded. Worthily doe all men praiſe his conſtancie in this behalfe. And yet in a good cauſe he proceedeth but thus farre, that if it come to violence and ſtrong hand, he ſaith that hee will giue place. Willingly (ſaith he) I will not forſake the place committed vnto me: but when I am enforced, I know not how to reſiſt: for our armour are prayers and teares. Let vs note the ſingular modeſtie and wiſedome of the holy man, ioyned with ſtoutneſſe of courage and boldneſſe. Iuſtina the Emperours mother, becauſe ſhe could not drawe him to the Arrians ſide, practiſed to driue him from the gouernment of the Church. And ſo ſhould it haue come to paſſe, if he had come when he was called to the palace to pleade his cauſe. Therefore he denieth the Emperour to be a competent iudge of ſo great a controuerſie. Which maner of doing both the neceſſitie of that time, and the continuall nature of the matter required. For hee iudged that he ought rather to die, than that ſuch an example ſhould by his conſent be giuen to poſteritie: and yet if violence be offred, he thinketh not of reſiſtance. For he denieth it to be Biſhoplike, to defend the Faith and right of the Church with armes. But in other cauſes he ſheweth himſelfe readie to doe whatſoeuer the Emperour ſhall commaund him. If he demand tribute, (ſaith he) we denie it not: the lands of the Church doe pay tribute. If he aske lands, he hath power to claime them, none of vs reſiſteth. After the ſame maner alſo ſpeaketh Gregorie: I am not ignorant (ſaith he) of the minde of our moſt noble ſoueraigne Lord, that he vſeth not to intermeddle in cauſes pertaing to Prieſts, leaſt he ſhould in any thing be burdened with our ſinnes. He doth not generally exclude the Emperour rour from iudgeing of Priests: but he saith that there be certaine causes, which he ought to leaue to the iudgement of the Church.

The immunitie of Romish clergie men from secular courts in the time of Gregorie not stood vpon.

16 And by this verie exception the holy men sought nothing else, but that Princes lesse zealous of religion should not with tyrannous violence and wilfulnesse interrupt the Church in doing her office. For neither did they disallow, if Princes sometime did vse their authoritie in Ecclesiasticall matters, so that it were done to preserue the order of the Church, not to trouble it, to stablish discipline, not to dissolue it. For sith the Church hath not the power of compelling, nor ought to require it (I speake of ciuill constraining:) it is the office of godly Kings and Princes to maintain religion with laws proclamations, and iudiciall proceedings. After this maner, when the Emperour Maurice had commanded certaine Bishops that they should receiue their fellow Bishops that were neighbours and driuen out of the barbarous nations: Gregorie confirmeth that commandement, and exhorteth them to obey it. And when he himselfe is admonished by the same Emperour to come to attonement with Iohn the Bishop of Constantinople, he doth indeed render a reason why he ought not to be blamed: yet he doth not boast of immunitie from the secular Court, but rather promiseth that hee will be obedient, so farre as his conscience will giue him leaue: and therewithall he saith this, that Maurice did as became a godlie Prince, when hee gaue such commandements to the Priests.

THE TVVELFTH CHAPTER.

Of the discipline of the Church, whereof the chiefe vse is in the censures and excommunication.

The necessity of discipline in the Church.

THE discipline of the Church, the entreating whereof we haue deferred vnto this place, is briefly to be declared, that we may at length passe ouer to the rest. But that same for the most part hangeth vpon the power of the keies and spirituall iurisdiction. That this may be the more easily vnderstood, let vs diuide the Church into two principall degrees, that is to say the Cleargie, and the people. Clearkes I call by the vsuall name those that execute publike ministerie in the Church. First we will speake of common discipline, to which all ought to be subiect: then we will come to the Cleargie, which beside that common discipline, haue a seuerall discipline by themselues. But because many for hatred of discipline doe abhorre the very name thereof, let them heare this: If no fellowship, yea no house though it haue but a small household, can be kept in right state without discipline, the same is much more necessarie in the Church, whose state ought to be most orderly of all. Therefore as the doctrine of Christ which bringeth saluation is the soule of the Church, so discipline is in steede of sinewes therein: whereby it is brought to passe, that the members of the body hang together euery one in his fit place. Wherefore whosoeuer doe either desire to haue discipline taken away, or hinder the restoring thereof, whether they doe it of set purpose or by vnaduisednesse, verily they seeke the extreme dissipation of the Church. For what shall betide, if what is lustfull be lawfull to euery man? But so would it be, if there were not with the preaching of doctrine adioyned priuate admonishments, corrections, and such other helpes which sustaine doctrine and suffer it not to be idle: discipline therefore is as it were a bridle wherewith they may be holden backe and tamed which coltishly resist againe Christ: or as it were a pricke, wherewith they that are not willing enough may be stirred vp: and sometime, as a fatherly rodde, wherewith they which haue more grieuously fallen, may be chastised mercifully and according to the mildenesse of the spirit of Christ. Sith therefore we doe now see at hand certaine beginnings of a horrible wastnesse in the Church, because there is no care nor order to keepe the people in awe, very necessitie crieth out that there is neede of remedie. But this is the onely remedie, which both Christ hath commanded, and hath alway beene vsed among the godlie.

The vse of admonition towards them that be offenders.

2 The first foundation of discipline is, that priuate monitions should haue place: that is to say, that if any man of his owne accord doe not his dutie, if he behaue himselfe licentiously, or liue not honestly, or haue committed any thing woorthie of blame, blame, he ſhould ſuffer himſelfe to be admoniſhed: and that euery man ſhould ſtudie to admoniſh his brother when occaſion ſhall require. But ſpecially let the Paſtors and Prieſts be watchfull to doe this, whoſe office is not onely to preach to the people, but in euery houſe to admoniſh and exhort if at any time they doe not ſufficiently preuaile by generall doctrine: as Paul teacheth, when he rehearſeth that hee taught priuately and in houſes, and proteſteth that he is cleane from the blood of all men, becauſe he hath not ceaſed with teares day and night to admoniſh euery one. For doctrine doth then obtaine force and authoritie, when the miniſter not onely doth declare to all together what their dutie is to Chriſt, but alſo hath power and order to require the keeping thereof of them whom he marketh to be either not obedient to doctrine, or ſlothfull. If any man doe either ſtubbornly refuſe, or in going forward in his faults, doe deſpiſe ſuch admoniſhments: when he hath beene the ſecond time admoniſhed with witneſſes called to it, Chriſt commandeth them to be called to the iudgement of the Church, which is the aſſemblie of Elders: and that there they ſhould be more greeuouſly admoniſhed as it were by publike authority, that if he reuerence the Church he may ſubmit himſelfe and obey. But if he be not heereby ſubdued, but doe continue in his wickedneſſe, then he commandeth him, as a deſpiſer of the Church, to be put away from the fellowſhip of the faithfull.

Act. 20. 20. & 26.

Math. 18. 15. & 17.

3 But becauſe he ſpeaketh heere onely of ſecret faults, we muſt make this diuiſion: that ſome ſinnes be priuate, and ſome publike or openly manifeſt. Of the firſt ſort Chriſt ſaith to euerie priuate man, Reproue him betweene thee and him alone. Of manifeſt ſinnes, Paul ſaith to Timothee. Reproue him before all men, that the reſt may haue feare. For Chriſt had ſaid before, If thy brother haue offended againſt thee. Which words (againſt thee) vnleſſe thou wilt be contentious, thou canſt not otherwiſe vnderſtand than vnder thine owne ſecret knowledge, ſo that there be no moe priuie to it. But the ſame thing which the Apoſtle teacheth Timothee concerning the rebuking of them openly that ſinne openly, he himſelfe followed in Peter. For when Peter ſinned euen to publike offence, he did not admoniſh him apart by himſelfe, but brought him foorth into the ſight of the Church. Therefore this ſhall be the right order of doing, if in ſecret faults we go forward according to thoſe degrees that Chriſt hath ſet: but in manifeſt faults, we immediately proceed to the Churches ſolemne rebuking, if the offence be publike.

The difference of dealing in faults ſecretly and in faults openly committed.

Mat. 18. 15. 1. Tim. 5. 22.

Gal. 2. 14.

4 Let this alſo be another diſtinction: that of ſinnes ſome be defaults, other ſome be wicked doings, or hainous offences. To the correcting of this latter ſort, not onely admoniſhment or rebuking is to be vſed, but alſo a ſeuere remedie: as Paul ſheweth which not onely chaſtiſed with word the Corinthian that had committed inceſt, but alſo puniſhed him with excommunication, ſo ſoone as he was certified of his wicked deed. Now therefore we begin better to ſee how the ſpirituall iuriſdiction of the Church: which puniſheth ſinnes according to the word of the Lord, is the beſt maintenance of health, and foundation of order, and bond of vnitie. Therefore when the Church doth baniſh out of her company manifeſt adulterers, whoremongers, theeues, robbers, ſeditious perſons, periured men, falſe witneſſes, and ſuch other, againe, obſtinate men, which being orderly admoniſhed euen of ſmall faults doe ſcorne God and his iudgement, ſhe taketh nothing vpon herſelfe without reaſon, but executeth the iuriſdiction giuen her of the Lord. Moreouer, that none ſhould deſpiſe ſuch iudgement of the Church, or lightly regard that he is condemned by the conſenting voices of the faithfull: the Lord hath teſtified, that the ſame is nothing elſe but a pronouncing of his owne ſentence, and that whatſoeuer they doe in earth is confirmed in heauen. For they haue the word of the Lord, whereby they may condemne the froward: they haue the word, whereby they may receiue the repentant into fauour, They I ſay that truſt that without this bond of diſcipline Churches may long ſtand, are deceiued in opinion: vnleſſe perhaps we may want that helpe which the Lord foreſaw that it ſhould be neceſſarie for vs. And truly how great is the neceſſitie thereof, ſhall be better perceiued by the manifold vſe of it.

Not one and the ſame proceeding againſt meane, and hainous offenders.

5 There be three ends which the Church hath reſpect vnto in ſuch corrections and excommunication. The firſt is, that they ſhould not, to the diſhonour of God,

bee named among Christians, that lead a filthy and sinfull life,as though his holy Church were a conspiracy of naughty and wicked men. For sith the Church is the body of Christ,it cannot be defiled with such filthy and rotten members,but that some shame must come to the head. Therefore that there should not be any such thing in the Church, whereby his holy name may be spotted with any reproach,they are to be driuen out of her houshold, by whose dishonesty any slander might redound to the name of Christians. And herein also is consideration to be had of the Supper of the Lord,that it be not prophaned with giuing it to all without choise. For it is most true, that he to whom the distribution of it is committed, if hee wittingly and willingly admit an vnworthy man whom he might lawfully put backe, is as guilty of sacrilege,as if he did giue abroad the Lords body to dogs. Wherefore Chrysostome grieuously inueigheth against the Priests, which while they feare the power of great men, dare debar no man. The blood (saith he) shall be required at your hands. If ye feare man,he shall laugh you to scorne: but if ye feare God,ye shall be reuerenced also among men. Let vs not feare maces,nor purple,nor crownes: we haue here a greater power. I verily will rather deliuer mine owne body to death, and suffer my blood to be shed, than I will be made partaker of this defiling. Therefore lest this most holy mystery bee spotted with slander, in the distributing thereof choise is greatly requisite: which yet cannot be had but by the iurisdiction of the Church. The second end is, lest (as it is wont to come to passe)with the continuall company of the euill, the good should bee corrupted. For(such is our ready inclination to go out of the way) there is nothing easier than for vs to be led by euill examples from the right course of life. This vse the Apostle touched, when he commanded the Corinthians to put the incestuous man out of their company. A little leuen (saith he) corrupteth the whole lumpe of dough. And he foresaw herein so great danger, that he forbad him euen from all fellowship. If any brother (saith he) among you be named either a whoremonger, or a couetous man,or a worshipper of Idols,or a drunkard,or an euill speaker,with such a one I graunt you not leaue so much as to eat. The third end is, that they themselues confounded with shame may begin to repent of their filthinesse. So it is profitable for them also to haue their owne wickednesse chastised, that with feeling of the rod they may bee awaked, which otherwise by tender bearing with them would haue become more obstinate. The same thing doth the Apostle meane when he saith thus: If any doe not obey our doctrine,marke him, and keepe no company with him,that he may be ashamed. Againe in another place,when he writeth that he hath deliuered the Corinthian to satan, that his spirit may be saued in the day of the Lord: that is (as I expound it) that he went into a damnation for a time,that he might be saued for euer. But he therefore saith that he deliuereth him to satan, because the diuell is out of the Church as Christ is in the Church. For whereas some do refer it to a certaine vexing of the flesh, I thinke that to be very vncertaine.

The manner of Ecclesiasticall correction.

6 When these ends be set foorth, now it remaineth to see how the Church executeth this part of discipline which consisteth in iurisdiction. First let vs keepe the diuision aboue set,that of sins some be publike, and other some be priuate or more secret. Publike are those that haue not only one or two witnesses, but are committed openly and with the offence of the whole Church. Secret I call those, not which are altogether hidden from men, as are the sinnes of hypocrites, for those come not into the iudgement of the Church, but those of the meane kind which are not without witnesses, and yet are not publike. The first kind requireth not those degrees which Christ rehearseth: but when any such thing appeareth,the Church ought to doe her duty in calling the sinner and correcting him according to the proportion of the offence. In the second kind according to the rule of Christ, they come not to the Church till there be also obstinacie added. When it is once come to knowledge,than is that other diuision to be noted between wicked doings and defaults. For in lighter sinnes there is not to be vsed so great seuerity, but chastisement of words sufficeth,and the same gentle and fatherly,which may not harden nor confound the sinner,but bring him home to himselfe, that he may more reioice than bee sory that he was corrected. But it is meet that hainous offenses be chastised with sharper remedy. For it is not enough,if he that that by doing a wicked deed of euill example hath grieuously offended the Church, should be chastised only with words, but hee ought for a time to bee depriued of the communion of the supper, till he haue giuen assurance of his repentance. For against the Corinthian Paul vseth not only rebuking of words, but driueth him out of the Church, and blameth the Corinthians that they had so long borne him. The old and better Church kept this order, when rightfull gouernment flourished. For if any man had done any wicked deed whereupon was growen offence, first he was commanded to abstaine from partaking of the holy supper, then both to humble himselfe before God, and to testifie his repentance before the Church. There were also certaine solemne vsages, which were enioined to them that had fallen, to be tokens of their repentance. When they had so done, that the Church was satisfied, then by laying on of hands he was receiued into fauour. Which receiuing is oftentimes called of Cyprian peace, who also briefly describeth this vsage. They doe penance (saith he) in a certaine full time: then they come to confession, and by the laying on of hands of the Bishop and the Clergie they receiue power to come to the communion. Howbeit the Bishop and his Clergie had so the ruling of reconciliation, that they did therewithall require the consent of the people: as he sheweth in another place.

1.Cor.5.5.

Epi.2.lib.1. Liber.3.Epi. 14.& 16.

7 From this discipline there was no man exempted, that euen the Princes together with the common people did submit themselues to beare it. And rightfully, sith it was euident that it was the discipline of Christ, to whom it is meet that all scepters and crownes of Kings be submitted. So when Theodosius was depriued by Ambrose of power to come to the communion because of the slaughter committed at Thessalonica, hee threw downe all the roiall ornament wherewith he was clothed: hee openly in the Church bewailed his sinne, which had crept vpon him by fraud of other men: he craued pardon with groning and teares. For great Kings ought not to thinke this to bee any dishonor to them, if they humbly throw downe themselues before Christ the King of Kings, neither ought it to displease them that they be iudged by the Church. For sith in their court they heare nothing else but meere flatteries, it is more then necessary for them to bee rebuked of the Lord by the mouth of the Priests. But rather they ought to wish, that the Priests should not spare them, that the Lord may spare them. In this place I omit to speake by whom this iurisdiction is to be exercised, because it is spoken of in another place. This only I adde that that is the lawfull manner of proceeding in excommunicating a man which Paul sheweth: if the Elders do it not only by themselues, but with the Church knowing and allowing it: that is, in such sort that the multitude of the people may not gouerne the doing, but may marke it as a witnesse and a keeper that nothing should bee done of a few by wilfull affection. But the whole manner of doing, beside the calling vpon the name of God, ought to haue such grauity, as may resemble the presence of Christ, that it may be vndoubted that he there sitteth for ruler of his owne iudgement.

All men subiect vnto Church discipline, which to execute belongeth vnto some, but vnto all to see executed not as doers but as beholders of that which is done.

Ambros. in lib.1.Epi.3. in orat. habita in fun. Theodosii.

8 But this ought not to be passed ouer, that such seuerity becommeth the Church as is ioined with the spirit of mildnesse. For we must alway diligently beware (as Paul teacheth) that he which is punished be not swallowed vp of sorrow: for so should of a remedy be made a destruction. But out of the end may better bee gathered a rule of moderation. For whereas this is required in excommunication that the sinner should bee brought to repentance, and euill examples taken away, lest either the name of Christ should be euill spoken of, or other men bee prouoked to follow them: if we shall haue an eie to these things, we shall be able easily to iudge how far seuerity ought to proceed, and where it ought to end. Therefore when the sinner giueth a testimony of his repentance, and doth by his testimony as much as in him lieth, blot out the offence: he is not to be enforced any further: but if he be enforced, rigorousnesse doth then exceed measure. In which behalfe the immeasurable seuerity of the old fathers cannot be excused, which both disagreed from the prescribed order of the Lord, and also was maruellously dangerous. For when they charged a sinner with solemne penance, and depriuation from the holy communion sometime for seauen yeeres, sometime foure yeeres, sometime three yeeres, sometime for their whole life: what other thing could follow thereof but either great hypocrisie or most great desperation? Likewise wise whereas no man that had fallen the second time was admitted to second penance but was cast out of the Church euen to the end of his life: that was neither profitable nor agreeing to reason. Therefore whosoeuer shall weigh the matter with sound iudgement, shall herein perceiue want of their discretion. Howbeit I doe here rather disallow the publike manner, than accuse all them that vsed it, whereas it is certaine that many of them misliked it: but they did therefore suffer it, because they could not amend it. Truly, Cyprian declareth, how much beside his owne will he was so rigorous. Our patience (saith he) and easines and gentlenesse is ready to them that come. I wish all to returne into the Church: I wish all our fellow soldiers to be inclosed within the tents of Christ and in the houses of God the father. I forgiue all things, I dissemble many things, for zeale and desire to gather brotherhood together, I examine not with full iudgement those things that are committed against God, in pardoning defaults more than I ought, I am my selfe almost in default, I doe with ready and full loue imbrace them that returne with repentance, confessing their sinnes with humble and plaine satisfaction. Chrysostome is somewhat harder, and yet he saith thus: If God bee so kind, why will his Priest seeme so rigorous? Moreouer wee know what gentlenesse Augustine vsed toward the Donatists, insomuch that he sticked not to receiue into Bishopricke those that had returned from schisme, euen immediatly after their repentance. But because a contrary order had growen in force, they were compelled to leaue their owne iudgement to follow it.

Ad Cor. Epi. 31. Liber. 1.

9 But as this mildnesse is required in the whole body of the Church, that it should punish them that are fallen, mercifully and not to the extremity of rigour, but rather according to the precept of Paul, should confirme charity toward them: so euery priuate man for himselfe ought to temper himselfe to this mercifulnesse and gentlenesse. Therefore it is not our part to wipe out of the number of the elect such as are driuen out of the Church, or to despaire of them as though they were already lost. We may indeed iudge them strangers from the Church, and therefore strangers from Christ: but that is only during the time that they abide in diuorce. But if then also they shew a greater resemblance of stubbornesse than of gentlenesse, yet let vs commit them to the iudgement of the Lord, hoping better of them in time to come than we see in time present, and let vs not therefore cease to pray to God for them, and (to comprehend all in one word) let vs not condemne to death the person it selfe, which is in the hand and iudgement of God alone, but let vs rather weigh by the law of the Lord of what sort euery mans works be. Which rule while we follow, we rather stand to the iudgement of God than pronounce our owne. Let vs not take to our selues more liberty in iudging, vnlesse we will bind the power of God within bounds, and appoint a law to his mercy, at whose pleasure when he thinketh it good, very euill men are turned into very good, strangers are graffed and forraines are chosen into the Church. And this the Lord doth, thereby to mocke out the opinion of men, and rebate their rashnesse: which if it be not restrained, presumeth to take to it selfe power of iudging more than it ought.

Men seuered from the Church by excommunication not rashly to be condemned in the iudgement of men.

10 For whereas Christ promiseth that that shall be bound in heauen, which they that be his shall bind in earth, he limiteth the power of binding, to the censure of the Church: by which they that are excommunicate, are not throwen into euerlasting ruine and damnation: but hearing their liues and manners to be condemned, they are also certified of their owne euerlasting condemnation, vnlesse they repent. For excommunication herein differeth from accursing, that accursing taking away all pardon doth condemne a man and adiudge him to eternall destruction: excommunication rather reuengeth and punisheth manners. And though the same doe also punish the man, yet it doth so punish him, that in forewarning him of his damnation to com, it doth call him backe to saluation. If that be obtained, reconciliation and restoring to the communion is ready. But accursing is either very sildome or neuer in vse. Therefore, although Ecclesiasticall discipline, permitteth not to liue familiarly, or to haue friendly conuersation with them that be excommunicate: yet we ought to endeuour by such meanes as we may, that returning to amendment, they may returne to the fellowship and vnity of the Church: as the Apostle also teacheth. Doe not (saith he)

he) thinke them as enemies, but correct them as brethren. Vnleſſe this gentleſſe bee kept as well priuatly as in common, there is danger leſt from diſcipline we foorthwith fall to butchery. 2. Theſ 3. 15.

11 This alſo is principally required to the moderation of diſcipline, which Auguſtine intreateth of in diſputing againſt the Donatiſts: that neither priuate men, if they ſee faults not diligently enough corrected by the Councell of Elders, ſhould therefore by and by depart from the Church: nor the Paſtors themſelues, if they cannot according to their hearts deſire purge all things that neede amendment, ſhould therefore throw away the miniſtery, or with vnwonted rigorouſneſſe trouble the whole Church. For it is moſt true which he writeth: that he is free and diſcharged from curſe, whoſoeuer he be that either by rebuking amendeth what he can: or what hee cannot amend, excludeth, ſauing the bond of peace: or what hee cannot exclude, ſauing the bond of peace, he doth diſallow with equity, and beare with ſtedfaſtneſſe. He rendereth a reaſon thereof in another place: becauſe all godly order and manner of Eccleſiaſticall diſcipline ought alway to haue reſpect vnto the vnity of the ſpirit in the bond of peace: which the Apoſtle commandeth to be kept by our bearing one with another, and when it is not kept, the medicine of puniſhment beginneth to bee not only ſuperfluous, but alſo hurtfull, and therefore ceaſeth to be a medicine. He that (ſaith he) doth diligently thinke vpon theſe things doth neither in preſeruing of vnity neglect the ſeuerity of diſcipline, nor doth with immeaſurableneſſe of correction breake the bond of fellowſhip. He granteth indeed that not only the Paſtors ought to trauaile to this point, that there may remaine no fault in the Church, but alſo that euery man ought to his power to endeauor thereunto: and he plainly declareth that hee which neglecteth to moniſh, rebuke, and correct the euill, although he doe not fauor them, nor ſinne with them, yet is guilty before the Lord. But if he be in ſuch degree, that he may alſo ſeuer them from the partaking of Sacraments, and doth it not, now hee ſinneth not by anothers euill, but by his owne. Only he willeth it to be done, with vſing of diſcretion, which the Lord alſo requireth, leſt while the tares be in rooting out, the corne be hurt. Hereupon he gathereth out of Cyprian, Let a man therefore mercifully correct what he can: and what he cannot, let him patiently ſuffer, and with loue grone and lament it.

Mat. 13. 29.

12 This he ſaith becauſe of the preciſeneſſe of the Donatiſts, who when they ſaw faults in the Churches which the Biſhops did indeed rebuke with words, but not puniſh with excommunication, (becauſe they thought that they could this way nothing preuaile) did ſharply inueigh againſt the Biſhops as betrayers of diſcipline, and did with an vngodly ſchiſme deuide themſelues from the flocke of Chriſt. As the Anabaptiſts do at this day, which when they acknowledge no congregation to be of Chriſt, vnleſſe it doe in euery point ſhine with Angelike perfection, doe vnder pretence of their zeale ouerthrow all edification. Such (ſaith Auguſtine) not for hatred of other mens wickednеſſes, but for deſire to maintaine their owne contentions, doe couet either wholly to draw away, or at leſt to deuide the weake people ſnared with the boaſting of their name: they ſwelling with pride, mad with ſtubborneſſe, traiterous with ſlanders, troubleſome with ſeditions, leſt it ſhould openly appeare that they want the light of truth, doe pretend a ſhadow of rigorous ſeuerity: and thoſe things which in Scripture are commanded to bee done with moderate healing for correcting of the faults of brethren, preſeruing the ſincereneſſe of loue, and keeping the vnity of peace, they abuſe to ſacriledge of ſchiſme and occaſion of cutting off. So doth ſatan transforme himſelfe into an Angell of light, when by occaſion as it were of iuſt ſeuerity hee perſwadeth vnmercifull cruelty, coueting nothing elſe but to corrupt and breake the bond of peace and vnity: which bond remaining faſt among Chriſtians, all his forces are made weake to hurt, his traps of treaſons are broken, and his councels of ouerthrowing doe vaniſh away.

The preciſeneſſe of Donatiſts making ſacrilegious ſchiſme in the Church, vnder pretence of a religious deſire to haue vice ſeuerely puniſhed, wherein the B. ſhops being leſſe ſalt and fiery then ſome did wiſh were accounted betrayers of diſcipline.

2. Cor. 11. 13.

13 This one thing he chiefly commendeth, that if the infection of ſinne haue entred into the whole multitude, then the ſeuere mercy of liuely diſcipline is neceſſary. For (ſaith he) the deuiſes of ſeparation are vaine, and hurtfull and full of ſacrilege, becauſe they are vngodly and proud, and doe more trouble the weake good ones, than they they amend the ſtout euill ones. And that which he there teacheth other, he himſelfe alſo faithfully followed. For writing to Aurelius Biſhop of Carthage, he complaineth that drunkenneſſe which is ſo ſore condemned in Scriptures, doth range vnpuniſhed in Affrica: and he aduiſeth him, that aſſembling a Councell of Biſhops he ſhould prouide remedy for it. He addeth by and by after, Theſe things (as I thinke) are taken away not roughly, not hardly, not after an imperious manner, but more by teaching than by commanding, more by admoniſhing than by threatning. For ſo muſt we deale with a multitude of ſinners, but ſeuerity is to be exerciſed vpon the ſinnes of few. Yet he doth not meane that Biſhops ſhould therefore winke or hold their peace at publike faults, becauſe they cannot ſeuerely puniſh them: as he himſelfe afterward expounderh it: But he willeth that the meaſure of correction bee ſo tempered, that ſo far as may be, it may rather bring health than deſtruction to the body. And therefore at length he concludeth thus: Wherefore both this commandement of the Apoſtle is in no wiſe to be neglected, to ſeuer the euill, when it may bee done without perill of breaking of peace: and this is alſo to be kept, that bearing one with another, we ſhould endeauour to preſerue vnity of the ſpirit, in the bond of peace.

Lib. 3. contr. Parm. cap. 2.

1. Cor. 5. 7.

Ephe. 4. 2.

The vſe of exhortation to publike exerciſes of humility in the Church.

14 The part that remaineth of diſcipline, which properly is not contained in the power of keies, ſtandeth in this, that according to the neceſſity of times the Paſtors ſhould exhort the people either to faſting, or to common ſupplications, or to other exerciſes of humility, repentance, and faith, of which things there is neither time, nor meaſure, nor forme preſcribed by the word of God, but is left in the iudgement of the Church. The obſeruing of this part alſo, as it is profitable, ſo hath alway been vſed of the old Church euen from the very Apoſtles. Howbeit the Apoſtles themſelues were not the firſt authors of them, but they tooke example out of the Law and the Prophets. For wee ſee that there ſo oft as any waighty buſineſſe hapned, the people were called together, common praiers enioined, and faſting commanded. Therefore the Apoſtles followed that which both was not new to the people of God, and they foreſaw that it ſhould be profitable. Likewiſe is to be thought of other exerciſes, wherewith the people may either be ſtirred vp to their duty, or bee kept in awe and obedience. There are examples each where in holy hiſtories, which we need not to gather together. In ſumme this is to be holden, that ſo oft as there hapneth any controuerſie of religion, which muſt be determined either by a Synod or by eccleſiaſticall iudgement, ſo oft as they be about chooſing of a miniſter, finally, ſo oft as any hard matter or of great importance is in doing: againe, when there appeare tokens of the wrath of God, as peſtilence, and war, and famine: this is a holy ordinance and profitable for all ages that the Paſtors ſhould exhort the people to common faſting, and to extraordinary praier. If any man do not allow the teſtimonies which may be alleadged out of the old Teſtament, as though they were not meet for the Chriſtian Church, it is certaine that the Apoſtles alſo did the ſame. Howbeit of praiers I thinke there will ſcarcely any bee found that will moue any queſtion. Therefore let vs ſay ſomewhat of faſting: becauſe many when they vnderſtand not what profit it hath, do iudge it not ſo neceſſary: ſome alſo do vtterly refuſe it as ſuperfluous: and when the vſe of it is not well knowen, it is eaſie to ſlide into ſuperſtition.

A triple vſe of faſting.

15 Holy and true faſting hath three ends. For we vſe it, either to make leane and ſubdue the fleſh, that it ſhould not wax wanton, or that we may bee better diſpoſed to praiers and holy meditations, or that it ſhould be a teſtimony of our humbling before God, when we be willing to confeſſe our guiltineſſe before him. The firſt end hath not ſo often place in common faſting, becauſe all men haue not like eſtate of bodie, nor like health: therefore it rather agreeth with priuate faſting. The ſecond end is common to both, for as well the whole Church as euery one of the faithful hath need of ſuch preparation to praier. The third alſo is likewiſe common. For it ſhall ſometime befall that God ſhall ſtrike ſome nation with war, or peſtilence, or with ſome calamity. In ſuch a common ſcourge the whole people muſt accuſe themſelues, and openly confeſſe their owne guiltineſſe. But if the hand of the Lord doe ſtrike any priuate man, he ought to doe the ſame, either alone, or with his owne family. That ſtandeth chiefly in the affection of the mind. But when the mind is affected as it ought to be, it is scarcely possible, but that it will breake out into outward testifying: and then chiefly if it turne to common edifying, that altogether in openly confessing their sinne should yeeld praise of righteousnesse to God, and euery one mutually exhort other with their example.

16 Wherefore fasting, as it is a signe of humbling, hath more often vse publikely, than among priuate men, howsoeuer it be common, as is already said. Therefore as touching the discipline whereof we now intreat: so oft as we must make supplication to God for any great matter, it were expedient to command fasting together with praier. So when the Antiochians laid hands vpon Paul and Barnabas, that they might the better commend to God their ministerie which was of so great importance, they ioined fasting with praier: So both they afterward, when they made ministers ouer Churches, were wont to pray with fasting. In this kind of fasting they had regard to none other thing, but that they might be made freer and more vncombred to pray. Verily this we find by experience, that when the belly is full, the mind is not so lifted vp to God, that it can both with hearty and feruent affection bee carried to praier, and continue in it. So is that to be vnderstood which Luke rehearseth of Anna, that shee serued the Lord in fastings and praiers. For hee doth not set the worshipping of God in fasting: but signifieth that the holy woman did after that manner exercise her selfe to continuance of praier. Such was the fasting of Nehemias when he did with earnestly bent zeale pray to God for the deliuerance of his people. For this cause Paul saith that the faithfull doe well, if they abstaine for a time from their wedding bed, that they may the more freely apply praier and fasting. Where ioining fasting to praier in stead of a helpe, he putteth vs in mind that it is of no value but so far as it is referred to this end. Againe, when in the same place he giueth a rule to married folkes, that they should mutually render good will one to another, it is plaine that he doth not speake of daily praiers, but of such praiers as require a more earnest intentiuenesse.

17 Againe, if either pestilence, or famine, or war begin to range abroad, or if any calamity otherwise seeme to hang ouer any country and people: then also it is the duty of Pastors to exhort the Church to fasting, that they may humbly beseech the Lord to turne away his wrath. For hee giueth warning that hee is prepared and in a manner armed to reuenge, when he maketh any danger to appeare. Therefore as accused men in time past with long hanging beard, with vncombed haire, with black array, were wont humbly to abase themselues, to procure the mercy of the iudge: so when we are accused before the iudgement seat of God, it behoooueth both for his glory, and for common edification, and also is profitable and healthfull for vs, that wee should in piteous array craue to escape his seuerity. And that this was vsed among the people of Israell, it is easie to gather by the words of Ioel. For when he commandeth a trumpet to be sounded, the congregation to be gathered together, fasting to be appointed, and the rest that follow: he speaketh of things receiued in common custome. He had a little before said, that examination is appointed of the wicked deeds of the people, and had declared that the day of iudgement was now at hand: and had summoned them being accused to plead their cause: then hee crieth out that they should haste to sackcloth and ashes, to weeping and fasting: that is, that they should also with outward testifyings throw themselues downe before the Lord. Sackcloth and ashes peraduenture did more agree with those times: but there is no doubt that the calling together, and weeping, and fasting and such like doe likewise pertaine also to our age, so oft as the state of our things doth so require. For sith it is a holy exercise, both to humble men, and to confesse humility, why should we lesse vse it than the old people did in like necessity? We read that not only the people of Israell, which were informed and instructed by the word of God, but also the Niniuites which had no doctrine, but the preaching of Ionas, fasted in token of sorrow. What cause is there therefore why wee should not doe the same? But it is an outward ceremony, which was with the rest ended in Christ. Yea rather euen at this day it is, as it alway hath been, a very good helpe to the faithfull, and a profitable admonition, to stir vp themselues, that they should not with too great carelesnesse and sluggishnesse more and more prouoke God when they they are chastised with his scourges. Therefore Christ when he excuseth his Apostles for that they fast not, doth not say that fasting is abrogate: but hee appointeth it to times of calamity, and ioineth it with mourning. The time shall come (saith he) when the bridegroom shall be taken away from them.

Matth 9.15. Luke 5.34.

In fasting, time, quality, and quantity of meats to be respected.

18 But that there should be no error in the name, let vs define what fasting is. For we do not here vnderstand by it only abstinence and sparing in meat and drinke, but a certaine other thing. The life of the godly ought indeed to be tempered with honest sparing and sobriety, that so neere as is possible it may in the whole course thereof beare a certaine resemblance of fasting. But beside this there is another fasting for a time, when we withdraw any thing of our wonted diet, either for one day or for a certaine time, and doe charge our selues with a straighter and seuerer abstinence in diet than ordinary. This consisteth in three things, in time, in quality of meats, and in smalnesse of quantity. I meane by time, that we should vse those doings fasting, for which fasting is ordained. As for example, if a man fast for common praier: that he come empty vnto it. Quality standeth in this, that all daintinesse should be absent, and being content with common and baser meats, we should not stir vp appetite with delicates. The rule of quantity is in this, that we eat more sparingly and lesse than we bee wont, only for necessity, and not also for pleasure.

Superstition and the opinion of merit in fasting to be taken heed of.

19 But we must alway principally beware, that no superstition creepe vpon vs, as it hath heretofore hapned to the great hurt of the Church. For it were much better that there were no vse at all of fasting than that it should bee diligently kept, and in the meane time be corrupted with false and hurtfull opinions, whereunto the world sometime falleth, vnlesse the Pastors do with great faithfulnesse and wisedome preuent it. The first point therefore is, that they should alway inforce that which Ioel teacheth, that they should cut their harts and not their garments: that is, that they should admonish the people, that God doth not greatly esteeme fasting of it selfe, vnlesse there be inward affection of the heart, a true misliking of sinne and of himselfe, true humbling, and true sorrow through the feare of God: yea that fasting is profitable for no other cause, but for that it is ioined to these as an inferior helpe. For God abhorreth nothing more than when men in setting signes and an outward shew in stead of innocencie of heart, doe labour with false colour to deceiue themselues. Therefore Esay most sharply mueigheth against this hypocrisie, that the Iewes thought they had satisfied God, when they had only fasted, howsoeuer they did nourish vngodlinesse and vncleane thoughts in their heart. Is it (saith he) such a fasting which the Lord requireth? and so forth as followeth. Therefore the hypocriticall fasting is not only an vnprofitable and superfluous wearying, but also a great abomination. Another euill neere vnto this is chiefly to be taken heed of, that it bee not taken for a meritorious worke, or a forme of worshipping God. For sith it is a thing of it selfe indifferent, and hath no value but by reason of those ends which it ought to haue respect vnto, it is a most hurtfull superstition, to confound it with the works commanded of God and necessary of themselues without other respect. Such was in old time the dotage of the Manichees: whom when Augustine confuteth, he doth plainly enough teach, that fasting is to be iudged by no other ends than those which I haue spoken of, and is no otherwise allowed of God, vnlesse it be referred to the same. The third error is indeed not so vngodly, yet it is perillous: to require the keeping of it more precisely and rigorously as it were one of the chiefe duties, and so to aduance it with immeasurable praises, that men should thinke they haue done some excellent thing when they haue fasted. In which behalfe I dare not altogether excuse the old fathers, but that they haue sowed some seeds of superstition, and giuen occasion to the tyranny which hath risen since. There are found indeed sometimes in them sound and wise sentences, of fasting, but afterward we now and then meet with immeasurable praises of fasting which aduance it among the chiefe vertues.

Lib. 2. de mor. Manic. cap. 13 & li. 20. cont. Fau.

The fast of Lent superstitious if it be vsed vnder colour

20 And at that time the superstitious obseruing of Lent was ech where growen in vse: because both the common people thought that they therin did some notable seruice to God, and the Pastors did commend it for a holy following of Christ: whereas it is plaine, that Christ did not fast to prescribe an example to other, but that in so begin-beginning the preaching of the Gospell, he might in very deede prooue that it was not a doctrine of men, but descended from heauen. And it is maruellous, that so grosse an errour, which is confuted with so many and so euident reasons, could creepe into men of so sharp iudgement. For Christ did not fast oft (which he must needs haue done if he would haue set foorth a law of yeerely fasting) but onely once when he prepared himselfe to the publishing of the Gospell. And he fasted not after the manner of men, as it was meete that he should haue done if he would haue prouoked men to follow him: but rather he sheweth an example, whereby he may rather draw men to wonder at him than stirre them vp to follow him. Finally there is none other cause of this fasting, than of that which Moses fasted when he receiued the law at the hand of the Lord. For sith that miracle was shewed in Moses to stablish the authoritie of the Lawe, it ought not to haue beene omitted in Christ, least the Gospell should seeme to giue place to the law. But since that time it neuer came in any mans minde vnder colour of following of Moses to require such a forme of fasting in the people of Israel. Neither did any of the holy Prophets and Fathers follow it, when yet they had mind and zeale enough to godly exercises. For, that which is said of Helias, that he passed fortie daies without meate and drinke, tended to no other end but that the people should know that he was stirred vp to be a restorer of the law from which almost all Israel had departed. Therefore it was a meere wrongfull zeale and full of superstition, that they did set foorth fasting with the title and colour of following of Christ. Howbeit in the manner of fasting there was then great diuersitie, as Cassiodorus rehearseth out of Socrates in the ninth booke of his historie. For the Romanes (saith he) had but three weekes, but in these three there was a continuall fasting, except on the Sunday, and Saturday. The Slauonians and Grecians had six weekes: other had seuen: but their fasting was by diuided times. And they disagreed no lesse in difference of meates. Some did eate nothing but bread and water: some added herbes: some did not forbeare fish and fowles: some had no difference in meates. Of this diuersitie Augustine also maketh mention in the latter Epistle to Ianuarie.

21 Then followed worse times, and to the preposterous zeale of the people was added both ignorance and rudenesse of the Bishops, and a lust to beare rule, and a tyrannous rigor. There were made wicked lawes, which straine consciences with pernicious bonds. The eating of flesh was forbidden, as though it defiled a man. There were added opinions full of sacriledge one vpon an other, till they came to the bottome of all errors. And that no peruersenesse should be omitted, they began with a most fond pretence of abstinence to mocke with God. For in the most exquisite daintinesse of fare is sought the praise of fasting: no delicates doe then suffice, there is neuer greater plentie, or diuersitie or sweetnesse of meates. In such and so gorgious preparation they thinke that they serue God rightly. I speake not how they neuer more fowlly glut themselues, than when they would be counted most holie men. Briefely, they count it the greatest worshipping of God to abstaine from flesh, and (these excepted) to flow full of all kinde of dainties. On the other side they thinke this the extremest vngodlinesse, and such as scarcely may be recompensed with death, if a man taste neuer so little a peece of bacon or vnsauorie flesh with browne bread. Hieremie telleth, that euen in his time were some that with such follies did mocke with God: which because they would not eate oyle, caused most daintie meates from euery place to be brought them: yea to oppresse nature by violence, they abstained from drinking of water, but caused sweete and costly suppings to be made for them, which they did not drinke out of a cup, but out of a shell. Which fault was then in a few, at this day it is a common fault among all rich men that they fast to no other end but that they may banket more sumptuously and daintily. But I will not waste many words in a matter not doubtfull. Onely this I say, that both in fasting and in all other parts of discipline, the Papists so haue nothing right, nothing pure, nothing well framed and orderly, whereby they may haue any occasion to be proud, as though there were any thing remaining among them worthie of praise.

The grosse abuse of fasting.

Ad Nepotian.

22 There followeth another part of discipline, which peculiarly belongeth to the Cleargie. That is contained in the Canons which the old Bishops haue made

The ancient Canons & orders of the Church for

ouer themselues and their order. As these bee: that no Clearke should giue himselfe to hunting, to dicing, nor to banketting: that none should occupie vsurie, or marchandise: that none should bee present at wanton dancings: and such other ordinances. There were also added penalties whereby the authoritie of the Canons was stablished, that none should breake them vnpunished. For this end to euery Bishop was committed the gouernment of his owne Cleargie, that they should rule their Clearks according to the Canons, and hold them in their duetie. For this end were ordained yearely ouerseeings and Synods, that if any were negligent in his duetie, hee should be admonished: if any had offended, hee should be punished according to the measure of his offence. The Bishops also themselues had yearely their prouinciall Synodes, and in the olde time yearely two Synodes, by which they were iudged if they had done any thing beside their duety. For if any Bishop were too hard or violent against his Cleargie, they might appeale to those Synodes, although there were but one that complained. The seuerest punishment was that he which had offended should bee remooued from his office, and for a time be depriued of the communion. And because that same was a continuall order, they neuer vsed to dismisse any Synode, but that they appointed a place and time for the next Synode. For, to gather a generall Councell, pertained to the Emperor onely, as all the olde summonings of Councels do testifie. So long as this seueritie flourished, the Clearkes did require in word no more of the people, than themselues did performe in example and deed. Yea they were much more rigorous to themselues than to the people, And verily so it is meete, that the people should be ruled with a gentler and looser discipline, as I may so terme it: but the Clearkes should vse sharper iudgements among themselues, and should lesse beare with themselues, than with other men. How all this is growen out of vse, it is no neede to rehearse, when at this day nothing can bee imagined more vnbridled and dissolute than the Cleargie, and they are broken foorth to so great licentiousnesse, that the whole world crieth out of it. That all antiquitie should not seeme to be vtterly buried among them, I grant indeed that they doe with certaine shadowes deceiue the eies of the simple: but those are such as come no neerer to the ancient manners, than the counterfaiting of ane Ape approacheth to that which men doe by reason and aduise. There is a notable place in Xenophon, where he teacheth how sowly the Persians had swarued from the ordinances of their Elders, and were fallen from the rigorous kinde of life, to softnesse and daintinesse, that yet they couered this shame, saying that they diligently kept the ancient vsages. For when in the time of Cyrus sobrietie and temperance so farre flourished that men needed not to weepe, yea and it was accounted a shame: with posteritie this continued a religious obseruation, that no man should draw snot out of his nostrils, but it was lawfull to sucke it vp, and feede within euen till they had rotten the stinking humours which they had gathered by gluttonous eating. So by the old order it is vnlawfull to bring wine-pots to the boord: but to swill in wine that they neede to be carried away drunken is tolerable. It was ordained to eate but once in a day: this these good successors haue not abrogate, but they gaue leaue to continue their surfettings from mid-day to mid-night. The custome was that men should make an end of their daies iourney fasting. But it was at libertie and vsedly the custome for auoyding of wearinesse, to shorten their iourney to two houres. Whensoeuer the Papists shall pretend their bastard rules, to shew themselues to be like to the holy Fathers: this example shall sufficiently reprooue their fond counterfaiting, that no Painter can more liuely expresse it.

The Cleargie forbidden mariage in the church of Rome.

23 In one thing they be too rigorous and vnentreatable, that they giue not leaue to Priests to marrie. But how great libertie there is among them to vse whoredome vnpunished, is not needfull to be spoken: and bearing them bolde vpon their stinking vnmaried life, they haue hardened themselues to all wicked doings: But this forbidding doth plainely shew, how pestilent all their traditions are, for as much as it hath not onely spoiled the Church of good and fit Pastors, but also hath brought in a horrible sinke of mischieses, and throwen many soules into the gulfe of desperation. Truely whereas mariage hath beene forbidden to Priestes, that same hath beene done by wicked tyrannie, not onely against the word of God, but also against all equitie equitie. First to forbid that which the Lord had left at libertie, was by no meanes lawfull for men. Againe, that God hath expresly prouided by his word that this libertie should not be broken, is so euident that it needeth no long demonstration. I speake not how Paul in many places willeth a Bishop to bee the husband of one wife. But what could be more vehemently spoken, than where he pronounceth by the holy Ghost, that there shall be in the last times wicked men that shall forbid mariage: and he calleth them not onely deceiuers, but Diuels? This therefore is a Prophecie, this is a holy Oracle of the holy Ghost, wherwith he willed to arme the Church aforehand against dangers, that the forbidding of mariage is the doctrine of Diuels. But they thinke that they haue gaily escaped when they wrest this sentence to Montanus, the Tatians, Encratites, and other old Heretikes. They onely (say they) condemned mariage: but we doe not condemne it, but debarre the Cleargie from it, for whom we thinke it not to bee conuenient. As though albeit this Prophecie was first fulfilled in those aforesaid men, it might not also bee applied to these: or as though this childish fond subtletie were worth the hearing, that they say that they forbid it not, because they forbid it not to all. For it is all one as if a Tyrant would affirme that it is not an vniust law, with vniustice whereof one part alone of the Citie is oppressed.

1. Tim. 3. 2. Tit. 1. 6. 1. Tim. 4. 3.

24 They obiect, that the Priest doth by some marke differ from the people. As though the Lord did not also foresee this, with what ornaments Priests ought to excell. So they accuse the Apostle of troubling the order and confounding the comelinesse of the Church, which when hee portrayed out the absolute forme of a good Bishop durst set mariage among the other gifts which hee required in him. I know how they expound this, namely that none is to bee chosen that hath had a second wife. And I grant that this is not a new exposition: but that it is a false exposition, appeareth by the text it selfe, because he by and by after setteth out, of what qualities the wiues of Bishops and Deacons ought to be. Paul reckoneth mariage among the vertues of a Bishop, these men teach that it is an intollerable fault in the order of the Clergie. And, on Gods name, not contented with this generall dispraise they call it in their Canons, vncleannesse and defiling of the flesh. Let euery man thinke with himselfe out of what worke-shop these things be come: Christ vouchsafeth so to honor mariage that he willeth it to be an image of his holy conioyning with the Church. What could be spoken more honorably to set out the dignitie of Mariage? With what face therefore shall that be called vncleane or defiled wherein shineth a likenesse of the spirituall grace of Christ.

Mariage in the Cleargie allowed by the Apostle, by the Church of Rome not onely disallowed, but disgraced by vnseemely speech.

Sirici, ad Episco. Hispa.

25 But now when their forbidding so euidently fighteth with the word of God, yet they finde in the Scriptures wherewith to defend it. The Leuiticall Priestes were bound to lie asunder from their wiues, so oft as it came to their turnes to minister that they might handle the holy things pure and vndefiled. Therefore it were very vncomly, that our holy things, sith they bee both much more noble and daily, should be handeled of maried men. As though there were all one person of the Minister of the Gospell, as was of the Leuiticall Priesthood. For they, as figures, represented Christ, which being the Mediator of God and men should with most absolute pureneſse reconcile the Father vnto vs. But when sinners could not in euery behalfe expresse the figure of his holinesse, yet that they might with certaine grosse draughts yeeld a shadow of him, they were commanded to purifie themselues beyond the manner of men, when they came to the Sanctuarie: namely because they then properly figured Christ, for that as pacifiers to reconcile the people to God they appeared at the Tabernacle the image of the heauenly iudgement seate. Forasmuch as the Pastors of the Church doe not beare this person at this day, therefore they are vainely compared with them. Wherefore the Apostle doth without exception boldly pronounce, that mariage is honorable among all men, but that for whoremongers, and adulterers abideth the iudgement of God. And the Apostles themselues did with their owne example approoue that mariage is not vnmeete for the holinesse of any office be it neuer so excellent. For Paul witnesseth that they did not onely keepe wiues, but also carried them about with them.

The separation of Leuites from their wiues when they ministred in the Temple, prooueth but slenderly the forbidding of mariage in the Cleargie vnder the Gospell.

Heb. 13. 4.

26 Againe it was a maruellous shamelesnesse that they durst set out this comeli-neſſe of chaſtitie for a neceſſarie thing, to the great reproch of the old Church: which when it abounded with ſingular learning of God, yet excelled more in holineſſe. For if they paſſe not vpon the Apoſtles, (as they are wont ſometime ſtoutly to deſpiſe them) what I beſeech you will they doe to all the old Fathers, whom it is certaine to haue not onely ſuffered but alſo allowed mariage in the order of Biſhops? They forſooth did nouriſh a filthy prophaning of holy things, for as much as ſo the myſteries of the Lord were not rightly reuerenced among them. It was mooued indeed in the Nycene Synode to haue vnmaried life commanded: as there alway want not ſome ſuperſtitious men, which doe euer inuent ſome new thing, to bring themſelues in admiration. But what was decreed? The ſentence of Paphnutius was aſſented to, which pronounced that a mans lying with his owne wife is chaſtitie. Therefore mariage remained holy among them: neither did it turne them to any ſhame nor was thought to ſpot the miniſterie.

Hiſt tripart. Lib. 2. cap. 14.

How ſingle life grew to be ſo much aduanced in the Cleargie.

27 Then followed times, in which too ſuperſtitious obſeruation of ſingle life grew in force. Heereupon came thoſe often and vnmeaſurable aduanced praiſes of Virginitie, ſo that ſcarcely any other vertue was thought among the people to bee compared with it. And although mariage was not condemned for vncleane, yet the dignitie thereof was ſo deminiſhed, and the holineſſe of it obſcured, that hee ſeemed not to aſpire with a courage ſtrong enough to perfection, that did not refraine himſelfe from it. Hereupon came thoſe Canons whereby it was firſt forbidden that they which were come to the degree of Prieſthood ſhould not contract mariage: then, that none ſhould bee taken into that order but vnmaried men, or ſuch as did forſake mariage together with their wiues. Theſe things, becauſe they ſeemed to procure reuerence to Prieſthood, were (I grant) euen from antiquitie receiued with great well liking. But if the aduerſaries obiect antiquitie againſt me, firſt I anſwere that this libertie remained both vnder the Apoſtles and in certaine ages after them, that Biſhops might bee maried: that the Apoſtles themſelues, and other Paſtors of great authoritie which ſucceeded in their places, vſed the ſame without ſticking at it. The example of that ancienter Church ought worthily to bee of great weight with vs, than that wee ſhould thinke that to bee either vnlawfull or vncomelie for vs which was then with praiſe receiued and vſed. Secondly I ſay that that age which for immeaſurable affection to Virginitie began to bee partiall againſt mariage, did not ſo lay vpon Prieſts the law of vnmaried life, as though it were a thing neceſſarie of it ſelfe, but becauſe they preferred vnmaried men aboue the maried. Finally I anſwere that they did not ſo require it that they did with force and neceſſitie conſtraine them to continence which were not fit to keepe it. For when they puniſhed whoredomes with moſt ſeuere lawes, of them that contracted mariage they decreed no more but that they ſhould giue ouer the execution of their office.

Two Items to the Church of Rome concerning the ſingle life which they require in the order of Prieſts.

28 Therefore whenſoeuer the defenders of this new tyrannie ſhall ſeeke the pretence of antiquitie to defend their vnmaried life: ſo oft wee ſhall anſwere them with requiring them, that they reſtore the old chaſtneſſe in their Prieſts: that they remoue adulterers and whoremongers: that they ſuffer not thoſe in whom they ſuffer not honeſt and chaſte vſe of mariage bed, to run vnpuniſhed into all kinde of luſt: that they call againe the diſcontinued diſcipline, whereby all wantonneſſes may be reſtrained: that they deliuer the Church from this ſo wicked filthineſſe, wherewith it hath beene long deformed. When they haue granted this, then they muſt againe be put in minde that they boaſt not that thing for neceſſarie, which being of it ſelfe at libertie hangeth vpon the profit of the Church. Yet I ſay not this for that I thinke that in any condition place is to be giuen to thoſe Canons which lay the bond of vnmaried life vpon the order of Prieſts: but that the wiſer ſort may vnderſtand with what face our enemies doe ſlander holy mariage in Prieſts by obiecting the name of antiquitie. As touching the Fathers, whoſe writings remaine, euen they when they ſpeake of their owne iudgement, except Hierome, did not with ſo great ſpitefulneſſe deface the honeſtie of mariage. We ſhall be content with one commendation of Chryſoſtome: becauſe he, ſith he was a principall eſteemer of Virginitie, cannot be thought to haue beene more lauiſh than other in commendation of mariage. Thus hee ſaith. The firſt degree of chaſtitie is pure virginitie: the second is faithfull marriage. Therefore the second kinde of virginitie is the chaste loue of matrimonie.

THE THIRTEENTH CHAPTER.

Of Vowes, by rash promising whereof, each man hath miserably entangled himselfe.

The hurt that hath come to the Church by vowes.

IT is verily a thing to be lamented, that the Church, for whom libertie was purchased with the inestimable price of the blood of Christ, hath beene so oppressed with cruell tyrannie, and almost ouerwhelmed with a huge heape of traditions: but in the meane time euery mans priuate madnesse sheweth, that not without most iust cause there hath beene so much permitted of God to Satan and his ministers. For they thought it not enough, neglecting the commandement of Christ, to beare any burdens whatsoeurr were laid vpon them by false teachers, vnlesse they did also each man procure to himselfe seuerall burdens of his owne, and so with digging pits for themselues should drowne themselues deeper. This was done while they striued in deuising of vowes, by which there might bee added to the common bondes a greater and straighter binding. Sith therefore we haue taught, that by their boldnesse which haue borne rule vnder the title of Pastors in the Church, the worshipping of God hath beene corrupted, when they snared silly consciences with their vniust lawes: heere it shall not bee out of season to adioyne another euill which is neere vnto it, that it may appeare that the world according to the peruersenesse of his owne disposition, hath alway, with such stops as it could, put away the helps whereby it should haue beene brought to God. Now, that it may the better appeare that very grieuous hurt hath beene brought in by vowes, let the Readers keepe in minde the principles aboue set. For first wee haue taught, that whatsoeuer may be required to the framing of life godlily and holily, is comprehended in the law. Againe, we haue taught that the Lord, that he might thereby the better call vs away from deuising of new workes, hath enclosed the whole praise of righteousnesse in the simple obedience of his will. If these things bee true, it is easie to iudge that all faigned worshippings, which wee inuent to our selues to deserue the fauour of God, are not acceptable to him how much soeuer they please vs. And truely the Lord himselfe in many places doth not onely openly refuse them, but also grieuously abhorre them. Heereupon ariseth a doubt of those vowes which are made beside the expresse word of God, what account is to bee made of them, whether they may rightly bee vowed of Christian men, and how farre they binde them. For the same which among men is called a promise, in respect of God is called a Vow. But to men wee promise those things either which wee thinke will bee pleasant vnto them, or which wee owe of dutie. Therefore there ought to bee a much greater heedfull obseruation in Vowes which are directed to God himselfe, with whom wee ought to deale more earnestly. In this point superstition hath in all ages maruellously ranged, so that men without iudgement, without choise, did by and by vow vnto God whatsoeuer came in their minde, or into their mouth. Heereupon came those follies, yea monstrous absurdities of Vowes among the Heathen, wherewith they did too insolently mocke with their Gods. And I would to God that Christians also had not followed this their boldnesse. It ought not indeed to haue been so: but we see that in certaine ages past nothing hath been more vsuall than this wickednesse, that the people each where despising the Law of God did wholy burne with madde greedinesse to vow whatsoeuer had pleased them in their dreame. I will not hatefully enforce, nor particularly rehearse how hainously and how many waies herein men haue offended: But I thought good to say this by the way, that it may the better appeare that we doe not moue question of a needlesse matter, when wee intreat of Vowes.

The first thing to be respected in vowes, is the

2 Now if we will not erre in iudging which Vowes bee lawfull, and which bee wrongfull, it behoueth to weigh three things: that is to say, who it is to whom the Vow is made: who we be that make the Vow: last of all, with what minde we vow. The first point hath respect to this, that we should thinke that wee haue to doe with perſon of God to whom they are made.

Coloſ.22.3.

God, whom our obedience ſo much delighteth, that he pronounceth all wil-worſhips to be accurſed, how gay and glorious ſoeuer they be in the eies of men. If all voluntarie worſhips, which we our ſelues deuiſe without commandement, be abhominable to God, it followeth that no worſhip can be acceptable to him but that which is allowed by his word. Therefore let vs not take ſo great libertie to our ſelues that wee dare vow to God that which hath no teſtimonie how it is eſteemed of him. For whereas that which Paul teacheth, that it is ſinne whatſoeuer is done without Faith, extendeth to all doings, then verily it chiefly hath place, when thou directeſt thy thought the ſtraight way to God. But if we fall and erre euen in the ſmalleſt things, (as Paul there diſputeth of the difference of meates) where certaintie of faith ſhineth not before vs: how much more modeſtie is to be vſed, when wee attempt a thing of greateſt weight? For nothing ought to bee more earneſt vnto vs than the duties of Religion. Let this therefore bee the firſt conſideration in vowes, that wee neuer come to the vowing of any thing, but that conſcience haue firſt certainely determined that it attempteth nothing rathly. But it ſhall then be free from danger of raſhneſſe, when it ſhall haue God going before it, and as it were enforming it by his word what is good and profitable to be done.

The ſecond thing to be regarded in the making of a vow, is the meaſure of their ſtrength that make it.

3 In the other thing which we haue ſaid to be here to be conſidered, this is contained, that wee meaſure our owne ſtrengthes, that we haue an eye to our vocation, that wee neglect not the benefit of libertie which God hath giuen vs. For hee that voweth that which either is not in his power, or diſagreeth with his vocation, is raſh: and he that deſpiſeth the bountifulneſſe of God, whereby he is appointed Lord of all things, is vnthankfull. When I ſay thus, I doe not meane that any thing is ſo ſet in our owne hand, that ſtanding vpon confidence of our owne ſtrength we may promiſe the ſame to God. For it was moſt truely decreed in the Councell at Arauſium, that nothing is rightly vowed to God but that which we haue receiued of his hand, foraſmuch as all things that are offered him are his meere gifts. But ſith ſome things are by Gods goodneſſe giuen vs, and other ſome things by his equitie denied vs: let euery man (as Paul commandeth) haue reſpect to the meaſure of grace giuen vnto him. Therefore I doe heere meane nothing elſe, but that vowes muſt be tempered to that meaſure which the Lord preſcribeth there in his giuing: leaſt if thou attempt further than hee permitteth, thou throw thy ſelfe downe headlong with taking too much vpon thee. As for example. When thoſe murtherers, of whom mention is made in

Rom.12.3. 1.Cor.12.11.

Act.23.12.

Luke, vowed that they would taſte of no meate till Paul were ſlaine: although the deuiſe had not beene wicked, yet the raſhneſſe it ſelfe was not to be ſuffered, that they made the life and death of a man ſubiect to their power. So Iephthe ſuffered puniſhment for his folly, when with headlong heate hee conceiued an vnaduiſed vow. In which kinde vnmaried life hath the chiefe place of madde boldneſſe. For ſacrificing Prieſts, Monks, and Nunnes, forgetting their owne weakneſſe, thinke themſelues able to keepe vnmaried life. But by what Oracle are they taught that they ſhall haue chaſtitie throughout all their life, to the very end whereof they vow it? They heare the word of God concerning the vniuerſall ſtate of men,

Gen.2.18.

It is not good for man to be alone. They vnderſtand, and would to God that they did not feele, that ſinne remaining in vs is not without moſt ſharpe prickes. With what confidence dare they ſhake off that generall calling for all their life long: whereas the gift of continencie is oftener granted for a certaine time as opportunitie requireth? In ſuch ſtubbornneſſe let them not looke for God to bee their helper: but let them rather remember that which is ſaid. Thou ſhalt not tempt the Lord thy God. And this is to tempt God, to endeuour againſt the nature put in vs by him, and to deſpiſe his preſent gifts as though they nothing belonged vnto vs. Which they not onely doe: but alſo mariage it ſelfe, which God thought it not againſt his Maieſtie to inſtitute, which hee hath pronounced honorable in all men, which Chriſt our Lord hath ſanctified with his preſence, which hee vouchſafed to honor with his firſt Miracle, they dare call defiling, onely to aduance with maruellous commendations a certaine vnmaried life of what ſort ſoeuer it be. As though they themſelues did not ſhew a cleare example in their life, that vnmaried ſtate is one thing, and virginity an another: which their life yet they moſt ſhameleſly call Angelike, doing herein verily too great iniury to the Angels of God, to whom they compare whoremongers, adulterers, and ſomewhat elſe much worſe and filthier. And truly here need no arguments when they are openly confuted by the thing it ſelfe. For we plainely ſee, with how horrible paines the Lord doeth commonly take vengeance of ſuch arrogancie, and contempt of his gifts by too much truſt in themſelues. I ſpare for ſhame to ſpeake of the more ſecret faults, of which euen this that is already perceiued is too much. It is out of controuerſie that we ought to vow nothing, that may hinder vs from ſeruing of our vocation. As if a houſholder ſhould vow, that he will leaue his wife and his children and take other charges in hand: or if he that is fit to beare office, when he is choſe, do vow that he wil be a priuate man. But what is meant by this, that we ſaid that our liberty ſhould not be deſpiſed, hath ſome difficulty if it be not declared. Therefore thus in few words I expound it. Sith God hath made vs Lords of all things, and hath ſo made them ſubiect vnto vs that we ſhould vſe them all for our commodity: there is no cauſe why we ſhould hope that it ſhall be an acceptable worke to God if we yeeld our ſelues into bondage to the outward things which ought to be a helpe vnto vs. I ſay this for this purpoſe, becauſe many doe heereby ſeeke praiſe of humility, if they ſnare themſelues with many obſeruations, from which God not without cauſe willed vs to be free and diſcharged. Therefore if we will eſcape this danger, let vs alway remember that we ought not to depart from that order which the Lord hath ordained in the Chriſtian Church.

Heb.13.4.

Iohn 2.2.

4 Now I come to that which I did ſet in the third place: that it is much materiall with what minde thou makeſt a vow, if thou wilt haue it allowed of God. For ſith the Lord regardeth the heart, not the outward ſhew, it commeth to paſſe that the ſelfe ſame thing, by changing the purpoſe of the minde, doth ſometime pleaſe him and is acceptable vnto him, and ſometime highly diſpleaſeth him. If thou ſo vow the abſtaining from wine, as though there were any holineſſe in it, thou art ſuperſtitious: if thou haue reſpect to any other end which is not euill, no man can diſallow it. But in my iudgement there be foure ends, to which our vowes ſhall be rightly directed: of which for teachings ſake I refer two to the time paſt, and the other two to the time to come. To the time paſt belong thoſe vowes, whereby we doe either teſtifie our thankefulneſſe to God for beneſites receiued: or to craue the turning away of his wrath, we our ſelues doe puniſh our ſelues for the offences that we haue committed. Let vs call the firſt ſort, if you will, the excerciſes of thankfulneſſe, the other of repentance. Of the firſt kind we haue an example in the tithes which Iacob vowed, if the Lord did bring him home ſafe out of baniſhment into his Country, Againe in the old Sacrifices of the peace offerings, which godly Kings and Captaines, when they tooke in hand righteous war, did vow that they would pay if they had obtained the victory, or at leaſt when they were oppreſſed with any great diſtreſſe, if the Lord had deliuered them. So are all thoſe places in the Pſalmes to be vnderſtood which ſpeake of vowes. Such vowes at this day may alſo be in vſe among vs, ſo oft as the Lord hath deliuered vs either out of any calamity, or from a hard ſickeneſſe, or from any other danger. For it is then not againſt the duty of a godly man, to conſecrate to God his vowed oblation, as a ſolemne token of his reknowledging, leaſt he ſhould ſeeme vnthankefull toward his goodneſſe. Of what ſort the ſecond kinde is, it ſhall ſuffice to ſhew with one onely familiar example. If any by the vice of gluttony be fallen into any offence, nothing withſtandeth but that to chaſtice his intemperanee he may for a time forſake all daintie meates, and may doe the ſame with a vow adioyned, that he may bind himſelfe with the ſtraiter bond. Yet I doe not ſo make a perpetuall law to them that haue likewiſe offended: but I ſhew what is lawfull for them to doe, which ſhall thinke ſuch a vow profitable for themſelues. I doe therefore ſo make ſuch a vow lawfull, that in the meane time I leaue it at liberty.

The third thing to be reſpected in a vow, is the minde of the vower which in vowes that haue relation to the time paſt hath two ends to be directed by.

Gen. 28. 20. Pſa. 22. 27. & 56. 12. & 116. 14. 18.

5 The vowes that are applied to the time to come, partly (as we haue already ſaid) doe tend to this end that we may be made the warier: and partly that as it were be certaine ſpurres we may be pricked forward to our duty. Some man ſeeth himſelfe to be ſo inclined to ſome certaine vice, that in a thing which otherwiſe is not euell he cannot temper

Two other ends of vowes which haue relation to the time to come temper himselfe from falling foorthwith into an euill: he shall doe nothing inconueniently if he doe for a time by vow cut off from himselfe the vse of that thing. As if a man know that this or that apparell of body is perillous vnto him, and yet entised with desire he earnestly couet it, what can he doe better, than if in putting a bridle vpon himselfe, that is in charging himselfe with necessity of abstaining from it, he deliuer himselfe from all doubting? Likewise if a man be forgetfull or slow to necessary duties of godlinesse, why may he not by taking a vow vpon him both awake his memory and shake off his slothfulnesse? In both I grant that there is a forme of childish schooling: but euen in this that they are helpes of weakenesse, they are not without profite vsed of the raw and vnperfect. Therefore we shall say that those vowes are lawfull which haue respect to one of these ends, specially in outward things, if they both be vpholden with the allowance of God, and doe agree with our vocation, and be measured by the power of grace giuen vs of God.

How to iudge of vowes as well those which generally all men or particularly some doe make vnto God.

6 Now also it is not hard to gather what is generally to be thought of all vowes. There is one common vow of all the faithfull, which being made in baptisme we doe confirme and as it were stablish by Catechisme and receiuing of the Supper. For the Sacraments are as Charters, by which the Lord deliuereth to vs his mercie and thereby euerlasting life, and we againe on our behalfes doe promise him obedience. But this is the forme or, verily the summe of the vow, that forsaking Sathan we yeeld our selues into seruice to God, to obey his holy commandements, and not to follow the peruerse desires of our flesh. It ought not to be doubted but that this vow, sith it hath testimony of the Scripture, yea and is required of all the children of God, is both holy and profitable to saluation. And it maketh not to the contrary, that no man in this life performeth the perfect obedience of the law which God requireth of vs. For sith this forme of couenanting is compriſed within the couenant of grace, vnder which is contained both forgiuenesse of sinnes and the Spirit of sanctification: the promise which we there make is ioyned both with beseeching of pardon and with craning of helpe. In iudging of particular vowes, it is necessary to keepe in minde the three former rules, whereby we may safely weigh of what sort euery vow is. Neither yet thinke, that I so commend the very same vowe. which I affirme to be holy, that I would haue them to be daily. For though I dare teach no certaine rule of the number or time: yet if any man obey my councell, he shall take vpon him none but sober and for a time. For if thou oftentimes breake foorth into making of many vowes, all religiousnesse will with very continuance grow out of estimation with thee, and thou shalt come to a bending readinesse to fall into superstition. If thou bind thy selfe with a perpetual vow, either for great paine and tediousnesse thou shalt vndo it, or being wearied with long continuance thou shalt at one time or other be bold to breake it.

Superstitious vowes of fastings, pilgrimages and such like.

7 Now also it is plaine with how great superstition in this behalfe the world hath in certaine ages past beene possessed. One man vowed that he would abstaine from wine: as though abstaining from wine were of it selfe a worship acceptable to God. An other bound himselfe to fasting, another to abstaining from flesh for certaine daies, in which he had with vaine opinion fained to be a singular holinesse aboue the rest. And some things also were vowed much more childish, although not of children. For this was holden for a great wisedome, to take vpon them vowed pilgrimages to holier places, and sometime either to goe all their iourney on foot, or with their body halfe naked, that by their wearinesse the more merit might be gotten. These and such other, with incredible zeale whereof the world hath a while swelled, if they be examined by those rules, which we haue aboue set, shall be found not onely vaine and trifling, but full of manifest vngodlinesse. For howsoeuer the flesh iudge, God abhorreth nothing more than fained worshippings. There are beside this those pernitious and damned opinions, that hypocrites when they haue such trifles thinke that they haue gotten no small righteousnesse: they repose the summe of godlinesse in outward obseruations, they despise all other that are lesse carefull of such things.

Monkish vowes and the end why Monkeries were first instituted.

8 To reckon vp all the particular formes is nothing to purpose. But for as much as the Monkish vowes are had in greater reuerence, because they seeme allowed by the common iudgement of the Church: of those it is good to speake briefely. First least any any ſhould by preſcription of long time defend Monkery, ſuch as it is at this day, it is to be noted that in old time there was in Monaſteries a far other order of liuing. Such as were diſpoſed to exerciſe themſelues to greateſt ſeuerity and patience, went thither. For what manner of diſcipline they ſay that the Lacedemonians had vnder the lawes of Lycurgus, ſuch was at that time among the Monkes, yea and much more rigorous. They ſlept vpon the ground: their drinke was water: their meat was bread, hearbes, and rootes: their chiefe dainties were in oyle and cicches. They abſtained from all delicat diet and trimming of body. Theſe things might ſeeme aboue truth, if they were not written by witneſſes that ſaw and prooued them, as Gregory Nazianzene, Baſile, and Chryſoſtome. But with ſuch introductions they prepared themſelues to great offices. For, that the Colledges of Monkes were then as it were the ſeed-plots of the order of Miniſters of the Church, both theſe whom we haue now named are a proofe plaine enough (for they were all brought vp in Monaſteries and from thence called to the office of Biſhops) and alſo many other ſingular and excellent men in their time. And Auguſtine ſheweth that this was alſo vſed in his time, that Monaſteries yeelded Clearkes to the Church. For he ſpeaketh thus to the Monkes of the Iſle of Caprarea: But you breathren we exhort in the Lord, that ye keepe your purpoſe and continue to the end: and if at any time our mother the Church ſhall require your trauile doe ye neither with greedy pride take it vpon you, nor with flattering ſlothfulneſſe refuſe it: but with a meeke hart obey to God. Neither prefer ye your owne quiet leaſure aboue the neceſſities of the Church: to whom if no good men would haue miniſtred in her trauaile, you ſhould not haue found how you ſhould haue beene borne. He ſpeaketh there of the Miniſtery, by which the faithfull are ſpiritually borne againe. Alſo to Aurelius. There is both occaſion of falling giuen to themſelues, and moſt haynous wrong done to the order of the Clergy, if forſakers of Monaſteries be choſen to the ſoldierſhip of the Clergy: when euen of thoſe that remaine in the Monaſtery, we vſe to take into the Clergy none but the moſt approoued and beſt. Vnleſſe perhaps as the common people ſay, he is an euill piper but a good fidler: ſo it ſhall alſo be ieſtingly ſaid of vs, he is an euill Monke, but a good Clearke. It is too much to be lamented, if we liſt vp Monkes into ſuch a ruinous pride, and thinke Clearkes worthy of ſo great reproach, whereas ſometime euen a good Monke maketh not a good Clearke, if he haue ſufficient continence and yet want neceſſary learning. By theſe places it appeareth, that godly men were wont with the diſcipline of Monkes to prepare themſelues to the gouernment of the Church, that they might the fitter and better inſtructed, take ſo great an office vpon them. Not that they all attained to this end, or yet tended toward it, when for the moſt part they were vnlearned men: but ſuch were choſen out as were meet for it.

Epi. 76.

The orders and exerciſes of ancient Monkes.

9 But chiefely in two places he painteth out vnto vs the forme of the old Monkerie. In the booke of the manners of the Catholike Church, where he ſetteth the holineſſe of that profeſſion againſt the ſclanders of the Manichees: and in another booke which he entituled of the worke of Monks, where he inueigheth againſt certain degendred Monkes, which began to corrupt that order. I will here ſo gather a ſumme of thoſe things which he ſaith, that ſo neere as I may I will vſe his owne words. Deſpiſing (ſaith he) the intiſements of this world, gathered into one moſt chaſt and holy life, they ſpend their time together, liuing in praiers, readings, and diſputations not ſwelling with pride, not troubleſome with ſtubbornneſſe, not wanne with enuiouſneſſe. None poſſeſſeth any thing of his owne, none is burdenous to any man. They get by working with their hands thoſe things wherewith both their body may be fed, and their minde may not be hindred from God. Their worke they deliuer to them whom they call Deanes. Thoſe Deanes diſpoſing all things with great carefulneſſe make account thereof to one whom they call Father. Theſe Fathers not onely moſt holy in manners, but alſo moſt excellent in godly doctrine, high in all things, doe with no pride prouide for them whom they call children, with great authority of them in commanding, and great willingneſſe of the other in obeying: They come together at the very laſt time of the day, euery one from his dwelling, while they be yet faſting, to heare that Father, and there meete together to euery one of theſe fathers at the laſt three thouſand men, (he ſpeaketh chiefely of Egypt, and of the Eaſt) then they refreſh their their body, ſo much as ſufficeth for life and healthfulneſſe, euery man reſtraining his deſire, not to take largely euen of thoſe things that they haue preſent very ſpare and vile. So they doe not onely abſtaine from fleſh and wine, ſo much that they may be able to tame their luſtes, but from ſuch things which doe ſo much more greedily prouoke appetite of the belly and throat, how much they ſeeme to other, to be as it were cleaner, by colour whereof the filthy deſire of exquiſite meates, which is not in fleſh, is wont to be fondly and fowly defended. Whatſoeuer remaineth aboue neceſſary ſoode (as there remaineth oftentimes much of the workes of their hands and pinching of their fare) is with greater care diſtributed to the poore, than it was gotten by them that diſtribute it. For they doe in no wiſe trauaile that they may haue abundance of theſe things, but they by all meanes endeauour that that which they haue abounding may not remaine with them. Afterward when he hath rehearſed the hardneſſe, whereof he himſelfe had Ibid. cap. 33. Tit. 1.15. ſeene examples both at Millaine, and elſe where: among theſe things (ſaith he) no man is inforced to hard things which he cannot beare: no man is charged with that which he refuſeth: neither is he therefore condemned of the reſt, becauſe he confeſſeth himſelfe to want ſtrength in following of them: for they remember how much charity is commended: they remember that all things are cleane to the cleane. Therefore all their diligence watcheth, not to the refuſing of kindes of meat as vncleane, but to tame luſt, and to retaine the loue of breathren. They remember, meat for the belly, and the belly for meates, &c. Yet many ſtrong doe abſtaine for the weakes ſake. Many

2. Cor. 6. 13. of them haue no neede to doe thus: but becauſe it pleaſeth them to ſuſtaine themſelues with baſer diet and nothing ſumptuous. Therefore they themſelues, which being in health doe forbeare, if conſideration of their health compell, when they are ſicke doe take without any feare. Many drinke no wine, and yet they thinke not themſelues defiled with it: for they moſt gently cauſe it to be giuen to the fainter, and to them that cannot get the health of their bodie without it: and ſome which fooliſhly refuſe it, they doe brotherly admoniſh that they be not with vaine ſuperſtition ſooner made weaker than holier. So they diligently exerciſe godlineſſe: but they know that the exerciſing of the body pertaineth but to a ſhort time. Charitie is chiefly kept: to charity the diet, to charity the ſpeech, to charity the apparell, to charity the countenance is fitted. They meet and conſpire into one charitie. To offend it, is accounted as hainous as to offend God. If any reſiſt charity, he is caſt out and ſhunned. If any offend charity, he is not ſuffered to abide one day. For as much as in theſe words, as in a painted table, that holy man ſeemeth to haue ſet out what maner of life Monkery was in olde time, although they were ſomewhat long, yet I was content to interlace them heere: becauſe I ſaw that I ſhould haue beene ſomewhat longer if I had gathered the ſame things out of diuers, how much ſoeuer I ſtudied for briefeneſſe.

The difference betweene Popiſh Monkes, and the Monks of the old Church. 10 But my purpoſe heere is not to goe through this whole matter, but only by the way to point out, not onely what manner of Monkes the old Church had, but what manner of thing the profeſſion of Monkes was at that time: ſo as the ſound witted readers may iudge by the compariſon, what face they haue which alleadge antiquity to maintaine the preſent Monkerie. Auguſtine when hee depainteth vnto vs a holy and true Monkerie, would haue to be abſent all rigorous exacting of thoſe things which by the word of the Lord are left vs at liberty. But there is nothing that is at this day more ſeuerely required. For they count it a miſchiefe that can neuer be purged, if any doe neuer ſo little ſwarue from the preſcribed rule in colour or faſhion of garment, in kinde of meate, or in other trifling and cold ceremonies. Auguſtine ſtoutly maintaineth, that it is not lawfull for Monkes to liue idle vpon other mens. He denieth that De opere. monach. there was euer in his time any ſuch example of a well ordered Monaſtery. Our men ſet the chiefe part of their holineſſe in idleneſſe. For if you take idleneſſe from them, where ſhall be that contemplatiue life whereby they boaſt that they excell all other men, and approch neere vnto Angels? Finally Auguſtine requireth ſuch a Monkery, as ſhould be nothing but an exerciſe and helpe to the duties of godlineſſe which are commended to all Chriſtians. What? when he maketh charity the chiefe, yea and almoſt onely rule thereof doe we thinke that he praiſeth a conſpiring, whereby a few men being bound together, together, are seuered from the whole body of the Church? But rather he willeth them with their example to giue light to other to keepe the vnity of the Church. In both these points there is so much difference of the Monkery at this present, that a man can scarcely finde any thing more vnlike, I will not say contrary. For our Monkes not contented with that godlinesse, to the study of which alone, Christ commandeth them that are his, continually to apply, doe imagine I wot not what new godlinesse, by meditation whereof they may be perfecter than other.

Onely Monkish life stearmed perfection in the Papists.

18 If they deny this, I would know of them why they vouchsafe to giue to their order alone the title of perfection, and take away the same from all the callings of God. Neither am I ignorant of that sophisticall solution, that it is not therefore so called because it doth contain perfection in it, but because it is the best of all other to attaine perfection. When they are disposed to boast themselues before the people, when to snare vnskilfull and vnware yoong men, when to maintaine their priuiledges, when to aduance their owne dignity to the reproach of other, then they boast that they are in the state of perfection. When they are so nigh driuen that they cannot defend this vaine arrogancie, then they flee to this starting hole, that they haue not yet attained perfection, but that they are in the same state wherein they aspire vnto it aboue other. In the meane time that admiration among the people remaineth, as though the onely Monkish life were Angelike, perfect, and clensed from all fault. By this pretence they make most gainfull markets, but that same moderation lieth buried in a few bookes. Who doth not see that this is an intollerable mockery? But let vs so reason with them, as though they gaue no more to their profession than to call it a state of attaining perfection. Verily in giuing it this name, they doe as by a speciall marke make it differing from other kinds of life. And who can abide this, that so great honour should be giuen away to an ordinance that is no where by any one syllable allowed: and that by the same all other callings of God, which are by his owne holy mouth not onely commanded, but also commended with notable titles of praise, are by the same accounted vnworthy? And how great wrong (I beseech you) is done to God, when I wot not what new found thing is preferred aboue all the kinde of life ordained by himselfe, and praised by his owne testimonie?

Popish Monkes proud and vainglorious as if their obedience did extend vnto farther perfection than the law of Christ doth require to be in all men.

12 But goe to, let them say that it is a slander which I haue before said, that they are not contented with the rule prescribed of God. Yet though I hold my peace, they themselues doe more than enough accuse themselues? For they openly teach, that they take vpon them more burden than Christ laid vpon his: because forsooth they promise to keepe the Councels of the Gospell concerning louing their enemies, not coueting of reuenge, nor swearing, &c. To which things Christians are not generally bound. Heerein what antiquity will they shew foorth against vs? This neuer came in any of the old fathers minds. They all crie out with one voice that there was no one little word at all vttered of Christ, which ought not necessarily to be obeied. And without any doubting they doe each where teach, that these verie same things by name were commandements, which these good expositors triflingly say, that Christ did but counsell. But forasmuch as we haue before taught that this is a most pestilent errour, let it suffice heere to haue briefly noted that the Monkery which is at this day, is grounded vpon the same opinion, which all the godly ought worthily to abhor: which is, that there should be imagined some perfecter rule of life, than this common rule which is giuen of God to the whole Church. Whatsoeuer is builded vpon this foundation, cannot be but abhominable.

Mat. 5. 14.

Nothing lesse then Monkish perfection meant by Christ in saying, if thou wilt be perfect, sell all and giue.

13 But they bring another proofe of their perfection, which they thinke to be most strong for them. For the Lord said to the yoong man that asked him of the perfection of righteousnesse, If thou wilt be perfect, sell all that thou hast and giue it to the poore. Whether they do so or no, I do not yet dispute: but grant them that for this present. Therfore they boast that they be made perfect by forsaking all theirs. If the sum of perfection stand in this, what meaneth Paul when he teacheth that he which hath distributed all his goods to the poore, vnlesse he haue charity, is nothing? What manet of perfection is this, which if charity bee absent, is brought with man to nothing? Heere they must needs answer, that this is the chiefest in deed, but not the onely worke

Matt. 19. 21.

Col.3.14. worke of perfection. But heere also Paul crieth against them, which stick not to make charitie the bond of perfection, without any such forsaking. If it be certaine that betweene the master and the disciple is no disagreement, and the one of them cleerely denieth the perfection of man to consist in this that he should forsake all his goods, and againe affirmeth, that perfection is without it: we must see how that saying of Christ is to be taken, If thou wilt be perfect, sell all that thou hast. Now, it shall be no darke sense, if we weigh (which we ought alway to marke in all the preachings of Christ) to whom these words be directed. A young man asketh, by what works he shall enter Luk.10.25. into euerlasting life. Christ, because he was asked of works, sendeth him to the law, and rightfully: for it is the way of eternall life, if it be considered in it selfe, and is no otherwise vnable to bring saluation vnto vs but by our owne peruersnesse. By this answere Christ declareth, that he teached no other rule to frame life by, than the same that he had in old time beene taught in the law of the Lord. So did he both giue witnesse to the law of God, that it was the doctrine of perfect righteousnesse: and therewithall did meete with slanders, that he should not seeme by a new rule of life to stirre the people to forsaking of the law. The young man being in deede not of an euill mind, but swelling with vaine confidence, answered that he had from his childhood kept all the commandements of the law. It is most certaine that he was an infinite space distant from that to which he boasteth that he had attained. And if his boasting had beene true, he had wanted nothing to the highest perfection. For we haue before shewed, that the law containeth in it selfe perfect righteousnesse: and the same appeereth hereby that the keeping of it is called the way of eternall saluation. That he might be taught to know how little he had profited in that righteousnesse, which he had too boldly answered that he had fulfilled, it was profitable to shake out a familiar fault of his. When he aboundeth in riches, he had his heart fastened vpon them. Therefore because he felt not this secret wound, Christ launced him. Go (saith he) sell all that thou hast. If he had beene so good a keeper of the law as he thought he was, he would not haue gone away sorrowfull when he heard this word. For who so loueth God with all his heart, whatsoeuer disagreeth with the loue of him, he not onely taketh it for dung, but abhorreth as bringing destruction. Therefore whereas Christ commandeth the couetous rich man to leaue all that he hath, it is all one, as if he should command the ambitious man to forsake all honours, the voluptuous man all delites, and the vnchaste man all the instruments of lust. So consciences that are touched with no feeling of generall admonition, must be called backe to the particular feeling of their owne euill. Therefore they doe in vaine draw this speciall case to generall exposition, as though Christ did set the perfection of a man in forsaking of goods, whereas he meant nothing else by this saying, than to driue the young man that stood too much in his owne conceit, to feele his owne sore, that he might vnderstand that he was yet a great way distant from perfect obedience of the law, which otherwise he did falsely take vpon him. I grant that this place hath beene euill vnderstanded of some of the Fathers, and that thereupon grew this coueting of wilfull pouertie, whereby they onely were thought to be blessed, which forsaking all earthly things, did dedicate themselues naked to Christ. But I trust that all the good and not contentious men will be satisfied with this my exposition, so that they shall no more doubt of the meaning of Christ.

Popish Monks how vnlike to the Monks of old euen in respect of their very order and profession.

14 Howbeit the Fathers thought nothing lesse, than to stablish such perfection, as hath since been framed by the cowled sophisters, thereby to raise vp a double Christianitie. For that doctrine full of sacriledge was not yet borne, which compareth the profession of monkerie to baptisme, yea and openly affirmeth, that it is a forme of second baptisme. Who can doubt that the Fathers with all their hart abhorred this blasphemie? Now as touching that last thing, which Augustine saith to haue been among the old Monks, that is, that they applied themselues wholy to Charitie: what neede I to shew in words that it is most far from this new profession? The thing it selfe speaketh, that all they that goe into Monasteries, depart frō the Church. For why? Do not they seuer themselues from the lawfull fellowship of the faithfull in taking to thēselues a peculiar ministerie & priuate ministration of Sacraments? What is it to dissolue the communion of of the Church, if this be not it? And that I may follow the compariſon which I began to make, and may once conclude it (what haue they in this behalfe like to the old monks? They although they dwelt ſeuerally from other men, yet had not a ſeuerall Church: they did partake of the Sacraments together with other: they appeered at ſolemne aſſemblies: there they were a part of the people. Theſe men in erecting to themſelues a priuate altar, what haue they elſe done but broken the bond of vnitie? For they haue both excommunicate themſelues from the whol body of the church, and haue deſpiſed the ordinarie miniſterie, whereby the Lord willed to haue peace and charitie kept among his. Therefore how many miniſteries there be at this day, I ſay that there be ſo many aſſemblies of ſchiſmatikes, which troubling the order of the Church, are cut off from the lawfull fellowſhip of the faithfull. And that this departing ſhould not be ſecret, they haue giuen to themſelues diuers names of ſects. Nether were they aſhamed to boaſt of that, which Paul doth ſo deteſt that he cannot ſufficiently amplifie the hainouſneſſe of it. Vnleſſe perhaps we thinke that Chriſt was diuided of the Corinthians, when one gloried of one teacher, and another of another: and that now it is done without any iniurie to Chriſt, that in ſteed of Chriſtians wee heare ſome called Benedictines, ſome Franciſcanes, ſome Dominicanes: and that they are ſo called, that they themſelues when they couet to be ſeuerally knowen from the common ſort of Chriſtians, doe with great pride take theſe titles to them for the poſſeſſion of their religion.

15 Theſe differences which I haue hitherto rehearſed betweene the old monkes and the monks of our age, are not differences in maners, but in the profeſſion it ſelfe. Therefore let the Readers remember that I haue rather ſpoken of monkerie than of monks, and haue touched thoſe faults, not which ſticke in the life of a few of them, but which cannot be ſeuered from their very order of liuing it ſelfe. But what difference is in their maners, what need I particularly to declare? This is certaine, that there is no degree of men more defiled with all filthineſſe of vices: no where more are factions, hatreds, affections of parties, ambitions hotter than among them. In deed in a few monaſteries they liue chaſtely, if it be to be called chaſtitie where luſt is ſo farre kept downe that it be not openly ſpoken of: yet a man ſhall ſcarcely finde euerie tenth monaſterie which is not rather a ſtewes than a holy houſe of chaſtitie. But what honeſt ſparing is in their diet? Swine be none otherwiſe fatted in ſties. But leaſt they ſhould complaine that I handle them too vngently, I goe no further. Howbeit in thoſe few things which I haue touched, whoſoeuer knoweth the thing it ſelfe will confeſſe that there is nothing ſpoken accuſer-like. Auguſtine, when according to his teſtimonie monkes excelled in ſo great chaſtitie, yet complaineth that there were many vagabonds, which with euill crafts and deceits wiped ſimple men from their money, which with carying about the reliques of martyrs did vſe filthie marchandizings, yea and inſteed of the reliques of martyrs did ſhew foorth the bones of any other dead men, and which with many ſuch wicked doings ſlandered the order. As he reporteth that he ſaw no better men than them which haue profited in monaſteries, ſo he lamenteth that he had ſeene no worſe men than thoſe that diſprofited in monaſteries. What would he ſay if at this day he ſaw all monaſteries to ſwell, and in a maner to burſt with ſo manie and ſo diſpaired vices? I ſpeake nothing but that which is well knowen to all men. Yet doth not this diſpraiſe pertaine to all without any exception at all. For as there was neuer rule and diſcipline of liuing ſo holily ſtabliſhed in monaſteries, but that there remained ſome drones much vnlike the reſt: ſo I doe not ſay that monks are at this day ſo runne out of kinde from that holy antiquitie, but that they haue yet ſome good men in their flocke. But they lie hidden a few and ſcattered in that huge multitude of naughtie and wicked men: and they are not onely deſpiſed, but alſo lewdly railed at, and ſometime cruelly handled of other, which (as the Mileſians prouerbe is) thinke that there ought to be no place for any honeſt men among them.

A greater difference in the maners of theſe new and thoſe ancient monks.

16 *By this compariſon of the old and preſent monkerie, I truſt I haue brought to paſſe that which I purpoſed, that it may appeere that our cowled men do falſly pretend the example of the firſt Church for defence of their profeſſion: for as much as they no leſſe differ from them than apes from men. In the meane time I ſticke not to declare, that euen in that old forme which Auguſtine commendeth, there is ſomewhat which little pleaſeth me. I grant that they were not ſuperſtitious in exacting the outward exerciſes of rougher diſcipline, but I ſay that there wanted not too much affectation and wrongfull zeale. It was a goodly thing, forſaking their goods, to be without al earthly carefulneſſe: but God more eſteemeth care to rule a houſhold godlily, when a holy houſholder being looſe and free from all couetouſneſſe, ambition, and other deſires of the fleſh, trauelleth to this purpoſe to ſerue God in a certaine vocation. It is a godly thing to play the Philoſopher in wilderneſſe farre from the company of men: but it agreeth not with Chriſtian gentleneſſe as it were for hatred of mankinde to flie into deſert and ſolitarineſſe, and therewithall to forſake thoſe duties which the Lord hath chiefly commanded. Although we grant that there was no other euill in that profeſſion, yet this verily was no ſmall euill, that it brought an vnprofitable and perillous example into the Church.

*Somewhat amiſſe euen in the very profeſſion of monkery which was of old.

The vowes wherewith monks at this day enter into that order: as firſt perpetuall virginitie.

17 Now therefore let vs ſee what maner of vowes they be, wherewith monkes at this day are profeſſed into this goodly order. Firſt, becauſe their minde is to inſtiſtute a new and fained worſhipping to deſerue Gods fauour: I concluded by the things aforeſpoken, that whatſoeuer they vow is abhominable before God. Secondlie, without any regard of Gods calling, without any his allowance, they inuent for them ſuch a kinde of liuing as pleaſeth themſelues. I ſay that it is a raſh, and therefore an vnlawfull enterpriſe: becauſe their conſcience hath nothing whereupon it may vphold it ſelfe before God, and whatſoeuer is not of Faith, is ſinne. Moreouer when they binde themſelues to manie peruerſe and wicked worſhippings, which the monkerie at this day containeth in it, I affirme that they be not conſecrate to God, but to the diuell. For why was it not lawfull for the Prophet to ſay, that the Iſraelites offered their children to diuels and not to God onely for this that they had corrupted the true worſhipping of God with prophane Ceremonies: and ſhall it not be lawfull for vs to ſay the ſame of monks, which with their cowle do put vpon themſelues a ſnare of a thouſand wicked ſuperſtitions? Now what ſorts of vowes are there? They promiſe to God perpetuall virginitie, as though they had bargained with God before, that he ſhould deliuer them from need of marriage. There is no cauſe why they ſhould alleadge, that they doe not make this vow but truſting vpon the grace of God. For ſith he pronounceth that he giueth it not to all men, it is not in vs to conceiue a confidence of a ſpeciall gift. Let them that haue it, vſe it. If at any time they feele themſelues to be troubled of their fleſh, let them flee to this helpe, by whoſe onely power they may reſiſt. If they preuaile not, let them not deſpiſe the remedie that is offred them. For they by the certaine word of God are called to marriage, to whom power of continence is denied. Continence I call, not whereby the bodie is onely kept cleane from whoredome, but whereby the minde keepeth chaſtitie vndefiled. For Paul commandeth not onely outward wantonneſſe, but alſo the burning of the minde, to be auoided. This (ſay they) hath from furtheſt time of memory been obſerued, that they which would dedicate themſelues wholy to the Lord, ſhould bind themſelues to the vow of continence. I grant indeed that this maner hath alſo beene of ancient time receiued: but I doe not grant that that age was ſo free from all fault, that whatſoeuer was then done muſt be taken for a rule. And by little and little this vnappeaſable ſeuerity crept in, that after a vow made there was no roome for repentance. Which is euident by Cyprian. If virgins haue of faith dedicated themſelues to God, let them continue ſhamefaſtly, and chaſtly without any faining. So being ſtrong and ſtedfaſt, let them looke for the reward of virginitie. But if they will not or cannot continue, it is better that they ſhould marrie than with their delights fall into the fire. What reproches would they now ſpare to teare him withall, that would with ſuch equitie temper the vow of continencie? Therefore they are departed farre from that ancient maner, which will not onely admit no moderation or pardon if any be found vnable to performe his vow: but they doe without all ſhame pronounce that he ſinneth more greeuouſly if he remedie the intemperance of the fleſh with taking a wife, than if he defile both his body and ſoule with whoredome.

18 But

18 But they ſtill enforce the matter, and goe about to ſhew that ſuch a vowe was vſed in the Apoſtles time: becauſe Paul ſaith that the widowes which hauing beene once receiued into the publike miniſterie did marrie, denied their firſt faith. But I doe not denie to them, that the widowes, which bound themſelues and their ſeruices to the Church, did therewithall take vpon them the bond of continuall vnmarried life: not becauſe they repoſed any religion therein, as it afterward began to be vſed: but becauſe they could not beare that office but being at their owne libertie and looſe from yoke of marriage. But if, when they had once giuen their faith, they looked backe to new marriages, what was this elſe but to ſhake off the calling of God? Therefore it is no maruell that with ſuch deſires he ſaith that they waxe wanton againſt Chriſt. Afterward to amplifie the matter he ſaith, that they do ſo not performe that which they haue promiſed to the Church, that they doe alſo breake and make voide their firſt faith giuen in Baptiſme: in which this is comprehended, that euery man ſhould anſwer his calling. Vnleſſe perhaps you had rather vnderſtand it thus, that hauing as it were loſt all ſhame, they did from thencefoorth caſt away all care of honeſtie, did giue foorth themſelues to all wantonneſſe and vnchaſtity, and did in licentious and diſſolute life reſemble nothing leſſe than Chriſtian women: which ſenſe I like verie well. Therefore we anſwer, that thoſe widowes which were then receiued to publike miniſterie, did lay vpon themſelues a bond to continue vnmarried: if they afterward married, we eaſily perceiue that that happened to them which Paul ſpeaketh of, that caſting away ſhame they became more wanton then beſeemed Chriſtian women. That ſo they not onely ſinned, in breaking their faith giuen to the Church, but ſwarued from the common law of godly women. But firſt I denie that they did profeſſe vnmarried life for any other reaſon, but becauſe marriage agreed not with that miniſterie which they tooke in hand: and I denie that they did binde themſelues at all to ſingle life, but ſo farre as the neceſſitie of their vocation did beare. Againe I do not grant that they were ſo bound, but that it was then alſo better for them to marrie, than either to be troubled with the prickings of the fleſh, or to fall into any vncleanneſſe. Thirdly I ſay that that age is appointed of Paul, which is commonly out of danger: ſpecially ſith he commandeth them onely to be choſen, which contented with one marriage haue alreadie ſhewed a token of their continencie. And we do for no other reaſon diſallow the vow of vnmarried life, but becauſe it is wrongfully taken for a ſeruice of God, and it is raſhly vowed of them to whom power of continence is not giuen.

The bond of continuall ſingle life otherwiſe than now vndertaken of old.
1. Tim. 5. 12.

19 For how was it lawfull to draw this place of Paul to Nunnes? For there were created deaconiſſes, not to delight God with ſinging and with mumbling not vnderſtanded, and liue the reſt of their time idle: but that they ſhould execute publike miniſtration toward the poore, that they ſhould with all ſtudie, earneſtneſſe and diligence, endeuour themſelues with the duties of charitie. They did not vow vnmarried life, to yeeld thereby any worſhip to God becauſe they abſtained from marriage: but onely becauſe they were thereby the more vncombred to execute their office. Finally they did vow it, neither in the beginning of their youth, nor yet in the middeſt of their flowing age, that they might afterward learne too late by experience into how great a headlong downfall they had throwen themſelues: but when they ſeemed to haue paſſed all danger, then they vowed a no leſſe ſafe than holy vow. But (not to enforce their firſt two points) I ſay it was not lawfull to haue women receiued to vow continencie before the age of threeſcore yeeres: foraſmuch as the Apoſtle admitteth onely women of ſixtie yeeres old, and commandeth the yonger to marrie and bring foorth children. Therefore, neither that releaſe made of twelue yeeres, and then twentie, and afterward of thirtie yeeres can be any way excuſed: and much leſſe is it tolerable, that ſillie maides, before that they can by age know themſelues, or haue any experience of themſelues, are not onely trained by fraude, but conſtrained by force and threatnings to put on thoſe curſed ſnares. I will not tarie vpon confuting the other two vowes. Onely this I ſay: beſides this that they be intangled with not a few ſuperſtitions, (as the matter is now a daies) they ſeeme to be made to this purpoſe, that they which vow them ſhould mocke both God and men. But leaſt we should seeme too maliciously to shake vp euery small parcell, we will be content with that generall confutation which is aboue set.

The way for consciences intangled with rash vowes to winde themselues.

20 What maner of vowes be lawfull and acceptable to God, I thinke is sufficiently declared. Yet because sometime vnskilfull and fearfull consciences, euen when they mislike or disallow any vow, doe neuertheless doubt of the binding, and are greeuously tormented, when they both dread to breake their Faith giuen to God, and on the other side they feare least they should more sinne in keeping it: heere they are to be succoured, that they may winde themselues out of this distresse. But, to take away all doubt at once: I say that all vowes being not lawfull, nor rightly made, as they are nothing worth before God, so ought to be voide to vs. For if in contractes of men those promises onely do binde, in which he with whom we contract, would haue vs bound: it is an absurditie, that we should be driuen to the keeping of those things which God doth not require of vs: specially sith our works are no otherwise right, but when they please God, and when consciences haue this testimony that they please him. For this remaineth certaine, whatsoeuer is not of Faith, is sinne. Whereby Paul meaneth, that the worke which is taken in hand with doubting, is therefore faultie, because Faith is the roote of all good works, by which we are assured that they be acceptable to God. Therefore if it be lawfull for a Christian man to goe about nothing without this assurednesse: if by fault of ignorance they haue taken any thing in hand, why should they not afterward giue it ouer when they be deliuered from errours? Sith vowes vnaduisedly made are such, they doe not onely nothing binde, but are necessarily to be vndone. Yea, if they are not onely nothing esteemed, but also are abhominable in the sight of God, as is aboue shewed? It is needlesse to discourse any longer of a matter not needfull. This one argument seemeth to me to be enough to pacifie godly consciences and deliuer them from all doubt: that whatsoeuer works doe not flow out of the pure fountaine and be not directed to the lawfull end, are refused of God: and so refused that he no lesse forbiddeth vs to goe forward in them, than to begin them. For heereupon followeth, that those vowes which proceed of error and superstition, are both of no value before God, and to be forsaken of vs.

Rom. 14. 23.

Departure frō Monkerie to some other honest kinde of life iustifiable.

21 Moreouer hee that shall know this solution, shall haue wherewith he may defend against the slanders of the wicked, them that depart from Monkerie to some honest kinde of life. They are grieuously accused of breach of Faith and periurie, because they haue broken (as it is commonly thought) the insoluble bond wherewith they were bound to God and to the Church. But I saie that there was no bond where God doth abrogate that which man confirmeth. Moreouer, admitting that they were bound, when they were holden entangled with not knowing of God, and with error: now since they are lightened with the knowledge of the truth, I say that they are therewithall free by the grace of Christ. For if the crosse of Christ haue so great effectualnesse, that it looseth vs from the curse of the law of God, wherewith we were holden bound, how much more shall it deliuer vs from forren bonds, which are nothing but the snaring nets of Satan? To whomsoeuer therefore Christ shineth with the light of his Gospell, it is no doubt that he looseth them from all snares which they had put vpon themselues by superstition. Howbeit they want not yet another defence, if they were not fit to liue vnmarried. For if an impossible vow be a sure destruction of the Soule, whom the Lord would haue saued and not destroied: it followeth that we ought not to continue therein. But how impossible is the vow of continence to them that are not indued with a singular gift, we haue alreadie taught, and experience speaketh it though I hold my peace. For neither is it vnknowen with how great filthinesse almost all monasteries doe swarme. And if any of them seeme honester, and more shamefast than the rest, yet they are not therefore chaste because they suppresse and keepe in the fault of vnchastitie. So verily God doth with horrible examples take vengeance on the boldnesse of men, which forgetting their owne weaknesse, doe against nature couet that which is denied them, and despising the remedies which the Lord had giuen them at hand, doe trust that they can with stubbornesse and obstinacie ouercome the disease of incontinencie. For what else shall we call it but stubbornesse, when one being warned that he needeth marriage, and that the same is giuen him of the Lord for a remedy, doth not only despise it, but also bindeth himselfe with an oath to the despising of it?

THE FOVRTEENTH CHAPTER.

Of Sacraments.

BEside the preaching of the Gospell, another helpe of like sort is in the Sacraments: of which to haue some certaine doctrine taught, is much behoouefull for vs, wherby we may learn both to what end they were ordained, and what is now the vse of them. First it is meet to consider what is a Sacrament. It seemeth to mee that this shall be a plaine and proper definition, if we say that it is an outward signe, wherewith the Lord sealeth to our consciences the promises of his good will toward vs, to sustaine the weaknesse of our faith: and we againe on our behalfes do testifie our godlinesse toward him as well before him and the Angels as before men. We may also with more briefenesse define it otherwise: as to call it a testimony of Gods fauour toward vs confirmed by an outward signe, with a mutuall testifying of our godlinesse toward him. Whethersoeuer you choose of these definitions, it differeth nothing in sense from that definition of Augustine, which teacheth that a Sacrament is a visible signe of a holy thing, or a visible forme of inuisible grace: but it doth better and more certainly expresse the thing it selfe. For whereas in that briefenesse there is some darknesse, wherein many of the vnskilfuller sort are deceiued: I thought good in moe words to giue a fuller sentence, that there should remaine no doubt.

The definition of a Sacrament.

2 For what reason the old writers vsed this word in that sense, it is not hard to see. For so oft as the old translator would render in Latine this Greeke word Mysterion mystery, specially when diuine matters were intreated of, he translated it Sacrament. So to the Ephesians, that he might make knowen vnto vs the Sacrament of his will. Againe, if yet ye haue heard the distribution of the grace of God, which is giuen to me in you, because according to reuelation the Sacrament was made knowen to me. To the Colossians, The mystery which hath been hidden from ages and generations, but now is manifested to his Saints, to whom the Lord would make knowen the riches of this Sacrament, &c. Againe, to Timothy, A great Sacrament of godlinesse: God is openly shewed in the flesh. He would not say a secret, lest he should seeme to say somewhat vnder the greatnesse of the things. Therefore he hath put Sacrament in stead of Secret, but of a holy thing. In that signification it is sometime found among the ecclesiasticall writers. And it is well enough knowen, that those which in Latine are called Sacraments, in Greeke are Mysteries: which expressing of one thing in two seuerall words endeth all the contention. And hereby it came to passe that it was drawen to those signes which had a reuerend representation of high and spirituall things. Which Augustine also noteth in one place. It were long (saith hee) to dispute of the diuersity of signes, which when they pertaine to diuine things, are called Sacraments.

3 Now of this definition which we haue set, we vnderstand that a Sacrament is neuer without a promise going before it, but rather is adioined as a certaine addition hanging to it, to this end that it should confirme and seale the promise it selfe, and make it more approoued vnto vs, yea after a certaine manner ratified. Which meane the Lord foreseeth to be needfull first for our ignorance and dulnesse, and then for our weaknesse: and yet (to speake properly) not so much to confirme his holy word, as to stablish vs in the faith thereof. For the truth of God is by it selfe sound and certaine enough, and cannot from any other where receiue better confirmation than from it selfe: But our faith, as it is small and vveake, vnlesse it bee staid on euery side, and be by all meanes vpholden, is by and by shaken, vvauereth, staggereth, yea, and fainteth. And herein verily the mercifull Lord according to his great tender kindnesse tempereth himselfe to our capacity: that, vvhereas vve be naturall men, vvhich alway creeping vpon the ground, and sticking fast in the flesh, doe not thinke nor so much as conceiue any spirituall thing, he vouchsafeth euen by these earthly elements

Sacraments ordained of God as seales of his promises, not that they: but we stood in need of confirmation by such meanes.

Hom. 60. ad popul.

to guide vs vnto himſelfe, and in the fleſh it ſelfe to ſet foorth a mirror of ſpirituall good things. For if we were vnbodily (as Chryſoſtome ſaith) he would haue giuen vs the very ſame things naked and vnbodily. Now becauſe we haue ſoules put within bodies, he giueth ſpirituall things vnder viſible things. Nor becauſe there are ſuch gifts planted in the natures of the things which are ſet foorth to vs in the Sacraments: but becauſe they were ſigned by God to this ſignification.

With the Sacraments the word of promiſe to be ioyned, not as they ioyne it in the Church of Rome, but as Chriſt did and taught his diſciples after him to doe.

4 And this is it which they commonly ſay, that a Sacrament conſiſteth of the word and the outward ſigne. For we muſt vnderſtand the word to be, not that which being whiſpered without meaning and Faith, with onely noiſe as it were with a magicall enchantment hath power to conſecrate the element: but which being preached maketh vs to vnderſtand what the viſible ſigne meaneth. Therefore that which was vſually done vnder the tyranny of the Pope, was not without a great prophaning of the myſteries. For they thought it enough, if the Prieſt, while the people ſtood amazedly gazing at it without vnderſtanding, did mumble vp the forme of conſecration. Yea, they of ſet purpoſe prouided this, that no whit of doctrine ſhould thereof come to the people: for they ſpake all things in Latin before vnlearned men. Afterward ſuperſtition brake out ſo farre, that they beleeued that the conſecration was not formally made, vnleſſe it were with a hoarſe whiſpering ſound which few might heare. But Auguſtine teacheth far otherwiſe of the Sacramentall word. Let the word (ſaith he) be added to the element, and there ſhall be made a Sacrament. For whence commeth this ſo great ſtrength to the water, to touch the body and waſh the ſoule, but by the word making it? not becauſe it is ſpoken, but becauſe it is beleeued. For in the verie word it ſelfe the ſound which paſſeth is one thing, and the power which abideth is an other. This is the word of Faith which we preach, ſaith the Apoſtle. Whereupon in the Acts of the Apoſtles it is ſaid, by faith clenſing their hearts. And Peter the Apoſtle ſaid, by faith, So baptiſme alſo ſaueth vs: not the putting away of the filthineſſe of the fleſh, but the examination of a good conſcience, this is the word of faith which we preach: by which without doubt, that it may be able to cleanſe, Baptiſme is alſo hallowed. You ſee how it requireth preaching, whereupon faith may grow. And we need not to trauell much in proofe hereof, foraſmuch as it is cleere what Chriſt did, what he commanded vs to doe, what the Apoſtles followed, what the purer Church obſerued. Yea euen from the beginning of the world it is knowen, that ſo oft as God offered any ſigne to the holy fathers, there was added an vnſeparable knot of doctrin, without which our ſenſes ſhould be made amazed with bare beholding. Therefore when we heare mention made of the Sacramentall word, let vs vnderſtand the promiſe, which being with a loud voice preached of the miniſter, may lead the people thither as it were by the hand, whether the ſigne tendeth and directeth vs.

A ſophiſticall dilemma to exclude the vſe of Sacraments.

5 Neither are ſome to be heard which trauell to fight againſt this, with a double horned argument rather ſubtle than ſound. Either (ſay they) we know, or we know not, that the word of God which goeth before the Sacrament, is the true will of God. If we know it, than we learne no new thing of the Sacrament which followeth after. If we know it not, then neither will the Sacrament teach it: whoſe whole force ſtandeth in the word. Whereunto let this briefly be for an anſwer: that the ſeales which are hanged at patents and other publike inſtruments, taken by themſelues are nothing, for as much as they ſhould be hanged in vaine if the parchment had nothing written in it: yet they doe not therefore not confirme and ſeale that which is written, when they be added to writings. Neither can they ſay that this ſimilitude is lately fained by vs, which Paul himſelfe vſed, calling circumciſion a ſeale, where he purpoſely trauelleth to proue, that circumciſion was not righteouſnes to Abraham, but a ſealing of that couenant, by faith whereof he had already beene iuſtified before. And what, I beſeech you is there that may much offend any man, if we teach that the promiſe is ſealed with Sacraments, when of the promiſes themſelues it is euident that one is confirmed with another? For as euery one is manifeſter, ſo is it more fit to vphold faith. But the Sacraments do both bring moſt cleare promiſes, and haue this peculiar more than the word, that they liuely repreſent them to vs as it were painted out in a table. Neither ought that diſtinction any thing to mooue vs, which is wont to be obiected,

Rom. 4. 11.

betweene Sacraments and ſeales of patents: that whereas both conſiſt of carnall elements of this world, thoſe cannot ſuffice or be meete to ſeale the promiſes of God, which are ſpirituall and euerlaſting, as theſe are wont to be hanged to, for ſealing of the grants of Princes concerning fading and fraile things. For a faithfull man, when the Sacraments are preſent before his eies, ſticketh not in that fleſhly ſight, but by thoſe degrees of proportion, which I haue ſpoken of, he riſeth vp with godly conſideration to the high myſteries which lie hidden in the Sacraments.

6 And ſith the Lord calleth his promiſes, couenants: and his Sacraments ſeales of couenants: a ſimilitude may well be brought from the couenants of men. What can a ſow killed worke, if wordes were not vſed, yea vnleſſe they went before: For ſowes are many times killed without any more inward or higher myſterie. What can the giuing of a mans right hand do, ſith oftentimes hands are matched with enmitie? But when words haue gone before, by ſuch ſignes the lawes of leagues are eſtabliſhed, although they were firſt conceiued, made, and decreed in words. Therefore Sacraments are exerciſes which make the credit of the word of God certainer vnto vs: and becauſe we are carnall, they are deliuered vnder carnall things, that ſo they ſhould inſtruct vs according to the capacitie of our dulnes, and guide vs by the hand as ſchoolmaſters guide children. For this reaſon Auguſtine calleth a Sacrament, a viſible word: becauſe it repreſenteth the promiſes of God, as it were painted in a table, and ſetteth them before our ſight cunningly expreſſed and as in an image. Other ſimilitudes alſo may be brought, whereby Sacraments may be more plainly ſet out, as if we call them pillars of our faith. For a building ſtandeth and reſteth vpon the foundation: yet by ſetting vnder of pillars, it is more ſurely ſtabliſhed: ſo, Faith reſteth vpon the word of God, as vpon a foundation: but when Sacraments are added, it ſtaieth yet more ſoundly vpon them as vpon pillars. Or if we call them looking glaſſes, in which we may behold the riches of the grace of God, which he giueth vs. For (as we haue alreadie ſaid) he doth in them manifeſtly ſhew himſelfe to vs, ſo much as is giuen to our dulneſſe to know, and doth more expreſly teſtifie his good wil and loue toward vs than by his word.

Sacraments as ſeales, pictures, pillars, glaſſes. Gen. 6. 18 & 9. 9. & 17. 22.

In Ioh. hom. lib. 19. cont. Fauſt.

7 Neither do they reaſon fitly enough to the purpoſe, when they labour to proue hereby that they are not teſtimonies of the grace of God, becauſe they are alſo giuen to the wicked, which yet doe thereby feele God nothing more fauourable to them, but rather procure to themſelues more grieuous damnation. For by the ſame argument neither ſhould the Goſpell, which is heard and deſpiſed of many, be the teſtimonie of the grace of God: nor yet Chriſt himſelfe, which was ſeene and knowen of manie, of whom verie few receiued him. The like we may alſo ſee in patents. For a great part of the multitude laugheth at and ſcorneth that authentike ſeale, howſoeuer they know that it proceeded from the Prince to ſeale his will withall: ſome regarde it not, as a thing not pertaining to them: ſome alſo abhor it: ſo that conſidering this ſo equall relation to both, the ſame ſimilitude which I haue aboue vſed, ought more and more to be liked. Therefore it is certaine that the Lord doth offer vnto vs mercy and a pledge of his grace both in his holy word and in the Sacraments: but the ſame is not receiued but of them which receiue the word and Sacraments with ſure faith: like as Chriſt is offered of the father vnto ſaluation to all, yet he is not acknowledged and receiued of all. Auguſtine in one place minding to declare the ſame, ſaid that the effectualneſſe of the word is ſhewed foorth in the Sacrament: not becauſe it is ſpoken, but becauſe it is beleeued. Therefore Paul, when he ſpeaketh to the faithfull, ſo intreateth of Sacraments that he includeth the communion of Chriſt in them, as when he ſaith: all yee that are Baptiſed, haue put on Chriſt. Againe, we are all one body and one ſpirit, which are Baptiſed in Chriſt. But when he ſpeaketh of the wrongfull vſe of the Sacraments, hee giueth no more to it than to colde and voide figures. Whereby he ſignifieth, that howſoeuer the wicked and hypocrites with their peruerſneſſe do either oppreſſe or darken or hinder the effect of the grace of God in the Sacraments, yet that withſtandeth not but that where and ſo oft as it pleaſeth God, both they may bring a true teſtimonie of the communicating of Chriſt, and the Spirite of God himſelfe may deliuer and performe that which Sacraments though miniſtred to the wicked, teſtimonies neuertheleſſe of the good will of God, and effectuall to augment faith.

which they promiſe. We determine therefore that Sacraments are truly called teſtimonies of the grace of God, and as it were certaine ſeales of the good will which hee beareth towards vs: which by ſealing it vnto vs, doe by this meane ſuſtaine, nouriſh, confirme, and increaſe our faith. As for the reaſons which ſome are wont to obiect againſt this ſentence, they are too trifling and weake. They ſay that if our faith bee good, it cannot be made better: for they ſay that it is no faith, but which without ſhaking, ſtedfaſtly, and without withdrawing, reſteth vpon the mercy of God. It had been better for ſuch to pray with the Apoſtles that the Lord would increaſe their faith, than careleſly to pretend ſuch a perfection of faith, which neuer any of the ſonnes of men hath obtained, nor any ſhall obtaine in this life. Let them anſwer, what manner of faith they thinke that he had which ſaid: I beleeue Lord, helpe my vnbeleeuingneſſe. For euen that faith, howſoeuer it was but a begun faith, was a good faith, and might bee made better when vnbeleeuingnes were taken away. But they are confuted by no more certaine argument than by their owne conſcience. For if they confeſſe themſelues ſinners, (which whether they will or no they cannot deny) they muſt needs impute the ſame to the imperfection of their faith.

Mark.9.24.

8 But (ſay they) Philip anſwered the Eunuch, that he might be baptized, if he beleeued with all his hart. What place here hath the confirmation of Baptiſme, where faith filleth the whole hart? Againe, I aske them whether they doe not feele a good part of their hart voide of faith: whether they doe not daily acknowledge new increaſes. The heathen man gloried that he waxed old with learning. Therefore we Chriſtians bee thriſe miſerable, if we wax old with profiting nothing, whoſe faith ought to goe forward by all degrees of ages, till it grow into a perfect man. Therefore in this place to beleeue with all the hart, is not perfectly to beleeue Chriſt, but only from the hart and with a ſincere mind to imbrace him: not to be full with him, but with feruent affection to hunger, and thirſt, and ſigh toward him. This is the manner of the Scripture, to ſay that that is done with the whole hart, which it meaneth to be done ſincerely and hartily. Of this ſort are theſe ſayings: I haue in all my hart ſought thee: I will confeſſe to thee in all my hart, and ſuch other. As on the other ſide, where he rebuketh guilefull and deceitfull men, he vſeth to reproch them with hart and hart. Then they ſay further, that if faith bee increaſed by Sacraments, the holy Ghoſt is giuen in vaine, whoſe ſtrength and worke it is to begin, maintaine, and make perfect faith. To whom indeed I grant, that faith is the proper and whole worke of the holy Ghoſt, by whom being inlightned we know God and the treaſure of his goodneſſe, and without whoſe light our mind is ſo blind, that it can ſee nothing, ſo ſenſeleſſe, that it can ſmell nothing of ſpirituall things. But for one benefite of God which they ſet foorth, wee conſider three. For firſt the Lord teacheth and inſtructeth vs with his word: then he ſtrengtheneth vs with Sacraments: laſt of all he ſhineth into our minds with the light of his holy ſpirit, and openeth an entry for the word and Sacraments into our harts, which otherwiſe ſhould but ſtrike our eares, and bee preſent before our eies, and nothing mooue the inward parts.

Although we beleeue with all our harts, and although it be the worke of the holy Ghoſt, to begin, maintain and make perfect faith, yet are not the Sacraments hereby proued vneffectuall to the increaſe of faith.

9 Wherefore as touching the confirmation and increaſe of faith, I would haue the reader warned (which I thinke I haue already in plaine words expreſſed) that I doe ſo aſſigne that miniſtery to the Sacraments, not as though I thought that there is perpetually in them I wot not what ſecret force, by which they may of themſelues be able to further or confirme faith: but becauſe they are ordained of the Lord to this end, that they ſhould ſerue to the ſtabliſhing and increaſing of faith. But then only they do truly performe their office, when that inward ſchoolmaſter the ſpirit is come to them, with whoſe only power both the harts are pearced, and affections are mooued, and the entry is ſet open for the Sacraments into our ſoules. If he be abſent, Sacraments can doe no more to our minds, than if either the brightneſſe of the ſunne ſhould ſhine vpon blind eies, or a voice ſound to deafe eares. Therefore I ſo make diuiſion betweene the ſpirit and Sacraments, that the power of working remaine with the ſpirit, and to the Sacraments be left only the miniſtration, yea and the ſame voide and trifling without the working of the ſpirit: but of much effectualneſſe, when he inwardly worketh and putteth foorth his force. Now it is plaine in what ſort according to this ſentence, a godly ly mind is confirmed in the faith by Sacraments: that is to ſay, euen as the eies ſee by the brightneſſe of the Sunne, and the eares heare by the ſound of a voice: of which neither the eies ſhould any whit perceiue any light, vnleſſe they had a ſight in themſelues that might naturally be inlightned, and the eares ſhould in vaine be knocked at with any crying whatſoeuer it were, vnleſſe they were naturally made fit to heare. But if it be true, which ought at once to be determined among vs, that what the light worketh in our eies to ſeeing of the light, what the hearing worketh in our eares to the perceiuing of a voice, the ſame is the worke of the holy Ghoſt in our hearts, both to the conceiuing, and ſuſtaining, and cheriſhing and ſtabliſhing of faith: then both theſe things do likewiſe follow: that the Sacraments doe nothing at all profit without the power of the holy Ghoſt: and that nothing withſtandeth but that in hearts already taught of that ſchoolemaſter, they may make faith both ſtronger and more increaſed. Only this difference there is, that the power of hearing and ſeeing is naturally ſet in our eares and eies: but Chriſt beſide the meaſure of nature doth by ſpeciall grace worke the ſame in our minds.

By this doctrine concerning the force of Sacraments nothing taken from the power of the holy Ghoſt.

10 Whereby thoſe obiections alſo, which comber ſome men, are diſſolued: That if we aſcribe to creatures either the increaſe or confirmation of faith, there is wrong done to the Spirit of God, whom we ought to acknowledge the only author thereof. For neither do we in the meane time take from him either the praiſe of confirming or increaſing it: but rather we affirme, that euen this that he encreaſeth and confirmeth faith, is nothing elſe but with his inward enlightning to prepare our minds to receiue that confirming which is ſet foorth by the Sacraments. But if it be yet too darkly ſpoken, it ſhall bee made very cleere by a ſimilitude which I will bring. If thou purpoſe with words to perſwade a man to do any thing, thou wilt ſearch out all the reaſons, whereby he may be drawen to thy opinion, and may be in a manner ſubdued to obey thy councell. But thou haſt hitherto nothing preuailed, vnleſſe hee likewiſe haue a pearling and ſharpe iudgement, whereby he may weigh what pith is in thy reaſons, vnleſſe alſo he haue a tractable wit and ready to harken to teaching: finally vnleſſe hee haue conceiued ſuch an opinion of thy faithfulneſſe and wiſedome, as may be to him like a certaine fore-iudgement to cauſe him to ſubſcribe. For both there are many ſtubborne heads, which a man can neuer bow with any reaſons: and alſo where credit is ſuſpected, where authority is deſpiſed, little good is done euen with the willing to learne. On the other ſide let all thoſe things be preſent, they will truly bring to paſſe that the hearer, to whom thou giueſt counſell, will obey the ſelfeſame counſels which otherwiſe he would haue laughed to ſcorne. The ſame worke alſo the ſpirit worketh in vs. For leſt the word ſhould beate our eares in vaine, leſt the Sacraments ſhould ſtrike our eies in vaine, he ſheweth vs that it is God which ſpeaketh therein, hee ſoftneth the ſtubbornneſſe of our hart, and frameth it to the obedience which is due to the word of the Lord. Finally he conueieth thoſe outward words and Sacraments from the eares into the ſoule. Therefore both the word and the Sacraments do confirme our faith, when they ſet before our eies the good will of the heauenly father toward vs, by knowledge of whom both the whole ſtedfaſtneſſe of our faith ſtandeth faſt, and the ſtrength of it encreaſeth: the ſpirit confirmeth it, when in engrauing the ſame confirmation in our minds he maketh it effectuall. In the meane time the father of lights cannot be forbidden, but as he enlightneth the bodily eies with the beames of the ſunne, ſo he may enlighten our minds with Sacraments, as with a brightneſſe ſet meane betweene.

As by the Sacraments, ſo alſo by the word, faith ſowen increaſed and brought to ripeneſſe through the forcible operation of the ſpirit. Matt. 13.4. Luk. 8.15.

11 Which property the Lord taught that there was in his outward word, when in the parable he calleth it ſeed. For as ſeed, if it fall vpon a deſert and vntilled piece of ground, will do nothing but die: but if it be throwen vpon arable land well manured and tilled, it will bring foorth her fruit with very good increaſe: ſo the word of God, if it light vpon a ſtiffe necke, it will grow barren as that which is ſowen vpon ſand: but if it light vpon a ſoule manured with the hand of the heauenly ſpirit, it will bee moſt fruitfull. But if there be like reaſon of ſeed and of the word: as we ſay that out of ſeed come both ſpringeth and increaſeth, and groweth vp to ripeneſſe: why may we not ſay that faith taketh out of the word of God both beginning, increaſe, and perfection? Paul very very vvell expreſſeth both theſe things in ſundry places. For when he goeth about to 2.Cor.2.4. put the Corinthians in remembrance how effectually God vſed his trauaile, he glori-eth that he hath the miniſtery of the Spirit, as though the power of the holy Ghoſt 1.Cor.3.6. were vvith an vnſeparable knot ioined with his preaching, to inlighten and throughly moue the mind. But in another place when hee mindeth to admoniſh them, of vvhat force the word of God is of it ſelfe being preached by man, hee compareth the miniſters themſelues to husbandmen, which vvhen they haue beſtowed their labour and trauaile in tilling the earth haue no more to do. But what ſhould tilling, and ſowing, and watering profit vnleſſe that which is ſowen ſhould receiue liuelineſſe by heauenly benefit? Therefore he concludeth, that both he that planteth and he that watereth are nothing: but that all things are to bee aſcribed to God, which alone giueth the increaſe. Therefore the Apoſtles do in their preaching vtter the power of the ſpirit, ſo far as God vſeth the inſtruments ordained by himſelfe to the ſetting foorth of his ſpirituall grace. Yet we muſt keepe ſtill that diſtinction, that we remember, what man is able to do by himſelfe, and what is proper to God.

When Sacraments are remoued to take away mens confidence in thoſe things which thereby were confirmed, this doth ſhew them to be meanes whereby faith groweth, yet ſo that no power proper vnto God be tranſcribed from him to them.

12 Sacraments are ſo confirmations of our faith, that many times when the Lord meaneth to take away the confidence of the very things that are by him promiſed in the Sacraments, he taketh away the Sacraments themſelues. When hee ſpoileth and thruſteth away Adam from the gift of immortality, hee ſaith: Let him not eat of the fruit of life, leſt he liue for euer. What ſaith he? Could that fruit reſtore to Adam his vncorruption, from which he vvas now fallen? No. But this is all one as if he had ſaid:
Leſt he ſhould enioy a vaine confidence if hee keepe ſtill the ſigne of my promiſe, let that be ſhaken away from him vvhich might bring him ſome hope of immortality.
After this manner when the Apoſtle exhorteth the Epheſians to remember that they vvere forraine gueſts of the Teſtaments, ſtrangers from the fellowſhip of Iſrael, without God, without Chriſt, he ſaith, that they vvere not partakers of circumciſion.
Whereby hee doth (by figure of tranſnomination) ſignifie that they were excluded from the promiſe it ſelfe, vvhich had not receiued the ſigne of the promiſe. To their other obiection, that the glory of God is conueied to creatures, to whom ſo much power is aſcribed, and that thereby it is ſo far diminiſhed, vve haue in readineſſe to anſwer that we ſet no power in creatures. Only this we ſay, that God vſeth meanes and in-ſtruments, which he himſelfe ſeeth to be expedient: that all things may ſerue his glory, foraſmuch as hee is Lord and iudge of all. Therefore as by bread and other nouriſhments he feedeth our body: as by the Sunne he enlightneth the world: as by fire he warmeth: yet neither Bread, nor the Sunne, nor Fire, are any thing but ſo far as by thoſe inſtruments hee doth diſtribute his bleſſings vnto vs: ſo ſpiritually he nouriſheth Faith by the Sacraments, vvhoſe only office is to ſet his promiſes before our eies to be looked vpon, yea to bee pledges vnto vs of them. And as it is our duty to faſten none of our affiance in other creatures, vvhich by the liberality and bounti-fulneſſe of God are ordained to our vſes, and by the miniſtery whereof hee giueth vs his giftes, nor to haue them in admiration, and praiſe them as cauſes of our good:
ſo neither ought our confidence to ſticke faſt in the Sacraments, nor the glory of God to bee remooued vnto them: but leauing all things, both our faith and con-feſſion ought ro riſe vp to him the Authour both of the Sacraments and of all things.

The word ſacrament tranſlated from military vnto Chriſtian profeſſion, the power which Sacraments haue in augmenting Faith not thereby diſproued.

13 Whereas ſome bring an argument out of the very name of a Sacrament, it is nothing ſtrong. A Sacrament (ſay they) whereas it hath among allowed Authors many ſignifications, yet it hath but one which agreeth with the ſignes: that is, whereby it ſignifieth that ſolemne oath which the ſouldier maketh to his Captaine when hee entreth into profeſſion of a ſoldier. For as by that oath of warfare new ſoldiers doe bind their Faith to the Captaine, and profeſſe to be his ſoldiers: ſo by our ſignes vve pro-feſſe Chriſt our Captaine, and doe teſtifie that we ſerue vnder his banner. They adde ſimilitudes to make thereby the matter more plaine. As a gowne made the Romans ſeuerally knowen from the Greeks vvhich did weare cloakes: as the very degrees of men at Rome vvere diſcerned by their ſeuerall ſignes: the degree of Senators from the degree of Knights, by purple coat and picked ſhooes: againe a Knight from a Commoner,

moner, by a ring: ſo wee beare our ſignes that may make vs ſeuerally knowen from prophane men. But by the things aboue ſaid it is euident enough that the old writers, which gaue to the ſignes the name of Sacraments, had no regard how this word was vſed among Latine writers, but for their owne purpoſe fained this new ſignification, whereby they ſignified only holy ſignes. But if we will ſeareh the matter more deeply, it may ſeeme that they haue with the ſame relation applied this word to ſuch a ſignification, wherewith they haue remooued the name of Faith to that ſenſe wherein it is now vſed. For whereas Faith is a truth in performing promiſes: yet they haue called Faith an aſſurednetſe, or ſure perſwaſion which is had of the truth it ſelfe. Likewiſe whereas a Sacrament is the Soldiers part whereby hee voweth himſelfe to his Captaine: they haue made it the Captaines part, whereby he receiueth ſoldiers into rooms of ſeruice. For by the Sacrament the Lord doth promiſe that hee will be our God, and that we ſhall be his people. But we paſſe ouer ſuch ſubtleties: for aſmuch as I think I haue prooued with arguments plaine enough, that they had reſpect to nothing elſe but to ſignifie that theſe are ſignes of holy and ſpirituall things. We receiue indeed the ſimilitudes which they bring of outward tokens: but wee allow not that that which is the laſt point in the Sacramentes, is by them ſet for the chiefe, yea and only thing. But this is the firſt point, that they ſhould ſerue our faith before God: the later point that they ſhould teſtifie our confeſſion before men. According to this later conſideration thoſe ſimilitudes haue place. But in the meane time let that firſt point remaine: becauſe otherwiſe (as we haue already prooued the myſteries ſhould be but cold, vnleſſe they were helps to our faith, and additions to doctrine ordained to the ſame vſe and end.

As by ſome too little, ſo by others too much force is aſcribed vnto Sacraments.

14 Againe we muſt be warned, that as theſe men do weaken the force, and vtterly ouerthrow the vſe of Sacraments: ſo on the contrary ſide there be ſome, which faine to Sacraments I wot not what ſecret vertues, which are no where read to be put in them by God. By which error the ſimple and vnskilfull are dangerouſly deceiued, while they are both taught to ſeeke the gifts of God where they cannot be found, and are by little and little drawen away from God, to embrace meere vanitie in ſteede of his veritie. For the Sophiſticall ſchooles haue taught with great conſent, that the Sacraments of the new law, that is to ſay, thoſe which are now in vſe in the Chriſtian church doe iuſtifie and giue grace, ſo that we doe not lay a ſtop of deadly ſinne. It cannot be expreſſed how pernicious and peſtilent this opinion is, and ſo much the more, becauſe in many ages heeretofore, to the great loſſe of the Church, it hath preuailed in a great part of the world. Truely it is vtterly diueliſh. For when it promiſeth righteouſneſſe without faith, it driueth ſoules headlong into deſtruction: then becauſe it fetcheth the cauſe of righteouſneſſe from the Sacraments, it bindeth the miſerable mindes of men alreadie of their owne accord to much bending to the earth, with this ſuperſtition that they rather reſt in the ſight of a bodily thing than of God himſelf. Which two things I would to God we had not ſo proued in experience, ſo little need they any long proofe. But what is a Sacrament taken without faith, but the moſt certaine deſtruction of the Church? For whereas nothing is to be looked for thereof without the promiſe, and the promiſe doth no leſſe threaten wrath to the vnfaithfull, than it offereth grace to the faithfull: he is deceiued that thinketh that there is any more giuen to him by the Sacraments, than that which being offered by the word of God, he receiueth by faith. Whereupon another thing alſo is gathered, that the aſſiance of ſaluation hangeth not vpon the partaking of the Sacrament, as though Iuſtification conſiſted therein: which we know to be repoſed in Chriſt onely, and to be communicated vnto vs no leſſe by the preaching of the Goſpel, than by the ſealing of the ſacrament: and that without that it cannot wholy ſtand. So true is that which Auguſtine alſo writeth, that inuiſible ſanctification may be without a viſible ſigne, and again that a viſible ſigne may be without true ſanctification. For (as he alſo writeth in another place) men do put on Chriſt ſometime vntill the receiuing of a Sacrament, ſometime euen vntill the ſanctification of life. And that firſt point may be common both to good and to euill: but this other is proper to the good and godly.

Libr. 4. de quæſt. vet. teſtament. Lib. 5. de bap. cont. Donat. cap. 14.

15 Hereupon commeth that diſtinction if it be well vnderſtanded, which the ſame same Augustine hath often noted, betweene a Sacrament, and the thing of the Sacrament. For it not only signifieth, that the figure and truth are there contained, but that they do not so hang together, but that they may be seuered: and that euen in the very conioining the thing must alway be discerned from the signe, that we giue not to the one that which belongeth to the other. He speaketh of the separation, when he writeth that the Sacraments do worke in the only elect that which they figure. Againe, when he writeth thus of the Iewes: When the Sacraments were common to all, the grace was not common, which is the power of the Sacraments. So now also the washing of regeneration is common to all: but the grace it selfe, whereby the members of Christ are regenerate with their head, is not common to all. Againe, in another place of the Supper of the Lord, We also at this day receiue visible meat. But the Sacrament is one thing, and the power of the Sacrament another thing. What is this, that many receiue of the altar and die, and in receiuing do die? For the Lords morsell was poison to Iudas: not because he receiued an euill thing, but because he being euill receiued a good thing euilly. A little after: The Sacrament of this thing, that is of the vnity of the body and blood of Christ, is somewhere prepared on the Lords table daily, somewhere by certaine distances of daies: and thereof is receiued vnto life to some, and vnto destruction to some. But the thing it selfe whereof it is a Sacrament, is receiued vnto life to all men, but vnto destruction to no man, whosoeuer is partaker of it. And a little before hee had said, He shall not die which eateth: but he which pertaineth to the power of the Sacrament, not to the visible Sacrament: which eateth within, not without: which eateth with heart, not he which presseth with tooth. Thus you heare euery where, that a Sacrament is so seuered from his owne truth by the vnworthinesse of the receiuer, that there remaineth nothing but a vaine and vnprofitable figure. But that thou maist haue not a signe voide of truth, but the thing with the signe, thou must conceiue by faith the word which is there enclosed. So how much thou shalt by the Sacraments profit in communicating of Christ, so much profit shalt thou take of them.

The hidden grace not alwaies ioined with the visible signe of the Sacraments. De bap. par. In Psal. 77.

In Ioh. hom. 28.

Christ the substance of all Sacraments and the only cause of righteousnesse: the Sacraments effectuall meanes to nourish the knowledge of Christ though the wicked lacking faith be not nourished by them. Lib. 4. senten. dist. 1.

16 If this bee somewhat darke because of the shortnesse, I will set it out in moe words. I say that Christ is the matter, or (if thou wilt) the substance of all Sacraments: for as much as in him they haue all their perfectnesse, and do promise nothing without him. So much lesse tolerable is the error of Peter Lombard, which doth expresly make them causes of righteousnesse and saluation, whereof they be parts. Therefore bidding all causes farewell which mans wit doth faine to it selfe, wee ought to stay in this one cause. Therefore how much we be by their ministery holpen to the nourishing, confirming, and increasing of the true knowledge of Christ in vs, and to the possessing of him more fully, and to the enioying of his riches, so much effectualnesse they haue with vs. But that is done when wee doe with true faith receiue that which is there offered. Doe the wicked then (wilt thou say) bring to passe by their vnthankfulnesse, that the ordinances of God be voide and turne to nothing? I answer that that which I haue said, is not so to bee taken, as though the force and truth of the Sacrament did hang vpon the state or will of him that receiueth it. For that which God hath ordained remaineth stedfast and keepeth still his nature, howsoeuer men do vary. But sith it is one thing to offer, another to receiue: nothing withstandeth but that the signe hallowed by the word of God may be indeed that which it is called, and keep his owne force: and yet that there come thereby no profite to an euill doer and wicked man. But Augustine doth in few words well assoile this question. If (saith hee) thou receiuest carnally, it ceaseth not to be spirituall: but it is not to thee. But as Augustine hath in the aforesaid places shewed that a Sacrament is a thing nothing worth, if it be seuered from the truth therof: so in another place he giueth warning that euen in the very conioining needeth a distinction, lest we sticke too much in the outward signe. As (saith he) to follow the letter, and to take the signes in stead of the things, is a point of seruile weaknesse: so to expounde the signes vnprofitablie is a point of euill wandring error. He nameth two faults which are here to bee auoided: The one when wee so take the signes as though they were giuen in vaine, and when with abasing or diminishing their secret significations by our enuiousnesse, wee bring bring to passe that they bring vs no profit at all. The other, when in not raising our minds beyond the visible signe, we giue away to the Sacraments the praise of all those good things which are not giuen vs but of Christ onely, and that by the holy Ghost, which maketh vs partakers of Christ himselfe: and indeed by the helpe of the outward signes: which if they allure vs to Christ, when they be wrested an other way, the whole profit of them is vnworthily ouerthrowen.

17 Wherefore let this remaine certaine, that there is no other office of the sacraments than of the word of God: which is to offer and set foorth Christ vnto vs, and in him the treasures of heauenly grace: but they auaile or profite nothing, but being receiued by faith: euen as wine, or oyle, or any other liquor, though you powre it on largely, yet it will run beside and perish, vnlesse the vessels mouth be open to receiue it, and the vessell though it be wet round about on the out side, shall neuertheless remaine void and empty within. Beside this we must beware, least those things which haue been writtē by the old writers somwhat too gloriously to amplifie the dignity of sacraments, which lead vs away into an error neere to this: namely that we should thinke that there is some secret power knit and fastened to the sacraments, that they may of themselues giue vs the graces of the holy Ghost, like as wine is giuen in a cup: whereas onely this office is appointed to them by God, to testifie and stablish to vs the good will of God toward vs, and doe profite no further vnlesse the holy Ghost ioyne himselfe to them, which may open our minds and hearts, and make vs partakers of this testimony, wherin also doe cleerely appeere diuers and seuerall graces of God. For the sacraments, as we haue aboue touched, are that thing to vs of God, which to men are messengers of ioyfull things, or earnestes in stablishing of bargaines: which doe not of themselues giue any grace, but doe tell and shew vs, and (as they be earnests and tokens,) doe ratifie vnto vs those things that are giuen vs by the liberality of God. The holy Ghost (whom the Sacraments doe not in common without difference bring to all men, but whom the Lord peculiarly giueth to them that be his) is he that bringeth the graces of God with him, which giueth to the sacraments place in vs, which maketh them to bring foorth fruit. But although we doe not deny that God himselfe with the most present power of his Spirit is present with his owne institution, least the ministration which he hath ordained of the sacraments should be fruitlesse and vaine: yet we affirme that the inward grace of the Spirit, as it is seuered from the outward Ministery, so ought to be seuerally weighed and considered. God therefore truely performeth indeed whatsoeuer he promiseth and figureth in signes: neither doe the signes want their effect, that the author of them may be prooued true and faithfull. The question heere is onely whether God worketh by his owne and by inward power (as they call it) or doe resigne his office to outward signes. But we affirme, that whatsoeuer instruments he vse, his originall working is nothing hindred thereby. When this is taught concerning the sacraments, both their dignities is honorably set out, and their vse is plainely shewed, and their profitablenesse is abundantly reported, and the best meane in all these things is retained, that neither any thing be giuen to them which ought not, nor againe any thing be taken from them which is not conuenient to be taken from them. In the meane time that fained deuise is taken away, whereby the cause of iustification and power of the holy Ghost is inclosed in elements as in vessels or waggons, and that principall force which hath beene ommitted of other is expresly set out. Heere also it is to be noted, that God inwardly worketh that which the Minister figureth and testifieth by outward doing: least that be drawen to a mortall man, which God claimeth to himselfe alone. The same thing also doth Augustine wisely touch. How (saith he) doth both Moses sanctifie, and God? not Moses for God: but Moses with visible sacraments by his ministery, but God with inuisible grace by his holy Spirit: where also is the whole fruit of visible sacraments. For without this sanctification of inuisible grace what doe those visible sacraments profit?

18 The name of Sacrament, as we haue hitherto entreated of the nature of it doth generally containe all the signes that euer God gaue to men, to certifie and assure them of the truth of his promises. Those he sometime willed to remaine in naturall things, sometime hee deliuered them in myracles. Of the first kinde these bee examples

Christ set foorth as by the words so by the sacraments, neither available without faith, to whom they are available in them they work not by secret included force, grace commeth with the sacraments not from the sacraments but from God.

Quæstio. vet. testam. lb. 3. c. 84.

Things sometimes naturall and sometimes miraculous vsed for sacraments.

Gen.2.17. & 3.3. as when he gaue to Adam and Eue the tree of life for an earnest of immortalitie, that they might assure themselues of it, so long as they did eate of the fruite thereof. And when he did set the heauenly bowe for a monument to Noe and his posteritie, that he would no more from thence-foorth destroy the earth with ouerflowing of water.

Gen.9.13. These Adam and Noe had for sacraments. Not that the tree did giue them immortalitie, which it could not giue to it selfe: nor that the Bowe (which is but a striking backe of a sun-beame vpon the clouds against it) was of force to hold in the waters: but because they had a marke grauen in them by the word of God, that they should be examples and seales of his testaments. And the tree was a tree before, and the bowe a bowe. When they were written vpon with the word of God, then a new forme was put into them, that they should begin to be that which they were not before. That no man should thinke these things spoken without cause, the bowe it selfe is at this day also a witnesse of that couenant which God made with Noe: which bowe so oft as we behold, we reade this promise of God written in it, that the earth shall neuer be destroyed with ouerflowing of waters. Therefore if any fond Philosopher, to scorne the simplicitie of our faith, doe affirme that such varietie of colours doth naturally arise of reflected beames and a cloud set against them: let vs grant it indeed, but let vs laugh to scorne his senseless follie, which doth not acknowledge God the Lord and gouernour of nature: which at his owne will vseth all the elements to the seruice of his owne glorie. If he had imprinted such tokens in the sunne, the starres, the earth, stones, and such like, they should all haue beene sacraments to vs. Why are not vncoined and coined siluer both of one value, sith they are both one metall? euen because the one hath nothing but nature: when it is striken with a common marke, it is made money, and receiueth a new valuation. And shall not God be able to marke his creatures with his word, that they may be made sacraments, which before were naked elements? Of the second kind these were examples, when he shewed to Abraham a light in a smoking ouen: when he watered the fleece with dewe, the earth remaining drie: againe he watered the earth, the fleece being vntouched, to promise victorie to Gideon: when he drew the shadow of the diall nine lines backward, to promise safetie to Ezechias. These things, when they were done to relieue and stablish the weakenesse of their faith, were then also sacraments.

Sacraments on Gods behalfe testimonies of grace, on ours notes and marks of profession. Lib.9. contra Faust. Manic. 11.

19 But our present purpose is, to discourse peculiarly of those sacraments, which the Lord willed to be ordinarie in his Church, to nourish his worshippers and seruants into one faith and the confession of one faith. For (to vse the words of Augustine) men can be congealed together into no name of religion either true or false, vnlesse they be bound together with some fellowship of visible signes and sacraments. Sith therefore the most good Father foresaw this necessitie, he did from the beginning ordaine certaine exercises of godlinesse for his seruants, which afterward Satan by turning them to wicked and superstitious worshippings, hath many waies depraued and corrupted. Hereupon came those solemne professions of the Gentiles into their holie orders, and other bastard vsages: which although they were full of errour and superstition, yet they also were therewith a proofe that men could not in profession of religion be without such outward signes. But because they neither were grounded vpon the word of God, nor were referred to that truth whereunto all signes ought to be directed, they are vnworthie to be rehearsed where mention is made of the holie signes which are ordained of God, and haue not swarued from their foundation, that is, that they should be helps of true godlinesse. They consist not of bare signes, as were the bowe and the tree, but vpon ceremonies: or rather the signes that be heere giuen are ceremonies. But as it is aboue said, that they be on the Lords behalfe testimonies of grace and saluation: so they be againe on our behalfe marks of profession, by which we openly sweare to the name of God, for our parts binding our faith vnto him. Therefore Chrysostome in one place fitly calleth them couenantings whereby God bindeth himselfe in league with vs, and we be bound to pureneſſe and holinesse of life, because heere is made a mutuall forme of couenanting betweene God and vs. For as the Lord therein promiseth that he will cancell and blot out whatsoeuer guiltinesse and penaltie wee haue gathered by offending, and and doth reconcile vs to himselfe in his onely begotten sonne: so we againe on our behalfes doe by this profession binde our selues vnto him to the following of godlinesse and innocency: so that a man may rightly say that such sacraments are ceremonies, by which God will exercise his people first to the nourishing, stirring vp, and strengthening of faith inwardly, then to the testifying of religion before men.

Sacraments before Christ and after, and the scope of both.

20 And euen these sacraments also were diuers, after the diuers order of time, according to the distribution whereby it pleaseth the Lord to shew himselfe after this or that maner to men. For to Abraham and his posteritie Circumcision was commanded whereunto afterward purifyings and Sacrifices, and other Ceremonies were added out of the law of Moses. These were the Sacraments of the Iewes vntill the comming of Christ: at which comming those being abrogate, two Sacraments were ordained, which now the Christian Church vseth, Baptisme, and the Supper of the Lord. I speake of those that were ordained for the vse of the whole Church. For as for the laying on of hands, whereby the ministers of the Church are entred into their office, as I doe not vnwillingly suffer it to be called a Sacrament, so I doe not reckon it among the ordinarie Sacraments. As for the rest which are commonly called sacraments, what they are to be accounted, we shall see by and by. Howbeit the old Sacraments also had respect to the same marke, whereunto ours doe tend, that is, to direct and in a manner lead by the hand to Christ: or rather as Images to represent him, and shew him foorth to be knowen. For whereas we haue already taught, that they are certaine sealet wherewith the promises of God are sealed: and where it is most certaine, that there was neuer offered any promise of God to men but in Christ: that they may teach vs of some promise of God, they must needes shew Christ. Whereunto pertaineth that heauenly patterne of the Tabernacle and of the worshipping in the law, which was giuen to Moses in the Mount. One onely difference there is, that those did shadow out Christ being promised, when he was yet looked for: these doe testifie him already giuen and deliuered.

Gen. 17. 10. Leuit. 10. Mat. 28. 19. & 26 26.

1. Cor. 1. 20.

The intent of circumcision, purifyings and sacrifices of the law.

21 When these things shall all be particularly and ech one seuerally declared, they shall be made much plainer. Circumcision was to the Iewes a signe, whereby they were put in minde, that whatsoeuer commeth of the seed of man, that is to say the whole nature of man is corrupt, and hath neede of proyning. Moreouer it was a teaching, and token of remembrance whereby they should confirme themselues in the promise giuen to Abraham, concerning that blessed seed in whom all the Nations of the earth were to be blessed, from whom they had their owne blessing to bee looked for. Now that healthfull seede (as wee are taught of Paul) was Christ, in whom alone they hoped that they should recouer that which they had lost in Adam. Wherefore Circumcision was to them the same thing which Paul saith that it was to Abraham, namely the seale of the righteousnesse of faith: that is to say, the seale whereby they should be more certainely assured, that their faith wherewith they looked for that seed, should be accounted to them of God for righteousnesse. But we shall vpon a better occasion in another place goe through with the comparison of Circumcision and Baptisme. Baptisings and purifyings did set before their eies their owne vncleannesse, filthinesse and pollution, wherewith they were defiled in their owne nature: but they promised another washing, whereby all their filthinesses should be wiped and washed away. And this washing was Christ, with whose blood we being washed doe bring his cleannesse into the sight of God, that it may hide all our defilings. Their sacrifices did accuse them of their owne wickednesse, and therewithall did teach, that it was necessary that there should be some satisfaction which should be paide to the iudgement of God. That therefore there should be some one chiefe Bishop, a Mediator betweene God and men, which should satisfie God by shedding of blood, and by offering of a sacrifice which should suffice for the forgiuenesse of sinnes. This chiefe Priest was Christ: he himselfe shed his owne blood: he himselfe was the Sacrifice: for hee offered himselfe obedient to his Father vnto death: by which obedience he tooke away the disobedience of man, which had prouoked the displeasure of God.

The ſacraments of the new teſtament Baptiſme and the Supper of the Lord, wherein Chriſt ſhineth more cleerely than in the ſacraments of the old.

vs, as he was more neerely ſhewed to men, ſince he hath beene truely deliuered of his father ſuch as he had beene promiſed. For Baptiſme doth teſtifie vnto vs that we are cleanſed and waſhed, the Supper of thankeſgiuing teſtifieth that we be redeemed. In water, is figured waſhing: in blood, ſatisfaction. Theſe two things are found in Chriſt, which (as Iohn ſaith) came in water and blood, that is to ſay, that he might cleanſe and redeeme. Of which thing the Spirit of God alſo is a witneſſe. Yea there are three witneſſes in one, Water, Blood, and Spirit. In water and blood we haue a teſtimonie of cleanſing and redeeming: but the Spirit the principall witneſſe bringeth vnto vs aſſured credit of ſuch witneſſing. This high myſterie hath notably well beene ſhewed vs in the croſſe of Chriſt, when water and blood flowed out of his holie ſide: which ſide for that cauſe Auguſtine rightfully called the fountaine of our Sacraments: of which yet we muſt intreate ſomewhat more at large. There is no doubt but that more plentifull grace alſo of the Spirit doth heere ſhew foorth it ſelfe if you compare time with time. For that pertaineth to the glory of the kingdome of Chriſt, as we gather out of many places, but ſpecially out of the ſeuenth Chapter of Iohn. In which ſenſe we muſt take that ſaying of Paul, that vnder the law were ſhadowes, but in Chriſt is the body. Neither is it his meaning to ſpoile of their effect the teſtimonies of grace, in which Gods will was in the old time to proone himſelfe to the Fathers a true ſpeaker, euen as at this day he doth to vs in Baptiſme and in the holy Supper. But onely his purpoſe was by way of compariſon to magnifie that which was giuen vs, leaſt any ſhould thinke it maruellous, that the Ceremonies of the law were aboliſhed by the comming of Chriſt.

Col.2.17.

Too great a difference made by Schoolemen betweene the Sacraments of the law and ours.

23 But that ſame ſchoole doctrine (as I may alſo briefly touch this by the way) is vtterly to be hiſſed out, whereby there is noted ſo great a difference betweene the Sacraments of the old and new law, as though thoſe did nothing but ſhadow out the grace of God, and theſe doe preſently giue it. For the Apoſtle ſpeaketh no leſſe honorably of thoſe than of theſe, when he teacheth that the Fathers did eate the ſame ſpirituall meate which we eate, and expoundeth that ſame meate to be Chriſt. Who dare make that an emptie ſigne, which deliuered to the Iewes a true communion of Chriſt? And the ground of the cauſe which the Apoſtle there handleth, doth plainely fight on our ſide. For, that no man truſting vpon a cold knowledge of Chriſt, and emptie title of Chriſtianitie, and outward tokens, ſhould preſume to deſpiſe the iudgement of God: hee ſheweth foorth examples of Gods ſeueritie to bee ſeene in the Iewes: that we ſhould know that the ſame paines which they haue ſuffered, hang ouer vs, if we follow the ſame faults. Now that the compariſon may be fit, it behooued that he ſhould ſhew that there is no vnequalneſſe betweene vs and them in thoſe good things whereof he did forbid vs to boaſt falſely. Therefore firſt he maketh vs equall in the Sacraments, and leaueth to vs not ſo much as any ſmall peece of prerogatiue, that might encourage vs to hope of eſcaping vnpuniſhed. Neither verily is it lawfull to giue any more to our Baptiſme, than he in another place giueth to Circumciſion, when he calleth it, The ſeale of the righteouſneſſe of faith. Whatſoeuer therefore is at this day giuen vs in our Sacraments, the ſame thing the Iewes in the old time receiued in theirs, that is to ſay, Chriſt with his ſpirituall riches. What power our Sacraments haue, the ſame they alſo felt in theirs: that is to ſay, that they were to them ſeales of Gods good will toward them, into the hope of eternall ſaluation. If they had beene apt expoſitors of the Epiſtle to the Hebrues, they would not haue ſo beene blinded. But when they reade there, that ſinnes were not cleanſed by the Ceremonies of the law, yea that the old ſhadowes had no auailing force to righteouſneſſe: they neglecting the compariſon which is there handled, while they tooke hold of this one thing, that the law of it ſelfe nothing profited the followers of it, thought ſimply that the figures were voide of truth. But the Apoſtles meaning is to bring the ceremoniall law to nothing, vntill it come to Chriſt, vpon whom alone hangeth all the effectualneſſe of it.

What is ſpoken in Scripture to dimi-

24 But they will obiect thoſe things which are read in Paul concerning the circumciſion of the letter, that it is in no eſtimation with God, that it giueth nothing, that it is vaine. For ſuch ſayings ſeeme to preſſe it downe farre beneath Baptiſme. Not ſo.

For

For the very ſame might rightfully be ſaid of Baptiſme. Yea and alſo the ſame is ſaid, iuſt of Paul himſelfe, where he ſheweth that God regardeth not the outward waſhing whereby we enter into profeſſion of religion, vnleſſe the minde within be both cleanſed and continue in cleanneſſe to the end: againe of Peter, when he teſtifieth that the truth of Baptiſme ſtandeth not in the outward waſhing, but in a good witneſſing of conſcience. But he ſeemeth alſo in another place vtterly to diſpiſe the circumciſion made with hand, when he compareth it with the circumciſion of Chriſt. I anſwer that euen in this place nothing is abated of the dignity of it. Paul there diſputeth againſt them, which required it as neceſſary when it was now abrogate. Therefore he warneth the faithfull, that leauing the old ſhadows they ſhould ſtand faſt in the truth. Theſe Maſters (ſaith he) inſtantly call vpon you, that your bodies may be circumciſed. But ye are ſpiritually circumciſed according to the ſoule and body. Yee haue therefore the deliuerance of the thing indeed, which is much better than the ſhadow. A man might take exception to the contrary and ſay that the figure is not therefore to be deſpiſed becauſe they had the thing indeed? foraſmuch as the putting off of the old man, of which he there ſpeake, was alſo among the Fathers, to whom yet outward circumciſion had not beene ſuperfluous: He preuenteth this obiection, when he by and by addeth, that the Coloſſians were buried with Chriſt by Baptiſme. Whereby he ſignifieth that at this day baptiſme is the ſame to Chriſtians, which circumciſion was to the old people: and therefore that circumciſion cannot be enioyned to Chriſtians without wrong done to Chriſt.

In ſtead of circumciſion, the ſame in like occaſion and ſenſe might as well be ſaid of Baptiſme.
1. Cor. 10. 5.
1. Pet. 3. 21.
Col. 2. 11.

25 But that which followeth, and which I euen now alleadged, is harder to aſſoile, that all the Iewiſh ceremonies were ſhadowes of things to come, and that in Chriſt is the body: but moſt hard of all is that which is intreated in many Chapters of the Epiſtle to the Hebrewes, that the bloud of beaſts, attained not to conſciences: that the law had a ſhadow of good things to come, not an image of things that the followers of it obtained no perfection of the Ceremonies of Moſes and ſuch other. I goe backe to that which I haue already touched, that Paul doth not therefore make the ceremonies ſhadowiſh, becauſe they had no ſound thing in them: but becauſe the fulfilling of them was after a certaine maner hanged in ſuſpence vntill the deliuering of Chriſt. Againe I ſay that this is to be vnderſtanded not of the effectualneſſe, but rather of the maner of ſignifying. For till Chriſt was manifeſtly ſhewed in the fleſh, all the ſignes did ſhadow him out as abſent, howſoeuer he did inwardly vtter to the faithfull the preſence of his power and of himſelfe. But this we ought chiefely to marke, that in all thoſe places Paul doth not ſpeake ſimpely, but by way of contention. Becauſe he ſtriued with the falſe Apoſtles, which would haue godlineſſe to conſiſt in the ceremonies onely without any reſpect of Chriſt: to confute them it ſufficeth onely to intreate, of what value ceremonies are by themſelues. This marke alſo the author of the Epiſtle to the Hebrewes followed. Let vs therfore remember that heere is diſputed of ceremonies, not as they be taken in their owne and naturall ſignification, but as they be wreſted to a falſe and wrongfull expoſition: not of the lawfull vſe of them, but of the abuſe of ſuperſtion. What maruell is it therefore if ceremonies being ſeuered from Chriſt, are vnclothed of all force? For all ſignes whatſoeuer they be, are brought to nought, when the thing ſignified is taken away. So when Chriſt had to doe with them which thought that Manna was nothing elſe but meate for the belly, he applieth his ſpeech to their groſſe opinion, & ſaith that he miniſtreth better meat, which may feed ſoules to hope of immortalitie. But if you require a plainer ſolution, the ſumme of all tendeth to this: Firſt, that all that furniture of ceremonies, which was in the law of Moſes, is a vaniſhing thing and of no value, vnleſſe it be directed to Chriſt. Secondly, that they ſo had reſpect to Chriſt, that when he at length was manifeſtly ſhewed in the fleſh, they had their fulfilling. Finally, that it behooued that they ſhould be taken away by his comming, euen as a ſhadow vaniſheth away in the cleare light of the Sunne. But becauſe I doe yet defer longer diſcourſe of that matter vnto that place where I haue purpoſed to compare baptiſme with circumciſion, therefore I doe now more ſparingly touch it.

The ſacraments of the law ſhadowes not in reſpect of their working: but in regard of their manner of ſignifying that which is wrought, ſpoken of as things of ſmall account not ſimply but when Chriſt is ſeuered from them.

Iohn 6. 27.

26 Perhaps alſo thoſe immeaſurable praiſes of ſacraments, which are read in old writers

In what ſenſe the fathers haue writers concerning our ſignes, deceiued thoſe miſerable Sophiſters. As this of Auguſtine. That the Sacraments of the old law did onely promiſe the Sauiour, but ours doe giue ſaluation. When they marked not that theſe and ſuch other formes of ſpeaking were ſpoken: they alſo publiſhed their exceſſiue doctrines, but in a cleane contrary ſenſe from the writing of the old fathers. For Auguſtine meant no other thing in that place, than as the ſame Auguſtine writeth in another place. That the Sacraments of the law of Moſes did foretell of Chriſt, but oures doe tell of him preſent. And againſt Fauſtus. That thoſe were promiſes of things to be fulfilled, theſe were tokens of things fulfilled: as if he ſhould ſay, that thoſe figured him when he was looked for, but oures doe as it were ſhew him preſent which hath beene already deliuered. Moreouer he ſpeaketh of the manner of ſignifying, as alſo he ſheweth in another place. The law (ſaith he) and the Prophets had Sacraments, foretelling of a thing to come: but the Sacraments of our time do teſtifie that that is already come, which thoſe did declare to be to come. But what he thought of the thing and effectualneſſe, he expoundeth in many places: as when he ſaith, that the Sacraments of the Iewes were in ſignes, diuers: but in the thing ſignified, equall with ours: diuers in viſible forme, but equall in ſpirituall power. Againe: in diuers ſignes is all one faith: ſo in diuers ſignes, as in diuers words: becauſe words change their ſounds by times: and truely words are nothing but ſignes. The Fathers did drinke the ſame ſpiritual drink, for they drunke not the ſame bodily drink. See ye therfore, faith remaining one, the ſignes varied. To them the rocke was Chriſt: to vs that is Chriſt, which is ſet vpon the Altar. And they drinke for a great Sacrament, the water flowing out of the rocke: what we drinke, the faithfull know. If thou conſider the viſible forme they drunke another thing: if an vnderſtandable ſignification they drunke the ſame ſpirituall drinke. In an other place, in the myſtery the ſame is their meat and drunke which is ours: but the ſame in ſignification, not in forme: becauſe the ſelfe ſame Chriſt was figured to them in the rocke, and ſhewed to vs in the fleſh. Howbeit in this behalf alſo we grant that there is ſome difference. For both ſacraments doe teſtifie that the fatherly good will of God and the graces of the holy Ghoſt are offered vs in Chriſt: but our ſacraments teſtifie it more cleerely and brightly. In both is a deliuering of Chriſt: but in theſe more plenteous and fuller, namely as that difference of the old & new Teſtament beareth, of which we haue intreated before. And this is it that the ſame Auguſtine meant (whom we more often alleage as the beſt and faithfulleſt witnes of all the old writers) where he teacheth that when Chriſt was reuealed, ſacraments were ordained doth in number fewer, in ſignification higher, in force more excellent. Of this thing alſo it is expedient that the readers briefly bewarned, that whatſoeuer the ſophiſters haue triflingly taught concerning the worke wrought, is not onely falſe, but diſagreeth with the nature of the Sacraments, which God hath ordained, that the faithfull being void and needy of all good things ſhould bring nothing thither but beggery. Wherupon followeth that in receiuing them, theſe men doe nothing wherby they may deſerue praiſe: or that in doing (which in this their reſpect is meerely paſſiue) no worke can be aſcribed vnto them.

ſo much extolled the Sacraments of the new teſtament aboue the old.

THE FIFTEENTH CHAPTER.

Of Baptiſme.

The firſt vſe of Baptiſme to be a token of our cleanſing, and therefore not a marke of recognisance and a ſigne of profeſſion onely as ſome would haue it.

BAptiſme is a ſigne of the entring wherewith we are receiued into fellowſhip of the Church: that being graffed into Chriſt, we may be reckoned among the children of God. Now it was giuen vs of God to this end, (which I haue taught to bee common to all the myſteries) firſt, that it ſhould ſerue to our Faith with him, and to our confeſſion before men. We will orderly declare the manner of both purpoſes. Baptiſme bringeth three things to our Faith, which alſo muſt be ſeuerally entreated of. This is the firſt which the Lord ſetteth out vnto vs, that it ſhould be a token and proofe of our cleanſing: or (to expreſſe my minde better) it is like to a certaine ſealed Charter, whereby he confirmeth vnto vs, that all our ſinnes are ſo defaced, cancelled, and blotted out, that they may neuer come in his ſight, nor be rehearſed, nor be imputed. For he willeth that all they that beleeue, ſhould be baptiſed into forgiueneſſe of ſinnes. Therefore they which thought that Baptiſme is nothing elſe but a marke and token whereby whereby we profeſſe our religion before men, as ſouldiers beare the conuſance of their Captaine for a marke of their profeſſion, weigh not that which was the chiefe thing in Baptiſme. That is this, that we ſhould receiue it with this promiſe, that whoſoeuer beleeue and are baptiſed, ſhall be ſaued. Mar. 16. 16.

2 In this ſenſe is that to bee vnderſtood which Paul writeth, that the Church is ſanctified of Chriſt her ſpouſe, and cleanſed with waſhing of water in the word of life. And in another place, that we are ſaued according to his mercie by the waſhing of regeneration and of the renuing of the holy Ghoſt. And that which Peter writeth that Baptiſme ſaueth vs. For Pauls will was not to ſignifie, that our waſhing and ſaluation is perfectly made by water, or that water containeth in it ſelfe the power to cleanſe, regenerate and renue. Neither did Peter meane the cauſe of ſaluation, but onely the knowledge and certaintie of ſuch gifts to bee receiued in this Sacrament: which is euidently enough expreſſed in the words themſelues. For Paul knitteth together the word of life, and Baptiſme of water: as if he had ſaid, that by the Goſpell the meſſage of waſhing and ſanctifiyng is brought vs, that by Baptiſme ſuch meſſage is ſealed. And Peter immediately adioyneth, that that Baptiſme is not the putting away of the filthineſſe of the fleſh, but a good conſcience before God, which is of faith. Yea Baptiſme promiſeth vs no other cleanſing, but by the ſprinkling of the blood of Chriſt: which is figured by water, for the likeneſſe of cleanſing and waſhing. Who therefore can ſay that wee be cleanſed by this water, which certainely teſtifieth that the blood of Chriſt is our true and onely waſhing? So that from no where elſe can be fetched a ſurer reaſon to confute their blinde error which referre all things to the power of the water, than from the ſignification of Baptiſme it ſelfe: which doth withdraw vs as wel from that viſible element which is ſet before our eies, as from all other meanes, that it may binde our mindes to Chriſt alone. Our cleanſing was made by Baptiſme as by a cauſe but manifeſted by it as by a ſigne. Ephe. 5. 26. Tit. 3. 5. 1. Pet. 3. 21.

3 Neither is it to be thought that Baptiſme is applied onely to the time paſt, that for new fallings, into which we fall backe after Baptiſme, wee muſt ſeeke new remedies of cleanſing, in I wot not what other Sacraments, as though the force of Baptiſme were worne out of vſe. By this errour it came to paſſe in olde time, that ſome would not be baptiſed but in the vttermoſt perill of life, and at their laſt gaſpings, that ſo they might obtaine pardon of their whole life. Againſt which wayward ſubtle prouiſion the old Biſhops ſo oft inueigh in their writings. But thus we ought to thinke, that at what time ſoeuer wee bee baptiſed, we are at once waſhed and cleanſed for all our life. Therefore ſo oft as wee fall we muſt goe backe to the remembrance of Baptiſme, and therewith we muſt arme our minde, that it may be alway certaine and aſſured of the forgiueneſſe of ſinnes. For though when it is once mininſtred, it ſeemeth to be paſt, yet by later ſinnes it is not aboliſhed. For the cleanneſſe of Chriſt is therein offered vs: that alway flouriſheth, is oppreſſed with no ſports, but ouerwhelmeth and wipeth away all our filthineſſe: yet ought we not to take thereof a libertie to ſinne in time to come (as verily we be not hereby armed to ſuch boldneſſe) but this doctrine is giuen onely to them, which when they haue ſinned, doe groane wearied and oppreſſed vnder their ſinnes, that they may haue wherewith they may raiſe vp and comfort themſelues, leaſt they ſhould fall into confuſion and deſperation. So Paul ſaith, that Chriſt was made to vs a Propitiator, vnto the forgiuenes of faults going before. Wherein he denieth not that therein is obtained perpetuall and continuall forgiueneſſe of ſins euen vnto death: but he meaneth that it was giuen of the father, onely to poore ſinners, which wounded with the ſearing iron of conſcience, doe ſigh to the Phiſition. To theſe the mercie of God is offered. They which by eſcaping of puniſhment doe hunt for matter and libertie to ſinne, doe nothing but prouoke to themſelues the wrath and iudgement of God. Baptiſme a confirmation of the waſhing out of all ſin and not onely of ſinnes paſt before we be baptiſed. Rom. 3. 25.

4 I know indeed that it is commonly thought otherwiſe: that by the benefit of repentance and of the keies we doe after Baptiſme obtaine forgiueneſſe, which at our firſt regeneration is giuen vs onely by Baptiſme. But they which deuiſe this doe erre herein that they doe not remember that the power of the keies, whereof they ſpeake, doth ſo hang vpon Baptiſme that it ought in no wiſe to bee ſeuered. The ſinner receiueth forgiueneſſe by the miniſterie of the Church, namely not without the preaching of The force of Baptiſme as well as repentance extended throughout our whole life.

of the Goſpell. But what maner of preaching is that? That we be cleanſed from ſins by the blood of Chriſt. But what ſigne and teſtimonie is there of that waſhing, but Baptiſme? We ſee therefore how that abſolution is referred to Baptiſme. And this error hath bred vs the faigned Sacrament of Penance: of which I haue touched ſomewhat before, and the reſidue I will make an end of in place fit for it. But it is no maruell if men, which according to the groſſeneſſe of their wit were immeaſurably faſt tied to outward things, haue in this behalfe alſo bewrayed that fault, that not contented with the pure inſtitution of God, they did thruſt in new helpes faigned of themſelues. As though Baptiſme it ſelfe were not a Sacrament of repentance. But if repentance be commended to vs for our whole life, the force alſo of Baptiſme ought to be extended to the ſame boundes. Wherefore it is alſo no doubt but that all the godly throughout all their life long, ſo oft as they be vexed with knowledge in conſcience of their owne ſinnes, dare call backe themſelues to the remembrance of Baptiſme, that thereby they may confirme themſelues in the aſſiance of that onely and continuall waſhing which we haue in the blood of Chriſt.

A ſecond vſe of Baptiſme to ſhew vs our mortification and newneſſe of life. Rom.6.3.

5 It bringeth alſo another fruit, becauſe it ſheweth vs our mortification in Chriſt, and new life in him. For (as the Apoſtle ſaith) we are baptiſed into his death, being buried together with him into death, that we may walke in newneſſe of life. By which words he doth not onely exhort vs to the following of him (as though he did ſay, that we are by Baptiſme put in minde, that after a certaine example of the death of Chriſt, we ſhould die to our luſtes: and after the example of his reſurrection, we ſhould be raiſed vp to righteouſneſſe,) but he fetcheth the matter much deeper: that is to ſay, that by Baptiſme Chriſt hath made vs partakers of his death, that we may be graffed into it. And as the graffe receiueth ſubſtance and nouriſhment of the roote into which it is graffed: ſo they that receiue Baptiſme with ſuch faith as they ought, doe truely feele the effectualneſſe of the death of Chriſt in the mortyfying of their fleſh: and therewithall alſo they feele the effect of his reſurrection in the quickning of the Spirit. Hereupon he gathereth matter of exhortation: that if we be Chriſtians, we ought to be dead to ſinne, and to liue to righteouſneſſe. This ſelfe ſame argument he vſeth in another place that we be circumciſed, and haue put off the olde man, ſince that we be buried in Chriſt by Baptiſme. And in this ſenſe, in the ſame place which we haue before alleadged, he called it the waſhing of regeneration and of renuing. Therefore firſt free forgiueneſſe of ſinnes and imputation of righteouſneſſe is promiſed vs, and then the grace of the holy Ghoſt, which may reforme vs into newneſſe of life.

Col.2.12. Tit.3.5.

A third vſe of Baptiſme to teſtifie our ingraffing into Chriſt, and partaking of his graces. Math.3.13. Gal 3.27. Act.8.16. & 19.5. Matt.28.19.

6 Laſt of all our faith receiueth alſo this profit of Baptiſme, that it certainely teſtifieth vnto vs, that we are not onely graffed into the death and life of Chriſt, but that we are ſo vnited to Chriſt himſelfe that we are partakers of all his good things. For therefore hee hath dedicated and hallowed Baptiſme in his owne bodie, that hee might haue it common with vs, as a moſt ſtrong bonde of the vnitie and fellowſhip which he vouchaſafed to enter into with vs: ſo that Paul prooueth thereby that we be the children of God, becauſe we haue put on Chriſt in Baptiſme. So we ſee that the fulfilling of Baptiſme is in Chriſt, whom alſo for this reaſon we call the proper obiect of Baptiſme. Therefore it is no maruell if it be reported that the Apoſtles baptiſed into his name, which yet were commanded to baptiſe into the name of the Father alſo and of the holy Ghoſt. For whatſoeuer gifts of God are ſet foorth in Baptiſme, are found in Chriſt alone. And yet it cannot be, but that he which baptiſeth into Chriſt, doth therewithall call vpon the name of the Father and of the holy Ghoſt. For we are therefore cleanſed with his bloud, becauſe the merciſull father according to his incomparable kindneſſe, willing to receiue vs into fauour, hath ſet him a mediatour in the midſt to procure to vs fauour with him. But regeneration we ſo onely obtaine, by his death and reſurrection, if being ſanctified by the ſpirit we be endued with a new and ſpirituall nature. Wherefore both of our cleanſing and regeneration we obtaine and after a certaine maner diſtinctly perceiue the cauſe in the Father, the matter in the Sonne, and the effect in the holy Ghoſt. So Iohn firſt baptiſed, ſo afterward the Apoſtles, with the baptiſme of repentance into the forgiueneſſe of ſinnes: meaning by this word repentance, ſuch regeneration: and by forgiueneſſe of ſinnes, waſhing.

Matt.3.6. Luke 3.1.6. Iohn 3.23. & 4.1.

7 Whereby

7 Whereby alſo it is made moſt certaine, that the miniſterie of Iohn was altogether the ſame which was afterward committed to the Apoſtles. For the diuers hands wherewith it is miniſtred, make not the baptiſme diuers: but the ſame doctrine ſheweth it to be the ſame baptiſme. Iohn and the Apoſtles agreed into one doctrine: both baptiſed into repentance, both into the forgiueneſſe of ſinnes, both into the name of Chriſt, from whom was both repentance and forgiueneſſe of ſinnes. Iohn ſaid that he was the lambe of God, by whom the ſinnes of the world ſhould be taken away: where he made him the ſacrifice acceptable to the Father, the Propitiator of righteouſneſſe, the author of ſaluation. What could the Apoſtles adde to this confeſſion? Wherefore let it trouble no man, that the old writers labour to ſeuer the one from the other, whoſe voice we ought not ſo much to eſteeme that it may ſhake the certaintie of the Scripture. For who will rather harken to Chryſoſtome denying that forgiueneſſe of ſinnes was comprehended in the baptiſme of Iohn, than to Luke contrariwiſe affirming that Iohn preached the baptiſme of repentance into the forgiueneſſe of ſinne? Neither is that ſubtlety of Auguſtine to be receiued, that in the baptiſme of Iohn ſinnes were forgiuen in hope, but in the baptiſme of Chriſt they are forgiuen in deede. For whereas the Euangeliſt plainely teſtifieth, that Iohn in his baptiſme promiſed the forgiueneſſe of ſinnes: what neede we to abate this title of commendation, when no neceſſitie compelleth vs vnto it? But if any man ſeeke for a difference out of the word of God, he ſhall finde none other but this, that Iohn baptiſed into him that was to come, the Apoſtles into him that had already preſented himſelfe.

The baptiſme of Iohn the ſame with that which the Apoſtles miniſtred how ſoeuer the old writers Chryſoſtome, and Auguſtine ſeuer the one from the other.

Luke 3. 16.
Act. 19. 4.

8 As for this that more aboundant graces of the Spirit were poured out ſince the reſurrection of Chriſt, it maketh nothing to ſtabliſh a diuerſitie of baptiſme. For the baptiſme which the Apoſtles miniſtred while he was yet conuerſant in earth, was called his: yet it had no larger plentifulneſſe of the ſpirit, than the baptiſme of Iohn. Yea, euen after his aſcenſion, the Spirit was not giuen to the Samaritans aboue the common meaſure of the faithfull before the aſcenſion, although they were baptiſed into the name of Ieſus, till Peter and Iohn were ſent vnto them to lay their hands vpon them. This onely thing, as I thinke, deceiued the old writers, that they ſaid that the baptiſme of Iohn was but a preparation to the baptiſme of Chriſt, becauſe they reade, that they were baptiſed againe of Paul, which had once receiued the baptiſme of Iohn. But how much they were heerein deceiued, ſhall elſe where be plainely declared in place fit for it. What is it therefore that Iohn ſaid, that he baptiſed in deed with water, but that Chriſt ſhould come which ſhould baptiſe with the holy Ghoſt, and with fire? This may in few words be aſſoyled. For he meant not to put difference betweene the one baptiſme and the other, but he compared his owne perſon with the perſon of Chriſt, ſaying, that himſelfe was a miniſter of water, but that Chriſt was the giuer of the holy Ghoſt, and ſhould declare his power by viſible myracle the ſame day that he ſhould ſend the holy Ghoſt to the Apoſtles vnder firie tongues. What could the Apoſtles boaſt of more than this? What more could they alſo that baptiſe at this day? For they be onely miniſters of the outward ſigne, and Chriſt is the author of the inward grace: as the ſame old writers themſelues doe euery where teach, and ſpecially Auguſtine, whoſe principall ſtay againſt the Donatiſts is this, that what a one ſoeuer he be that baptiſeth, yet onely Chriſt is ruler of it.

The baptiſing not diuerſe becauſe the graces of the ſpirit were diuers which followed the miniſterie of Iohn, and of Chriſts Apoſtles, yea euen of the Apoſtles before and after Chriſts aſcenſion.

Act. 2. 3.

9 Theſe things which we haue ſpoken both of mortification and of waſhing, are ſhadowed out in the people of Iſrael, whom for the ſame cauſe the Apoſtle ſaith to haue beene baptiſed in the cloud and in the ſea. Mortifying was figured, when the Lord deliuering them out of the hand of Pharao and from cruell bondage, made for them a way through the red ſea, and drowned Pharao himſelfe, and the Ægyptians their enemies, that followed them hard at their backs, and were euen in their necks to ouertake them. For after the ſame maner alſo he promiſeth to vs in baptiſme, and by a ſigne giuen ſheweth vs, that we are by his power brought forth and deliuered out of the thraldome of Ægypt, that is to ſay out of the bondage of ſinne: that our Pharao is drowned, that is to ſay the diuel, although euen ſo alſo he ceaſeth not to exerciſe & wearie vs. But as that Ægyptian was not throwen downe into the bottome of the ſea, but being ouerthrowen on the ſhore, did yet with terrible ſight make the Iſraelites afraid, but could not hurt them:

them: so this our enemie yet indeed threatneth, sheweth his weapons, is felt, but cannot ouercome. In the cloud was a signe of cleansing. For as then the Lord couered thē with a cloud cast ouer them, and gaue them refreshing cold, least they should faint and pine away with too cruell burning of the Sunne: so in Baptisme we acknowledge our selues couered and defended with the blood of Christ, least the seueritie of God, which is indeed an intollerable flame, should lie vpon vs. But although this mysterie was then darke and knowen to few: yet because there is none other way to obtaine saluation, but in those two graces, God would not take away the signe of them both from the old Fathers, whom he had adopted to be heires.

Faithfull men by Baptisme not rid of original sinne, but certified first that condemnation whereunto the corruption of their nature hath made them subiect, is done away.

10 Now it is cleare, how false that is which some haue lately taught, and wherein some yet continue, that by Baptisme we be loosed and deliuered from originall sinne, and from the corruption which was from Adam spread abroad into his whole posteritie, and that wee bee restored into the same righteousnesse and pureneſſe of nature, which Adam should haue obtained, if he had stood fast in the same vprightnesse wherin he was first created. For such kinde of teachers neuer vnderstood what was originall sinne, nor what was originall righteousnesse, nor what was the grace of Baptisme. But we haue alreadie prooued, that originall sinne is the peruersnesse and corruption of our nature, which first maketh vs guiltie of the wrath of God, and then also bringeth foorth works in vs, which the Scripture calleth the works of the flesh. Therefore these two points are seuerally to be marked, namely that we being in all parts of our nature defiled and corrupted are alreadie for such corruption onely, holden worthily condemned and conuicted before God, to whom nothing is acceptable but righteousnesse, innocencie and cleanneſſe. Yea, and very Infants themselues bring their owne damnation with them from their mothers wombe. Who, although they haue not yet brought foorth the fruits of their iniquitie, yet haue the seede thereof inclosed within them. Yea, their whole nature is a certaine seede of sinne, therefore it cannot but bee hatefull and abhominable to God. The Faithfull are certified by Baptisme that this damnation is taken away, and driuen from them: forasmuch (as we haue already said) the Lord doth by this signe promise vs that full and perfect forgiueneſſe is granted both of the fault which should haue beene imputed to vs, and of the paine which wee should haue suffered for the fault: they take hold also of righteousnesse, but such as the people of God may obtaine in this life, that is to say by imputation onely: because the Lord of his owne mercy taketh them for righteous and innocent.

Gal. 5.19.

Secondly that the works of the flesh shall not beare rule and haue dominion ouer them.

11 The other point is, that this peruersnesse neuer ceasseth in vs, but continually bringeth foorth new fruits, namely those workes of the flesh which wee haue before described: none otherwise than a burning furnace continually bloweth out flame and sparkles, or as a spring infinitely casteth out water. For lust neuer vtterly dieth and is quenched in men, vntill being by death deliuered out of the bodie of death, they haue vtterly put off themselues. Baptisme indeed promiseth vs that our Pharao is drowned, and the mortification of sinne: yet not so that it is no more, or may no more trouble vs, but onely that it may not ouercome vs. For so long as we liue enclosed within this prison of our bodie, the remnants of sinne shall dwell in vs: but if we hold fast by Faith the promise giuen vs of God in Baptisme, they shall not beare rule nor raigne. But let no man deceiue himselfe: Let no man flatter himselfe in his owne euill, when he heareth that sinne alway dwelleth in vs. These things are not spoken to this end, that they should carelesly sleepe vpon their sinnes, which are otherwise too much inclined to sinne: but only, that they should not faint and be discouraged, which are tickled and pricked of their flesh. Let them rather thinke that they are yet in the way, and let them beleeue that they haue much profited, when they feele that there is daily somewhat minished of their lust, till they haue attained thither whether they trauaile, namely to the last death of their flesh, which shall bee ended in the dying of this mortall life. In the meane time let them not ceasse both to striue valiantly, and to encourage them to goe forward and to stirre them vp to full victorie. For this also ought more to whet on their endeuours, that they see that after that they haue long trauailed, they haue yet no small businesse remayning. This wee ought to hold: wee are baptised into the mortifiyng of our flesh, which is begun by Baptisme in vs, which we dayly follow: but it ſhall be made perfect when we ſhall remoove out of this life to the Lord.

12 Heere we ſay no other thing, than the Apoſtle Paul in the ſeuenth Chapter to the Romanes moſt clearely ſetteth out. For after that he had diſputed of free righteouſneſſe, becauſe ſome wicked men did thereof gather, that we might liue after our owne luſt, becauſe we ſhould not be acceptable to God by the deſeruings of works: he addeth, that all they that are clothed with the righteouſneſſe of Chriſt, are therewith regenerate in Spirit, and that of this regeneration wee haue an earneſt in baptiſme. Heereupon he exhorteth the faithfull, that they ſuffer not ſinne to haue dominion in their members. Now becauſe he knew that there is alway ſome weakeneſſe in the faithfull: that they ſhould not therefore be diſcouraged, he adioyneth a comfort, that they are not vnder the law. Becauſe againe it might ſeeme, that Chriſtians might grow inſolent, becauſe they are not vnder the yoke of the law, he entreateth what maner of abrogating that is, and therewithall what is the vſe of the law: which queſtion he had now the ſecond time differred. The ſumme is, that we be deliuered from the rigor of the law, that we ſhould cleaue to Chriſt: but that the office of the law is, that we being conuinced of our peruerſeneſſe, ſhould confeſſe our owne weakeneſſe and miſerie. Now foraſmuch as that peruerſeneſſe of nature doth not ſo eaſilie appeare in a prophane man, which followeth his owne luſt without feare of God: he ſetteth an example in a man regenerate, namely in himſelfe. He ſaith therefore that he hath a continuall wraſtling with the remnants of his fleſh, and that he is holden bound with miſerable bondage, that he cannot conſecrate himſelfe wholy to the obedience of the law of God. Therefore he is compelled with groning to crie out. Vnhappy am I. Who ſhall deliuer me out of this body ſubiect to death? If the children of God be holden captiue in priſon ſo long as they liue, they muſt needs be much carefully grieued with thinking vpon their owne perill, vnleſſe this feare be met withall. Therefore he adioyneth to this vſe a comfort, that there is no more damnation to them that are in Chriſt Ieſu. Where he teacheth, that they whom the Lord hath once receiued into fauour, engraffed into the communion of his Chriſt, hath by baptiſme admitted into the fellowſhip of his Church, while they continue in the faith of Chriſt, although they be beſieged of ſinne, yea and carrie ſinne about within them, yet are acquited from guiltineſſe and condemnation. If this be the ſimple and naturall expoſition of Paul, there is no cauſe why we ſhould ſeeme to teach any new vnwonted thing.

Baptiſme according to S. Paul the earneſt of our regeneration, the weakeneſſe of our nature hereunto, and the greatneſſe of our comfort notwithſtanding this weakeneſſe.

Rom. 6. 14.

Rom. 7. 24.

Rom. 8.

13 But Baptiſme ſo ſerueth our confeſſion before men. For it is a marke, whereby we openly profeſſe that we ſhould be accounted among the people of God: whereby we teſtifie that we agree with all Chriſtians into the worſhipping of one God and into one religion: finally, whereby we openly affirme our Faith: that not onely our harts ſhould breath out the praiſe of God, but alſo our tongues, and all the members of our body ſhould ſound it out with ſuch vtterances as they be able. For ſo, as we ought, all our things are imployed to the ſeruice of the glorie of God, whereof nothing ought to be void, and other may by our example be ſtirred vp to the ſame endeuours. Heereunto Paul had reſpect, when he asked the Corinthians whether they had not beene baptiſed into the name of Chriſt: meaning verily, that euen in this that they were baptiſed into his name, they auowed themſelues vnto him, ſwore to his name, and bound their Faith to him before men, that they could no more confeſſe any other, but Chriſt alone, vnleſſe they would forſake the confeſſion which they had made in Baptiſme.

Baptiſme the badge of our profeſſion.

1. Cor. 1. 2.

14 Now ſith it is declared what our Lord had regard vnto in the inſtitution of Baptiſme: it is plaine to iudge what is the way for vs to vſe and receiue it. For ſo far as it is giuen to the raiſing, nouriſhing and confirming of our Faith, it is to be taken as from the hand of the Author himſelfe: we ought to hold it certaine and fully perſwaded, that it is he which ſpeaketh to vs by the ſigne, that it is he which cleanſeth vs, waſheth vs, and putteth away the remembrance of our ſinnes, that it is he which maketh vs partakers of his death, which taketh away from Satan his kingdome, which feebleth the forces of our luſt, yea which groweth into one with vs, that being cloathed with him we may be reckoned the children of God: that theſe things, I ſay, he

The Author of baptiſme is alſo the worker of grace ſpirituall therein figured not incloſed.

he doth inwardly ſo truely and certainely performe to our Soule, as we certainely ſee our bodie outwardly to be waſhed, dipped, and cloathed. For this either relation, or ſimilitude, is the moſt ſure rule of Sacraments: that in bodily things wee ſhould behold ſpirituall things, as if they were preſently ſet before our eies, foraſmuch as it hath pleaſed the Lord to repreſent them by ſuch figures: not for that ſuch graces are bound and encloſed in the Sacrament, that they ſhould bee giuen vs by the force thereof: but onely becauſe the Lord doth by this token teſtifie his will vnto vs that is, that hee will giue vs all theſe things. Neither doth he onely feede our eyes with a naked ſight, but he bringeth vs to the thing preſent, and together fulfilleth that which it figureth.

Cornelius and Paul by Baptiſme not indued with grace but aſſured that they were endued through faith, without which, Baptiſme doth but teſtifie our vnthankfulneſſe.

15 Heereof let Cornelius the Captaine be an example, which was baptiſed, hauing before receiued forgiueneſſe of ſinnes and viſible graces of the holy Ghoſt: ſeeking not by Baptiſme a larger forgiueneſſe but a more certaine exerciſing of faith, yea an increaſe of confidence by a pledge. Peraduenture ſome man will obiect: why therefore did Ananias ſay to Paul, that he ſhould waſh away his ſinnes by Baptiſme, if ſinnes be not waſhed away by the power of Baptiſme it ſelfe? I anſwere: Wee are ſaid to receiue, to obtaine, to get that which ſo farre as concerneth the feeling of our faith, is giuen vs of the Lord, whether he doe then firſt teſtifie it, or being teſtified doth more and certainlier confirme it. This therefore onely was the meaning of Ananias: that thou maieſt bee aſſured Paul, that thy ſinnes are forgiuen thee, bee baptiſed. For the Lord doth in Baptiſme promiſe forgiueneſſe of ſinnes: receiue this, and bee out of care. Howbeit I meane not to diminiſh the force of Baptiſme, but that the thing and the trueth is preſent with the ſigne, ſo farre as God worketh by outward meanes. But of this Sacrament, as of all other, we obtaine nothing but ſo much as we receiue by faith. If we want faith, it ſhall be for a witneſſe of our vnthankfulneſſe, whereby we may be declared guiltie before God, becauſe we haue not beleeued the promiſe there giuen. But ſo farre as it is a ſigne of our confeſſion, we ought by it to teſtifie that our affiance is in the mercie of God, and our cleanneſſe is in the forgiueneſſe of ſins, which is gotten vs by Ieſus Chriſt: and that by it we enter into the Church of Chriſt, that wee may with one conſent of faith and charitie liue in one minde with all the faithfull. This laſt point did Paul meane, when he ſaith that we are all baptiſed into one Spirit, that we may be one bodie.

Act. 10.48.
Act. 9.17.

1. Cor. 12.13.

Nothing added vnto or taken from Baptiſme by their worthineſſe or vnworthineſſe which are miniſters of it: and therefore rebaptization not to be receiued.

16 Now if this bee true which we determine, that a Sacrament is not to be waied according to his hand of whom it is miniſtred, but as of the very hand of God, from whom without doubt it proceeded: heereupon we may gather that nothing is added to it nor taken from it by the woorthineſſe of him by whoſe hand it is deliuered. And euen as among men, if a letter be ſent, ſo that the hand and the ſeale be well knowen, it maketh no matter who or what manner of man bee the carrier: ſo it ought to ſuffice to know the hand and ſeale of the Lord in his Sacraments, by what carrier ſoeuer they be brought. Hereby the error of the Donatiſts is very well confuted, which meaſured the force and value of the Sacrament by the worthineſſe of the Miniſter. Such at this day are our Catabaptiſts, which denie that we be rightly baptiſed, becauſe wee were baptiſed by wicked men and Idolaters in the Popiſh kingdome: therefore they furiouſly call vpon vs to be baptiſed againe. Againſt whoſe follies wee ſhall be armed with a reaſon ſtrong enough, if we thinke that wee were profeſſed by Baptiſme not into the name of any man, but into the name of the Father, the Sonne, and the holy Ghoſt, and that therefore it is not the Baptiſme of man, but of God, of whomſoeuer it bee miniſtred. Although they were neuer ſo much ignorant or deſpiſers of God and all godlineſſe, which baptiſed vs, yet they did not baptiſe vs into the fellowſhip of their owne ignorance or ſacriledge, but into the faith of Ieſus Chriſt: becauſe they called not vpon their owne name, but the name of God, nor baptiſed vs into any other name. Now if it were the baptiſme of God, it hath verily incloſed in it a promiſe of the forgiueneſſe of ſinnes, the mortifiyng of the fleſh, the ſpirituall quickning, and the partaking of Chriſt. So it nothing hindered the Iewes, to haue beene circumciſed of vncleane Prieſts and Apoſtataes: neither was the ſigne therefore voide, that it needed to bee done of new: but it was ſufficient to returne to the naturall beginning. Where they obiect that Matt. 28.19.

Baptiſme

Baptiſme ought to be celebrate in the aſſemblies of the godly, that prooueth not, that that which is faulty in part, ſhould deſtroy the whole force thereof. For when we teach what ought to be done that Baptiſme may be pure, and voide of all defiling, we doe not aboliſh the ordinance of God, although idolaters corrupt it. For when in old time Circumciſion was corrupted with many ſuperſtitions, yet it ceaſed not to be taken for a ſigne of grace: neither did Ioſias and Ezechias, when they gathered out of all Iſrael them that had departed from God, call them to a ſecond Circumciſion.

17 Now whereas they aske vs, what faith of ours hath yet followed Baptiſme in certaine yeeres paſt, that they thereby might prooue that the Baptiſme is voide, when it is not ſanctified vnto vs, but by the word of promiſe receiued by faith: to this queſtion we anſwer that we indeed being blinde and vnbeleeuing, did in a long time not hold faſt the promiſe giuen vs in baptiſme: yet the promiſe it ſelfe, for as much as it was of God, continued alway ſtaied, ſteadfaſt, and true. Although all men be liers and faithbreakers, yet God ceaſeth not to be true: although all men be loſt, yet Chriſt remaineth ſaluation. We confeſſe therefore that Baptiſme, for that time profited vs nothing at all: for as much as in it the promiſe offered vs, without which Baptiſme is nothing, lay nothing regarded. Now ſith by the grace of God, we haue begun to wax wiſer, we accuſe our owne blindneſſe and hardneſſe of heart, which haue ſo long beene vnthankfull to his ſo great goodneſſe. But we beleeue that the promiſe it ſelfe is not vaniſhed away: but rather thus we conſider. God by baptiſme promiſeth the forgiueneſſe of ſinnes, and ſith he hath promiſed it, will vndoubtedly performe it to all that beleeue it. That promiſe was offered vs in Baptiſme: by faith therefore let vs imbrace it. It hath indeed long beene buried from vs becauſe of infidelity: now therfore let vs receiue it by faith. Wherefore where the Lord calleth the Iewiſh people to repentance, he giueth them no commandement of a ſecond Circumciſion, which being (as we haue ſaid) circumciſed with a wicked and vngodly hand, liued a certaine time intangled with the ſame wickedneſſe. But he earneſtly calleth vpon the onely turning of the heart. Becauſe, howſoeuer the couenant was broken of them, yet the ſigne of the couenant, by the ordinance of the Lord, remained alwaies ſteadfaſt and inuiolable. Therefore with the onely condition of repentance they were reſtored into the couenant which the Lord had once made with them in circumciſion: which yet being receiued by the hand of a League-breaker prieſt, ſo much as in them lay, they had defiled againe, and the effect whereof they had quenched.

Baptiſme not made void by their remaining a long time in blindneſſe that are Baptiſed.

Rom. 3. 3.

18 But they thinke that they ſhake a fiery dart at vs, when they alleage that Paul, rebaptiſed them which were once Baptiſed with the Baptiſme of Iohn. For if by our owne confeſſion, the Baptiſme of Iohn was altogether the ſame that ours is now: euen as they hauing beene before peruerſely inſtructed, when they were taught the true faith, they were againe Baptiſed into it: ſo that Baptiſme, which was without true doctrine, is to be taken for nothing, and we ought to be newly Baptiſed againe into the true religion, wherewith we are now firſt inſtructed. Some thinke, that there was ſome wrongfully affectioned man to Iohn, which had entred them with their firſt Baptiſme rather to a vaine ſuperſtition. Of which thing they ſeeme to gather a coniecture heereupon, becauſe they confeſſed themſelues to be vtterly ignorant of the Holy Ghoſt? whereas Iohn verily would neuer haue ſent away from himſelfe ſchollers ſo vntaught. But neither is it likely that the Iewes although they had not beene Baptiſed at all, were deſtitute of all knowledge of the holy Ghoſt, which is famouſly ſpoken of by ſo many teſtimonies of the ſcripture. Whereas therefore they anſwer that they know not whether there be a holy Ghoſt, it is to be vnderſtanded as if they had ſaid that they haue not yet heard, whether the graces of the Spirit, of which Paul asked them, were giuen to the Diſciples of Chriſt. But I grant that that was the true Baptiſme of Iohn, and all one and the ſelfe ſame with the Baptiſme of Chriſt: but I deny that they were Baptiſed againe. What then meane theſe words, they were baptiſed in the name of Ieſus? Some do expound it, that they were but inſtructed of Paul with true doctrine. But I had rather vnderſtand it more ſimply, to be the Baptiſme of the holy Ghoſt, that is to ſay, that the viſible graces of the Spirit were giuen them by the laying on of hands: which to be expreſſed by the name of Baptiſme, is no new thing. As on the day of Pentecoſt

They whom Iohn had Baptiſed not rebaptiſed by Paul. Act. 19. 3.

Act. 1. 5. it is ſaid, that the Apoſtles remembred the words of the Lord, concerning the Baptiſme of fire and of the ſpirit. And Peter ſaith that the ſame came to his remembrance, when he ſaw thoſe graces powred out vpon Cornelius, and his houſhold and kinred. Neither is that contrary which is after adioyned: When hee had laid his hands on them, the Holy Ghoſt came downe vpon them. For Luke doth not tell of two diuerſe things: but followeth the manner of telling commonly vſed among the Hebrewes, which doe firſt propound the ſumme of the matter, and then doe ſet it out more at large. Which euery man may perceiue by the very framing together of the words. For hee ſaith, When they had heard theſe things, they were Baptiſed in the name of Ieſus. And when Paul had laid his hands vpon them, the holy Ghoſt came downe vpon them. In this latter ſentence is deſcribed, what manner of Baptiſme that was. If ignorance doe ſo corrupt a former Baptiſme, that it muſt be amended with a ſecond Baptiſme: the Apoſtles ſhould haue beene rebaptiſed firſt of all, which in whole three yeeres after their Baptiſme, had ſcarcely taſted any ſmall parcell of purer doctrine. And now among vs what riuers might ſuffice to renew ſo many waſhings, as there be ignorances by the mercy of the Lord daily amended in vs?

Act. 11. 16. Acceſſary inuentions of men added vnto Chriſts inſtitution of Baptiſm.

19 The force, dignity, profit, and end of the myſtery if I be not deceiued, ought by this time to be plaine enough. So much as concerneth the outward ſigne, I would to God the naturall inſtitution of Chriſt had preuailed ſo much as was meet, to reſtraine the boldneſſe of men. For, as though it were a contemptible thing to be Baptiſed with water according to the precept of Chriſt, there is inuented bleſſing, or rather inchanting, to defile the true hallowing of the water. Afterward was added a Taper with Chreſme: but the blowing ſeemeth to open the gat to Baptiſme. But although I am not ignorant, how ancient is the beginning of this added packe: yet it is lawfull both for me and all the godly to refuſe whatſoeuer things men haue preſumed to adde to the ordinance of Chriſt. When Satan ſaw that by the fooliſh light credit of the world at the very beginnings of the Goſpell his deceites were eaſily receiued, he brake foorth into groſſer mockeries. Hereupon ſpittle, and like trifles, were openly brought in with vnbrideled liberty to the reproch of Baptiſme. By which experiences let vs learne that nothing is either holier, or better, or ſafer, than to be content with the authority of Chriſt alone. How much better therefore was it, leauing ſtagelike pompes, which dazell the eies of the ſimple, and dull their mindes, ſo oft as any was to be Baptiſed, that he ſhould be preſented to the aſſembly of the faithfull, and be offered to God, the whole Church looking on as a witneſſe: and praying ouer him: that the confeſſion of faith ſhould be rehearſed, wherewith he that is to be catechiſed ſhould be inſtructed: that the promiſes ſhould be declared which are contained in Baptiſme: that the inſtructed ſhould be Baptiſed in the name of the Father, and the Sonne, and the holy Ghoſt: at length that he be ſent away with praiers and thankſgiuing. So is nothing omitted that might make to the matter, and that the onely Ceremony which proceeded from God the author thereof, ſhould moſt clearly ſhine, being not ouerwhelmed with any forraine filthineſſe. But whether he be wholy dipped which is Baptiſed, and that thrice or once, or whether he be but ſprinckled with water onely powred vpon him, it maketh verie little matter: but that ought to be at liberty to Churches according to the diuerſity of Countries. Howbeit the very word of Baptiſing ſignifieth to dip, and it is certaine that the maner of dipping was vſed of the old Church.

Baptiſme not to be adminiſtred by priuate men.

20 This alſo pertaineth to the purpoſe, to know that it is done amiſſe if priuate men take vpon themſelues the adminiſtration of Baptiſme. For as well the diſtribution of this as of the ſupper is a part of the Eccleſiaſticall miniſtery. For Chriſt did not command women, nor yet euery ſort of men, that they ſhould Baptiſe: but whom he had ordained his Apoſtles, to them he gaue this commandement. And when he commanded his Diſciples to doe that in the miniſtration of the Supper which they had ſeene him doe, when he executed the office of a right diſtributer: he would without doubt, that they ſhould therein follow his example. As for this that in many ages paſt, yea and in a manner at the very beginning of the Church, it hath beene receiued in vſe, that that lay men might baptiſe in perill of death, if the miniſter were not preſent in time. I ſee not with how ſtrong a reaſon it may be defended. The very old fathers themſelues, which either held or ſuffered this maner, were not ſure whether it were well done. For Auguſtine ſeemeth to haue this doubt, when he ſaith: Although a lay man compelled by neceſſitie doe giue baptiſme, I can not tell whether a man may godlily ſay that it ought to be iterate. For if it be done when no neceſſitie compelleth, it is the vſurping of an other mans office: but if neceſſitie enforceth, it is either none or a venial ſinne. Moreouer of women it was decreed without any exception in the Councell at Carthage, that they ſhould not preſume to baptize at all. But there is danger, leaſt if he which is ſicke ſhould die without baptiſme, he ſhould be depriued of the grace of regeneration. Not ſo, God pronounceth that he adopteth our infants to be his owne, before they be borne, when he promiſeth that he will be a God to vs and to our ſeed after vs. In this word is contained their ſaluation. Neither ſhall any man dare to be ſo reprochfull againſt God, to denie that his promiſe is of it ſelfe ſufficient to worke the effect thereof. How much harme that doctrine being euill expounded, that baptiſme is of neceſſitie to ſaluation, hath brought in, few doe marke: and therefore they take leſſe heed to themſelues. For where this opinion is growen in force, that all are loſt to whom it hath not happened to be waſhed with water, our ſtate is worſe than the ſtate of the old people, as though the grace of God were now more narrowly ſtrengthened than it was vnder the law. For Chriſt ſhall be thought to be come, not to fulfill the promiſes, but to aboliſh them: foraſmuch as the promiſe which then was of it ſelfe effectuall enough to giue health before the eight day, now ſhould not be of force without help of the ſigne.

21 But how the cuſtome was before that Auguſtine was borne, firſt is gathered of Tertullian, that it is not permitted to a woman to ſpeake in the Church, nor to teach, nor to baptiſe, nor to offer, that ſhe ſhould not claime to her ſelfe the execution of any mans office, much leſſe of the Prieſts. Of the ſame thing Epiphanius is a ſubſtantiall witneſſe, where he reprocheth Marcion, that he gaue women libertie to baptiſe. Neither am I ignorant of their anſwere which thinke otherwiſe, that is, that common vſe much differeth from extraordinarie remedie, when extreme neceſſitie inforceth: but when he pronouncing that it is a mockerie to giue women libertie to baptiſe, excepteth nothing, it ſufficiently appeareth that he condemneth this corruption, ſo that it is by no colour excuſable. Alſo in the third booke, where teaching that it was not permitted euen to the holie mother of Chriſt, he addeth no reſtraint.

Women not authoriſed to baptiſe.

22 The example of Sephora is vnſeaſonablie alleadged. For whereas the Angell of God was appeaſed, after that ſhe taking a ſtone, circumciſed her ſonne, thereupon it was wrongfully gathered that her doing was allowed of God. Otherwiſe it ought to be ſaid, that the worſhipping which the nations that were brought out of Aſſyria raiſed vp, pleaſed God. But by other ſtrong reaſons it is proued, that that which a fooliſh woman did, is wrongfully drawen to an example of imitation. If I ſhould ſay that it is a certaine ſingular caſe, which ought not to be made an example, and ſpecially that ſith it is no where read that in old time there was giuen to the Prieſts a ſpeciall commandement to circumciſe, the order of Circumciſion and Baptiſme is vnlike: this ſhould be ſtrong enough to confute them. For the words of Chriſt are plaine: Go ye, teach all nations, and baptiſe. When he ordained the ſelfe ſame men publiſhers of the Goſpell, and miniſters of Baptiſme: and none (as the Apoſtle witneſſeth) doeth take honour vpon himſelfe in the Church, but he that is called as Aaron: whoſoeuer without lawfull calling baptiſeth, he ruſheth into an other mans office. Euen in the ſmalleſt things, as in meate and drinke, whatſoeuer wee enterpriſe with a doubtfull conſcience, Paul openly crieth out to be ſinne. Therefore in womens baptiſing is much more grieuouſly ſinne, where it is euident that they brake the rule appointed by Chriſt, foraſmuch as we know that it is vnlawfull to plucke in ſunder thoſe things that God conioyneth. But all this I paſſe ouer. Onely I would haue the readers to note, that Sepheraes purpoſe was nothing leſſe, than to doe any ſeruice to God. Seeing her ſonne to be in danger, ſhe grudged, and murmured, and not without ſtomacking threw the foreskin vpon the ground, ſhe ſo taunted her husband, that ſhe was alſo angry with God. Finally it is plaine that all this came of a furiousnesse of minde, because she murmured against God and hir husband, for that she was compelled to shed the blood of hir sonne. Moreouer if she had in all other things behaued herselfe well, yet herein is an vnexcusable rash presumption that she circumcised hir sonne, hir husband being present, not any priuate man, but Moses the principall Prophet of God, than whom there neuer rose any greater in Israel: which was no more lawfull for her to doe, than at this day it is for women in the sight of the Bishop. But this controuersie shal by & by be easily taken away by this principle, that infants are not debarred from the kingdome of heauē whom it happeneth to depart out of this present life before that it be granted them to be dipped in water. But it is already prooued that no small wrong is done to the couenant of God, if we do not rest in it, as though it were weake of it selfe: wheras the effect thereof hangeth neither vpon Baptisme, nor vpon any additions. There is afterward added to it a Sacrament like a seale, not that it bringeth effectualnesse to the promise of God as to a thing weake of it selfe, but onely confirmeth it to vs. Whereupon followeth, that the children of the faithfull are not therefore Baptised, that they may then first be made the children of God, which before were strangers from the Church, but rather that they be therefore receiued by a solemne signe into the Church, because by the benefite of the promise they did already belong to the body of Christ. Therefore if in omitting the signe there be neither slothfulnesse, nor contempt, nor negligence, we are free from all danger. It is therefore much more holy, to giue this reuerence to the ordinance of God, that wee seeke Sacraments from no where else, than where the Lord hath left them. When we may not haue them of the Church, the grace of God is not so bound to them but that we may obtaine them by faith out of the word of the Lord.

THE SIXTEENTH CHAPTER.

That the Baptisme of Infants doth very well agree with the institution of Christ and the nature of the signe.

The Baptising of infants not deuised and receiued onely by the rashnesse of men without warrant from God himselfe.

BVt forasmuch as in this age, certaine phrantike Spirits haue raised vp sore troubles in the Church for the Baptisme of infants, and doe not yet cease to turmoile: I cannot choose but I must ioyne heere an addition to restraine their furiousnesse. If peraduenture it shall seeme to some man to be very much too long, let him (I beseech him) weigh with himselfe, that we ought so much to esteeme the pureneſse of doctrine in a most great matter, together with the peace of the Church, that nothing ought to be lothsomly receiued, which may auaile to procure them both. Beside that, I so study to frame this discourse, that it shall be of no small importance to the clearer declaration of the mystery of Baptisme. They assaile the Baptisme of infants with an argument indeed fauourable in shew, saying that it is grounded vpon no institution of Christ, but that it was brought in onely by the boldnesse of men, and peruerse curiousnesse, and then afterward with fond easinesse rashly receiued in vse. For a Sacrament, vnlesse it rest vpon a certaine foundation of the word of God, hangeth but by a threed. But what if, when the matter is well considered, it shall appeare that the Lords holy ordinance is falsely and vniustly charged with such a slander? Let vs therefore search out the first beginning of it. And if it shall appeare, that it was deuised by the onely rashnesse of men, then bidding it farewell, let vs measure the true obseruation of baptisme by the onely will of God. But if it shall be proued that it is not destitute of his certaine authority, we must beware, least in pinching the holy ordinances of God, we be also slanderous against the author himselfe.

The right consideration of Baptisme grounded vpon the promise and spirituall misterye thereof, not vpon the outward ceremony alone.

2 First it is a doctrine well enough knowen, and confessed among all the godly, that the right consideration of the signes, consisteth not onely in the outward ceremonies: but principally hangeth vpon the promise, and vpon the spirituall mysteries, for figuring whereof the Lord ordaineth the ceremonies themselues. Therfore he that will perfectly learne of what value baptisme is, to what end it tendeth, finally what it is: let him not stay his thought vpon the element & bodily sight: but rather let him raise it vp to the promises of God, which are therein offered vs, and to the inward secrets which are are therein repreſented vnto vs. He that knoweth theſe things hath attained the ſound truth of Baptiſme, and the whole ſubſtance thereof as I may ſo call it: and thereby alſo he ſhall be taught, what is the reaſon, and what is the vſe of the outward ſprinkling. Againe, he that contemptuouſly paſſing ouer theſe, ſhall haue his minde wholly faſtened and bound to the viſible ceremonie, ſhall vnderſtand neither the force nor property of Baptiſme: nor yet ſo much as this, what the water meaneth, or what vſe it hath. Which ſentence is prooued with ſó many and ſo cleere teſtimonies of Scripture, that we need not at this preſent to tarry long about it. Therefore it remaineth now, that we ſeeke out of the promiſes giuen in Baptiſme, what is the force and nature of it. The ſcripture ſheweth, that the clenſing of ſinnes, which we obtaine of the blood of Chriſt, is heere firſt ſhewed: then the mortifying of the fleſh, which ſtandeth vpon the partaking of his death, by which the faithfull are regenerate into newneſſe of life, yea, and into the fellowſhip of Chriſt. To this ſumme may be referred whatſoeuer is taught in the Scriptures concerning baptiſme: ſauing that beſide this it is a ſigne to teſtifie religion before men.

The vſe of circumciſion vnder the law.

3 But foraſmuch as before the inſtitution of baptiſme, the people of God had circumciſion in ſtead thereof: let vs ſee what theſe two ſignes differ the one from the other, and with what likeneſſe they agree together. Whereupon may appeere what is the relation of the one to the other. Where the Lord gaue circumciſion to Abraham to be kept, he telleth him before, that he would be God to him and to his ſeed: adding, that with him is the flowing ſtore and ſuffiſance of all things, that Abraham ſhould account that his hand ſhould be to him a ſpring of all good things. In which words the promiſe of eternal life is contained, as Chriſt expoundeth it, bringing an argument from hence to prooue the immortality of the faithfull, and the reſurrection. For God (ſaith he) is not the God of the dead, but of the liuing. Wherefore Paul alſo ſhewing to the Epheſians from what deſtruction the Lord had deliuered them, gathereth by this that they had not beene admitted into the couenant of circumciſion, that they were without Chriſt, without God, without hope, ſtrangers from the teſtaments of the promiſe: all which things the couenant it ſelfe contained. But the firſt acceſſe to God, the firſt entrie to immortall life, is the forgiueneſſe of ſinnes. Whereupon is gathered, that this forgiueneſſe anſwereth to the promiſe of Baptiſme concerning our clenſing. Afterward the Lord taketh couenant of Abraham that he ſhould walke before him in pureneſſe and innocency of heart which belongeth to mortifying or regeneration. And that no man ſhould doubt, that circumciſion is a ſigne of mortifying, Moſes in another place doth more plainely declare it, when hee exhorteth the people of Iſrael, to circumciſe the vncircumciſed skin of the heart, becauſe they were ſeuerally choſen to be the people of God out of all the Nations of the Earth. As God, where hee adopteth the poſteritie of Abraham to his people, commandeth them to be circumciſed: ſo Moſes pronounceth that the hearts ought to bee circumciſed, declaring verily what is the trueth of this circumciſion. Then that no man ſhould endeuour toward it by his owne ſtrength, hee teacheth that they neede the grace of God. All theſe things are ſo often repeated of the Prophets, that I neede not to heape into this place many teſtimonies which doe each where offer themſelues. We haue proued therefore, that in circumciſion a ſpirituall promiſe was vttered to the fathers, ſuch as in baptiſme is giuen: for as much as it figured to them the forgiueneſſe of ſinnes, and the mortifying of the fleſh. Moreouer as we haue taught that Chriſt is the foundation of Baptiſme, in whom both theſe things remaine: ſo it is euident that he is alſo of circumciſion. For he is promiſed to Abraham, and in him the bleſſing of all Nations, To the ſealing of which grace, the ſigne of circumciſion is added.

Gen. 17. 10.

Matt. 22. 32. Luk. 20. 38. Eph. 2. 12.

Deut. 10. 16.

Deut. 30. 6.

The argument and difference betweene circumciſion and baptiſme.

1 Now we may eaſily ſee, what there is like in theſe two ſignes, or what there is differing. The promiſes, whereupon we haue declared that the power of the ſignes conſiſteth, is all one in both, namely of the fatherly fauour of God, of the forgiueneſſe of ſinnes, of life euerlaſting. Then, the thing figured alſo is all one and the ſame, namely regeneration. The foundation whereupon the fulfilling of theſe things ſtandeth, is all one in both. Wherefore there is no difference in the inward myſtery, whereby the whole force and property of the Sacraments is to be weighed. The vnlikelineſſe that remaineth, lieth in the outward ceremonie, which is the ſmalleſt portion: whereas the chiefeſt part hangeth vpon the promiſe and the thing ſignified. Therefore we may determine, that whatſoeuer agreeth with circumciſion, doth alſo belong to baptiſme, except the difference of the viſible Ceremonie. To this relation and compariſon, the Apoſtles rule leadeth vs by the hand, whereby we are commanded to examine all expoſition of Scripture by the proportion of faith. And truely the trueth doth in this behalfe almoſt offer it ſelfe to be felt. For as circumciſion, becauſe it was a certaine token to the Iewes, whereby they were certified that they were choſen to be the people and houſehold of God, and they againe on their behalfs profeſſed that they yeelded themſelues to God, was their firſt entrie into the Church: ſo now alſo we by baptiſme enter into profeſſion of God, that we may be reckoned among his people, and mutually ſweare to his name. Whereby it appeareth out of controuerſie, that baptiſme is come into the place of circumciſion, that it may haue the ſame office with vs.

Rom. 12. 3.

Infants beeing partakers of the ſpirituall grace may not be denied the outward ſigne of baptiſme more than Iewiſh children circumciſion.

5 Now if we liſt to ſearch out, whether Baptiſme be lawfully communicate to infants: ſhall we not ſay that he doth too much play the foole, yea dote, which will reſt onely vpon the element of water, and the outward obſeruation, but cannot abide to bend his mind to the ſpirituall myſterie? Whereof if there be any conſideration had, it ſhall without doubt certainely appeare that Baptiſme is rightfully giuen to infants, as the thing that is due vnto them. For the Lord in old time did not vouchſafe to admit them to circumciſion, but that he made them partakers of all thoſe things which were then ſignified by circumciſion. Otherwiſe he ſhould with meere deceits haue mocked his people, if he had fed them with deceitfull ſignes, which is horrible euen to be heard of. For he pronounceth expreſſely, that the circumciſion of a little infant ſhould be inſteed of a ſeale to ſeale the promiſe of the couenant. But if the couenant remaine vnbroken and ſtedfaſt, it doth at this day no leſſe belong to the children of Chriſtians, than vnder the old teſtament it pertained to the infants of the Iewes. But if they be partakers of the thing ſignified, why ſhal they be debarred from the ſigne? If they haue the trueth, why ſhall they be put backe from the figure? Although the outward ſigne cleaue faſt together with the word in the Sacrament, ſo that they can not be plucked in ſunder: yet if they be ſeuerally conſidered, whether of them, I pray you ſhall we eſteeme of more value? Truely ſith we ſee that the ſigne ſerueth the word, we muſt ſay that it is vnder it, and muſt ſet it in the inferiour place. Sith therefore the word of Baptiſme is extended to infants: why ſhall the ſigne, that is to ſay, the addition hanging to the word, be debarred from them? This one reaſon, if there were no moe, were aboundantly enough to confute all them that will ſpeake to the contrarie. That which is obiected, that there was a day certainely ſet for circumciſion, is altogether but a ſhift. We graunt that we be not now bound to certaine dayes, like the Iewes: but when the Lord howſoeuer he certainly appointeth no day, yet declareth that he is pleaſed that infants ſhould with a ſolemne formall vſage be receiued into his couenant: what ſeeke we more?

The children of Chriſtian parents being holie ſeede as Abrahams were, as neceſſarily the one bound to be baptized as the other to be circumciſed.

6 Howbeit the Scripture openeth vnto vs yet a certainer knowledge of the truth. For it is moſt euident, that the couenant which the Lord once made with Abraham, is at this day no leſſe in force to Chriſtians, than it was in old time to the Iewiſh people: yea and that this word hath no leſſe reſpect to Chriſtians, than it then had reſpect to the Iewes. Vnleſſe perhaps we thinke, that Chriſt hath by his comming diminiſhed, or cut ſhort the grace of his Father. Which ſaying is not without abhominable blaſphemie. Wherefore as euen the children of the Iewes were called a holie ſeed, becauſe being made heires of the ſame couenant they were made differing from the chidren of the vngodly: for the ſame reaſon euen yet alſo the children of Chriſtians are accounted holie, yea although they be the iſſue but of one parent faithfull: and (as the Apoſtle witneſſeth) they differ from the vncleane ſeed of Idolaters. Now when the Lord immediately after the couenant made with Abraham, commanded the ſame to be ſealed in infants with an outward Sacrament: what cauſe will Chriſtians alleadge, why they ſhould not at this day teſtifie and ſeale the ſame in their children? Neither let any man obiect againſt me, that the Lord commanded his couenant to be confirmed with no other ſigne than of circumciſion, which is long ago taken away. For we haue in readineſſe to anſwere, that for the time of the old teſtament he ordained circumciſion to confirme his couenant: but circumciſion being taken away, yet alway remaineth the ſame maner of confirming which we haue cõmon with the Iewes. Wherfore we muſt alway diligentlie conſider what is common to both, and what they haue ſeuerall from vs. The couenant is common, the cauſe of confirming it is common. Onely the manner of confirming is diuerſe, becauſe circumciſion was that to them, in place whereof baptiſme hath ſucceeded among vs. Otherwiſe if the teſtimonie whereby the Iewes were aſſured of the ſaluation of their ſeed, be taken away from vs, it ſhould be brought to paſſe by the comming of Chriſt, that the grace of God ſhould be darker and leſſe approoued by teſtimonies to vs, than it was before to the Iewes. If that cannot be ſaid without extreme ſlander of Chriſt, by whom the infinite goodneſſe of the Father hath more clearely and liberally than euer heretofore beene poured foorth vpon the earth, and declared to men: we muſt needs graunt, that it is at the leaſt not more pinchingly to be ſuppreſſed, nor to be ſet foorth with leſſe teſtimonie, than it was vnder the darke ſhadowes of the lawe.

1. Cor. 7. 14. Gen. 17. 12.

7 Wherefore the Lord Ieſus, minding to ſhew a token whereby the world might vnderſtand that he was come rather to enlarge than to limit the mercie of God, gently embraced children offered vnto him, rebuking the diſciples which went about to forbid them to come to him: foraſmuch as they did leade thoſe, to whom the kingdome of heauen belongeth, away from him by whom alone the entrie is open into heauen. But (will ſome man ſay) what like thing hath baptiſme with this embracing of Chriſt? For neither is it reported that he baptized them, but that he receiued them, embraced them, and wiſhed them well. Therefore if we liſt to follow his example, let vs help infants with prayer, but not baptiſe them. But let vs weigh the doings of Chriſt ſomewhat more heedfully, than ſuch kind of men doe. For neither is this to be lightly paſſed ouer, that Chriſt commandeth infants to be brought vnto him, adding a reaſon why, becauſe of ſuch is the kingdome of heauen. And afterward he witneſſeth his will with deede, when embracing them he commendeth them to his Father with his prayer and bleſſing. If it be meete that infants be brought to Chriſt, why is it not alſo meete that they be receiued to baptiſme, the ſigne of our communion and fellowſhip with Chriſt? If the kingdome of heauen be theirs, why ſhall the ſigne be denied them, whereby there is as it were an entrie opened into the Church, that being admitted into it they may be adnumbred among the heires of the heauenly kingdome? How vniuſt ſhall we be, if we driue away them whom Chriſt calleth vnto him? if we ſpoile them, whom he garniſheth with his gifts? if wee ſhut out them whom hee willingly receiueth? But if wee will examine how much that which Chriſt there did differeth from baptiſme, yet of how much greater price ſhall we haue baptiſme, (whereby we teſtifie that infants are contained in the couenant of God) than receiuing, embracing, laying on of hands, and prayer, whereby Chriſt himſelfe being preſent: declareth that they both are his, and are ſanctified of him? By the other cauillations, whereby they labour to mocke out this place, they doe nothing but bewray their owne ignorance. For they gather an argument of this which Chriſt ſaith, Let little ones come to me, that they were in age good big ones which were already able to goe. But they are called of the Euangeliſts, brephe, and paidia, by which words the Greekes doe ſignifie babes yet hanging on the breſtes. Therefore this word (to come) is ſimply ſet for (to haue acceſſe.) Loe what ſnares they are compelled to make, which are growen hard againſt the truth. Now where they ſay, that the kingdome of heauen is not giuen to them, but to ſuch as be like them, becauſe it is ſaid to be of ſuch, not of them: that is no ſounder than the reſt. For if that be graunted, what manner of reaſon ſhall the reaſon of Chriſt be, whereby he meaneth to ſhew, that infants in age are not ſtrangers from him? When he commandeth that infants be ſuffered to haue acceſſe vnto him, nothing is plainer than that very infancie indeede is there ſpoken of. And that this ſhould not ſeeme an abſurditie, he by and by addeth: of ſuch is the kingdome of heauen. But if it muſt needs be that infants be comprehended herein, it muſt be plaine that by this word (ſuch) are meant very infants themſelues, and ſuch as be like them.

Infants embraced, prayed for, teamed the heires of the kingdome of heauen by our Sauiour Chriſt, and therefore not to be excluded from baptiſme. Matt. 9. 13.

8 Now

Though it be not expresly mentioned in Scripture what infants were baptised by the Apostles: yet when they are reported to haue baptised families, we haue no reason to thinke that the childrē in such families were not baptised: no writer so olde that maketh not the baptisme of Infants as ancient as the Apostles times.

Act. 16. 15. & 33.

The fruit that commeth by baptisme both to children presented, and to such also as present them thereunto.

8 Now there is no man that seeth not, that Baptisme of Infants was not framed by man, which is vpholden by so great approouing of Scripture. Neither doe they colourably enough play the fooles, which obiect that it is no where found, that any one Infant was baptised by the hands of the Apostles. For although it bee not expresly by name rehearsed of the Euangelists: yet becausse againe they are not excluded, so oft as mention happeneth to bee made of the baptising of any household: who, vnlesse hee bee mad, can reason thereupon that they were not baptised? If such arguments were of any force, women should bee forbidden to partake of the Lords Supper, whom wee read not to haue beene receiued vnto it in the time of the Apostles. But heere wee bee content with the rule of Faith. For when we consider, what the institution of the Supper requireth, thereby also wee may easily iudge to whom the vse thereof ought to be communicated. Which we obserue also in Baptisme. For when we marke, to what end it was ordained, wee euidently espie, that it belongeth no lesse to Infants, than to elder folkes. Therefore they cannot be depriued of it, but that the will of the Author must bee manifestly defrauded. But whereas, they spread abroad among the simple people, that there passed a long row of yeares after the resurrection of Christ, in which the Baptisme of Infants was vnknowen: therein they most fowly doe lie. For there is no writer so olde, that doth not certainely referre the beginning thereof to the time of the Apostles.

9 Now remaineth that we briefely shew, what fruit commeth of this obseruation, both to the Faithfull which present their children to the Church to bee baptised, and also to the Infants themselues that be baptised with the holy water: that no man should despise it as vnprofitable or idle. But if it come in any mans minde, vpon this pretence to mocke at Baptisme of Infants, he scorneth the commandement of Circumcision giuen by the Lord. For what will they bring foorth to impugne the Baptisme of Infants, which may not also be throwen backe against Circumcision? So the Lord taketh vengeance of their arrogance, which doe by and by condemne that which they comprehend not with the sense of their owne flesh. But God furnisheth vs with other armors, whereby their foolishnesse may be beaten flat. For neither this his holie institution, by which we feele our faith to be holpen with singular comfort, deserueth to be called superfluous. For Gods signe communicated to a child doth as it were by an emprinted seale confirme the promise giuen to the godly Parent, and declareth that it is ratified that the Lord will be God not onely to him but also to his seede, and will continually shew his good will and grace, not to him onely, but also to his posteritie euen to the thousand generation. Where when the great kindnesse of God vttereth it selfe, first it yeeldeth most large matter to aduance his glorie, and ouerspreadeth godly hearts with singular gladnesse, because they are therewithall more earnestly mooued to loue againe so godly a Father, whom they see to haue care of their posteritie for their sakes. Neither doe I regard, if any man take exception, and say that the promise ought to suffice to confirme the saluation of our children: for as much as it hath pleased God otherwise, who as he knoweth our weakenesse, willed in this behalfe so much to beare tenderly with it. Therefore let them that embrace the promise of Gods mercie to be extended to their children, thinke that it is their dutie to offer them to the Church to bee signed with the signe of mercie, and thereby to encourage themselues to a more assured confidence, because they doe with present eie behold the couenant of the Lord grauen in the bodies of their children. Againe, the children receiue some commoditie of their Baptisme, that being engraffed into the bodie of the Church, they be somewhat the more commended to the other members. Then when they are growen to riper age, they be thereby not slenderly stirred vp to earnest endeuour to worship God, of whom they haue beene receiued into his children by a solemne signe of adoption, before that they could by age acknowledge him for their Father. Finally that same condemnation ought greatly to make vs afraid, that God will take vengeance of it, if any man despise to marke his sonne with the signe of the couenant, because by such contempt the grace offered is refused and as it were foresworne.

Gen. 17. 14.

The differente which the enemies of bapti-

10 Now let vs examine the arguments, whereby certaine furious beasts doe not cease to assaile this holy institution of God. First because they see that they be exceedingly dingly neere driuen and hard ſtrained with the likeneſſe of Baptiſme and Circumciſion, they labour to plucke in ſunder theſe two ſignes with great difference, that the one ſhould not ſeeme to haue any thing common with the other. For they ſay that both diuers things are ſignified, and that the couenant is altogether diuers, and that the naming of the children is not all one. But while they goe about to prooue that firſt point, they alleadge that Circumciſion was a figure of mortification and not of Baptiſme. Which verily we doe moſt willingly grant them. For it maketh very well for our ſide. Neither doe we vſe any other proofe of our ſentence, than that Baptiſme and Circumciſion are ſignes of mortification. Heereupon we determine that Baptiſme is ſet in the place of Circumciſion, that it ſhould repreſent vnto vs the ſame thing which in old time it ſignified to the Iewes. In affirming the difference of the couenant, with how barbarous boldneſſe doe they turmoile and corrupt the Scripture: and that not in one place alone, but ſo as they leaue nothing ſafe or whole? For they depaint vnto vs the Iewes ſo to be carnall that they be liker beaſts than men: with whom forſooth the couenant made proceedeth not beyond the temporall life, to whom the promiſes giuen doe reſt in preſent and bodily good things. If this doctrine take place, what remaineth but that the nation of the Iewes were for a time filled with the benefits of God, none otherwiſe than as they fat a heard of ſwine in a ſtie, that at length they ſhould periſh with eternall damnation. For ſo ſoone as we alleadge Circumciſion and the promiſes annexed vnto it, they anſwere that Circumciſion was a literall ſigne, and the promiſes thereof were carnall.

tiſme miniſtred vnto children do put betweene the thing ſignified by baptiſme and circumciſiō ouerthroweth them, their difference betweene the one and the other couenant moſt falſe.

11 Truely if Circumciſion was a literall ſigne, there is no otherwiſe to be thought of Baptiſme. For the Apoſtle in the ſecond Chapter to the Coloſſians maketh the one no more ſpirituall than the other. For he ſaith that we are circumciſed in Chriſt, with a Circumciſion not made with hand, putting away the bodie of ſinne that dwelled in our fleſh: which he calleth the Circumciſion of Chriſt. Afterward for declaration of that ſaying, he adioyneth, that we be buried with Chriſt by Baptiſme. What meaneth hee by theſe words, but that the fulfilling and truth of Baptiſme, is alſo the truth and fulfilling of Circumciſion, becauſe they figure both one thing? For he trauaileth to ſhew that Baptiſme is the ſame to Chriſtians, which Circumciſion had beene before to the Iewes. But foraſmuch as we haue now euidently declared, that the promiſes of both the ſignes, and the myſteries that are repreſented in them, doe agree together, wee will for this preſent tarrie no longer vpon them. Onely I will put the faithfull in minde, that though I hold my peace, they ſhould weigh with themſelues whether it be taken for an earthly and literall ſigne, vnder which nothing is contained but ſpirituall and heauenly. But that they ſhould not ſell their ſmokes to the ſimple, we will by the way confute one obiection wherewith they colour this moſt ſhameleſſe lie. It is moſt certaine that the principall promiſes, wherein was contained the couenant which in the old Teſtament God ſtabliſhed with the Iſraelites, were ſpirituall and tended to eternall life: and then againe, that they were receiued of the Father, ſpiritually, as it was meete, that they might thereof receiue affiance of the life to come, whereunto they longed with the whole affection of their heart. But in the meane time we denie not, but that he witneſſed his good will toward them with earthly and carnall benefits: by which alſo we ſay that the ſame promiſe of ſpirituall things was confirmed. As when he promiſed euerlaſting bleſſednes to his ſeruant Abraham, that he might ſet before his eies a manifeſt token of his fauour, he addeth an other promiſe concerning the poſſeſſion of the land of Chanaan. After this manner we ought to vnderſtand all the earthly promiſes that are giuen to the Iewiſh nation, that the ſpirituall promiſe, as the head, whereunto they are directed, ſhould alway haue the chiefe place. But ſith I haue more largely entreated of theſe things in the difference of the new and old Teſtament, therefore now I doe the more ſlightly knit it vp.

to immortall life. In which words wee behold in deede a small sparkle of truth: but herein these light spirits grieuously offend, that when they catch hold of that which first commeth to their hand, when they should goe further and compare many things together, they stand stiffely vpon one word. Whereby it cannot otherwise be but that they must sometime be deceiued which rest vpon the sound knowledge of nothing. Wee graunt in deed that the carnall seed of Abraham did for a time hold the place of the spirituall seed which is by faith graffed into him. For wee be called his children howsoeuer there is no naturall kinred betweene him and vs. But if they meane, as they plainely shew that they doe, that there was neuer spirituall blessing promised to the carnall seede of Abraham, herein they are much deceiued. Wherefore we must leuell to a better marke, whereunto we are directed by the most certaine guiding of the Scripture. The Lord therefore promised to Abraham, that he should haue a seede, wherein all nations of the earth shall be blessed: and therewithall assureth him, that he would be a God to him and his seede. Whosoeuer doe by Faith receiue Christ the Author of blessing, are heires of this promise, and therefore are called the children of Abraham.

Matt.8.11.
Exod.19.5.

13 But although since the resurrection of Christ the bounds of the kingdome of God haue begun to be farre and wide enlarged into all nations without difference, that according to the saying of Christ, faithfull ones should be gathered from euery part to sit downe in the heauenly glorie with Abraham, Isaac, and Iacob: yet he had many ages before extended that same so great mercie to the Iewes. And because passing ouer all other, he had chosen out that onely nation, in which he would restraine his grace for a time, called them his peculiar possession, and his purchased people. For testifying of such liberalitie, Circumcision was giuen, by the signe whereof the Iewes might be taught that God is to them the author of saluation: by which knowledge their mindes were raised into hope of eternall life. For what shall he want, whom God hath once receiued into his charge? Wherefore the Apostle meaning to proove that the Gentiles were the children of Abraham as well as the Iewes, speaketh in this
Rom.4.10. manner: Abraham (saith he) was iustified by faith in vncircumcision. Afterward he receiued the signe of circumcision, the seale of righteousnesse of faith, that he should be the Father of all the faithfull, both of vncircumcision and of circumcision, not of them that glorie of onely circumcision, but of them that follow the faith which our Father Abraham had in vncircumcision. Doe not wee see that both sorts are made equall in dignitie? For during the time appointed by the decree of God, he was the Father of circumcision. When, the wall being plucked downe (as the Apostle writeth in an other place) by which the Iewes were seuered from the Gentiles, the entry was made open to them also into the kingdome of God, he was made their Father, and that without the signe of circumcision, because they haue baptisme in stead of circumcision. But where he expressely by name denieth, that Abraham is Father to them which are of circumcision onely, that same was spoken to abate the pride of certaine, which omitting the care of godlinesse, did boast themselues of onely ceremonies. After which maner at this day also their vanitie may be confuted which seeke in baptisme nothing but water.

The carnall and spirituall seed of Abraham heretofore with the estimation due to them both.

14 But another place of the Apostle out of the ninth Chapter of the Epistle to the Romanes shall be alleadged to the contrary, where he teacheth that they which are of the flesh, are not the children of Abraham: but they onely are counted his seed, which are the children of promise. For he seemeth to signifie, that the carnall kinred of Abraham is nothing, which yet we doe set in some degree. But it is more diligently to be marked, what matter the Apostle there intreateth of. For, meaning to shew to the Iewes how much the goodnesse of God was not bound to the seed of Abraham, yea how it nothing auaileth of it selfe, he bringeth foorth Ismael and Esau for example to prooue it: whom beeing refused, as if they were strangers, although they were according to the flesh the naturall ofspring of Abraham, the blessing rested in Isaac and Iacob. Whereupon is gathered that which he afterward affirmeth, that saluation hangeth of the mercie of God, which he extendeth to whom it pleaseth him: and that there is no cause why the Iewes should stand in their owne conceit, or boast vpon the name name of the couenant, vnleſſe they keepe the law of the couenant, that is to ſay, doe obey the word. Againe when he hath throwen them downe from vaine confidence of their kindred, yet becauſe on the other ſide he ſaw, that the couenant which was once made of God with the poſteritie of Abraham, could in no wiſe be made voide, in the eleuenth Chapter, he argueth that the carnall kindred is not to be ſpoiled of his due dignitie: by the beneficiall meane whereof he teacheth that the Iewes are the firſt and naturall heires of the Goſpell, but in reſpect that by their vnthankfulneſſe, they were forſaken as vnworthy: yet ſo that the heauenly bleſſing is not vtterly remooued from their nation. For which reaſon, how much ſoeuer they were ſtubborne and couenant-breakers, neuertheleſſe he calleth them holy (ſo much honour he giueth to the holie generation, with whom God had vouchſafed to make his holy couenant) but calleth vs, if we be compared with them, as it were after borne, yea or the vntimely borne children of Abraham, and that by adoption, not by nature: as if a twig broken off from his naturall tree, ſhould be graffed into a ſtrange ſtocke. Therefore that they ſhould not be defrauded of their prerogatiue, it behooued that the Goſpell ſhould be firſt preached to them: for they be in the houſhold of God as it were the firſt begotten children. Wherefore this honour was to bee giuen them, vntill they refuſed it being offered them, and by their owne vnthankfulneſſe brought to paſſe that it was carried away to the Gentiles. Neither yet, with how great obſtinacie ſoeuer they continue to make warre againſt the Goſpell, ought they to be deſpiſed of vs: if we conſider that for the promiſes ſake, the bleſſing of God doth yet ſtill remaine among them: as verily the Apoſtle teſtifieth that it ſhall neuer vtterly depart from thence: becauſe the gifts and calling of God are without repentance. Rom.11.29.

15 Behold of what force is the promiſe giuen to the poſteritie of Abraham, and with what balance it is to be weighed. Wherefore although in diſcerning the heires of the kingdome from baſtards and ſtrangers, we nothing doubt that the onely election of God ruleth with free right of gouernment: yet wee alſo therewithall perceiue, that it pleaſed him peculiarly to embrace the ſeede of Abraham with his mercie, and that the ſame mercie might be the more ſurely witneſſed, to ſeale it with Circumciſion. Now altogether like ſtate is there of the Chriſtian Church. For as Paul there reaſoneth that the Iewes are ſanctified of their Parents: ſo in another place hee teacheth, that the children of Chriſtians receiue the ſame ſanctification of their Parents. Whervpon is gathered, that they are worthily ſeuered from the reſt, which on the other ſide are condemned of vncleanneſſe. Now who can doubt, but that it is moſt falſe which they doe therevpon conclude, that ſay that the Infants which in old time were circumciſed, did onely figure ſpirituall infancie, which ariſeth of the regeneration of the word of God. For Paul doth not ſo ſubtlely play the Philoſopher, where he writeth that Chriſt is the miniſter of Circumciſion, to fulfill the promiſes which had beene made to the Fathers, as if he had ſaid thus: Foraſmuch as the couenant made with Abraham hath reſpect to his ſeede, Chriſt, to performe and diſcharge the promiſe once made by his Father, came to ſaluation to the nation of the Iewes. See you not how alſo after the reſurrection of Chriſt, he iudgeth that the promiſe of the couenant is to bee fulfilled not onely by way of Allegorie, but as the very words doe ſound to the carnall ſeede of Abraham. To the ſame intent ſerueth that which Peter in the ſecond Chapter of the Actes, declareth to the Iewes, that the benefit of the Goſpell is due to them and their ſeede by right of the couenant, and in the Chapter next following he calleth them the children of the Teſtament, that is to ſay heires. From which alſo not much diſaccordeth the other place of the Apoſtle aboue alleadged, where he accounteth and ſetteth Circumciſion emprinted in Infants, for a teſtimonie of that communion which they haue with Chriſt. But if we harken to their triſles, what ſhall be wrought by that promiſe, whereby the Lord in the ſecond article of his law vndertaketh to his ſeruants, that he will bee fauourable to their ſeede euen to the thouſand generation? Shall we here flee to Allegories? But that were too triſling a ſhift. Or ſhall we ſay that this is aboliſhed? But ſo the law ſhould bee deſtroied, which Chriſt came rather to ſtabliſh, ſo farre as it turneth vs to good vnto life. Let it therefore bee out of controuerſie, that God is ſo good and liberall to his, that for their ſakes, hee will ſaue alſo their their children, whom they ſhall beget, to bee adnumbred among his people.

Abſurd differences betweene baptiſme and circumciſion to exclude children from the one, though from the other they were not excluded.

16 Moreouer the differences which they goe about to put betweene Baptiſme and Circumciſion, are not onely worthy to bee laughed at, and voide of all colour of reaſon, but alſo diſagreeing with themſelues. For when they haue affirmed that Baptiſme hath relation to the firſt day of the ſpirituall battell, but Circumciſion to the eight when mortification is alreadie ended, by and by forgetting the ſame, they turne their ſong, and call Circumciſion a figure of the fleſh to bee mortified, but Baptiſme they call buriall, into which none are to be put till they bee already dead. What dotages of Phrentike men, can with ſo great lightneſſe leape into ſundry diuerſities? For in the firſt ſentence, Baptiſme muſt goe before Circumciſion: by the other, it is thruſt backe into the latter place. Yet is it no new example, that the wits of men bee ſo toſſed vp and downe, when in ſtead of the moſt certaine word of God they worſhip whatſoeuer they haue dreamed. Wee therefore ſay that that former difference is a meere dreame. If they liſted to expound by way of Allegorie vpon the eight day, yet it agreed not in that manner. It were much fitter, according to the opinion of the olde writers, to referre the number of eight to the reſurrection which was done on the eight day, whereupon wee know that the newneſſe of life hangeth: or to the whole courſe of this preſent life, wherein mortification ought alway to goe forward, till when life is ended, mortification it ſelfe may alſo bee ended. Howbeit God may ſeeme to haue minded to prouide for the tenderneſſe of age, in deferring Circumciſion to the eight day, becauſe the wound ſhould haue beene more dangerous to the children new borne and yet red from their mother. How much ſtronger is that, that we being dead before, are buried by Baptiſme: when the Scripture expreſly crieth to the contrarie that wee are buried into death to this intent, that we ſhould die, and from thenceforth ſhould endeuour to this mortification? Now, a likewiſe handling it is, that they cauill that women ought not to be baptiſed, if Baptiſme muſt be framed like to Circumciſion. For if it be moſt certaine that the ſanctifying of the ſeed of Iſrael was teſtified by the ſigne of Circumciſion: thereby alſo it is vndoubted, that it was giuen to ſanctifie both males and females. But the onely bodies of male children were marked with it, which might by nature be marked: yet ſo that women were by them after a certaine manner companions and partners of Circumciſion. Therefore ſending farre away ſuch follies of theirs, let vs ſticke faſt in the likeneſſe of Baptiſme and Circumciſion, which we moſt largely ſee to agree in the inward myſterie, in the promiſes, in vſe, in effectualneſſe.

Childrens want of vnderſtanding no reaſon to keepe them from being baptiſed which is the ſeale of that ſanctitie whereof they are capable.

17 They thinke alſo that they bring foorth a moſt ſtrong reaſon, why children are to bee debarred from Baptiſme, when they alleadge that they are not yet for age able to vnderſtand the myſterie there ſignified. That is ſpirituall regeneration, which cannot be in the firſt infancie. Therefore they gather, that they are to be taken for none other than the children of Adam, till they be growen to age meete for a ſecond birth. But the truth of God each where ſpeaketh againſt all theſe things. For if they be to be left among the children of Adam, then they are left in death: foraſmuch as in Adam we can doe nothing but die. But contrariwiſe Chriſt commandeth them to be brought vnto him. Why ſo? becauſe he is life: Therefore that he may giue life to them, he maketh them partakers of himſelfe: when in the meane time theſe fellowes driuing them far away doe adiudge them to death. For if they ſay for a ſhift that Infants do not therefore periſh if they be accounted the children of Adam, their error is abundantly confuted by witneſſe of the Scripture. For whereas it pronounceth that all do die in Adam, it followeth that there remaineth no hope of life but in Chriſt. Therefore that wee may be made heires of life, we muſt communicate with him. Againe when it is written in another place, that by nature we are ſubiect to the wrath of God, and conceiued in ſinne, whereunto damnation perpetually cleaueth: we muſt depart out of our owne nature, before that the entrie bee open to vs into the kingdome of God. And what can be more plainely ſpoken, than that fleſh and blood cannot poſſeſſe the kingdome of God? Therefore let all be done away whatſoeuer is ours (which ſhall not be done without regeneration) then we ſhall ſee this poſſeſſion of the kingdome. Finally if Chriſt ſay truely, when he reporteth that he is life, it is neceſſarie that we be graffed into into him, that we may be deliuered out of the bondage of death. But (say they) how are infants regenerate, which are not endued with knowledge neither of good nor of euil? But we answer, that the worke of God is not yet no worke at all, although it be not subiect to our capacity. Moreouer it is nothing doubtfull, that the infants which are to be saued (as verily of that age some are saued) are before regenerate of the Lord. For if they bring with them from their mothers wombe the corruption naturally planted in them: they must be purged thereof, before that they be admitted into the kingdome of God, whereinto nothing entreth that is defiled or spotted. If they be born sinners, as both Dauid and Paul affirme: either they remaine out of fauour & hateful to God, or they must needs be iustified. And what seeke we more, when the Iudge himselfe openly affirmeth that the entry into heauenly life is open to none but to them that be borne again? And to put such carpers to silence, he shewed an example in Iohn the Baptist, whom he sanctified in his mothers wombe, what he was able to doe in the rest. Neither doe they any thing preuaile by the shift wherewith they here mocke, that that was but once done: whereupon it doth not by and by follow that the Lord is wont commonly to do so with infants. For neither doe we reason after that maner: onely our purpose is to shew, that the power of God is by them vniustly & enuiously limited within those narrow bounds within which it suffreth not it selfe to be bound. Their other by-shift is euen of as great waight. They alleage that by the vsual maner of the scripture, this word (from the wombe) is asmuch in effect, as if it were said, from childhood. But we may cleerly see, that the angel when he declared the same to Zachary, ment another thing: that is, that it which was not yet borne, should be filled with the holy ghost. Let vs not therfore attẽpt to apoint a law to God, but that he may sanctify whõ it pleseth him as he sanctified this child, forasmuch as his power is nothing minished.

Luke 1. 15.

18 And truly Christ was therfore sanctified from his first infancie, that he might sanctifie in himselfe his elect out of euery age without difference. For as, to do away the fault of disobedience which had beene committed in our flesh, he hath put on the same flesh vpon himselfe, that he might in it for vs & in our steed performe perfect obedience: so he was conceiued of the holy Ghost, that hauing the holines therof fully powred into him in the flesh which he had taken vpon him, he might powre forth the same into vs. If we haue in Christ a most perfect paterne of all the graces which God continually sheweth to his children, verily in this behalfe also he shall be a proofe vnto vs, that the age of infancie is not so far vnfit for sanctification. But howsoeuer it be, yet this we hold out of cõtrouersie, that none of the elect is called out of this present life, which is not first made holy & regenerate by the spirit of God. Wheras they obiect to the contrary, that in the scriptures the spirit acknowledgeth no other regeneration but of incorruptible seede, that is, of the word of God: they do wrongfully expound that saying of Peter, wherin he cõprehendeth onely the faithfull which had beene taught by preaching of the Gospell. To such indeed we grant that the word of the Lord is the only seed of spirituall regeneration: but we denie that it ought therupon to be gathered, that infants cannot be regenerate by the power of God, which is to him as easie and ready as to vs it is incomprehensible and wonderful. Moreouer it should not be safe enough for vs to take this away from the Lord, that he may not be able to shew himselfe to be knowen to them by whatsoeuer way he will.

Christ in his infancie sanctified to shew that Christian infants are capable of sanctitie.

1. Pet. 1. 23.

19 But Faith, say they, is by hearing, whereof they haue not yet gotten the vse, neither can they be able to know God, whom Moses teacheth to be destitute of the knowledge both of good & euill. But they consider not that the Apostle, when he maketh hearing the beginning of faith, describeth onely the ordinary distribution of the Lord and disposition which he vseth to keepe in calling them that be his: but appointeth not to him a perpetuall rule, that he may not vse any other way. Which way verily he hath vsed in the calling of many, to whom he hath giuen the true knowledge of himselfe by an inward maner, by the enlightning of the spirit, without any preaching vsed for meane therof. But wheras they thinke it shal be a great absurditie, if any knowledge of God be giuen to infants, from whom Moses taketh away the vnderstanding of good and euill: I beseech them to answer me what danger is there if they be said to receiue some part of that grace, whereof a little after they shall enioy the full plentifulnesse. For if the fulnesse of life standeth in the perfect knowledge of God, when many of them, whom in their very first infancie death by and by taketh away, doe passe into eternall life, truly they are receiued to behold the most present face of God. Whom therefore the Lord will enlighten with the full brightneſſe of his light, why may he not preſently alſo, if it ſo pleaſe him, ſend out to ſhine vpon them ſome ſmall ſparkle thereof: ſpecially if he doe not firſt vncloth them of ignorance, before that he take them out of the priſon of the fleſh? Not that I meane raſhly to affirme that they be endued with the ſame Faith which we feele in our ſelues, or that they haue altogether like knowledge of Faith: (which I had rather leaue in ſuſpenſe) but ſomewhat to reſtraine their fooliſh arrogance, which according as their mouth is puffed vp with fulneſſe, doe boldly denie or affirme they care not what.

Infants not excluded from baptiſme more than from circumciſion for want of faith and repentance. Rom. 14. 11.

20 But that they may yet ſtand more ſtrongly in this point, they adde that baptiſme is a Sacrament of repentance and of Faith, wherfore ſith neither of theſe can befall in tender infancie, we ought to beware leaſt if they be admitted to the communion of baptiſme, the ſignification of it be made void & vaine. But theſe darts are throwen rather againſt God than againſt vs. For it is moſt euident by many teſtimonies of Scripture, that circumciſion alſo was a ſigne of repentance. Moreouer it is called of Paul the ſeale of the righteouſneſſe of Faith. Let therefore a reaſon be required of God himſelfe why he commanded it to be marked in the bodies of infants. For ſith baptiſme and circumciſion are both in one caſe, they can giue nothing to the one but that they muſt alſo therewithall grant the ſame to the other. If they looke backe to their wonted ſtarting hole, that then by the age of infancie were figured ſpirituall infants, the way is already ſtopped vp againſt them. We ſay therfore, ſith God hath communicated to infants circumciſion a Sacrament of repentance and faith, it ſeemeth no abſurditie if they be made partakers of baptiſme: vnleſſe they liſt openly to rage againſt the ordinance of God. But both in all the doings of God, & in this ſelfe ſame doing alſo ſhineth wiſdome and righteouſnes enough, to beat downe the backbitings of the wicked. For though infants, at the ſame inſtant that they were circumciſed, did not comprehend in vnderſtanding what that ſigne ment: yet they were truly circumciſed into the mortification of their corrupt & defiled nature, in which mortification they ſhould afterward exerciſe themſelues when they were growen to riper age. Finally it is very eaſie to aſſoile this obiection, with ſaying that they be baptiſed into repentance & faith to come: which although they be not formed in them, yet by ſecret working of the ſpirit the ſeed of both lieth hidden in them. With this anſwer at once is ouerthrowen whatſoeuer they wreſt againſt vs which they haue fetched out of the ſignification of baptiſme. Of which ſort is that title wherwith it is commended of Paul, where he calleth it the waſhing of regeneration & of renewing. Wherupon they gather that it is to be giuen to none but to ſuch a one as is able to conceiue thoſe things. But we on the contrary ſide may anſwer, that neither was circumciſion which betokened regeneration, to be giuen to any other than to them that were regenerat. And ſo alſo we condemne the ordinance of God. Wherefore (as we haue already touched in diuers places) whatſoeuer arguments do tend to the ſhaking of circumciſion, they haue no force in the aſſailing of baptiſme. Neither do they eſcape, if they ſay that we ought to take that for determined and certaine, which ſtandeth vpon the authoritie of God, although there appeare no reaſon of it: which reuerence is not due to the baptiſme of infants, nor to ſuch other things which be not commended vnto vs by the expreſſe word of God: ſith they are ſtill faſt holden with this double argument. For the commandement of God concerning infants to be circumciſed, was either lawfull and ſubiect to no cauillations, or worthy to be found fault withall. If there were no inconuenience nor abſurditie in the commandement of circumciſion, neither can there any abſurditie be noted in obſeruing the baptiſme of infants.

Tit. 3. 5.

No neceſſitie that the vnderſtanding ſhould goe before the receiuing of the holy myſteries of baptiſme.

21 As for the ſpot of abſurditie which in this place they goe about to lay vpon it, we thus wipe it away. Whom the Lord hath vouchſafed to elect, if hauing receiued the ſigne of regeneration, they depart out of this preſent life before that they be come to riper age, he renueth them with the power of his ſpirit incomprehenſible to vs, in ſuch maner as he alone foreſeeth to be expedient. If they chance to grow vp to age, whereby they may be taught the truth of baptiſme, they ſhal hereby be the more inkindled to the endeuor of renuing, the token wherof they ſhal learne to haue bin giuen them from their firſt infancie, that they ſhould exerciſe thēſelues in it throughout the whole courſe of their life. To the ſame intent ought that to be applied which Paul teacheth in two places, that by baptiſme we are buried together with Chriſt. For he doth not meane therby, that he which is to be baptiſed muſt be already firſt buried together with Chriſt: but ſimply declareth what doctrin is cōtained vnder baptiſme, yea & that to them that be already baptiſed: ſo that very mad men would not affirm by this place that it goeth before baptiſme. After this manner Moſes and the prophets did put the people in mind what circumciſion ment, wherewith yet they had bin marked while they were infants. Of the ſame effect alſo is that which he writeth to the Galathians, that they when they were baptiſed, did put on Chriſt. To what end? Verily that they ſhould from thencefoorth liue to Chriſt, becauſe they had not liued before. And although in the older ſort the receiuing of the ſigne ought to follow the vnderſtanding of the myſtery: yet it ſhall be by and by declared that infants ought to be otherwiſe eſteemed and accounted of. And no otherwiſe ought we to iudge of the place of Peter, in which they thinke that they haue a ſtrong hold: when he ſaith that it is not a waſhing to wipe away the filthineſſes of the body, but the witneſſe of a good conſcience before God, by the reſurrection of Chriſt. They indeed do gather therby, that nothing is left to the baptiſme of infants, but that it ſhould be a vain ſmoke, namely from which this truth is far diſtant. But they often offend in this error, that they wil haue the thing in order of time to go alway before the ſign. For the truth of circumciſion alſo conſiſted of the ſame witnes of good conſcience. If it ought of neceſſity to haue gone before, infants ſhould neuer haue bin circumciſed by the commandement of God. But he ſhewing that the witnes of a good conſcience was contained vnder the truth of circumciſion, and yet therewithall alſo commanding infants to be circumciſed, doth in that point ſufficiently declare that circumciſion is applied to the time to come. Wherfore there is no more preſent effectualnes to be required in baptiſme of infants, than that it ſhould confirm and ſtabliſh the couenant made by the Lord with them. The reſt of the ſignification of that Sacrament ſhall afterward follow at ſuch time as God himſelf foreſeeth.

Gal. 3. 27.

1. Pet. 3. 21.

22 Now I think there is no man, that doth not cleerly ſee that all ſuch reaſons of theirs are meer miſconſtruings of Scripture. As for the reſt that be of a neere kind to theſe, we wil lightly run through them by the way. They obiect that baptiſme is giuen vnto the forgiuenes of ſins: which when it is granted, will largely make for defence of our ſentence. For ſith we be borne ſinners, we do euen from our mothers womb need forgiueneſſe and pardon. Now ſeeing the Lord doth not cut off, but rather aſſure to that age the hope of mercy: why ſhould we take from them the ſign which is much inferior than the thing it ſelfe? Wherefore that which they goe about to throw againſt vs, we thus throw backe againſt themſelues: infants haue remiſſion of ſins giuen them, therefore they ought not to haue the ſigne taken from them. They allege alſo this out of the Epiſtle to the Epheſians: that the Church is clenſed of the Lord, with the waſhing of water in the word of life. Than which there could nothing be alledged more fit to ouerthrow this error: for thereupon groweth an eaſie proofe of our ſide. If the Lord will haue that waſhing, wherwith he clenſeth his Church, to be teſtified by baptiſme: it ſeemeth not rightfull that it ſhould want the teſtimony of it in infants, which are rightfully accounted part of the Church, foraſmuch as they be called heires of the heauenly kingdom. For Paul ſpeaketh of the whole Church, where he ſaith that it was clenſed with the baptiſm of water. Likewiſe of this that in another place he ſaith that we be by baptiſme grafted into the body of Chriſt, we gather that infants, whom he reckoneth among his members, ought to be baptiſed, leſt they be plucked away from his body. Behold with what violence as with ſo many engins they aſſault the fortreſſes of our faith.

Baptiſm of infants proued by allegations brought to diſproue it, as that it is miniſtred to the forgiuenes of ſins, that the Church is therwith clenſed of the Lord in the word of life, that thereby we are engraffed into the body of Chriſt.

Eph. 5. 26.

1. Cor. 12. 13.

23 Then they come down to the practiſe & cuſtom of the time of the Apoſtles, wherin none is found to haue bin admitted to baptiſm, but he which hath before profeſſed faith and repentance. For where Peter was asked of them that were minded to repent, what was needful to be done, he counſelled them firſt to repent, and then to be baptiſed into the forgiuenes of ſins. Likewiſe Philip, whē the Eunuch required to be baptiſed, anſwered that he might be baptiſed if he beleiued with all his hart. Hereby they think that they may win, that it is not lawful that baptiſm be granted to any, but where faith & repētance go before. Truly if we yeeld to this reaſon, the firſt of theſe two places where is no mention made of faith, wil proue that repentance alone ſufficeth: and the other place, wherein repentance is not required, wil proue that faith only is inough. I think they wil anſwer that the one place is holpen with the other, & therfore muſt be ioined together. I ſay alſo likewiſe, that other places muſt be laid togither which make ſomwhat to the vndoing of this knot: foraſmuch as there be many ſentences in ſcripture, the vnderſtāding wherof hangeth vpon the circum-

The Apoſtles in not baptiſing any come vnto yeeres of diſcretion without repentance and profeſſion made of their faith, meant not hereby to teach that none ſhould be baptiſed but only ſuch as were of yeeres to doe this.

Act 8.37.

ſtance of the place. As this preſently is an example. For they to whom Peter and Philip ſpake theſe things were of age ſufficient to haue practiſe of repentance and to conceiue faith. We earneſtly deny that ſuch ought to be baptiſed, vntill after perceiuing of their conuerſion and faith, at leſt ſo far as it may be ſearched out by the iudgement of men. But, that infants ought to be accounted in another number, it is more than euident enough. For in old time if any man did ioine himſelfe into communion of religion with Iſrael, it behooued that he ſhould firſt be taught the couenant of the Lord, and inſtructed in the law, before that he were marked with circumciſion, becauſe in birth he was a ſtranger from the people of Iſrael, with whom the couenant had been made with circumciſion ſtabliſhed.

As faith in Abraham went before circumciſion, but in his ſeed circumciſion before faith, ſo it is with baptiſme in chriſtian men and children.

Gen. 15.1.

Gen. 17.16.

24 As alſo the Lord, when he adopteth Abraham to himſelfe, doth not begin at circumciſion, hiding in the meane time what he meaneth by that ſign: but firſt he declareth what couenant he intendeth to make with him, and then after faith giuen to the promiſe, he maketh him partaker of the Sacrament. Why doth in Abraham the ſacrament follow faith, and in Iſaac his ſon it goeth before all vnderſtanding? Becauſe it is meet that he, which being in full grown age is receiued into fellowſhip of the couenant, from which he had been hitherto a ſtranger, ſhould firſt learne the conditions therof: but an infant begotten of him needed not ſo, which by right of inheritance according to the forme of the promiſe is euen from his mothers womb contained in the couenant. Or (that the mater may be more cleerly and briefly ſhewed) if the children of the faithfull, without the help of vnderſtanding, are partakers of the couenant, there is no cauſe why they ſhould be debarred from the ſign for this that they cannot ſweare to the form of the couenant. This verily is the reaſon, why in ſome places God affirmeth that the infants which are iſſued of the Iſraelites, are begotten and borne to him. For without doubt he eſteemeth as his children the children of them to whoſe ſeed he promiſeth that he will be a Father. But he which is vnfaithfull, iſſued of vngodly parents, till he be by faith vnited to God, is iudged a ſtranger from the communion of the couenant. Therefore it is no maruell if he be not partaker of the ſigne, the ſignification wherof ſhould be deceitfull and void in him. To this effect Paul alſo writeth, that the Gentiles ſo long as they were drowned in their idolatry, were out of the Teſtament. With this ſhort ſum, (as I think) the whole matter may be cleerly opened: that they which in growen age, embrace the faith of Chriſt, foraſmuch as they were hitherto ſtrangers from the couenant, are not to be marked with baptiſme, but whereas faith and repentãce come between, which only can open them the entry into the fellowſhip of the couenant: but the infants that are iſſued of Chriſtians, as they are receiued of God into the inheritance of the couenant, ſo ſoone as they be borne; ſo ought to be receiued to baptiſme. Hereunto muſt that be applied which the Euangeliſt ſpeaketh of, that they were baptiſed of Iohn which confeſſed their ſins. Which example at this day alſo we thinke meet to be kept. For if a Turke offer himſelfe to baptiſme, he ſhould not be raſhly baptiſed of vs, namely not till after confeſſion whereby he may ſatisfie the Church.

Ephe. 2.12.

Matt. 3.6.

The words of Chriſt concerning birth of water and the ſpirit nothing leſſe than a proofe that actuall regeneration muſt preſently alwaies concur with baptiſme.

Iohn 3.5.

25 Moreouer they bring foorth the words of Chriſt, which are rehearſed in the third Chapter of Iohn, whereby they thinke that a preſent regeneration is required in baptiſme. Vnleſſe a man be borne againe of water and the ſpirit, he cannot enter into the kingdome of God. Lo (ſay they) how baptiſm is by the Lords own mouth called regeneration. Then therefore whom it is more than enough known to be vnable to receiue regeneration, by what colour do we admit to baptiſme which cannot be without regeneration? Firſt they are deceiued in this that they thinke that in this place mention is made of baptiſme, becauſe they heare the name of water. For after that Chriſt had declared to Nicodemus the corruption of nature, and taught him, that men muſt be borne of new, becauſe Nicodemus dreamed of a bodily new birth, he there ſhewed the manner how God doth regenerate vs, namely by water and the ſpirit: as though he ſhould ſay by the ſpirit which in cleanſing and watering faithfull ſoules, doth the office of water. Therefore I take water and the ſpirit ſimply for the ſpirite, which is water. Neither is this a new forme of ſpeeche, for it altogether agreeth with the ſame which is in the third Chapter of Matthew: He that followeth me, it is he that baptiſeth in the holy Ghoſt and fire. Therfore as to baptiſe in the holy Ghoſt and fire, is to giue the holy Ghoſt, which hath the office and nature of fire: ſo to be borne again of water and the ſpirit, is nothing elſe but to receiue that power of the holy ſpirit which doth the ſame thing in the ſoule that water doth in the body. I know that other do otherwise expound it: but I am out of doubt that this is the naturall meaning: becauſe the purpoſe of Chriſt is none other, but to teach that all they muſt put off their own nature which aſpire to the heauenly kingdom. Howbeit if we liſt to cauil vnſauorily as they do, it were eaſie for vs (when we haue granted as they wold haue it) to infer vpon them that baptiſm is before faith and repentance: for as much as in the words of Chriſt it goeth before the ſpirit. It is certain that this is vnderſtanded of ſpirituall gifts: which if it come after baptiſme, I haue obtained what I require. But leauing cauillations, we muſt hold faſt the plain expoſition, which I haue brought, that no man til he haue been renewed with liuing water, that is, with the ſpirit, can enter into the kingdom of God.

All vnbaptiſed not to be adiudged to eternall death.

26 Now hereby alſo it is euident that their fained inuention is to be hiſſed out, which adiudge all the vnbaptiſed to eternall death. Therefore let vs according to their requeſt imagine baptiſme to be miniſtred to none but to them that be growen in age: What will they ſay, ſhall become of a child, which is rightly and well inſtructed with the introductions of godlines, if when the day of baptiſing is at hand, he happen to be taken away with ſudden death beſide all mens hope? The Lords promiſe is cleere, that whoſoeuer hath beleeued in the ſonne, ſhall not ſee death, nor ſhal come into iudgement, but is already paſſed from death into life: and it it no where found that he euer damned him that was not yet baptiſed. Which I would not haue ſo taken of me as though I meant that baptiſme might freely be deſpiſed (by which deſpiſing I affirme that the Lords couenant is defiled: ſo much leſſe can I abide to excuſe it) only it is enough for me to prooue, that it is not ſo neceſſary, that he ſhould be immediatly thought to be loſt, from whom power is taken away to obtaine it. But if we agree to their fained deuiſe, we ſhall damne all them without exception, whom any chance withholdeth from baptiſme, with how great faith ſoeuer (by which Chriſt himſelfe is poſſeſſed) otherwiſe they are endued. Moreouer they make all infants guilty of externall death, to whom they deny baptiſme, which by their own confeſſion is neceſſary to ſaluation. Now let them looke how trimly they agree with the words of Ghriſt, by which the kingdome of heauen is adiudged to that age. But, to grant them euery thing ſo much as pertaineth to the vnderſtanding of this place, yet they ſhall gather nothing thereof, vnleſſe they ouerthrow the former doctrine which we haue ſtabliſhed concerning the regeneration of infants.

Matt. 19. 14.

The baptiſme of infants not diſproued by the commandement which Chriſt gaue to teach and baptiſe, nor by the promiſe of ſaluation which he maketh to euery one that beleeueth and is baptiſed.

27 But they glory that they haue the ſtrongeſt hold of all in the very inſtitution of baptiſme, which they fetch out of the laſt Chapter of Matthew: where Chriſt ſending foorth his Apoſtles to al nations, giueth them the firſt commandement to teach them, and the ſecond to baptiſe them. Then alſo out of the laſt of Marke they adioine this, He that beleeueth and is baptiſed, ſhal be ſaued. What ſeeke we further (ſay they) when the Lords own words do openly ſound, that we muſt firſt teach ere we baptiſe, and do aſſign to baptiſm the ſecond ſtate after faith? Of which order the Lord alſo ſhewed an example in himſelfe, which would be baptiſed not till the thirtieth yeere. But here, O good God, how many waies doe they both entangle themſelues, and bewray their owne ignorance? For herein they now more than childiſhly erre, that they fetch the firſt inſtitution of Baptiſme from thence, which Chriſt had from the beginning of his preaching giuen in charge to his Apoſtles to miniſter. Therfore there is no cauſe why they ſhould affirme that the law and rule of Baptiſme is to be fetched out of theſe places, as though they contained the firſt inſtitution thereof. But to beare with them for this fault, yet how ſtrong is this manner of reaſoning? Truly if I liſted to dally with them, there is not a little lurking hole, but a moſt wide field offereth it ſelfe open for vs to eſcape them. For when they ſticke ſo faſt to the order of words, that they gather that becauſe it is ſaid, Goe, preach and baptiſe. Againe, he that beleeueth and is Baptiſed, therefore they muſt preach before that they Baptiſe, and beleeue before that they require Baptiſme: why may not we again anſwer them with ſaying that wee muſt Baptiſe before that we muſt teach the keeping of thoſe things that Chriſt hath commanded, namely ſith it is ſaid, baptiſe ye, teaching them to keepe whatſoeuer things I haue commanded you? which ſame things we haue noted in that ſaying of Chriſt which hath been euen now alleadged concerning the regeneration of water and the ſpirit. For if it be ſo vnderſtood as they would haue it, verily in that place baptiſme muſt be before ſpiritual regeneration, becauſe it is named in the firſt place. For Chriſt doth teach that we muſt be regenerate, not of the ſpirit and water, but of water and the ſpirit.

Matt. 28. 19. Mark. 16. 16. Matt. 3. 13. Luk. 3. 23.

Mark. 16. 15.

The Goſpell by Chriſts appointment to be preached to men of capatitie and they to beleeue before they be baptized: but not Infants therefore to be vnbaptized till they come vnto yeares of habilitie to heare and beleeue.

28 Now this inuincible reaſon whereupon they beare themſelues ſo bold, ſeemeth to be ſomwhat ſhaken: but becauſe truth hath defence enough in ſimplicity, I wil not eſcape away with ſuch light arguments. Therefore let them take with them a full anſwer. Chriſt in this place giueth the chiefe commandement concerning the preaching of the Goſpell, whereunto he adioineth the miniſtery of baptiſme as an addition hanging vpon it. Again he ſpeaketh more otherwiſe of baptiſme, but ſo farre as the miniſtration of it is vnder the the office of teaching. For Chriſt ſendeth the apoſtles to publiſh the Goſpel to all the nations of the world, that they ſhould from eachwhere with the doctrin of ſaluation gather together into his kingdome men that before were loſt. But whom, or what maner of men? It is certaine that there is no mention but of them that are able to receiue teaching. Afterward he addeth that ſuch, when they are inſtructed, ought to be baptiſed, adioyning a promiſe, that they which beleeue and are baptiſed ſhall be ſaued. Is there in all that ſaying ſo much as one ſyllable of Infants? What forme therefore of reaſoning ſhall this be wherewith they aſſaile vs: they which are of growen age, muſt firſt be inſtructed, that they may beleeue, ere they be baptiſed: therefore it is vnlawfull to make baptiſme common to infants? Although they would burſt themſelues, they ſhall prooue nothing elſe by this place but that the Goſpel muſt be preached to them that are of capacitie able to heare it, before that they be baptiſed, foraſmuch as he there ſpeaketh of ſuch onely. Let them heereof if they can make a ſtop to debarre infants from baptiſme.

Children no more excluded from baptiſme by commandement giuen that no men ſhould be baptized before they beleeue, than from meate by the Apoſtles iniunction that none ſhould eate that laboureth not. 2. Theſ. 3. 10.

29 But that euen blinde men alſo may with groping finde out their deceits, I wil point them out with a very cleere ſimilitude. If any man cauill that infants ought to haue meat taken from them, vpon this pretence that the Apoſtle ſuffreth none to eate but them that labor, ſhal he not be woorthie that all men ſhould ſpit at him? Why ſo? Becauſe he without difference draweth that to all men, which was ſpoken of one kinde and one certaine age of men. No whit handſomer is their handling in this preſent cauſe. For that which euery man ſeeth to belong to one age alone, they draw to infants, that this age alſo may be ſubiect to the rule which was made for none, but them that were more grown in yeers. As for the example of Chriſt it nothing vpholdeth their ſide, He was not baptiſed before that he was thirty yeers old. That is indeed true: but there is a reaſon thereof ready to be ſhewed: becauſe he then purpoſed by his preaching to lay a ſound foundation of baptiſme, or rather to ſtabliſh the foundation which had been before laid of Iohn. Therefore when he minded with his doctrine to inſtitute baptiſm, to procure the greater authority to his inſtitution, he ſanctified it with his own body, and that in ſuch fitnes of time as was moſt conuenient, namely when he began his preaching. Finally, they ſhall gather nothing elſe heereof, but that Baptiſme tooke his originall and beginning at the preaching of the Goſpell. If they liſt to appoint the thirtieth yeare, why do they not keepe it, but do receiue euery one to Baptiſm as he hath in their iudgement ſufficiently profited? yea and Seruetus one of their maſters, when he ſtiffely required this time, yet begā at the 21 yeere of his age to boaſt himſelf to be a Prophet. As though he were to be ſuffred that taketh on himſelfe the place of a teacher in the Church, before that he be a member of the Church.

Luk. 3. 23.

The Scripture ſheweth reaſon why the Lords ſupper ſhould not be giuen vnto Infants, but why Baptiſme nons.

30 At the laſt they obiect, that there is no greater cauſe why Baptiſm ſhould be giuen to Infants, than the Lords ſupper, which yet is not granted them. As though the ſcripture did not euery way expreſſe a large difference. The ſame was indeed vſually done in the old Church, as it appeareth by Cyprian and Auguſtine: but that manner is worthily grown out of vſe. For if we conſider the nature and property of baptiſme, it is truly an entry into the Church, and as it were a forme of admiſſion, whereby we are adnumbred into the people of God, a ſign of our ſpiritual regeneration by which we are born againe into the children of God: whereas on the other ſide the ſupper is giuen to them that be more growen in age, which hauing paſſed tender infancy, are now able to beare ſtrong meat. Which difference is very euidently ſhewed in the ſcripture. For there the Lord ſo much as pertaineth to baptiſme, maketh no choice of ages. But he doth not likewiſe giue the ſupper to all to take part of it, but only to them which are fit to diſcerne the body and blood of the Lord, to examine their own conſcience, to declare the Lords death, to waigh the power thereof. Would we haue any thing plainer, than that which the Apoſtle teacheth when he exhorteth that euery man ſhould prooue and examine himſelfe, and then eat of this bread and drinke of this cup? Therefore examination muſt goe before, which ſhould in vaine be looked for of infants. Againe, he that eateth vnworthily, eateth and drinketh damnation to himselfe, not discerning the Lords body. If none can partake worthily but they that can well discerne the holinesse of the Lords body, why should we giue to our tender children, poison instead of liuely food? What is that commandement of the Lord, ye shal doe it in remembrance of me? what is that other which the Apostle deriueth from the same. So oft as ye shall eat of this bread, yee shall declare the Lords death till he come? What remembrance (I beseech you) shal we require at our infants of the thing which they neuer attained with vnderstanding, what preaching of the crosse of Christ, the force and benefite whereof they do not yet comprehend in minde? None of these things is prescribed in Baptisme. Therefore betweene these two signes is great difference: which we note also in like signes in the old testament; Circumcision, which is knowen to answer to our Baptisme, was appointed for infants. But the Passeouer into whose place the Supper hath now succeeded, did not receiue all maner of guests without difference. But was rightly eaten of them onely that might by age enquire of the signification of it. If these men had remaining one crum of sound braine, would they be blind at a thing so cleere and offering it selfe to sight. 1.Cor.11.28.

31 Although it greeueth me to lode the Readers with a heap of trifles: yet it shall be worth the trauaile briefly to wipe away such gay reasons as Seruetus not the least of the Anabaptists, yea the great glory of that company, thought himself to bring when he prepared himself to conflict. He alleageth that Christs signes as they be perfect, so do require them that be perfect or able to conceiue perfection. But the solution is easie: that the perfection of Baptism, which extendeth euen to death, is wrongfully restrained to one point of time. I say yet further that perfection is foolishly required in man at the first day, whervnto Baptism allureth vs all our life long, by continuall degrees. He obiecteth that Christs signes were ordained for remembrance, that euery man should remember that he was buried together with Christ. I answer that that which he hath fained of his own head, needeth no confutation: yea that which he draweth to Baptisme, Pauls words shew to be proper to the holy supper, that euery man should examine himselfe: but of Baptisme there is no where any such thing. Wherupon we gather that they be rightly Baptised which for their smalnesse of age, are not yet able to receiue examination. Wheras he thirdly alleageth, that all they abide in death which beleeue not the Son of God, and that the wrath of God abideth vpon them: and therfore that infants which cannot beleeue lie in their damnation: I answer that Christ there speaketh not of the generall giltinesse wherwith all the posterity of Adam are enwrapped, but only threatneth the despisers of the Gospel, which do proudly & stubbornly refuse the grace offred them. But this nothing pertaineth to infants. Also I set a contrary reason against them: that whomsoeuer Christ blesseth, he is discharged from the curse of Adam and the wrath of God: Sith therefore it is knowen that infants are blessed of him, it followeth that they are discharged from death. Then he falsly citeth that which is no where read, that whosoeuer is borne of the spirit, heareth the voice of the spirit. Which although we grant to be written, yet shall prooue nothing else but that the faithful are framed to obedience, according as the spirit worketh in them. But that which is spoken of a certain number, it is faulty to draw indifferently to all. Fourthly, he obiecteth: because that goeth before which is naturall we must tarry ripe time for Baptisme which is spirituall. But although I grant that all the posterity of Adam begotten of the flesh do from the very womb bare their owne damnation, yet I deny that that withstandeth but that God may presently bring remedy. For neither shall Seruetus prooue that there were many yeeres appointed by God that the spiritualnesse of life may begin. As Paul testifieth, although they which are borne of the faithfull are by nature damned: yet by supernaturall grace they are saued. Then he bringeth foorth an allegory, that Dauid going vp into the tower of Sion, did lead neither blinde men nor lame men with him but strong souldiers. But what if I set a parable against it, wherin God calleth to the heauenly banket blinde men and lame men: how will Seruetus vnwinde himselfe out of this knot? I aske also whether lame and maimed men had not first been souldiers with Dauid. But it is superfluous to tarry longer vpon this, reason which the readers shall finde by the holy History to be made of meere falshood. There followeth another allegory, that the Apostles were fishers of men, not of little children. But I aske, what that saying of Christ meaneth

Mat. 13.47. meaneth, that into the net of the Gospel are gathered all kinds of fishes. But because I like not to play with allegories, I answer that when the office of teaching was enioyned to the Apostles, yet they were not forbidden from baptising of infants. Howbeit I would yet know, when the Euangelist nameth them Anthropous, men, (in which word is comprehended all mankind without exception) why they should deny infants to be men. Seuenthly

7 1. Cor. 2.13. he alleadgeth, that sith spirituall things agree with spirituall, infants which are not spirituall, are also not meet for baptisme. But first it is plainly euident how wrongfully they wrest the place of Paul. There is entreated of doctrine: when the Corinthians did too much stand in their own conceit for vaine sharpenesse of wit, Paul rebuketh their sluggishnes, for that they were yet to be instructed in the first introduction of heauenly wisdome. Who can thereof gather that baptisme is to be denied to infants, whom being begotten of the flesh, God doth by free adoption make holy to himselfe? Whereas he saith, that they must bee fed with spirituall meat, if they be new men, the solution is easie, that by baptisme they are admitted into the flocke of Christ, and that the signe of adoption sufficeth them, till being growen to age they be able to beare strong meat: that therefore the time of examination which God expresly requireth in the holy Supper, must be tarried for. Afterward he obiecteth that Christ calleth all his to the holy Supper. But it is certaine enough that he admitteth none, but them that be alreadie prepared to celebrate the remembrance of his death. Whereupon followeth that infants whom he vouchsafed to imbrace, doe staie in a seuerall and proper degree by themselues till they grow to age, and yet are not strangers.

8 Whereas he saith, that it is monstrous that a man after that he is borne, should not eate: I answer that soules are otherwise fed than by the outward eating of the Supper: and that therfore Christ is neuertheless meat to infants, although they abstaine from the signe. But of baptisme the case is otherwise, by which onely the gate into the Church is opened to them. Againe he obiecteth that a good steward distributeth meate to the houshold in due

9 Matt. 24.46. time. Which although I willingly grant: yet by what right will he appoint vnto vs the the certaine time of baptisme, that he may prooue that it is not giuen to infants out of time.

10 Moreouer he bringeth in that commandement of Christ to the Apostles, that they should Iohn 4.35. make haste into the haruest, whsle the fields waxe white. Verily Christ meaneth this onely, that the Apostles seeing the fruite of their labour present, should the more cheerefully prepare themselues to teach. Who shall therefore gather that the onely time of haruest is the ripe time for baptisme? His eleuenth reason is, that in the first Church Christians and 11 Act. 11.26. disciples were all one: but we see now that he fondly reasoneth from the part to the whole. Disciples are called men of full age, which had been alreadie throughly taught, and had professed Christ: as it behooued that the Iewes vnder the law should be the disciples of Moses: yet no man shall thereof rightly gather, that infants were strangers, whom the Lord hath testified to be of his owne houshold. Besides these he alleadgeth, that all Chri-

12 stians are brethren, in which number infants are not vnto vs, so long as we debarre them from the Supper. But I returne to that principle, that none are heires of the kingdome of heauen, but they that are the members of Christ: then, that the embracing of Christ was a true token of the adoption, whereby infants are ioyned in common with full growen men, and that the abstaining for a time from the Supper withstandeth not but that they pertain to the body of the Church. Neither did the theefe that was conuerted on the crosse, cease to be brother to the godly, although he neuer came to the Supper. Afterward hee addeth, 13 that none is made our brother but by the Spirit of adoption, which is giuen onely by the hearing of faith. I answer, that he still falleth backe into the same deceitfull argument, because he ouerthwartly draweth that to infants which was spoken onely of growen men. Paul teacheth there that this is Gods ordinarie maner of calling to bring his elect to the faith, when he stirreth vp to them faithfull teachers, by whose ministerie and trauell hee reacheth his hand to thē. Who dare therby appoint a law to him, but that he may by some other secret way graffe infants into Christ? fants. Whereas he fainetha Godhead to the faithfull, that is one of his dotages, which it pertaineth not to this preſent place to examine. But to wreſt the place of the Pſalme to ſo contrary a ſenſe, is a point of deſperate ſhameleſneſſe. Chriſt ſaith, that Kings and Magiſtrats are called of the Prophet Gods, bicauſe they beare an office appointed them of God. But that which concerning the ſpeciall commandement of gouernance is directed to certaine men, this handſome expoſitor draweth to the doctrine of the Goſpell, that he may baniſh infants out of the Church. Againe he obiecteth, that infants cannot be accounted new men, becauſe they are not begotten by the word. But I doe now againe repeate that which I haue often ſaid, that to regenerate vs, doctrine is the vncorruptible ſeed, if we be fit to receiue it: but when by reaſon of age there is not yet in vs aptneſſe to learne, God keepeth his degrees of regenerating. Afterward he commeth backe to his allegories, that in the law a ſheep and a goat were not offered in ſacrifice ſo ſoone as they came out of the wombe. If I liſted to draw figures to this purpoſe, I could readily obiect againſt them, that all firſt begotten things were conſecrate to God ſo ſoone as they had opened the wombe: then that a lamb muſt be killed at a yeeres age. Wherupon followeth that manly ſtrength is not to be tarried for, but rather that the new and yet tender iſſues are choſen of God for ſacrifices. Furthermore he affirmeth that none can come to Chriſt but they that haue been prepared of Iohn. As though Iohns office were not enduring but for a time. But to omit this truly that ſame preparation was not in the children whom Chriſt imbraced and bleſſed. Wherefore let him goe with his falſe principle. At length he calleth for patrons Triſmegiſtus and the Sibylles, to prooue that holy waſhings pertaine not but to them that are of growen age. Lo how honorably he thinketh of the Baptiſme of Chriſt, which he reduceth to the ceremonies of the Gentiles, that it may be no otherwiſe miniſtred than pleaſeth Triſmegiſtus. But we more eſteeme the authority of God, whom it hath pleaſed to make infants holy to himſelfe, and to admit them with the holy ſigne, the force whereof they did not yet by age vnderſtand. Neither doe we count it lawfull to borrow out of the cleanſings of the Gentiles any thing that may change in our Baptiſm the euerlaſting and inuiolable law of God, which he hath ſtabliſhed concerning circumciſion. Laſt of all, he maketh this argument: that if it be lawfull to Baptiſe infants without vnderſtanding, then Baptiſme may enterlude like and in ſport be miniſtred of boies when they play. But of this matter let him quarell with God by whoſe commandement circumciſion was common to infants before that they had attained vnderſtanding. Was it therefore a playing matter, or ſubiect to the follies of children, that they might ouerthrow the holy ordinance of God? But it is no maruell that theſe reprobate ſpirits, as though they were vexed with a phrenſie, do thruſt in all the groſſeſt abſurdities for defence of their errors, becauſe God doth with ſuch giddineſſe iuſtly take vengeance of their pride and ſtubbornneſſe. Verily I truſt I haue made plaine with how feeble ſuccours Seruetus hath holpen his ſilly breathren the Anabaptiſtes.

The driſt of Satan in ſtirring vp contention about the Baptiſme of infants.

32 Now I think it wil be doubtful to no ſober man, how raſhly they trouble the church of Chriſt, that mooue brawles and contentions for the Baptiſme of infants. But it is profitable to conſider, what Satan goeth about with this ſo great ſubtilty: euen to take away from vs the ſingular fruit of aſſiance and ſpirituall ioy which is to be gathered hereof, and to diminiſh as much alſo the glory of the goodneſſe of God. For how ſweet is it to godly mindes, to be certified not only by word, but alſo by ſight to be ſeene with eies, that they obtaine ſo much fauor with the heauenly Father, that he hath alſo care of their poſterity? For here it is to be ſeene, how he taketh vpon him the perſon of a moſt prouident father of houſhold toward vs, which euen after our death doth not lay away his careſulneſſe of vs, but prouideth and foreſeeth for our children. Ought we not heere after the example of Dauid with all our heart to leape vp vnto thankſgiuing, that by ſuch ſhew of his goodneſſe, his name may be ſanctified? This, verily Satan intendeth, in aſſailing with ſo great armies the Baptiſme of infants: namely, that this teſtifying of the grace of God being taken away, the promiſe which by it is preſent before our eies, may at length by little and little vaniſh away. Whereupon ſhould grow not onely a wicked vnthankfulneſſe toward the mercy of God, but alſo a certaine ſlothfulneſſe in inſtructing our children to godlineſſe. For by this ſpur we are not a little pricked forward to bring them vp in earneſt feare of God and in the keeping of his law, when we conſider that euen immediatly from their their birth, he taketh and acknowledgeth them for his children. Wherfore vnlesse we list enuiously to darken the bountifulnesse of God, let vs offer to him our children, to whom he giueth a place among them that be of his family and houshold, that is to say, the members of the Church.

THE SEVENTEENTH CHAPTER.

Of the holy Supper of Christ: and what it auaileth vs:

The Sacrament of the supper of Christ instituted to testifie that our soules are not onely once made alive, but continually kept and nourished by Christ as by food.

AFter that God hath once receiued vs into his familie, and not onely to take vs as his seruants but as his children: that he may fulfill the office of a most good Father, and carefull for his issue, he taketh also vpon him to nourish vs throughout the whole course of our life. And not contented therewith, it pleased him by a pledge giuen, to assure vs of this continuall liberality. To this end therefore he hath giuen his Church another Sacrament by the hand of his onely begotten Sonne, namely a spirituall banket, wherin Christ testifieth himself to be the quickning bread, wherewith our soules are fed to true and blessed immortality. But forasmuch as the knowledge of so great a mystery is very necessary, and according to the greatnesse thereof, require th a diligent declaration: and Satan, that he might bereaue the church of this inestimable treasure, hath long ago spread mistes, and since that time darknesse, to obscure the light of it, and then hath stirred strifes and battels that might estrange the mindes of the simple from tasting of this holy foode, and hath also in our time attempted the the same craft: therefore when I shall haue briefly knit vp the summe for the capacity of the vnlearned, I will vndoe those knots, wherwith Satan hath endeuoured to snare the world. First, bread and wine are signes, which represent vnto vs the inuisible food, which we receiue of the flesh and blood of Christ. For as in Baptisme God againe begeteing vs doth graffe vs into the fellowship of his Church, and by adoption doth make vs his owne: so we haue said that he performeth the office of a prouident father of houshold, in this that he continually ministreth vs meat, that he sustaineth and preserueth vs in that life whereunto he hath by his word begotten vs. Now the onely meat of our soule is Christ, and therefore the heauenly father calleth vs to him, that being refreshed with common partaking of him, we may from time to time gather liuely force, vntill we attaine to heauenly immortality. But forasmuch as this mistery of the secret vniting of Christ with the godly is by nature impossible to be comprehended, he giueth the figure and image thereof in visible signes most fit for our small capacity: yea, as it were by earnest and tokens giuen, he maketh it so assured vnto vs as if it were seen with our eies, because this so familiar a similitude entreth euen to the grossest minds, that soules are so fed with Christ, as bread and wine doe sustaine the bodily life. Now therefore we haue it declared, to what end this mysticall blessing tendeth, namely to assure vs, that the body of the Lord was so once offered for vs, that we now eat it, and in eating it doe feele in vs the effectuall working of that onely sacrifice that his blood was so once shed for vs, that it is vnto vs continual drinke. And so sound the words of the promise there adioyned. Take, this is my body, which is deliuered for you. The body therfore which was once offered vp for our saluation, we are commanded to take and eat: that when we see our selues to be made partakers of this, we may certainely determine that the power of his death which bringeth life shall be effectuall in vs. Whereupon also he calleth the cup, the couenant in his blood. For after a certaine maner it reneweth, or rather continueth the couenant which he hath once stablished with his blood, so much as pertaineth to the confirming of our faith, so oft as he reacheth vnto vs that holy blood to be tasted of.

Mat. 26. 26. Mat. 14. 17. Luk. 22. 19. 1. Cor. 11. 24.

The exchange which Christ hath made by taking that vpon him which was ours, and communicating that which is his to vs confirmed by this sacrament.

2 A great fruit verily of affiance and sweetnesse may godly soules gather of this sacrament, because they haue a witnesse, that we are growen together into one body with Christ so that whatsoeuer is his we may call ours. Hereupon followeth that we may boldly promise vnto our selues, that euerlasting life is ours, whereof he is heire: and that the kingdom of heauen, wherinto he is now entred, can no more fall away from vs than from him: againe that we cannot now be condemned by our sinnes, from the guiltnesse wherof he hath acquited vs, when he willed them to be imputed to himself as if they were his owne. This is the maruellous exchange, which of his immeasurable bountifulnes he hath made with vs: that he being made with vs the sonne of man, hath made vs with him the sonnes of God: that by his comming downe into earth, he hath made vs a way to goe vp into into heauen: that putting vpon him our mortalitie, he hath giuen vs his immortality: that taking on him our weakeneſſe, he hath ſtrengthened vs with his power: that taking our pouerty to himſelfe, he hath conueyed his riches to vs: that taking to him the weight of our vnrighteouſneſſe, wherewith we were oppreſſed, he hath clothed vs with his righteouſneſſe.

Chriſt truly giuen and made ours in this ſacrament the whole pith whereof in a manner ſtandeth herein, that for vs the bodie and blood of Chriſt were offered which we receiue repreſented vnder bread and wine to teach that they are to the ſoule the ſame which theſe viſible creatures to the bodie.

3 Of all theſe things we haue ſo full a witneſſing in this Sacrament, that we muſt certainly determine, that Chriſt is truly giuen vs, as if Chriſt himſelf were ſet preſent before our eies, and handeled with our hands. For this word can neither lie to vs, nor mocke vs: Take, eat, drinke: This is my body, which is deliuered for you: this is the blood, which is ſhed into the forgiueneſſe of ſinnes. Whereas he commandeth to take, he ſignifieth that it is ours. Whereas he commandeth to eat, he ſignifieth that that is made one ſubſtance with vs. Wheras he ſaith of the body that it is deliuered for vs: of the blood, that it is ſhed for vs: therein he teacheth that both are not ſo much his as ours: becauſe he tooke and laid away both, not for his commodity, but to our ſaluation. And truly it is to be diligently marked, that the chiefe and in a manner whole pith of the ſacrament ſtandeth in theſe words. Which is deliuered for you, which is ſhed for you. For otherwiſe it ſhould not much profit vs, that the body and blood of our Lord are now diſtributed, vnleſſe they had beene once giuen foorth for our redemption and ſaluation. Therefore they are repreſented vnder bread and wine, that we ſhould learne that they are not onely ours, but alſo ordained for the nouriſhment of ſpirituall life. This is it that we before ſaid, that from the corporall things which are ſhewed foorth in the Sacraments, we are by a certain proportionall relation guided to ſpiritual things. So when bread is giuen vs for a ſigne of the bodie of Chriſt, we ought by and by to conceiue this ſimilitude: As bread nouriſheth, ſuſtaineth, & maintaineth the life of our body: ſo the body of Chriſt is the only meat to quicken and giue life to our ſoule. When we ſee wine ſet foorth for a ſigne of his blood: we muſt call to minde what vſes wine bringeth to the body, that we may conſider that the ſame are brought to vs ſpiritually by the blood of Chriſt: thoſe vſes be, to cheriſh, to refreſh to ſtrengthen, to make merry. For if we ſufficiently weigh, what the deliuering of this holy body, what the ſhedding of this holy blood, hath profited vs: we ſhall plainly perceiue that theſe things which are ſpoken of bread and wine, according to ſuch proportionall relation doe very well accord with them toward vs when they are communicated vnto vs.

The higheſt conſideration in this ſacrament is of the promiſe whereby Chriſt hath teſtified his fleſh to be meate and his blood to be drinke indeed.

4 Therfore the chiefe parts of the Sacrament are not ſimply and without higher conſideration to reach to vs the body of Chriſt: but rather that ſame promiſe, whereby he teſtifieth, that his fleſh is verily meat, and his blood is drinke, with which we are fed into eternall life: whereby he affirmeth himſelfe to be the bread of life, of which who ſo eateth, he ſhall liue for euer: to ſeale (I ſay) and confirme that promiſe: and for bringing the ſame to paſſe, to ſend vs to the croſſe of Chriſt, where that promiſe hath beene truly performed, and in all points fulfilled. For we doe not well and healthfully eat Chriſt but crucified, when we doe with liuely feeling conceiue the effectualneſſe of his death. For whereas he calleth himſelfe the bread of life, he did not borrow that name of the Sacrament, as ſome doe wrongfully expound it: but becauſe he was giuen vs ſuch of the Father, and performed himſelfe ſuch, when being made partaker of our humane mortality, he made vs partners of his diuine immortality: when offering himſelfe for ſacrifice, hee tooke our accurſedneſſe vpon himſelfe, that he might fill vs with bleſſing: when with his death he deuoured and ſwallowed vp death: when in his reſurrection he raiſed vp this our crruptible fleſh which he had put on, to glory and vncorruption.

This Sacrament maketh not Chriſt to be the bread of life, but teſtifieth vnto vs that he is ſo to ſuch as receiue him in the due eſtimation of theſe miſteries whereby he is receiued, to receiue him to 5 It remaineth that by appliance all the ſame may come to vs. That is done, both by the Goſpell, and more cleerely by the holie Supper, where both hee offereth himſelfe to vs with all his good things, and we receiue him by faith. Wherfore the Sacrament maketh not that Chriſt firſt beginneth to be the bread of life: but when it bringeth into remembrance that he was made the bread of life, which we continually eate, and when it giueth vnto vs the taſte and ſauour of that bread, then it maketh vs to feele the ſtrength of that bread. For it promiſeth vs, that whatſoeuer Chriſt did or ſuffered, the ſame was done to giue life to vs. Then, that this giuing of life is euerlaſting, by which we may without end be nouriſhed, ſuſtained, and preſerued in life. For as Chriſt ſhould not haue bin to vs the bread of life, vnleſſe he had been born & had died for vs, vnleſſe he had riſen again for vs: ſo now he ſhould not be the ſame vnleſſe the effectualneſſe and fruit of his birth, death and reſurrection, were an euerlaſting and immortal thing. All which Chriſt hath very well expreſſed in theſe words. The bread which I will giue, is my fleſh, which I wil giue for the life of the world. By which words without doubt he ſignifieth, that his body ſhould therefore be to vs for bread, to the ſpirituall life of the ſoule, becauſe it ſhould be giuen forth to death for our ſaluation: and that it is deliuered to vs to eat of it, when by faith he maketh vs partakers of it. Once therfore he gaue it, that he might be made bread, when he gaue forth himſelfe to be crucified for the redemption of the world: daily he giueth it, when by the word of the Goſpel he offereth it vnto vs to be receiued, ſo far as it was crucified: where he ſealeth that deliuerance with the holy myſtery of the Supper: where he inwardly fulfilleth that which he outwardly betokeneth. Now herein we muſt beware of two faults, that neither doing too much in abaſing the ſigns, we ſeem to pluck them from their myſteries to which they are in a manner knit faſt: nor that being immeaſurable in aduancing the ſame, we ſeem in the meane time ſomewhat to darken the myſteries themſelues. That Chriſt is the bread of life, wherewith the faithfull are nouriſhed into eternall ſaluation, there is no man but he granteth, vnleſſe he be altogether without religion. But this point is not likewiſe agreed vpon among all men, what is the manner of partaking of him. For there be that in one word define, that to eat the fleſh of Chriſt and to drink his bloud, is nothing elſe but to beleeue in Chriſt himſelfe. But I think that Chriſt meant ſome certainer and higher thing, in that notable ſermon where he commēdeth to vs the eating of his fleſh, namely, that we are quickned by the true partaking of him: which alſo he therefore expreſſed by the words of eating and drinking, leſt any man ſhould think, that the life which we receiue of him is conceiued by bare knowledge only. For as not the ſight, but the eating of bread ſufficeth the body for nouriſhment: ſo it behoueth that the ſoule be truly and throughly made partaker of Chriſt, that by the power of him it may be quickned into a ſpirituall life. But in the meane time we confeſſe that there is no other eating, but of faith: as there can no other be imagined. But this is the difference between my words and theirs, that with them to eat is only to beleeue: but I ſay that the fleſh of Chriſt is eaten with beleeuing, becauſe by faith he is made ours, and I ſay that eating is the fruit and effect of faith. Or, if you will haue it plainer, with them eating is faith: and I think it rather to follow of faith. In words verily the difference is but ſmall: but in the thing it ſelfe, not ſmall. For though the Apoſtle teacheth that Chriſt dwelleth in our harts by faith: yet no man will expound this dwelling to be faith: but all men do perceiue that there is expreſſed a ſingular effect of faith, for that by it the faithfull doe obraine to haue Chriſt dwelling in them. After this manner, the Lord meant, in calling himſelfe the bread of life, not only to teach that in the faith of his death and reſurrection, ſaluation is repoſed for vs: but alſo that by true partaking of himſelfe it is brought to paſſe, that his life paſſeth into vs, and becommeth ours: like as bread, when it is taken for food, miniſtreth liuelineſſe to the body.

6 Neither did Auguſtine, whom they bring in for their patrone, in any other meaning write that we eat by beleeuing, than to ſhew that this eating is of faith, not of the mouth. Which I alſo deny not: but yet therewithall I adde, that we doe by faith embrace Chriſt, not appearing a far of, but making himſelfe one with vs, that he may be our head, and we his members. Yet do not I vtterly diſallow that maner of ſpeaking: but only I deny it to be a full declaration, if they meane to define what it is to eat the fleſh of Chriſt. Otherwiſe I ſee that Auguſtine hath oft vſed this forme of ſpeech: as when he ſaith in the third book of Chriſtian doctrine, Vnleſſe ye eat the fleſh of the ſon of man: this is a figure teaching that we muſt communicate with the paſſion of the Lord, and muſt ſweetly and profitably lay vp in remembrance that for vs his fleſh was crucified and wounded. Againe when he ſaith that the three thouſand men which were conuerted at Peters ſermon, did drinke the bloud of Chriſt by beleeuing, which they had ſhed by cruell dealing. But in many other places he honorably ſetteth out that benefit of faith, that by it our ſoules are no leſſe refreſhed with the communicating of the fleſh of Chriſt, than our bodies are with the bread which they eat. And the ſame is it which in a certaine place Chryſoſtome writeth, that Chriſt doth not onely by faith, but alſo indeed make vs his body. For he meaneth not that we doe from any other where than from faith, obraine ſuch a benefite: but this only he he meaneth to exclude that none when he heareth faith to be named, ſhould conceiue a naked imagination. As for them that will haue the Supper to be only a marke of outward profeſſion, I doe now paſſe them ouer: becauſe I thinke that I haue ſufficiently confuted their errour, when I entreated of Sacraments generally. Onely this thing let the Readers marke, that when the cup is called the couenant in the blood, there is a promiſe expreſſed that may be of force to confirme faith. Whereupon followeth, that vnleſſe we haue reſpect to God, and embrace that which he offreth, we doe not rightly vſe the holy Supper. Luke 22.20.

7 Moreouer they alſo doe not ſatisfie me, which acknowledging that we haue ſome communion with Chriſt, when they meane to expreſſe it, do make vs partakers only of the ſpirit, without making any mention of fleſh and blood. As though all thoſe things were ſpoken of nothing, that his fleſh is verily meate, that his blood is verily drinke: that none hath life, but he that eateth that fleſh, & drinketh that blood: and ſuch other ſayings that belong to the ſame end. Wherfore if it be certain that the full communicating of Chriſt proceedeth beyond their deſcription, as it is too narrowly ſtrained: I wil now goe about to knit vp in few words, how large it is, and how farre it extendeth it ſelfe, before that I ſpeak of the contrary fault of exceſſe. For I ſhall haue a longer diſputation with the exceſſiue teachers, which, when according to their owne groſſenes they frame a maner of eating & drinking full of abſurditie, do alſo transfigure Chriſt ſtripped out of his fleſh into a fantaſie: if yet a man may with any words comprehend ſo great a myſterie, which I ſee that I can not ſufficiently comprehend with mind: and therefore I do willingly confeſſe it, that no man ſhould meaſure the highneſſe thereof by the ſmal proportion of my childiſhnes. But rather I exhort the readers, that they do not reſtrain the ſenſe of their minds within theſe two narrow bounds: but endeuour to riſe vp much higher, than they can by my guiding. For I my ſelf, ſo oft as I ſpeake of this thing when I haue trauelled to ſay all, thinke that I haue yet ſaid but little in reſpect of the worthines therof. And although the mind can do more in thinking than the tongue in expreſſing: yet with greatneſſe of the thing, the minde alſo is ſurmounted and ouerwhelmed. Finally therefore nothing remaineth, but that I muſt breake foorth into admiration of that myſterie, which neither the mind can ſuffice to thinke of, nor the tongue to declare. Yet after ſuch a maner as I can, I will ſet foorth the ſumme of my ſentence: which as I nothing doubt to be true, ſo I truſt that it will not be diſallowed of godly hearts.

They ſtraine the Communion of Chriſt too narrowly who make it nothing but the participation of his ſpirit only.

8 Firſt of all, we are taught out of the Scripture, that Chriſt was from the beginning that life bringing word of the Father, the fountaine and originall of life, from whence all things euer receiued their hauing of life. Wherfore Iohn ſometime calleth him the word of life, and ſomtime writeth that life was in him: meaning that he euen then flowing into all creatures, powred into them the power of breathing and liuing. Yet the ſame Iohn addeth afterward, that the life was then & not till then openly ſhewed, when the Sonne of God taking vpon him our fleſh, gaue himſelfe to be ſeen with eies & felt with hands. For though he did before alſo ſpread abroad his power into the creatures: yet becauſe man, being by ſinne eſtranged from God, hauing loſt the communion of life, ſaw on euery ſide death hanging ouer him: that he might recouer hope of immortalitie, it behooued that he ſhould be receiued into the communion of that word. For how ſmall a confidence maieſt thou conceiue thereof, if thou heare that the word of God indeed, from which thou art moſt farre remooued, containeth in it ſelfe the fulneſſe of life, but in thy ſelfe and round about thee nothing offreth it ſelfe and is preſent before thine eies but death? But ſince that fountain of life began to dwel in our fleſh, now it lieth not a far off hidden from vs, but preſently deliuereth it ſelfe to be partaken of vs. Yea and it maketh the very fleſh, wherein it reſteth, to be of power to bring life to vs, that by partaking thereof we may be fedde to immortalitie. I am (ſaith he) the bread of life, that am come downe from heauen. And the bread which I will giue is my fleſh, which I will giue for the life of the world. In which words he teacheth not onely that he is life, in reſpect that he is the eternal word of God which came downe to vs from heauen, but that in comming downe he powred the ſame power into the fleſh which he did put on, that from thence the communicating of life might flow foorth vnto vs. Heereupon alſo theſe things now follow, that his fleſh is verily meate, and his blood is verily drinke, Chriſt from the beginning the fountaine of life, by taking our fleſh maketh it of power, being ſedan, to be ſuſtenance that ſoſtreth on to immortalitie.

Iohn 6.48.& 58.

with which ſuſtenances the faithfull are foſtered into eternall life. Herein therfore conſiſteth ſingular comfort to the godly, that now they finde life in their owne fleſh. For ſo they doe not onely with eaſie paſſage attaine vnto it, but haue it of it ſelfe laid abroad for them and offering it ſelfe vnto them. Onely let them hold open the boſome of their heart that they may embrace it being preſent, and they ſhall obtaine it.

The fleſh of Chriſt being (though not of it ſelfe) an vnwaſted fountaine from whence life floweth, he that will liue muſt of neceſſitie be partaker thereof, and haue fellowſhip with it.

9 But although the fleſh of Chriſt haue not ſo great power of it ſelfe, that it can giue life to vs, which both in the owne firſt eſtate of it was ſubiect to mortalitie, and now being endued with immortalitie, liueth not by it ſelfe: yet it is rightfully called life bringing, which is filled with fulneſſe of life to powre it into vs. In which meaning I do with Cyril expound that ſaying of Chriſt: as the Father hath life in himſelfe, ſo he hath alſo giuen to the Sonne to haue life in himſelfe. For there he properly ſpeaketh of his gifts, not which he from the beginning poſſeſſed with the Father, but with which he was garniſhed in the ſame fleſh in which he appeared. Therefore he ſheweth that in his manhood alſo dwelleth the fulneſſe of life, that whoſoeuer partaketh of his fleſh and blood, may therewithall alſo enioy the partaking of life. Of what ſort that is, we may declare by a familiar example. For as out of a fountaine water is ſometime drunke, ſometime is drawen, ſometime by furrowes is conueighed to the watering of grounds, which yet of it ſelfe doth not ouerflow into ſo many vſes, but from the very ſpring it ſelfe which with euerlaſting flowing yeeldeth and miniſtreth vnto it from time to time new aboundance: ſo the fleſh of Chriſt is like a rich and vnwaſted fountaine which powreth into vs the life, ſpringing from the Godhead into it ſelfe. Now who ſeeth not that the communion of the fleſh and blood of Chriſt is neceſſarie to all that aſpire to heauenly life? Hereunto tendeth that ſaying of the Apoſtle, that the Church is the bodie of Chriſt and the fulfilling of it: and that hee is the head out of which the whole body coupled and knit together by ioints maketh increaſe of the body: that our bodies are the members of Chriſt. All which things we vnderſtād to be impoſſible to be brought to paſſe, but that he muſt wholly cleaue to vs in ſpirit and body. But that moſt neere fellowſhip whereby we are coupled with his fleſh, he hath yet ſet out with a more glorious title, when he ſaid that we are members of his bodie, and are of his bones and of his fleſh. At the laſt, to declare it to be a matter greater than all wordes, he concludeth his ſaying with an exclamation. This is (ſaith he) a great ſecret. Therefore it ſhould be a point of extreme madneſſe to acknowledge no communion of the faithful when the fleſh and blood of the Lord, which the Apoſtle declareth to be ſo great, that he had rather wonder at it than expreſſe it.

John 5. 19.

Ephe. 5. 30.

The bodie and blood of Chriſt truely giuen vs, and not bare & naked figures thereof in the ſacrament.

10 Let the ſumme be, that our ſoules are ſo fed with the fleſh and blood of Chriſt, as bread and wine do maintaine and ſuſtaine the bodily life. For otherwiſe the proportionall relation of the ſigne ſhould not agree, vnleſſe ſouls did finde their food in Chriſt. Which cannot be done, vnleſſe Chriſt doe truely grow into one with vs, and refreſh vs with the eating of his fleſh and drinking of his bloud. But although it ſeeme incredible, that in ſo great diſtance of places the fleſh of Chriſt reacheth to vs that it may be meate to vs: let vs remember how much the ſecret power of the Spirit ſurmounteth aboue all our ſenſes, and how fooliſh it is to goe about to meaſure his vnmeaſurableneſſe by our meaſure. That therefore which our minde comprehendeth not, let our faith conceiue, that the Spirit truely knitteth in one thoſe things that are ſeuered in places. Now that ſame holy communicating of his bodie and blood, whereby Chriſt powreth his life into vs. euen as if he had pearced it into our bones and marrowes, he in the Supper alſo teſtifieth and ſealeth: and that not with ſetting before vs a vaine or void ſigne, but bringing foorth there the effectuall working of his Spirit whereby hee fulfilleth that which he promiſeth. And verily he there offereth and deliuereth the thing ſignified to all them that ſit at that ſpirituall banquet: although it be receiued with fruite of the faithfull onely, which receiue ſo great bountifulneſſe with true faith and thankfulneſſe of minde. After which maner the Apoſtle ſaide, that the bread which we breake is the communion of the bodie of Chriſt: and that the cup which we hallow with the word and prayers to that purpoſe, is the communion of his blood. Neither is there any cauſe why any man ſhould obiect, that it is a figuratiue ſpeech, by which the name of the thing ſignified is giuen to the ſigne. I grant verily that the breaking of the bread is a ſigne, not the thing it ſelfe. But this being admitted, yet we ſhall rightlie gather of the deliuerance of the ſigne, that the thing it ſelfe is deliuered. For vnleſſe a man will call God a deceiuer, he can neuer be ſo bold to ſay that he ſetteth before vs an empty ſigne. Therfore if by the breaking of bread the Lord doth truly repreſent the partaking of his body, it ought to be out of doubt that he truly performeth and deliuereth it. And this rule, is alway to be holden of the Godly, that ſo oft as they ſee the ſignes ordained of the Lord, they certainly thinke and perſwade themſelues that the truth of the thing ſignified is there preſent. For to what purpoſe ſhould the Lord deliuer to thee into thy hand the ſigne of his body, but to aſſure thee of the true partaking of it? If it be true, that a viſible ſigne is giuen vs, to ſeale the gift of an inuiſible thing: when we receiue the ſigne of the body, let vs no leſſe certainly beleeue that the body it ſelfe alſo is giuen vs.

is

Chriſt himſelfe by faith, euen his body and blood truly participated, in the Sacrament.

11 I ſay therfore (which both hath been alway receiued in the church, and all they teach at this day that thinke right) that the holy myſtery of the Supper conſiſteth of two things: that is to ſay of the bodily ſignes, which being ſet before our eies do repreſent vnto vs inuiſible things: according to the capacity of our weaknes: and of ſpiritual truth, which is by thoſe ſignes both figured & deliuered. Of what ſort that is, when I meane to ſhew it familiarly, I vſe to ſet three things: the ſignification, the matter which hangeth of the ſignification, the vertue or effect which followeth of both. The ſignification conſiſteth in the promiſes, which are after a certaine maner wrapped together with the ſigne. The matter of ſubſtance I call Chriſt with his death and reſurrectiō. By effect I vnderſtand the redemption, righteouſnes, ſanctification & eternall life, & whatſoeuer other benefits Chriſt bringeth vs. Now although all theſe things haue reſpect to Faith: yet I leaue no place to this cauillation: as though when I ſay that Chriſt is receiued by Faith, I would haue him conceaued with vnderſtanding only and imagination. For the promiſes offer him, not that we ſhould ſticke faſt in the ſight alone and in bare knowledge: but that we ſhould enioy the true communicating of him. And truly I ſee not how any man may haue confidence that he hath redemption & righteouſnes in the croſſe of Chriſt, & life in his death, but principally ſtanding vpon the true communion of Chriſt himſelf. For thoſe good things ſhould not come to vs vnleſſe Chriſt firſt made himſelfe ours. I ſay therefore, that in the myſtery of the Supper, by the ſignes of bread and wine Chriſt is truly deliuered to vs, yea and his body and blood, in which he hath fulfilled all obedience for purchaſing of righteouſneſſe to vs: namely that firſt we ſhould grow together into one body with him: and then being made partakers of his ſubſtance, we may alſo feele his power in the communicating of all his good things.

A local preſence of the body of Chriſt not needfull vnto this that we may enioy the partaking of it which the ſpirit of Chriſt performeth without ſuch groſſenes.

12 Now I come downe to the exceſſiue mixtures, which ſuperſtition hath brought in. For herein Satan hath plaied with maruellous ſubtiltie, that withdrawing the minds of men from heauen, he might fill them with peruerſe error, as though Chriſt were faſtned to the element of bread. And firſt we muſt not dreame ſuch a preſence of Chriſt in the Sacrament, as the craftſmen of the Court of Rome haue faigned: as though the body of Chriſt were made preſent with preſence of place, to be handeled with hands, to be brooſed with teeth, and ſwallowed with mouth. For this forme of recantation Pope Nicholas endited to Berengarius, to be a witneſſe of his repentance: namely with words ſo far monſtrous, that the Author of the Gloſe crieth out that there is danger, if the readers doe not wiſely take heed to themſelues, leſt they ſucke out of them an hereſie worſe than was that of Berengarius. In the ſecond diſtinction, in the Chapter beginning thus, Ego Berengarius. But Peter Lombarde, although he trauell much in excuſing the abſurditie, yet more inclineth to the contrary ſentence. For as we nothing doubt that it hath limits according to the perpetuall nature of the body of men, and is holden in heauen, into which it was once receiued, vntill he returne to iudgement: ſo to draw it backe vnder theſe corruptible elements or to imagine it preſent euery where, we account it to be vtterly vnlawful. Neither verily is it ſo needfull to this that we may enioy the partaking of it: for as much as the Lord giueth vs this benefit by his Spirit that we be made one with him in body, ſpirit, and ſoule. The bond therefore of this conioyning is the ſpirit of Chriſt, by the knitting wherof we be coupled together, and as it were a certaine conduit, by which whatſoeuer Chriſt himſelfe both is and hath, is conueyed to vs. For if we behold the ſunne ſhining foorth with his beames vpon the earth after a certain maner to caſt forth his ſubſtance vnto it to engender, nouriſh, and quicken the fruits therof: why ſhould the extending of beames of the ſpirit of Chriſt be inferior to conueigh the communion of his fleſh and blood into vs? Wherfore the ſcripture, when it ſpeaketh of our partaking with Chriſt, referreth the whole force therof to the ſpirit. Yet inſteed of many, one place ſhall be ſufficient. For Paul in the eight Chapter to the Romans, ſaith that Chriſt dwelleth in vs none otherwiſe than by his ſpirit: wherby yet he taketh not away that communion of his fleſh and blood of which we now ſpeake, but teacheth that the Spirit alone worketh that we poſſeſſe whole Chriſt and haue him dwelling in vs.

The maner of preſence which the Schoolemen haue deuiſed in this Sacrament.

13 The Schoolmen thought more ſhamefaſtly which were with holden with horror of ſo barbarous vngodlineſſe. Yet they alſo themſelues doe nothing but mocke with ſubtiller deceits. They grant that Chriſt is not contained there by way of circumſcription not after a bodily maner: but afterward they inuent a way, which neither themſelues doe vnderſtand, nor they can declare to other: yet it is ſuch as falleth to this point that Chriſt muſt be ſought in the forme of bread as they call it. For what is it? When they ſay that the ſubſtance of bread is turned into Chriſt, doe they not faſten him to the whiteneſſe which they there leaue? But (ſay they) he is ſo contained in the Sacrament, that he abideth in heauen: and we determine no other preſence but of habitude. But whatſoeuer words they bring in, to cloake it with a deceitfull colour, this is the end of all that that is by conſecration made Chriſt, which before was bread: that from thencefoorth Chriſt lieth hid vnder that colour of bread. Which alſo they are not aſhamed in plaine words to expreſſe. For theſe be the words of Lombarde: that the body of Chriſt, which in it ſelfe is viſible, when the conſecration is ended, lieth hidden and is couered vnder the forme of bread. So the forme of that bread is nothing elſe but a viſor, that taketh away the ſight of the fleſh from the eies. Neither need we many coniectures to finde what ſnares they minded to lay with theſe words, ſith the thing it ſelfe plainly ſpeaketh it. For it is to be ſeene with how great ſuperſtition in certaine ages paſt, not only the common ſort of men, but alſo the very chiefe of them haue beene holden, and at this day be holden in Popiſh Churches. For hauing little care of true faith (by which alone we both come into the fellowſhip of Chriſt, and doe cleaue together with him) ſo that they haue a carnall preſence of him, which they haue framed beſide the word, they thinke that they haue him preſent enough. Therfore in a ſumme, we ſee that this hath beene gotten by this witty ſubtilty that bread was taken of God.

Lib. 4. diſt.

Tranſubſtantiation deſtitute of antiquity to defend it.

14 From hence proceeded that ſame faigned tranſubſtantiation, for which at this day they fight more earneſtly than for all the other articles of their faith. For the firſt builders of that locall preſence could not vnwind themſelues from this doubt, how the body of Chriſt ſhould be mingled with the ſubſtance of bread, but that by and by many abſurdities did thruſt themſelues in place. Therefore they were driuen of neceſſity to flee to this inuention, that there is made a turning of bread into the body: not that the body is properly made of the bread, but becauſe Chriſt that he might hide himſelfe vnder the forme, bringeth the ſubſtance to nothing. But it is maruellous, that they fell to ſo great ignorance, yea ſenſeleſſe dulneſſe, that not onely that Scripture but alſo the conſent of the old Church fighting againſt it, they brought abroad that monſter. I grant indeed that ſome of the old writers ſometime vſed the name of turning: not for that they would deſtroy the ſubſtance in the outward ſignes, but that they might teach that the bread dedicate to the myſtery differeth far from common bread and is now other. But ech where they all plainely declare, that the holy Supper conſiſteth of two parts, an earthly part, and a heauenly: and the earthly part they doe without controuerſie expound to be bread and wine. Truely whatſoeuer they bable, it is plaine that in confirming of this doctrine they want the defence of antiquitie, which they oftentimes preſume to ſet againſt the euident word of God. For it is not ſo long agoe ſince it was inuented, it was verily vnknowen not onely to thoſe better ages, in which the purer doctrine of religion yet flouriſhed, but alſo euen when that ſame pureneſſe was much defiled. There is none of the old writers that doth not in expreſſe words confeſſe that the holy ſignes in the Supper are bread and wine. Although, as we haue ſaide, they ſometime ſet it out with diuers titles, to aduance the dignitie of the Myſterie. For whereas they ſay that in the conſecration cration is made of a ſecret turning, that now it is another thing then bread and wine: I haue euen now giuen warning that they doe not thereby meane that the things themſelues, are brought to nought, but that they are now to be otherwiſe eſteemed than common meats, which are appointed onely to feed the belly: for as much as in them is deliuered to vs the ſpirituall meate and drinke of the ſoule. This we alſo denie not. If (ſay theſe men) there be a turning, it muſt needs be that there is of one thing made another thing. If they meane that there is ſome thing made which before was not, I agree with them. If they will draw it to that their owne imagination, let them anſwer me what change they thinke to be made in baptiſme. For herein the fathers alſo do determine a maruellous turning, when they ſay that of a corruptible element is made a ſpirituall waſhing of the ſoule, yet none of them denieth that water remaineth. But (ſay they) there is no ſuch thing in baptiſme, as is that in the Supper. This is my body. As though the queſtion were of thoſe words, which haue a meaning plaine enough: and not rather of that word of turning, which ought to ſignifie no more in the Supper than in baptiſme. Therefore farewell they with theſe ſnares of ſillables, whereby they do nothing elſe but bewray their owne hungrineſſe. For otherwiſe the ſignification would not agree together vnleſſe the truth which is there figured, had a liuely image in outward ſigne. Chriſts will was by the outward ſigne to teſtifie that his fleſh is meat. If hee did ſet before vs only an empty imaginatiue forme of bread not true bread, where were the correlation or ſimilitude which ſhould lead vs from the viſible thing to the inuiſible? For, that all things may agree together, the ſignification ſhall extend no further, but that we be fed with the forme of the fleſh of Chriſt. As, if in baptiſme the forme of water ſhould deceiue our eies, it ſhould not be to vs a certaine pledge of our waſhing: yea by that deceitfull ſhew there ſhould be giuen vs an occaſion of wauering. Therefore the nature of the ſacrament is ouerthrowen, vnleſſe in the manner of ſignifying the earthly ſigne anſwer to the heauenly thing. And therefore wee looſe the truth of this myſterie, vnleſſe true bread repreſent to vs the true body of Chriſt. I repeate it againe: Sith the ſupper is nothing elſe, than a viſible teſtifying of that promiſe which is in the ſixt Chapter of Iohn, namely that Chriſt is the bread of life, which came downe from heauen: there muſt be viſible bread vſed for a meane whereby that ſame ſpirituall bread may be figured: vnleſſe wee will that we looſe all the fruit which in this behalfe God tenderly granteth to ſuſtaine our weakneſſe. Now by what reaſon ſhould Paul gather, that all wee are one body and one bread, which doe together partake of one bread, if there remained only an imginatiue forme and not rather a naturall truth of bread? 1. Cor. 10. 17.

15 But they could neuer haue beene ſo fowly beguiled with the deceits of ſatan, but becauſe they were already bewitched with this error, that the body of Chriſt incloſed vnder bread was by the bodily mouth ſent downe into the belly. The cauſe of ſo brutiſh imagination was, that conſecration ſignified as much among them as a magicall enchantment. But this principle was drawen to them, that bread is a ſacrament to none but to men, to whom the word is directed: like as the water of baptiſme is not changed in it ſelfe, but ſo ſoone as the promiſe is adioined, it beginneth to be that to vs which it before was not. This ſhall better appeare by example of a like Sacrament. The water ſpringing out of the rocke in the deſert was to the fathers a token and ſigne of the ſame thing, which the wine doth figure to vs in the Supper. For Paul teacheth that they drunke the ſame ſpirituall drinke. But it was a common watering for the beaſts and cattell of the people. Whereupon it is eaſily gathered, that in earthly elements, when they are applied to a ſpirituall vſe, there is made no other turning but in reſpect of men, inſomuch as they are to them ſeales of the promiſes. Moreouer ſith Gods purpoſe is (as I often repeat) as it were by handſome chariots to lift vs vp to himſelfe, they do by their waywardneſſe wickedly diſappoint the ſame, which do indeed call vs to Chriſt, but lurking inuiſibly vnder bread. For it is not poſſible that the mind of men, vncombring it ſelfe from the immeaſurablenes of places, ſhould attaine to Chriſt euen aboue the heauens. That which nature denied them, they attempted to amend with a more hurtfull remedie: that abiding in earth,

The viſible elements in the Sacrament changed not in reſpect of their nature but of their vſe only.

Exo. 17. 6.

1. Cor. 10. 4.

earth, wee ſhould neede no heauenly neereneſſe of Chriſt. Loe, this is the neceſſitie, that compelled them to transfigure the body of Chriſt. In Bernards time, although a harder manner of ſpeaking was growen in vſe, yet tranſubſtantiation was not then knowen. And in all ages before that, this ſimilitude did flie about in euerie mans mouth, that there is with bread and wine a ſpirituall thing ioined in this myſtery. Of the words they anſwer as they thinke, wittilie: but bringing nothing fit for this preſent cauſe. The rodde of Moſes (ſay they) beeing turned into a ſerpent, Exod. 4. 3. & 7. 10. although it did get the name of a ſerpent, yet keepeth ſtill the olde name, and is called a rodde. So in their opinion it is as probable, that although the bread paſſe into a new ſubſtance, it may be abuſiuely and yet not vnaptly called that which it appeareth to the eies. But what likelihood or neerneſſe find they betweene a cleere miracle, and their fained illuſion, of which no eie in earth is witneſſe? The magicians had mocked with deceits, ſo that the Aegyptians were perſwaded, that they excelled in diuine power to charge creatures aboue the order of nature. Moſes came foorth, and driuing away all their deceits, ſhewed that the inuincible power of God was on his ſide, becauſe his owne rod conſumed all the reſt. But for aſmuch as that was a turning diſcernable with eies, therefore as we haue ſaid, it pertaineth nothing to this preſent cauſe: and a little time after, the rodde viſibly returned into his owne forme. Beſide that it is not knowen, whether that ſudden turning was of ſubſtance or no. Alſo the alluding to the roddes of the magycians is to be conſidered, which the Prophet therefore would not call ſerpents, leſt he ſhould ſeeme to ſignifie a turning where none was: becauſe thoſe deceiuers had done nothing but caſt a miſt before the eies of the beholders. What likeneſſe herewith haue theſe formes of ſpeech. The bread which we breake, So oft as yee ſhall eat this bread, They communicated in breaking of bread, 1. Cor. 10. 16. & 11. 26. Act. 24. and ſuch other? It is certaine that their eies were only deceiued with the enchantment of the magicians. As concerning Moſes, the matter is more doubtfull, by whoſe hand it was no more hard for God to make of a rod a ſerpent, and againe of a ſerpent to make a rod, than to cloth Angels with fleſhly bodies, and by and by after to vncloth them. If the nature of this myſterie were the ſame or like, there were ſome colour for their ſolution. Let this therefore remaine certaine, that it is not truly nor fitly promiſed vs that in the ſupper the fleſh of Chriſt is truly to vs for meat, vnleſſe the true ſubſtance of the outward ſigne agree with it. And (as one error groweth of another) the place of Ieremie is ſo fooliſhly wreſted to prooue tranſubſtantiation, that it irketh me to rehearſe it. The Prophet complaineth that wood is put in his bread: meaning Ier. 11. 19. that by the cruelty of his enemies, his bread was infected with bitterneſſe. As Dauid Pſal. 69. 22. with a like figure bewaileth that his meat was corrupted with gall, and his drinke with vineger. Theſe men will haue it that the body of Chriſt was by way of allegorie faſtned to the croſſe. But ſome of the old fathers thought ſo. As though wee ought not rather to pardon their ignorance, and to bury their ſhame, than to adde ſhameleſneſſe to compell them yet ſtill to fight like enemies with the naturall meaning of the Prophet.

The error of conſubſtantiation and the cauſe whereof it riſeth.

16 Other, which ſee that the proportionall relation of the ſigne and the thing ſignified, cannot be ouerthrowen, but that the truth of the myſtery muſt fall, doe confeſſe that the bread of the ſupper is verily a ſubſtance of an earthly and corruptible element, and ſuffereth no change in it ſelfe, but hath vnder it ſelfe the body of Chriſt incloſed. If they did ſo declare their meaning, that when the bread is deliuered in the myſtery, there is adioined the deliuering of the body, becauſe the truth is vnſeuerable from the ſigne: I would not much ſtriue with them. But becauſe they placing the body in the bread, doe faine to it a being euery where contrary to the nature thereof, and in adding vnder the bread, they will haue it lie there hidden: it is neceſſary a little while to draw ſuch ſubtleties out of their dennes. For my mind is not as of ſet purpoſe to go through with all this point: but only that I may lay the foundations of the diſputation which ſhall by and by follow in place fit for it. They will therefore haue the body of Chriſt to be inuiſible and immeaſurable, that it may be hid vnder the bread: becauſe they thinke they doe not otherwiſe communicate with him than if he deſcend into the bread: but they comprehend not the manner of deſcending, whereby he lifteth teth vs vpward to himselfe. They lay vpon it all the colours that they can: but when they haue said all, it sufficiently appeareth, that they stay vpon the locall presence of Christ. Whence commeth that? euen because they can abide to conceiue no other partaking of the flesh and bloud, but which consisteth either of ioining and touching of place, or of some grosse enclosing.

17 And, that they may obstinately defend the error once rashly conceiued, some of them sticke not to say, that the flesh of Christ had neuer any other measurings, but so farre and wide as heauen and earth is broad. Whereas he was borne a child out of the wombe, whereas he grew, whereas he was spread abroad on the crosse, whereas he was inclosed in the sepulchre, the same was done by a certaine dispensation, that he might be borne and die, and performe the other duties of man. Whereas after his resurrection he was seene in his wonted forme of body, whereas he was taken vp to heauen, whereas last of all also after his ascention he was seene of Stephen and Paul: it was done by the same dispensation, that it might appeare to the sight of men that he was made a king in heauen. What is this else, but to raise vp Marcion out of hell. For no man can doubt that the body of Christ was a fantasie or a phantasticall thing, if he was of such state. Some slip away somewhat more subtlely, with saying that this body which is giuen in the sacrament is glorious and immortall: and that therefore it is no absurdity, if it be contained in many places, if in no place, if with no forme, vnder the Sacrament. But I aske what manner of body Christ gaue to the disciples, the day before that he suffered? doe not the words sound that hee gaue the same mortall body, which was within a little after to be deliuered? He had alreadie before (say they) shewed his glory to bee seene to three of the disciples. That is true indeede, but his will was by that brightnesse to giue them a taste of immortality for an hower. In the meane time they shall not there find a double body, but that one body which Christ did beare, garnished with new glory. But when he distributed his body at his first supper, the time was now at hand, when hee being stricken of God, and humbled should lie without glorie as a leaprous man: so farre is it off that he then would shew foorth the glory of his resurrection. And how great a window is heere opened to Marcion, if the body of Christ was seene in one place mortall and base, and in another place was holden immortall and glorious? Howbeit if their opinion take place, the same hapneth daily: because they are compelled to confesse that the body of Christ being visible in it selfe, lieth hid inuisibly vnder the signe of bread. And yet they that vomit out such móstrousnes are so not ashamed of their own shame, that they doe vnprouoked, hainously raile at vs, because we doe not subscribe to them.

18 Now if they list to fasten the body and bloud of the Lord to bread and wine: the one shall of necessity be plucked in sunder from the other. For as the bread is deliuered seuerally from the cup, so the body vnited to the bread must needs be deuided from the bloud inclosed in the cup. For when they affirme that the body is in the bread and the bloud in the cup: and the bread and wine are by spaces of place distant the one from the other: they can by no shift escape, but that the body must be seuered from the bloud. But whereas they are wont to alleadge, that by accompanying (as they faine) in the body is the bloud, and likewise in the bloud is the body, that verily is too trifling: for as much as the signes in which they are enclosed, are so seuered. But if we be lifted vp with our eies and minds to heauen, that we seeke Christ there in the glory of his kingdome: as the signes doe allure vs to him whole, so vnder the signe of bread, we shall be fed with his body, vnder the signe of wine wee shall seuerally drinke his bloud, that at length we may enioy him whole. For although he hath taken away his flesh from vs, and in his body is ascended vp into heauen, yet he sitteth at the right hand of the father, that is to say he raigneth in the power, and maiesty, and glory of the father. This kingdome is neither bounded with any spaces of place, nor compassed about with any measurings, but that Christ may shew foorth his might whersoeuer it pleaseth him both in heauen and in earth: but that he may shew himselfe present with power and strength: but that he may alway be at hand with them that be his, breathing his life into them, may liue in them, strengthen them, quicken them, preserue them safe euen as if he were present in body: finally, but that he may feed them with his own body, the

The body and bloud of Christ though not fastned vnto, yet spiritually deliuered in the bread and wine of the holy Eucharist.

the communion whereof he doth by the power of his ſpirit powre into them. After this manner the body and blood of Chriſt is deliuered to vs in the Sacrament.

The true manner of Chriſts preſence, and the ſubſtantiall communicating of his body and blood in the Lords ſupper, made hateſull to the world by the vniuſt iudgements of men.

19 But we muſt appoint ſuch a preſence of Chriſt in the ſupper, as may neither faſten him to the element of bread, nor ſhut him vp in the bread, nor by any meane compaſſe him in, (for it is plaine that all theſe things abate his heauenly glory) finally ſuch as may neither take from him his owne meaſure, nor diuerſly draw him in many places at once, nor faine to him ſuch an vnmeaſurable greatnes as is ſpread abroad throughout heauen and earth, for theſe things are plainly againſt the truth of the nature of manhood. Let vs (I ſay) neuer ſuffer theſe two exceptions to be taken away from vs. The one, that nothing be abated from the glory of Chriſt, which is done, when he is brought vnder the corruptible elements of this world, or is bound to any earthly creatures. The other, that nothing be by faining, applied to his body, that agreeth not with the nature of man: which is done, when it is either ſaid to be infinite, or is ſet in many places at once. But theſe abſurdities being taken away, I willingly receiue whatſoeuer may auaile to expreſſe the true and ſubſtantiall communicating of the body and blood of the Lord, which communicating is deliuered to the faithfull vnder the holy ſignes of the ſupper: and ſo that they may be thought not to receiue it by imagination only or vnderſtanding of mind, but to enioy it indeed to the foode of eternall life. Why this ſentence is ſo hatefull to the world, and all defence taken away from it by the vniuſt iudgements of many, there is no cauſe at all, but for that the diuell hath with horrible bewitching madded their minds. Truly that which we teach, doth in all points very well agree with the Scriptures: it containeth neither any abſurdity, nor darkneſſe, nor doubtfulneſſe: it is not againſt true godlineſſe and ſound edification: finally, it hath nothing in it, that may offend, ſauing that in certaine ages paſt, when that ignorance and barbarouſneſſe of Sophiſters raigned in the Church, ſo cleere light and open truth hath been vnworthily oppreſſed. Yet becauſe ſatan at this day alſo trauaileth by troubleſome ſpirits to ſpot it with all the ſlanders and reproches that he can, and bendeth himſelfe to no other thing with greater endeuour: it is profitable the more diligently to defend and reſcue it.

The words of Chriſts inſtitution, in word held, in deed peruerted and forſaken by the authors as well of tranſubſtantiation as conſubſtantiation. Matt. 26. 26. Mark. 14. 22. Luk. 22. 17. 1. Cor. 11. 24.

20 Now before that we go any further, we muſt entreat of the ſelfe inſtitution of Chriſt: ſpecially becauſe this is the moſt glorious obiection that our aduerſaries haue, that we depart from the words of Chriſt. Therefore, that we may be diſcharged of the falſe cauſe of malice wherewith they burden vs, our fitteſt beginning ſhall be at the expoſition of the words. Three Euangeliſts and Paul rehearſe, that Chriſt tooke bread: when he had giuen thanks he brake it, gaue it to his diſciples and ſaid, Take, eat, this is my body which is deliuered, or broken for you. Of the cup Matthew and Marke ſay thus: This cup is the blood of the new Teſtament, which ſhall be ſhed for many vnto forgiueneſſe of ſinnes. But Paul and Luke ſay thus: This cup is the new Teſtament in my blood. The patrones of tranſubſtantiation will haue by the pronoune (this) the forme of bread to be ſignified, becauſe the conſecration is made in the whole content of the ſentence, and there is no ſubſtance that can be ſhewed. But if they be holden with religious care of the words, becauſe Chriſt teſtified, that that which he reached into the diſciples hands, was his body: truly this their deuiſe, that that which was bread is now the body, is moſt far from the proper meaning of them. That which Chriſt tooke into his hands and gaue the Apoſtles, he affirmeth to be his body: but he tooke bread: who therefore cannot vnderſtand that bread is yet ſhewed? and therefore there is no greater abſurdity, than to remooue that to the forme, which is ſpoken of the bread. Other, when they expound this word (is) for (to be tranſubſtantiate,) do flee to a more enforced and violently wreſted gloſſe. Therefore there is no cauſe why they ſhould pretend that they be mooued with reuerence of words. For this was vnheard of among all nations and languages, that the word (is) ſhould be taken in this ſenſe, namely for to be turned into another thing. As for them that leaue bread in the ſupper, and affirme that there is the body of Chriſt, they much differ among themſelues. They which ſpeake more modeſtly, although they preciſely exact the letter. This is my body, yet afterward ſwarue from their preciſeneſſe, and ſay that it is as much in effect as that the body of Chriſt is with bread, in bread, and vnder bread. Of the the matter itſelfe which they affirme, we haue already touched ſomewhat, and we ſhall by and by haue occaſion yet to ſpeake more. Now I diſpute only of the words, by which they ſay they are reſtrained that they cannot admit bread to be called the body, becauſe it is a ſigne of the body. But if they ſhun all figures, why doe they leape away from the plaine ſhewing of Chriſt, to their owne manners of ſpeaking farre differing from it? For there is great difference betweene this that bread is the body, and this that the body is with bread. But becauſe they ſaw it to be impoſſible, that this ſimple propoſition might ſtand, that bread is the body: they haue attempted to ſcape away by thoſe formes of ſpeech, as it were by crooked turnings. Some more bold ſticke not to affirme that euen in proper ſpeaking, bread is the body, and by this meane they truly prooue themſelues to be literall men. If it be obiected, that therefore the bread is Chriſt, and is God: this verily they will deny, becauſe it is not expreſſed in the words of Chriſt. But they ſhall nothing preuaile by denying it: for as much as all doe agree that whole Chriſt is offered vs in the ſupper. But it is an intollerable blaſphemy, that it be without figure ſpoken of a fraile and corruptible element, that it is Chriſt. Now I aske of them, whether theſe two propoſitions be both of one effect, Chriſt is the ſonne of God, and bread is the body of Chriſt. If they grant that they are diuerſe, (which we will enforce them to grant whether they will or no) then let them anſwer whence commeth the difference. I thinke they will bring none other but that the bread is after the ſacramentall manner called the body. Whereupon followeth, that Chriſts words are not ſubiect to the common rule, nor ought to be tried by Grammar. Alſo I aske of the preciſe and ſtiffe requirers of the letter, where Luke and Paul doe call the cup the Teſtament in the bloud, whether they do not expreſſe the ſame thing which they did in the firſt part, where they call bread the body. Truly the ſame religion was in the one part of the myſtery that was in the other: and becauſe ſhortneſſe is darke, longer ſpeech doth better open the meaning. So oft therefore as they ſhall affirme by one word, that the bread is the body: I will out of moe words bring a fit expoſition, that it is the Teſtament in the body. For why? Shall we neede to ſeeke a more faithfull or ſurer expoſitor than Paul and Luke? Neither yet doe I tend hereunto, to diminiſh any thing of that communicating of the body of Chriſt which I haue confeſſed: only my purpoſe is to confute that fooliſh waiwardneſſe, whereby they doe ſo hatefully braule about words. I vnderſtand, by the authority of Paul and Luke, that the bread is the body of Chriſt, becauſe it is the couenant in the body. If they fight againſt this, they haue warre not with me, but with the ſpirit of God. Howſoeuer they cry out that they be touched with reuerence of the words of Chriſt, whereby they doe not figuratiuely vnderſtand thoſe things that are plainely ſpoken: yet this is not a pretence rightfull enough, why they ſhould ſo refuſe all the reaſons which we obiect to the contrarie. In the meane time, as I haue alreadie giuen warning, it is conuenient to learne, what maner of thing this is, The teſtament in the body and bloud of Chriſt: becauſe the couenant ſtabliſhed with the ſacrifice of death, ſhould otherwiſe not profit vs, vnleſſe there were adioyned that ſecret communicating whereby wee growe into one with Chriſt.

Luk. 22. 20. 1. Cor. 11. 25.

21 It remaineth therefore that for the affinitie which the things ſignified haue with their ſignes, we confeſſe that the ſelfe name of the thing was giuen to the ſigne: figuratiuely in deed, but not without a moſt fit proportionall agreement. I leaue allegories and parables, leaſt any man ſhould quarrell that I ſeeke ſtarting holes, and wander out of the preſent purpoſe. I ſay that this is a ſpeech by figure of tranſnomination which is commonly vſed in the Scripture, when myſteries are intreated of. For neither can you otherwiſe vnderſtand that which is ſaid: that circumciſion is a couenant: that the lambe is the paſſeouer: that the Sacrifices of the law are expiations: finallie that the rocke, out of which water flowed in the deſert, was Chriſt, vnleſſe you take it to be ſpoken by way of transferring of names. Neither are names transferred onely from the higher name to the lower? but contrariwiſe the name of the viſible ſigne is alſo giuen to the thing ſignified: as when it is ſaid that God appeered ro Moſes in the buſh: when the arke of couenant is called God, and the face of God: and the doue is called the holy Ghoſt. For though the ſigne differ in ſubſtance from the thing ſignified:

Figuratiue ſpeech vſuall, and vnto ſignes the names of things ſignified giuen when ſacramentall myſteries are intreated of: which thing S. Auguſtine plainely teacheth.

Exod. 3. 2. Pſal. 84. 8. and 42. 3. Matt. 3. 16.

fied: because this is ſpirituall and heauenly, and that is corporall and viſible: yet because it doth not onely figure the thing which it is holily appointed to repreſent, as a naked and emptie token, but doth alſo truely deliuer it in deede: why may not the name of the thing rightly accord with it? If ſignes deuiſed by men, which are rather images of things abſent, then marks of things preſent, which ſelfe abſent things, they doe oftentimes deceitfully ſhadow, are yet ſometime garniſhed with the titles of the things: then thoſe things that are ordained of God, doe by much greater reaſon borrow the name of thoſe things, of which they alway both beare a ſure and not deceitfull ſignification, and haue the truth adioyned with them. There is therefore ſo great likenesſe and neerenesſe of the one to the other, that it is eaſie to draw their names to and fro. Therefore let our aduerſaries ceaſe to heape vnſauourie ſcoffings againſt vs, in calling vs Tropiſts, becauſe we expound the ſacramentall manner of ſpeaking after the common vſe of the Scripture. For whereas the Sacraments agree together in many things: in this transferring of names, they haue all a certaine communitie together.

1.Cor.10.4. As therefore the Apoſtle teacheth, that the ſtone out of which ſpirituall drinke did ſpring to the Iſraelites, was Chriſt, becauſe it was a viſible ſigne, vnder which that ſpirituall drinke was truly indeede, but not diſcernably to the eie perceiued: ſo bread is at this day called the bodie of Chriſt, for as much as it is a ſigne whereby the Lord offereth to vs the true eating of his body. Neither did Auguſtine otherwiſe thinke or ſpeake leaſt any man ſhould deſpiſe this as a new inuention. If (ſaith he) the ſacraments had not a certaine likenesſe of thoſe things whereof they are ſacraments, they ſhould not be ſacraments at all. And of this likenesſe oftentimes they take the names of the things themſelues. As therefore after a certaine manner the ſacrament of the body of Chriſt, is the body of Chriſt: the ſacrament of the bloud of Chriſt, is the bloud of Chriſt: ſo the ſacrament of faith is faith. There be in him many like places, which it were ſuperfluous to heape together, ſith that one ſufficeth: ſauing that the readers muſt be warned that the holie man teacheth the ſame thing in the epiſtle to Euodium. But it is a trifling ſhift to ſay, that where Auguſtine teacheth, that when transferring is often and commonly vſed in myſteries, he maketh no mention of the Supper: becauſe if this ſhift were receiued, we might not reaſon from the generaltie to the ſpecialtie, neither were this a good argument: Euery feeling creature hath power of mouing, therefore an oxe and an horſe haue power of mouing. Howbeit long diſputation hereof is in another place ended by the words of the ſame holie man, where he ſaith, that Chriſt ſticked not to call it his body, when he gaue the ſigne of his body. Againſt Adimantus the Manichean, in the twelft chapter, And in another place, vpon the third Pſalme. Maruellous (ſaith he) is the patience of Chriſt, that he receiued Iudas to the banket, wherein he committed and deliuered to his diſciples the figure of his body and bloud.

Epiſt.23.ad Bonifac.

The force of the ſubſtantiue verbe in the words of conſecration.

22 But if ſome preciſe man, being blind at all the reſt, doe ſtand onely vpon this word (this is) as though it ſeuered this myſterie from all other, the ſolution is eaſie. They ſay that the vehemence of the ſubſtantiue verbe (is) is ſo great that it admitteth no figure. Which if we graunt to them: euen in the words of Paul is read the ſubſtantiue verbe, where he calleth bread the communicating of the body of Chriſt. But the communicating is another thing than the body it ſelfe. Yea commonly where Sacraments are intreated of, we finde the ſame word vſed. As: this ſhall be to you a couenant with me. This Lambe ſhall be to you a paſſeouer. To rehearſe no moe: when Paul ſaith that the rocke was Chriſt, why doe they take the ſubſtantiue verbe in that place to be of leſſe vehemence than in the ſpeech of Chriſt? Let them alſo anſwere, where Iohn ſaith, the holy Ghoſt was not yet, becauſe Ieſus was not yet glorified, of what force the ſubſtantiue verbe is in that place. For if they abide faſtened to their rule, the eternall eſſence of the holy Ghoſt ſhall be deſtroyed, as though it tooke beginning at the aſcenſion of Chriſt. Finally let them anſwere, what meaneth that ſaying of Paul, that Baptiſme is the waſhing of regeneration and renewing, which it is euident to be vnprofitable to many. But nothing is ſtronger to confute them, than that ſaying of Paul, that the Church is Chriſt. For bringing a ſimilitude of the body of man, he addeth, So is Chriſt: in which place he vnderſtandeth the onely begotten ſonne ſonne of God, not in himſelfe, but in his members. Hereby I thinke I haue obtained that to ſound witted and vncorrupted men the ſlanders of our enemies, are lothſome, when they ſpread abroade, that we withdraw credit from the words of Chriſt: which we doe no leſſe obediently embrace than they, and doe weigh them with more godly reuerence. Yea their negligent careleſneſſe sheweth that they doe not greatly care what Chriſt meant, ſo that it giue them a buckler to defend their obſtinacie: like as our earneſt ſearching ought to be a witneſſe how much we eſteeme the authoritie of Chriſt. They odiouſly ſpread abroade, that naturall ſenſe of man withholdeth vs from beleeuing that which Chriſt hath vttered with his owne holie mouth: but how maliciouſly they burden vs with this ſlander, I haue a great part alreadie made plaine, and hereafter it ſhall more cleerely appeere. Therefore nothing withholdeth vs from beleeuing Chriſt when he ſpeaketh, nor from obeying ſo ſoone as he doth but with becke will this or that. Onely this is the queſtion, whether it be vnlawfull to inquire of the naturall meaning.

23 Theſe good maſters, that they may ſeeme well lettered, doe forbid men to depart be it neuer ſo little from the letter. But I on the other ſide, when the ſcripture nameth God a warlike man, becauſe I ſee that without figuratiue tranſlation it is too rough a manner of ſpeaking, doe not doubt that it is a compariſon taken from men. And truly vpon none other pretence in the old time the Anthropomorphites troubled the true teaching fathers, but that catching faſt hold of theſe ſayings, The eies of God doe ſee, It went vp to his eares, His hand ſtretched out, The earth his foote-ſtoole, they cried out that God had his body taken from him, which the Scripture aſſigneth vnto him. If this law be receiued, outragious barbarouſneſſe ſhall ouerwhelme the whole light of faith. For what monſters of abſurdities may not phrentike men picke out, if it be granted them to all eadge euery ſmall title to ſtablish their opinions? That which they obiect, that it is not likely, that when Chriſt prepared for his Apoſtles a ſingular comfort in aduerſities, he did then ſpeake in a riddle or darkely, maketh of our ſide. For if it had not come in the minds of the Apoſtles that bread was figuratiuely called the body, becauſe it was the ſigne of the body, they had without doubt been troubled with ſo monſtrous a thing. Almoſt at the ſame moment Iohn reporteth that they did ſticke in perplexitie at euery of the leaſt difficulties. They which ſtriue among themſelues, how Chriſt will go to the father: and do moue queſtion, how he will go out of the world: they which vnderſtand nothing of thoſe things that are ſpoken concerning the heauenly father, till they ſee him: how would they haue been ſo eaſie to beleeue that which all reaſon refuſeth, that Chriſt ſitteth at the boord in their ſight, and is incloſed inuiſible vnder bread? Whereas therefore they in eating the bread without doubting, teſtified their conſent, hereby appeereth that they tooke Chriſtes words in the ſame ſenſe that we doe, becauſe they remembred that which ought not to ſeeme ſtrange in myſteries, that the name of the thing ſignified is tranſferred to the ſigne. Therefore it was to the diſciples, as it is to vs, a certaine and cleere comfort, entangled with no riddle. Neither is there any other cauſe why ſome ſhould depart from our expoſition, but becauſe the inchantment of the diuell hath blinded them, namely that they ſhould faigne darknes to themſelues, where the expoſition of an apt figure offereth it ſelfe. Moreouer if we preciſely ſtand vpon the words, Chriſt ſhould wrongfully haue ſpoken in one place ſeuerally another thing concerning the bread than he ſpeaketh of the cup. He calleth the bread his bodie, he calleth the wine his bloud: either it ſhall be a confuſed vaine repetition, or it ſhall be ſuch a partition as ſhall diuide the body from the bloud. Yea it ſhall as truly be ſaid of the cup, This is my body, as of the bread it ſelfe, and it may likewiſe interchangeably be ſaid, that the bread is the bloud, If they anſwere that we muſt conſider to what end or vſe the ſignes were ordained: I graunt it in deede: but in the meane time they ſhall not vnwinde themſelues, but that their error muſt draw this abſurditie with it, that the bread is the blood, and the wine is the body. Now I wot not what this meaneth, when they graunt the bread and the body to be diuers things, yet to affirme that the one is ſpoken of the other properly and without any figure, as: if a man ſhould ſay that a garment is indeede a thing differing from a man, and yet that it is properly called a man. In th: meane

The words and ſyllables of Chriſts ſpeech not ſo preciſely to be ſtood vpō, that all expoſition bereeſted which being ſound and ſober bringeth light, but no diſcredit vnto the ſpeaker.

meane while as though their victorie consisted in obstinacie and railing, they say that Christ is accused of lying, if an exposition be sought of the words. Now it shall be easie for vs to shew to the Readers how vniust wrong these catchers of syllables doe to vs, when they fill the simple with this opinion, that we withdraw credit from the words of Christ, which we haue proued to be furiously peruerted and confounded by them, but to be faithfully and rightly expounded by vs.

The immeasurable power of God not at all diminished by them who refuse the doctrine of transubstantiation.

24 But the slander of this lie cannot be vtterly purged, till another crime be wiped away. For they spread abroad, that we be so addicted to naturall reason, that we giue no more to the power of God, than the order of nature suffereth and common sense teacheth. From so malicious slanders I appeale to the very doctrine it selfe which I haue declared: which doth clearely enough shew, that I doe not measure this mystery by the proportion of mans reason, nor doe make it subiect to the lawes of nature. I beseech you, haue we learned out of naturall philosophie, that Christ doth so from heauen feede our Soules and bodies with his flesh, as our bodies are nourished with bread and wine? Whence commeth this power to flesh, that it may giue life? All men will say that it is not done naturally. It will no more please mans reason, that the flesh of Christ reacheth to vs, that it may be food vnto vs. Finally whosoeuer hath tasted of our doctrine, shall be rauished into admiration of the secret power of God. But these good men that be so zealous of it, forge to themselues a miracle, which being taken away, God himselfe vanisheth with his power. I desire to haue the Readers once againe warned, that they diligently weigh what our doctrine bringeth, whether it hang vpon common sense, or with the wings of Faith, surmounting the world, climbeth vp beyond it into the heauens. We say that Christ as well with the outward signe as with his spirit, descendeth to vs, that he may truely quicken our soules with the substance of his flesh and of his blood. In these few words he that perceiueth not to be contained many miracles, is more than senseless: forasmuch as there is nothing more beside nature, than that Soules should borrow spirituall and heauenly life, of the flesh which tooke her beginning of the earth, and which was subiect to death. Nothing is more incredible, than that things distant and a sunder by the whole space of heauen and earth, should in so great distance of places not onely be conioyned, but also vnited, that Soules may receiue food of the flesh of Christ. Therefore let wayward men cease to procure hatred to vs, by a filthy slaunder, as though we did enuiously restraine any thing of the immeasurable power of God. For they doe either too foolishly erre, or too maliciously lie. For it is not here in question what God could, but what he would. We affirme that to be done which pleased him. But it pleased him, that Christ should be made like to his brethren in all things, except sinne. What manner of thing is our flesh? Is it not such as consisteth of the certaine measure of it, as is contained in place, as is touched, as is seene? And why (say they) may not God make, that one selfe same flesh may occupie many and diuers places, may be contained in one place, may be without measure and forme? Thou mad man, why requirest thou of the power of God to make flesh at one selfe time to be and not to be flesh? Like as if thou shouldest instantly require him to make at one selfe time the light to be both light and darkenesse. But he willeth light to be light, darkenesse to be darkenesse, flesh to be flesh. He shall in deede when it pleaseth him, turne darkenesse into light, and light into darkenesse, but when thou requirest that light and darkenesse may not differ, what doest thou else but peruert the order of the wisedome of God? Therefore flesh must be flesh: and Spirit Spirit, euery thing in such law and condition as God hath created it. But such is the condition of flesh, that it must be in one yea and that a certaine place, and consist of her measure and of her forme. With this condition Christ tooke flesh vpon him, to which (as Augustine witnesseth) he hath giuen indeed vncorruption and glory, but he hath not taken from it nature and truth.

Heb. 4. 15.

Ep. ad Dard.

They that make Christ to lurke inuisible vnder bread, are neither thereunto led by the word,

25 They answere, that they haue the word, wherby the will of God is made plaine: namely if it be graunted them to banish out of the Church the gift of exposition, which may bring light to the word, I graunt that they haue the word: but such as in old time the Anthropomorphites had, when they made God hauing a body: such as Marcion and the Manichees had, when they faigned the body of Christ to be either heauenly heauenly or phantaſticall. For they alleadged for teſtimonies, The firſt Adam was of the earth earthly, the ſecond Adam is of heauen, heauenly: Againe, Chriſt abaſed himſelfe, taking vpon him the forme of a ſeruant, and was found in likeneſſe as a man. But the groſſe eaters thinke that there is no power of God, vnleſſe with the monſter forged in their braines, the whole order of nature be ouerthrowen: which is rather to limit God, when we couet with our faigned inuentions to prooue what he can doe. For out of what word haue they taken that the body of Chriſt is viſible in heauen, but lurketh inuiſible in earth vnder innumerable little peeces of bread? They will ſay that neceſſity requireth this that the body of Chriſt ſhould be giuen in the ſupper. Verily becauſe it pleaſed them to gather a fleſhly eating out of the words of Chriſt: they being carried away by their owne foreiudgement, were driuen of neceſſity to coine this ſubtlety, which the whole Scripture crieth out againſt. But that any thing is by vs diminiſhed of the power of God, is ſo falſe that by our doctrine the praiſe of it is very honorably ſet out. But foraſmuch as they alway accuſe vs, that we defraud God of his honor, when we refuſe that which according to common ſenſe is hard to be beleeued, although it haue been promiſed by the mouth of Chriſt: I make againe the ſame anſwer that I made euen now, that in the myſteries of Faith we doe not aske counſell of common ſenſe, but with quiet willingneſſe to learne, and with the ſpirit of meekneſſe, which Iames commendeth, we receiue the doctrine come from heauen. But in that when they perniciouſly erre, I denie not that we follow a profitable moderation. They hearing the words of Chriſt, This is my bodie, imagine a miracle moſt far from his minde. But when out of this faigned inuention ariſe fowle abſurdities, becauſe they haue already with headlong haſt put ſnares vpon themſelues, they plunge themſelues into the bottomeleſſe depth of the almightineſſe of God, that by this meane they may quench the light of truth. Hereupon commeth that proud preciſeneſſe: We will not know how Chriſt lieth hid vnder the bread, holding our ſelues contented with this ſaying of his, This is my bodie. But we, as we doe in the whole Scripture, doe with no leſſe obedience than care, ſtudie to obtaine a ſound vnderſtanding of this place: neither doe we with prepoſterous heate raſhly and without choiſe catch hold of that which firſt thruſteth it ſelfe into our mindes: but vſing diligent muſing vpon it, we embrace the meaning which the ſpirit of God miniſtreth: and ſtanding thereupon wee doe from aloft deſpiſe whatſoeuer earthly wiſedome is ſet againſt it. Yea we hold our mindes captiue that they may not be bold ſo much as with one little word to carpe againſt it: and doe humble them, that they may not dare to riſe vp againſt it. Hereupon ſprung vp the expoſition of the words of Chriſt, which to be by the continuall vſage of the Scripture common to all Sacraments, all they that haue beene thought but meanely exerciſed therein, doe know. Neither doe we, after the example of the holy Virgin, thinke it lawfull for vs, in a hard matter to enquire how it may be done.

26 But becauſe nothing ſhall more auaile to confirme the Faith of the Godly, than when they haue learned that the doctrine which wee haue taught is taken out of the word of God, and ſtandeth vpon the authoritie thereof: I will make this alſo euident with as great briefeneſſe as I can. The bodie of Chriſt, ſince the time that it roſe againe, not Ariſtotle but the holy Ghoſt teacheth to bee limited, and that it is comprehended in heauen vntill the laſt day. Neither am I ignorant that they boldly mocke out thoſe places that are alleadged for this purpoſe. So oft as Chriſt ſaith that hee will depart, leauing the world, they anſwere that that departing is nothing elſe but a changing of mortall eſtate. But after this manner, Chriſt ſhould not ſet the Holy Ghoſt in this place to ſupply (as they call it) the want of his abſence: foraſmuch as he doth not ſucceede into this place, nor Chriſt himſelfe doth deſcend againe out of the heauenly glorie to take vpon him the ſtate of mortall life. Truely the comming of the holy Ghoſt, and the aſcending of Chriſt are things ſet as contrarie: therefore it cannot be that Chriſt ſhould according to the fleſh dwell with vs after the ſame maner that he ſendeth his Spirit. Moreouer he in plaine words expreſſeth, that he will not be alway with his Diſciples in the world. This ſaying alſo they thinke that they doe gaily wipe away; as though Chriſt ſaid that hee will not alway bee poore and miſerable or ſubiect to the neceſſities of this fraile life. But the circumſtance of Chriſt proued by Scripture not to be on earth according to the preſence of the fleſh, but only by maieſtie, prouidence & grace.

the place cryeth plainely to the contrarie, becauſe there is not entreated of pouertie and neede, or of the miſerable ſtate of earthly life, but of worſhip and honor. The anointing pleaſed not the Diſciples, becauſe they thought it to be a ſuperfluous and vnprofitable coſt, and neere vnto riotous exceſſe, therefore they had rather that the price thereof which they thought to be ill waſted, had been beſtowed vpon the poore. Chriſt anſwereth that hee ſhall not alway be preſent that he may be worſhipped with ſuch honor. And none otherwiſe did Auguſtine expound it, whoſe words bee theſe which are nothing doubtfull. When Chriſt ſaid, Yee ſhall not alway haue me, hee ſpake of the preſence of his bodie. For according to his maieſtie, according to his prouidence, according to his vnſpeakeable and inuiſible grace, this was fulfilled which he ſaid, behold, I am with you euen to the ending of the world. But according to the fleſh which the Word tooke vnto him, according to this that hee was borne of the Virgin, according to this that he was taken of the Iewes, that he was faſtened to the tree, that he was taken downe from the Croſſe, that he was wrapped in linnen clothes, that he was laid in the graue, that he was manifeſtly ſhewed in the reſurrection, this was fulfilled, Yee ſhall not alway haue me with you. Why ſo? Becauſe he was conuerſant according to the preſence of his bodie fortie daies with his Diſciples, and while they accompanied him in ſeeing, not in following, he aſcended. He is not here: for he ſitteth there at the right hand of the Father. And yet he is heere: becauſe hee is not gone away in preſence of Maieſtie. Otherwiſe according to the preſence of Maieſtie we haue Chriſt alway: and according to the preſence of the fleſh it is rightly ſaid, But me ye ſhall not alway haue. For according to the preſence of the fleſh, the Church had him a few daies: now ſhe holdeth him by Faith, but ſeeth him not with eies. Where (that I may note this alſo briefly) hee maketh him preſent to vs three waies, by maieſtie, prouidence, and vnſpeakeable grace, vnder which I comprehend this maruellous communion of his bodie and blood: if ſo that we vnderſtand it to be done by the power of the holy Ghoſt, not by that faigned encloſing of his bodie vnder the element. For our Lord hath teſtified, that he hath fleſh and bones which may be felt and ſeene. And to goe away and Aſcend doe not ſignifie to make a ſhew of one aſcending and going away, but to doe indeed that which the words ſound. Shall we then (will ſome man ſay) aſſigne to Chriſt ſome certaine coaſt of heauen? But I anſwere with Auguſtine that this is a moſt curious and ſuperfluous queſtion, if ſo that yet we beleeue that he is in heauen.

Matt. 28. 10.

Lib. de fide ſym. cap. 16.

27 But what doth the name of aſcending ſo oft repeated? doth it not ſignifie a remouing from one place to another? They denie it: becauſe after their opinion, by height is onely ſignified Maieſtie of Empire. But what meaneth the very manner of aſcending? was he not in ſight of his Diſciples looking on, lifted vp on high? Doe not the Euangeliſts plainely declare that he was taken vp into the heauens? Theſe witty Sophiſters doe anſwere that with a cloud ſet betweene him and them hee was conueighed out of their ſight, that the faithfull might learne that from thence foorth he ſhould not be viſible in the world. As though, to make credit of his inuiſible preſence, he ought not rather to vaniſh away in a moment, or as though the cloud ought not rather to compaſſe him before that he ſtirred his foote. But when he is caried vpon high into the aire, and with a cloud caſt vnderneath him, teacheth that he is no more to be ſought in the earth: we ſafely gather, that now he hath his dwelling place in the heauens: as Paul alſo affirmeth, and from thence he biddeth vs to looke for him. After this manner the Angels warned the Diſciples, that they in vaine gazed vp into heauen: becauſe Ieſus which is taken vp into heauen, ſhall ſo come as they haue ſeene him goe vp. Heere alſo the aduerſaries of ſound doctrine ſtart away with a pleaſant ſhift as they thinke, ſaying that he ſhall then come viſible, which neuer went out of the earth but that he abideth inuiſible with them that be his. As though the Angels did there ſignifie a double preſence, and doe not ſimply make the Diſciples witneſſes of his going vp ſeeing it with their eies, that no doubting might remaine: euen as if they had ſaid: he in your ſight beholding it, being taken vp into heauen, hath claimed to himſelfe the heauenly Empire: it remaineth that yee patiently abide in expectation, till he come againe the Iudge of the world: becauſe he is now entred into heauen, heauen, not that he may alone poſſeſſe it, but that he may gather together with him you and all the godly.

28 But forasmuch as the defenders of this baſtard doctrine are not aſhamed to garniſh it with the conſenting voices of the old writers, and ſpecially of Auguſtine: I will in few words declare how peruerſly they goe about it. For whereas their teſtimonies haue beene gathered together of learned and godly men, I will not doe a thing already done: let him that will, ſeeke them out of their workes. I will not heape together, neither out of Auguſtine himſelfe, all that might make to the purpoſe: but will be content to ſhew by a few that hee is without controuerſie whole on our ſide. As for this that our aduerſaries, to writh him from vs, doe alleadge that it is commonly read in his bookes, that the fleſh and blood of Chriſt is diſtributed in the Supper, namely the ſacrifice once offered in the croſſe: it is but trifling: ſith he alſo calleth it either thankeſgiuing, or the Sacrament of the bodie. But in what ſenſe he vſeth the words of fleſh and blood, we neede not to ſeeke with long compaſſing about: forasmuch as hee declareth himſelfe, ſaying that Sacraments take their names of the likeneſſe of the things which they ſignifie: and that therefore after a certaine maner the Sacrament of the bodie is the bodie. Wherewith accordeth another place which is well enough knowen, The Lord ſticked not to ſay, This is my bodie, when he gaue the ſigne of it. Againe they obiect, that Auguſtine writeth expreſly, that the bodie of Chriſt falleth to the ground, and entreth into the mouth: euen in the ſame ſenſe, that he affirmeth it to be conſumed, becauſe he ioyneth them both together. Neither doth that make to the contrarie, which he ſaith, that when the myſterie is ended the bread is conſumed: becauſe he had a little before ſaid: ſith theſe things are knowen to men, forasmuch as they are done by men, they may haue honor as things: but as maruellous things, they may not. And to no other end tendeth that which our aduerſaries doe too vnaduiſedly draw to themſelues: that Chriſt did (after a certaine manner) beare himſelfe in his owne hands, when he reacheth the myſticall bread to the Diſciples. For by enterlacing this aduerbe of likeneſſe (after a certaine manner) he ſufficiently declareth, that he was not truely nor really incloſed vnder the bread. And no maruell: ſith in another place hee plainely affirmeth that bodies, if ſpaces of places be taken from them, ſhall be no where: and becauſe they ſhall bee no where, they ſhall not bee at all. It is a hungry cauillation, to ſay that in that place is not entreated of the Supper, in which God vttereth ſpeciall power: becauſe the queſtion was mooued concerning the fleſh of Chriſt, and the holy man of ſet purpoſe anſwering ſaith: Chriſt gaue immortalitie to his fleſh, but tooke not nature from it. After this forme it is not to be thought that he is each where ſpread abroad: for we muſt beware that we doe not ſo affirme the Godhead of the man, that we take away the truth of the bodie. And it followeth not, that that which is in God muſt be each where as GOD is. There is a reaſon by and by added: for one perſon is God and man, and both are one Chriſt: each where, by this that he is God: in heauen, by this that he is man. What a negligence had it beene, not to except the myſterie of the Supper being a thing ſo earneſt and weighty, if there had beene in it any thing againſt the doctrine which hee entreated of. And yet if a man doe heedfully read that which followeth within a little after, he ſhall finde that vnder that generall doctrine, the Supper is alſo comprehended, that Chriſt the onely begotten Sonne of God and the ſame the Son of man, is each where whole preſent as God: that he is in the Temple of God (that is in the Church) God as it were there dwelling, and in ſome certaine place of heauen by reaſon of the meaſure of his true bodie. We ſee how, to the vniting of Chriſt with the Church, he doth not draw his bodie out of Heauen: which ſurely he would haue done, if the bodie of Chriſt were not truely meate to vs vnleſſe it were incloſed vnder bread. In another place defining how the faithfull doe now poſſeſſe Chriſt. Thou haſt him (ſaith hee) by the ſigne of the Croſſe, by the Sacrament of Baptiſme by the meate and drinke of the Altar. How rightly hee reckoneth a ſuperſtitious vſage among the ſignes of the preſence of Chriſt, I doe not now diſpute: but hee that compareth the preſence of the fleſh to the ſigne of the Croſſe, ſufficiently ſheweth that he faigneth not a two bodied Chriſt, that the ſame he, may lurke hidden vnder the bread, which ſitteth viſible in heauen. If this neede plainer declaration, it is by and by after added in the ſame place, that according to the preſence of maieſtie, we alway haue Chriſt: that according to the preſence of the fleſh, it is rightly ſaid, Me yee ſhall not alway haue. They anſwere, that this is alſo added, that according to an vnſpeakable and inuiſible grace, it is fulfilled which is ſaid of him, I am with you, euen vnto the ending of the world. But that is nothing for their aduantage: becauſe this is at length reſtrained to his maieſtie, which is euer in compariſon ſet againſt the bodie, and his fleſh by expreſſe name is made different from his grace and power. As in another place the ſame compariſon of contraries is read in him, that Chriſt by bodily preſence left the Diſciples, that by ſpirituall preſence he may be ſtill with them: where it is plaine that the ſubſtance of the fleſh is diſtinguiſhed from the power of the ſpirit, which conioyneth vs with Chriſt, though we be otherwiſe farre ſeuered by diſtance of places. The ſame manner of ſpeaking he oftentimes vſeth, as when he ſaith: He is to come againe to the quicke and the dead with bodily preſence, according to the rule of Faith and ſound doctrine. For with ſpirituall preſence he was alſo to come to them, and to abide with the whole Church in the world vntill the ending of the world. Therfore this ſpeech is directed to the beleeuers whom he had already begun to ſaue with bodily preſence, and whom he was to leaue with bodily abſence: that he might with his Father ſaue them with ſpirituall preſence. To take bodily for viſible is but trifling: ſith he ſetteth alſo the bodie in compariſon againſt the diuine power: and adding (to ſaue with the Father) he clearely expreſſeth that he doth powre abroad his grace from heauen to vs by his Spirit.

The bodie of Chriſt by glory not made inuiſible, which phanſie concerning Chriſt hath no manner of ground in Scripture.

29 And ſith they put ſo much confidence in this lurking hole of inuiſible preſence, goe too let vs ſee how well they hide themſelues in it. Firſt they ſhall not bring foorth one ſyllable out of the Scriptures, whereby they may prooue that Chriſt is inuiſible: but that they take that for confeſſed which no man that hath his ſound wit will grant them, that the bodie of Chriſt cannot otherwiſe bee giuen in the Supper but being couered with the viſour of bread. And this is the verie point about which they ſtriue with vs, ſo farre is it off from hauing the place of a principle. And when they ſo bable, they are compelled to make a double bodie of Chriſt: becauſe after their opinion it is in it ſelfe viſible in heauen, but inuiſible in the Supper after a ſpeciall manner of diſpenſation. But how trimly this agreeth, it is eaſie to iudge both by other places of Scripture, and by the witneſſe of Peter. Peter ſaith that Chriſt muſt bee holden or contained in heauen, till he come againe. Theſe men teach that he is euery where, but without forme. They take exception and ſay that it is vniuſt dealing, to make the nature of a glorified bodie ſubiect to the lawes of common nature. But this anſwere draweth with it that doting error of Seruetus, (which is worthily to be abhorred of all the godly) that the bodie was ſwallowed vp of the Godhead. I doe not ſay that they thinke ſo. But if this be reckoned among the qualities of a glorified bodie, to fill all things after an inuiſible manner, it is euident, that the bodily ſubſtance is deſtroyed, and that there is left no difference of the Godhead and the nature of man. Againe if the bodie of Chriſt bee of ſo many faſhions and diuers, that it is ſeene in one place, and is inuiſible in another: where is the verie nature of a bodie which conſiſteth of his meaſured proportions? and where is vnitie? Much more rightly doth Tertullian ſay, which affirmeth that the bodie of Chriſt was a true and naturall bodie, becauſe in the myſterie of the Supper the figure of it is ſet before vs for a pledge and aſſurance of the ſpirituall life. And verily Chriſt ſaid of his glorified bodie, ſee and feele, for a Spirit hath not fleſh and bones. Loe by Chriſts owne mouth the truth of the fleſh is prooued, becauſe it can bee felt and ſeene: Take away theſe things, then it ſhall ceaſe to bee fleſh. They ſtill flee to their denne of diſpenſation which they haue framed to themſelues. But it is our part ſo to embrace that which Chriſt abſolutely pronounceth, that that which he meaneth to affirme may be of force with vs without exception. Hee prooueth himſelfe to bee no Ghoſt, becauſe he is viſible in his fleſh. Let that bee taken away which he claimeth as proper to the nature of his bodie: muſt they not then be faine to coine a new definition of a bodie? Now whither ſoeuer they turne themſelues about, their faigned diſpenſation hath no place in that place of Paul where he ſaith, that we looke for a Sauiour from heauen which ſhall faſhion our baſe body like to his glorious body. For we may not hope for a like faſhioning in thoſe qualities which they faigne to Chriſt, that euery one ſhould haue an inuiſible and vnmeaſurable body. Neither ſhall there be found any man ſo dull witted whom they may make to beleeue ſo great an abſurditie. Let them not therefore aſcribe this gift to Chriſts glorified body, to be at once in many places, and to be contained in no ſpace. Finally let them either openly denie the reſurrection of the fleſh, or let them graunt that Chriſt being clothed with heauenly glory, did not put off his fleſh, who ſhall make vs in our fleſh fellowes and parteners of the ſame glorie, when we ſhall haue the reſurrection common with him. For what doth the Scripture teach more plainely, than that as Chriſt did put on our true fleſh when he was borne of the Virgine, and ſuffered in our true fleſh when he ſatisfied for vs: ſo he receiued againe alſo the ſame true fleſh in riſing againe, and caried it vp to heauen? For this is to vs the hope of our reſurrection and aſcending into heauen, that Chriſt is riſen againe and aſcended: and (as Tertullian ſaith) hee caried the earneſt of our reſurrection into the heauens with him. Now how weake and fraile ſhould that hope be, vnleſſe this our ſelfe fleſh had beene raiſed vp with Chriſt and entred into the kingdome of heauen? But this is the proper truth of a body, to be contained in ſpace, to conſiſt of his meaſured proportions, to haue his forme. Therefore away with this fooliſh deuiſe, which doth faſten both the minds of men and Chriſt to the bread. For to what purpoſe ſerueth the ſecret preſence vnder bread, but that they which couet to haue Chriſt ioyned with them, may reſt in that ſigne? But the Lord himſelfe willed vs to withdraw not onely our eies but all our ſenſes from the earth, forbidding himſelfe to be touched of the women vntill he had gone vp to his Father. When he ſeeth Marie with godly zeale of reuerence to make haſte to kiſſe his feete, there is no cauſe why he ſhould diſallow and forbid this touching till hee haue beene taken vp into heauen, but becauſe hee will be ſought no where elſe. Whereas they obiect that hee was afterward ſeene of Stephen, the ſolution is eaſie. For neither was it therefore neceſſarie that Chriſt ſhould change place, which could giue to the eies of his ſeruant ſuch ſharpneſſe of ſight as might pearce through the heauens. The ſame alſo is to be ſaid of Paul. Whereas they obiect that Chriſt came out of the Sepulchre being ſhut: and entred in among the diſciples, the dores being ſhut: that maketh neuer a whit more for maintenance of their error. For as the water like a faſt pauement made a way to Chriſt walking vpon the lake: ſo it is no marueil, if at his comming the hardneſſe of the ſtone yeelded it ſelfe. Howbeit it is more prooueable, that by his commandement the ſtone was remooued, and by and by after paſſage giuen him returned into his place. And to enter the dores being ſhut, is not as much in effect as to pearce through the whole ſubſtance, but by diuine power to open an entrie for himſelfe, that he ſuddenly ſtoode among the Diſciples, verily after a maruellous maner, when the doores were faſt locked. That which they alleadge out of Luke, that Chriſt ſuddenly vaniſhed away from the eies of the diſciples with whom he went to Emaus, profiteth them nothing, and maketh for vs. For, that he might take away the ſight of himſelfe from them, he was not made inuiſible, but onely went out of ſight. As when he went in iourney together with them (as the ſame Luke witneſſeth) he did not put on a new face, that he might not be knowen, but held their eies. But theſe fellowes doe not onely transforme Chriſt, that he may be conuerſant in earth, but in diuers places they make him diuers and vnlike himſelfe. Finally, in ſo trifling they doe not by one word in deed, but by a circumſtance, make of the fleſh of Chriſt a ſpirit: and not contented therewith, they put vpon it altogether contrarie qualities. Whereupon of neceſſitie followeth that it is double.

30 Now although we graunt them that which they prate of the inuiſible preſence, the vnmeaſurableneſſe ſhall not be yet prooued, without which they ſhall in vaine attempt to encloſe Chriſt vnder bread. Vnleſſe the bodie of Chriſt may be euerie where at once, without any compaſſe of place, it ſhall not be likely that he lieth hidden vnder bread in the ſupper. By which neceſſitie they brought in the monſtrous rablenes therof, which being denied taketh away the presence of Christ in or vnder the bread, was both condemned in the heresie of Eutiches, and hath in Scripture no colour of proofe.

being euery where. But it is shewed by strong and plaine witnesses of Scripture, that it was limited about by the measure of the body of a man: and then that by his ascending he hath made it plaine that he is not in all places, but that when he passeth into one place, he leaueth the other that he was in before. Neither is the promise which they alleadge, to be drawen to the bodie, I am with you euen to the ending of the world. First the continuall conioyning cannot stand, vnlesse Christ dwell in vs corporally without the vse of the supper. Therefore there is no iust cause why they should so sharply brawle about the words of Christ, that they may in the Supper enclose Christ vnder bread. Againe the text it selfe prooueth, that Christ speaketh nothing lesse than of his flesh, but promiseth to his disciples inuincible help, whereby he may defend and sustaine them against all the assaults of Satan and the world. For when he enioyned them a hard charge: least they should doubt to take it in hand, or should fearefully execute it, he strengtheneth them with affiance of his presence: as if he had said, that his succour shall not faile them, which shall be impossible to be ouercome. Vnlesse they listed to confound all things, ought they not to haue made distinction of the manner of presence. And verily some had rather with great shame to vtter their ignorance, than to yeeld neuer so little of their errour. I speake not of the Papists: whose doctrine is more tolerable, or at the least more shamefast. But contentiousnesse so carieth some away, that they say that by reason of the natures vnited in Christ, whersoeuer the Godhead of Christ is, there is also his flesh, which cannot be seuered from his Godhead. As though that same vniting haue compounded of those two natures I wot not what meane thing which was neither God nor man. So indeed did Eutiches, and after him Seruetus. But it is plainely gathered out of the Scripture, that the onely one person of Christ doth so consist of two natures, that either of them hath still her owne propertie remaining safe. And that Eutiches was rightfully condemned, they will be ashamed to denie: it is maruell that they marke not the cause of his condemning, that taking away the difference betweene the natures, enforcing the vnitie of person, he made of God man, and of man God. What madnesse therefore is it, rather to mingle heauen and earth together, than not to draw the body of Christ out of the heauenly sanctuarie? For whereas they bring for themselues these testimonies, None is gone vp to heauen but he that is come downe the sonne of man which is in heauen. Againe, The sonne which is in the bosome of the Father, he shall declare them: it is a point of like senselesse dulnesse, to despise the communicating of properties which was in old time not without cause inuented of the holie Fathers. Truely, when the Lord of glorie is said to be crucified, Paul doth not meane that he suffered any thing in his Godhead: but because the same Christ which being an abiect and despised in the flesh did suffer, was both God and Lord of glorie. After this maner also the Sonne of man was in heauen: because the selfe same Christ, which according to the flesh did dwell the Sonne of man in earth, was God in heauen. In which sort he is said to haue descended from the said place according to his Godhead: not that the Godhead did forsake heauen to hide it selfe in the prison of the body: but because, although it filled all things, yet in the very manhood of Christ it dwelled corporally, that is to say naturally and after a certaine vnspeakable maner. It is a common distinction in schooles, which I am not ashamed to rehearse: that although whole Christ be euery where, yet not the whole that is in him is euery where. And I would to God the schoolemen themselues had well weighed the pith of this saying: for so should the vnsauorie inuention of the fleshly presence of Christ haue beene met withall. Therefore our mediator, sith he is whole euery where, is alway at hand with his, and in the supper after a speciall maner giueth himselfe present: but yet so, that whole he is present, not the whole that he is: because, as it is said, in his flesh he is contained in heauen till he appeare to iudgement.

Christ present in the supper though he descend not to present his body inuisible in bread.

31 But they are far deceiued, which conceiue no presence of the flesh of Christ in the supper, vnlesse it be made present in bread. For so they leaue nothing to the secret working of the Spirit, which vniteth Christ himselfe vnto vs. They thinke not Christ present, vnlesse he come downe to vs. As though if he did lift vs vp to him, we should not as well enioy his presence. Therefore the question is onely of the maner: because they place Christ in the bread, but we thinke it not lawfull for vs to plucke him out of Heauen.

Heauen. Let the readers iudge whether is the righter. Onely let this cauillation be driuen away, that Christ is taken away from his supper, vnlesse he be hidden vnder the coner of bread. For sith this mysterie is heauenly, it is no need to draw Christ into the earth, that he may be ioyned to vs.

32 Now if any man doe aske me of the manner, I will not be ashamed to confesse, that it is a higher secret than that it can be either comprehended with my wit, or vttered with my words: and, to speake it more plainely, I rather feele it, than I can vnderstand it. Therefore I doe herein without controuersie embrace the truth of God, in which I may safely rest. He pronounceth that his flesh is the meate of my soule, and his blood is the drinke. With such foode I offer my soule to him to be fed. In his holie Supper he commandeth me vnder the signes of bread and wine to take, eate, and drinke his bodie and blood. I nothing doubt that both he doth truely deliuer them, and I doe receiue them. Onely I refuse the absurdities, which appeare to be either vnworthie of the heauenlie maiestie of Christ, or disagreeing from the truth of his nature of manhood: for as much as they must also fight with the word of God, which also teacheth that Christ was so taken vp into the glory of the heauenly kingdome that it lifteth him vp aboue all estate of the world, and no lesse diligently setteth forth in his nature of man, those things that are properly belonging to his true manhood. Neither ought this to seeme incredible, or not consonant to reason, because as the whole kingdome of Christ is spirituall, so whatsoeuer he doth with his Church, ought not to be reduced to the reason of this world. Or, that I may vse the words of Augustine, this mysterie, as other are, is done by men, but from God: in earth, but from heauen. Such (I say) is the presence of the body, as the nature of the sacrament requireth: which we say heere to excell with so great force, and great effectualnesse, that it not onely bringeth to our minds vndoubted trust of eternall life, but also assureth vs of the immortalitie of our flesh. For it is now quickned of his immortall flesh, and after a certaine maner communicateth of his immortalitie. They which are caried aboue this with their excessiue speeches, do nothing but with such entranglements darken the simple and plaine truth. If any be not yet satisfied, I would haue him heere a while to consider with me, that we now speake of a sacrament, all the parts whereof ought to be referred to faith. But we do no lesse daintily and plentifully feede faith with this partaking of the body which we haue declared, than they that plucke Christ himselfe out of heauen. In the meane time I plainely confesse, that I refuse that mixture of the flesh of Christ with our soule, or the powring out of it such as they teach: because it sufficeth vs, that Christ doth out of the substance of his flesh breath life into our soules, yea doth powre into vs his owne life, although the very flesh of Christ doth not enter into vs. Moreouer it is no doubt that the proportion of faith, whereby Paul willeth vs to examine all exposition of Scripture, doth in this behalfe very well agree with me. As for them that speake against so euident a truth, let them looke after what rule of faith they fashion themselues. He that doth not confesse that Iesus Christ is come in the flesh, is not of God. These men, although they cloke it, or marke it not, doe spoile him of his flesh.

33 Of communicating is to be likewise thought, which they acknowledge none, vnlesse they deuoure the flesh of Christ vnder bread. But there is no small wrong done to the holy Ghost, vnlesse we beleeue that it is brought to passe by his incomprehensible power, that we communicate with the flesh and bloud of Christ. Yea if the force of the mysterie, such as it is taught of vs, and as it was knowen to the old Church from fower hundred yeeres ago, were weighed according to the woorthinesse of it, there was enough and more whereupon we might be satisfied: the gate had been shut against many foule errors, out of which haue been kindled many horrible dissensions wherewith both in old time and in our age the Church hath beene miserablie vexed, while curious men doe enforce an excessiue manner of presence, which the scripture neuer sheweth. And they turmoile about a thing fondly and rashly conceiued, as if the enclosing of Christ vnder bread were (as the prouerbe is) the prowe and poupe of godlinesse. It principally behooued to know, how the bodie of Christ, as it was once deliuered for vs, is made ours: how we are made partakers of his bloud that was shed: because this is to possesse whole Christ crucified, that we may enioy all his good good things. Now theſe things, in which was ſo great importance, being emitted yea neglected and in a manner buried, this onely crabbed queſtion pleaſeth them, how the body of Chriſt lieth hid vnder bread or vnder the forme of bread. They falſly ſpread abroad that whatſoeuer we teach concerning ſpirituall eating, is contrarie to the true and reall eating, as they call it: becauſe we haue reſpect to nothing but to the maner, which among them is carnall, while they encloſe Chriſt in bread: but to vs it is ſpirituall, becauſe the ſecret power of the ſpirit is the bond of our conioyning with Chriſt. No truer is that other obiection, that we touch onely the fruit or effect which the faithfull take of the eating of the fleſh of Chriſt. For we haue ſaid before, that Chriſt himſelfe is the ſubſtance of the Supper: and that thereupon followeth the effect, that by the ſacrifice of his death we are clenſed from ſinnes, by his bloud we are waſhed, by his reſurrection we are raiſed vp into hope of the heauenly life. But the Lib.4.D.ſ.8. fooliſh imagination, whereof Lombard was the author, hath peruerted their minds, while they thinke that the eating of the fleſh of Chriſt is the ſacrament. For this ſaith he: The Sacrament and not the thing are the formes of bread and wine: the Sacrament and the thing, are the fleſh and bloud of Chriſt: the thing and not the Sacrament, is the myſticall fleſh. Againe within a little after. The thing ſignified and contained, is the proper fleſh of Chriſt: the thing ſignified and not contained, is his myſticall body. Whereas he maketh difference betweene the fleſh of Chriſt, and the effectuall power of nouriſhing, wherewith it is endued, I agree: but whereas he faigneth it to be a ſacrament, yea and contained vnder bread, it is an error not to be ſuffred. Hereupon hath growen the falſe expoſition of ſacramentall eating, becauſe they haue thought that wicked men alſo and euill doers doe eate the fleſh of Chriſt, how much ſoeuer they be ſtrangers from him. But the fleſh of Chriſt, it ſelfe in the myſterie of the Supper is no leſſe a ſpirituall thing than eternall ſaluation. Whereupon we gather, that whoſoeuer be void of the ſpirit of Chriſt, can no more eate the fleſh of Chriſt, than they can drinke wine wherewith is ioyned no taſte. Truely Chriſt is too hainouſly torne in ſunder, when that dead body and which hath no liuely ſtrength, is giuen foorth in common to vnbeleeuers: and his expreſſe words are directly againſt Iohn 6. 56. it. Whoſoeuer eateth my fleſh and drinketh my bloud, abideth in me, and I in him. They anſwer that in that place is not intreated of the ſacramentall eating: which I grant, ſo that they will not now and then ſtumble againſt the ſame ſtone, ſaying that the fleſh it ſelfe is eaten without fruite. But I would know of them, how long they hold it when they haue eaten it. Heere, in my iudgement, they ſhall haue no way to get out. But they obiect, that nothing can be withdrawen or faile of the promiſes of God by the vnthankefulneſſe of men. I graunt in deede, and I ſay that the force of the myſterie remaineth whole, howſoeuer wicked men doe, as much as in them lieth, endeuour to make it void. Yet it is one thing to be offered, and another thing to bee receiued. Chriſt reacheth this ſpirituall meate and offereth this ſpirituall drinke to all men, ſome doe greedily eate of it, ſome doe lothingly refuſe it: ſhall theſe men refuſing make the meate and the drinke to looſe their nature? They will ſay that their opinion is holpen by this ſimilitude, namely, that the fleſh of Chriſt, though it be vnſauorie, is neuertheleſſe his fleſh. But I denie that it can be eaten without the taſte of faith: or (if we liſt rather to ſpeake as Auguſtine doth) I ſay that men beare away no more of this Sacrament, than they gather with the veſſell of faith. So nothing is abated from the Sacrament, yea the truth and effectualneſſe thereof remaineth vnminiſhed, although the wicked depart emptie from the outward partaking of it. If they againe obiect that this word, this is my bodie, is diminiſhed, if the wicked receiue corruptible bread and nothing elſe, we haue a ſolution readie, that God will not be acknowen true in the receiuing it ſelfe, but in the ſtedfaſtneſſe of his owne goodneſſe, when he is readie to giue, yea liberally offereth to the vnworthie that which they refuſe. And this is the fulneſſe of the Sacrament, which the whole world can not breake, that the fleſh and bloud of Chriſt is no leſſe giuen to the vnworthie than to the choſen faithfull ones of God: but therewithall it is true, that as water lighting vpon a hard ſtone, falleth away, becauſe there is no entrie open into the ſtone: ſo the wicked doe with their hardneſſe driue backe the grace of of God that it cannot pierce into them. Moreouer, that Christ should be receiued without faith, is no more agreeing with reason, than seed to bud in the fire. Whereas they aske, how Christ is come to damnation to some, vnlesse they receiue him vnworthily, it is a very cold question: forasmuch as we no where read, that men doe procure death to themselues by vnworthily receiuing Christ, but rather by refusing him. Neither doth Christs parable helpe them, where he saith that seed groweth vp among thornes, and afterward being choaked is marred: because he there entreateth of what value the faith is which endureth but for a time, which they doe not thinke to be necessary to the eating of Christs flesh and drinking of his blood, that in this behalfe doe make Iudas equally fellow with Peter. But rather by the same parable their error is confuted, where Christ saith that some seed falleth in the high-way, othersome vpon stones, and neither of them taketh roote. Whereupon followeth that to the vnbeleeuers their owne hardnesse is a let that Christ attaineth not to them. Whosoeuer desireth to haue our saluation holpen by this mystery, shall finde nothing fitter, than that the faithfull being led to the very fountaine, should draw life out of the Sonne of God. But the dignity of it is honourably enough set out, when we keepe in minde that it is a helpe whereby we be grafted vnto the body of Christ, or being grafted doe more and more grow together, till he doe fully make himselfe one with vs in the heauenly life. They obiect that Paul ought not to haue made them guilty of the body and blood of Christ, vnlesse they were partakers of them. But I answer that they are not therefore condemned because they haue eaten them, but onely because they haue prophaned the mystery, in treading vnder feet the pledge of the holy conioyning with God, which they ought reuerently to receiue.

Mat. 13. 7.

1. Cor. 11. 29.

34 Now because Augustine among the old writers chiefly hath affirmed that article of doctrine, that nothing is abated from the Sacraments, nor the grace which they figure is made voide by the infidelity or naughtinesse of men: it shall be profitable to proue cleerely by his owne words, how vnfitly & peruersly they do draw that to this present cause, which cast the body of Christ to dogs to eat. The Sacramentall eating, after their opinion, is whereby the wicked receiue the body and blood of Christ without the power of the Spirit, or any effect of grace. Augustine contrariwise weying wisely those words. He that eateth my flesh, and drinketh my blood, shall not die for euer, saith: Namely the power of the sacrament, not onely the visible sacrament: and verily within, not without: he that eateth it with hart, not he that presseth it with tooth. Whereupon at length he concludeth that the sacrament of this thing, that is to say, of the vnity of the body and blood of Christ, is set before men in the supper of the Lord, to some vnto life, to some vnto destruction: but the thing it selfe whereof it is a sacrament, to all men vnto life, to none vnto destruction, whosoeuer be partakers of it. That none should here cauill, that the thing is called not the body, but the grace of the Spirit which may be seuered from the body, the contrary comparison betweene these two words of addition Visible and Inuisible drieth away all these mists: for vnder the first of them cannot be comprehended the body of Christ. Whereupon followeth that the vnbeleeuers doe communicate onely of the visible signe. And that all doubting may be better taken away, after that he had said that this bread requireth the hunger of the inward man, he addeth: Moses and Aaron and Phinees, and many other that did eat, Manna, plased God. Why so? because the spirituall meat they spiritually vnderstood, spiritually hungred, spiritually tasted, that they might be spiritually filled. For we also at this day haue receiued spirituall meat: but the Sacrament is one thing, and the power of the Sacrament is an other. A little after: and by this he that abideth not in Christ, and in whom Christ abideth not, without doubt neither eateth spiritually his flesh, nor drinketh his blood, though carnally and visibly he presseth with teeth the signe of the body and blood. We heare againe that the visible signe is set in comparison as contrarie to spirituall eating. Whereby that error is confuted, that the body of Christ inuisible is in deed eaten sacramentally, though not spiritually. We heare also that nothing is granted to prophane and vncleane men beside the visible receiuing of the signe. Hereupon commeth his famous saying, that the other Disciples did eat the bread the Lord: but Iudas did eat the bread of the Lord: wherein he plainly excludeth the vnbeleeuers from from the partaking of the body and blood. Neither tendeth it to any other end which he saith in another place: What maruellest thou, if to Iudas was giuen the bread of Christ, by which he might be made bond to the diuell: when thou seest on the contrarie side that to Paul was giuen the angell of the diuell, by whom he might be made perfect in Christ? he saith verily in another place, that the bread of the Supper was the body of Christ to them to whom Paul said, He that eateth vnworthily, eateth and drinketh iudgement to himselfe: and that they haue not therefore nothing, because they haue receiued naughtily. But in what sense, he declareth more fully in an other place. For taking in hand purposely to define how the wicked and euill doers, which professe the Christian faith with mouth but with deedes doe deny it, doe eat the body of Christ, (and that against the opinion of some which thought that they did not eat in sacrament onely but in very deed.) But neither (saith he) ought it to be said that they eat the body of Christ, because they are not to be reckoned among the members of Christ. For (to speake nothing of the rest) they cannot together be the members of Christ, and the members of a harlot. Finally where himselfe saith, He that eateth my flesh, and drinketh my blood, abideth in me, and I in him, he sheweth that it is not sacramentally but in very deed to eat the body of Christ. For this is to abide in Christ, that Christ may abide in him. For he so said this as though he had said, he that abideth not in me, and in whom I abide not, let him not say or thinke that he doth eat my body, or drinke my blood. Let the readers weigh the things set as contraries in the comparison to eat, sacramentally, and in very deed: and there shall remaine no doubt. He confirmeth the same, no lesse plainly in these words: Prepare not your iawes, but your heart. Hereupon is this Supper commended. Loe we beleeue in Christ, when we receiue by faith: in receiuing we know what to thinke. We receiue a little and are fatted in heart. Therefore not that which is seene, but that which is beleeued, doth feed. Here also that which the wicked receiue, he restraineth to the visible signe: and teacheth that Christ is none otherwise receiued than by faith. So also in another place, pronouncing expressly that the good and the euill doe communicate together in the signes he excludeth the euill from the true eating of the flesh of Christ. For if they receiued the thing it selfe, he would not vtterly haue left that vnspoken which was more fit for his matter. Also in another place, entreating of the eating and the fruit thereof, he concludeth thus: Then shall the body and blood of Christ be life to euery man, if that which in the sacrament is visibly receiued, be in the truth it selfe spiritually eaten, spiritually drunke. Therefore who so make vnbeleeuers partakers of the flesh and blood of Christ, that they may agree with Augustine, let them shew vs the visible body of Christ forasmuch as, by his iudgement, the whole trueth is spirituall. And it is certainly gathered out of his words, that the sacramentall eating, when vnbeleefe closeth vp the entry to truth, is as much in effect as visible or outward eating. If the body of Christ might be eaten truly and yet not spiritually, what should that meane which he saith in another place? Yee shall not eat this body which ye see, and drinke the blood which they shall shed that shall crucifie me. I haue commanded a certaine sacrament vnto you, being spiritually vnderstood it shall quicken you. Verily he would not deny but that the same body which Christ offered for sacrifice, is deliuered in the Supper: but he did set out the maner of eating: namely that being receiued into heauenly glory, by the secret power of the spirit, it breatheth life into vs. I grant indeed that there is oftentimes found in him this maner of speaking, that the body of Christ is eaten of the vnbeleeuers: but he expoundeth himselfe, adding, In Sacrament. And in another place he describeth spirituall eating, in which our bitings consume not grace. And least mine aduersaries should say, that I fight with them with a heape of places, I would know of them how they can vnwinde themselues from one saying of his, where he saith that Sacraments doe worke in the onely elect that which they figure. Truely they dare not deny but that the bread in the supper figureth the body of Christ. Wherupon followeth that the reprobate are debarred from the partaking of it. That Cyrill also thought none otherwise, these words doe declare. As if a man vpon molten wax doe power other wax, he wholly tempereth the one wax with the other: so it is necessary if any man receiue the flesh and blood of the Lord that he be ioyned with him that Christ may be found in in him and he in Christ. By these words, I thinke it is euident, that they are bereaued of the true and reall eating, that doe but sacramentally eat the body of Christ, which cannot be seuered from his power: and that therefore faileth not the faith of the promises of God, which ceaseth not to raine from heauen, although the stones and rockes conceiue not the liquor of the raine.

Adoration of Christ in the sacrament vnwarranted.

35 This knowledge shall also easily draw vs away from the carnall worshipping, which some haue with peruerse rashnesse erected in the sacrament: because they made account with themselues in this maner: If it be the body, then both the soule and the Godhead are together with the body, which now cannot be seuered: therefore Christ is there to be worshipped. First if their accompaning which they pretend be denied them, what will they doe? For how much soeuer they cry out vpon an absurdity, if the body be seuered from the soule and the Godhead: yet what sound witted and sober man can perswade himselfe that the body of Christ is Christ: They thinke themselues indeed gaily to proue it with their logicall arguments. But sith Christ speaketh distinctly of his body and blood, but describeth not the maner of presence: how will they of a doubtful thing gather certainely that which they would? What then? If their consciences chance to be exercised with any more grieuous feeling, shall not they by and by with their logicall arguments be dissolued and melt? namely when they shall see themselues destitute of the certaine word of God, vpon which alone our soules do stand fast, when they are called to account, and without which they faint at euery first moment: when they shall call to minde that the doctrine and examples of the Apostles are against them, and that themselues alone are to themselues the authors of it. To such motions shall be added other not small prickings. What? Shall it be a matter of no importance, to worship God in this forme, where nothing was prescribed vnto vs? When it concerned the true worship of God, ought they with so great lightnesse to haue attempted that of which there is no where read any one word? But if they had, with such humblenesse as they ought, holden all their thoughts vnder the word of God, they would truely haue harkened to that which he said, Take, eat, drinke, and would haue obeyed this commandement, wherein he biddeth the Sacrament to be receiued, not to be worshipped. But they which, as it is commanded of God, doe receiue it without worshipping, are assured that they doe not swarue from Gods commandement: than which assuredneſſe there is nothing better when we take any worke in hand. They haue the example of the Apostles, whom we read not to haue fallen downe flat and worshipped it, but euen as they were sitting to haue receiued it and eaten it. They haue the vse of the Apostolike Church, wherein Luke reporteth that the faithful did communicate not in worshipping but in the breaking of bread. They haue the Apostles doctrine, wherewith Paul instructed the Church of the Corinthians, professing that he had receiued of the Lord that which he deliuered.

Act. 2. 4.

1. Cor. 11.

Adoration of the sacrament of Christs body superstitious, condemned in effect by the counsell of Nice, by the vse of the old Church and by Scripture.

Sursum corda.

36 And these things verily tend to this end, that the godly reader should weigh how perillous it is in so high matters to wander from the simple word of God to the dreames of our owne braine. But those things that are aboue said, ought to deliuer vs from all doubt in this behalfe. For that godly soules may therein rightly take hold of Christ they must needs be lifted vp to heauen. If this be the office of a Sacrament, to helpe the minde of man which otherwise is weake, that it may rise vpward to reach the height of spirituall mysteries: then they which are holden downe in the outward signe doe stray from the right way of seeking Christ. What then? Shall we deny that it is a superstitious worshipping, when men doe throw themselues downe before bread, to worship Christ therein? Doubtlesse the Nicene Synode meant to meet with this mischiefe, when it forbad vs to be humbly intentiue to the signes set before vs. And for none other cause was it in old time ordained, that before the consecration the people should with a loud voice be put in minde to haue their hearts lifted vpward. The Scripture it selfe also, beside that it diligently declareth vnto vs the ascention of Christ, whereby he conueyed away the presence of his body from our sight and conuersation: to shake away from vs all carnall thinking of him, so oft as it maketh mention of him, commandeth vs to be in mindes raised vpward, and to seeke him in heauen sitting at the right hand of the father. According to this rule he was rather to be spiritually worshipped ped in heauenly glory, than this ſo perillous a kind of worſhipping to be deuiſed, full of carnall and groſſe opinion of God. Wherefore they that haue inuented the worſhiping of the Sacrament, haue not only dreamed it of themſelues beſide the ſcripture, in which no mention of it can be ſhewed (which yet ſhould not haue beene ouerpaſſed if it had beene acceptable to God :) But alſo all the Scripture crying out againſt it, they haue framed to themſelues a God after the will of their owne luſt, leauing the liuing God. For what is Idolatry, if this be not, to worſhip the gifts inſteed of the giuer himſelfe? Wherein they haue doubly offended : For both the honor taken from God was conueighed to a creature : and he himſelfe alſo diſhonored in the defiling and prophaning of his benefit, when of his holy ſacrament is made a curſed idole. But let vs contrariwiſe, leaſt we fall into the ſame pit, throughly ſettle our eares, eies, hearts, mindes, and tongues in the holy doctrine of God. For that is the ſchoole of the holy Ghoſt, the beſt Schoole-maſter, in which ſuch profit is attained, that nothing neede more to be gotten from any where elſe, but we willingly ought to be ignorant of whatſoeuer is not taught in it.

Chriſt in the ſacrament offered and giuen by promiſe vnto them not which behold and adore, but which eat and giue thankes : this ſacrament being inſtituted for the participation of Chriſt by faith and the profeſſion of our grateſull remembrance as two ſpeciall vſes

37 But now (as ſuperſtition, when it hath once paſſed the right bounds, maketh no end of ſinning) they fell a great way further. For they haue deuiſed Ceremonies altogether ſtrange from the inſtitution of the Supper, to this end only that they might giue diuine honors to the ſigne. We yeeld (ſay they) this worſhip to Chriſt. Firſt, if this were done in the Supper, I would ſay that that worſhipping onely is lawfull, which reſteth not in the ſigne, but is directed to Chriſt ſitting in heauen. But now by what pretenſe doe they boaſt that they worſhip Chriſt in that bread : when they haue no promiſe thereof? They conſecrate an hoſt, as they call it, which they may carry about in pompe, which they may ſhew foorth in a common gazing to be looked vpon, worſhipped, and called vpon. I aske by what power they thinke it to be rightly conſecrate. Verily they will bring foorth thoſe words, This is my body. But I will obiect to the contrary, that it was therewithall ſaid, Take and eat. Neither will I doe that of nothing. For when a promiſe is knit to a commandent, I ſay that the promiſe is ſo contained vnder the commandement, that being ſeuered it is made no promiſe at all. This ſhall be made plainer by a like example. God gaue a commandement, when he ſaid. Call vpon me : He added a promiſe, I will heare thee. If any man calling vpon Peter and Paul, doe glory vpon this promiſe, will not all men crie out that he doth wrongfully? And what other thing I pray, doe they which leauing the commandement concerning eating, doe catch hold of a maimed promiſe, this is my body, to abuſe it to ſtrange Ceremonies from the inſtitution of Chriſt? Let vs therefore remember that this promiſe is giuen to them which keepe the commandement ioyned with it : but that they be deſtitute of all the word, which remooue the Sacrament to any other way. We haue heertofore entreated how the myſtery of the holy ſupper ſerueth our Faith before God. But for as much as the Lord doth heere not onely bring into our remembrance ſo great largenes of his bounty, as we haue before ſhewed, but doth as it were from hand to hand bring it foorth, and ſtirreth vs to acknowledge it : he doth therewithall warne vs that wee be not vnthankefull to ſo plentifull liberality : but rather that wee would publiſh it with ſuch praiſes as it is meet, and aduance it with thankeſgiuing. Therefore when he deliuered the inſtitution of the ſacrament it ſelfe to the Apoſtles, hee taught them that they ſnould doe it in remembrance of him. Which Paul expoundeth, to declare the Lords death. That is, publikely and altogether with one mouth openly to confeſſe, that all our affiance of life and ſaluation is repoſed in the death of the Lord : that wee may glorifie him with our confeſſion, and may by our example exhort other to giue glory to him. Heere againe it appeareth whereunto the marke of this ſacrament is directed, namely to exerciſe vs in the remembrance of the death of Chriſt. For, this that we are commanded to declare the Lords death till he come to iudge, is nothing elſe but that we ſhould publiſh that with confeſſion of mouth, which our faith hath acknowledged in the ſacrament, that is, that the death of Chriſt is our life. This is the ſecond vſe of the Sacrament, which pertaineth to outward confeſſion.

Luk. 22. 19. 1. Cor. 11. 26.

38 Thirdly, the Lord alſo willed it to be to vs in ſteed of an exthortation, than which which none other can more vehemently encourage and enflame vs both to pureneſſe and holineſſe of life, and alſo to charity, peace and agreement. For the Lord doth therein ſo communicate his body to vs, that he is made throughly one with vs, and we with him. Now ſith he hath but one body, whereof he maketh vs all partakers, it is neceſſary that all we alſo be by ſuch partaking made on body. Which vnity the bread which is deliuered in the ſacrament, repreſenteth: which as it is made of many graines in ſuch ſort mingled together that one cannot be diſcerned from another: after the ſame manner we alſo ought to bee conioined and knit together with ſo great agreement of minds, that no diſagreement or diuiſion come between vs. This I had rather to be expreſſed with Pauls words. The cup of bleſſing (ſaith he) which we bleſſe is the communicating of the blood of Chriſt: and the bread of bleſſing which wee breake, is the partaking of the body of Chriſt, therefore we all are one body that partake of one bread. We ſhall haue very well profited in the Sacrament, if this thought ſo ſhall be imprinted and ingrauen in our minds, that none of the brethren can be hurt, deſpiſed, refuſed, abuſed, or any wiſe be offended of vs, but that therewithall we do in ſo doing hurt, deſpiſe, and abuſe Chriſt with our iniurious dealings: that we cannot diſagree with our brethren but that we muſt therewithall diſagree with Chriſt: that Chriſt cannot be loued of vs, but that he muſt be loued in our brethren: that what care we haue of our owne body, ſuch alſo we ought to haue of our brethren which are members of our body: as no part of our body is touched with any feeling of griefe, which is not ſpread abroad into all the other parts, ſo we muſt not ſuffer our brother to be grieued with any euill whereof we ſhould not alſo be touched with compaſſion. Therefore Auguſtine not without cauſe ſo oft calleth this ſacrament that bond of charity. For what ſharper ſpur could be put to vs, to ſtir vp mutuall charity among vs, than when Chriſt giuing himſelfe to vs, doth not only allure vs with his own example, that we ſhould mutually dedicate and deliuer our ſelues one to another: but in ſo much as he maketh himſelfe common to all, hee maketh all vs alſo one in himſelfe?

A third vſe of this ſacrament in ſtirring vp vnto vnity and loue.

1. Cor. 10. 16.

39 But hereby is that very well confirmed which I haue ſaide in another place, that the true miniſtration of the ſacrament ſtandeth not without the word. For whatſoeuer profit commeth to vs of the Supper, requireth the word: whether we be to be confirmed in faith, or to be exerciſed in confeſſion, or to be ſtirred vp to duty, praier is needfull. Therefore nothing can be more diſorderly done in the ſupper, than if it be turned to a dumbe action: it hath been done vnder the tyranny of the Pope. For they would haue the whole force of conſecration to hang vpon the intent of the Prieſt, as though this nothing pertained to the people, to whom it moſt of all behooued that the myſtery ſhould be declared. But thereupon hath growen this error, that they marked not that thoſe promiſes wherewith the conſecration is made, are directed not to the elements themſelues, but to them that receiue them. But Chriſt ſpeaketh not to the bread, that it may be made his body, but commandeth his diſciples to eat, and promiſeth to them the communicating of his body and bloud. And none other order doth Paul teach than that together with the bread and the cup, the promiſes ſhould be offered to the faithfull. Thus it is truly. We ought not to imagine any magicall inchantment, that it bee ſufficient to haue mumbled vp the words, as though the elements did heare them: but let vs vnderſtand that thoſe words are a liuely preaching, which may edifie the hearers, which may inwardly pearce into their minds, which may be imprinted and ſetled in their hearts, which may ſhew foorth effectualneſſe in the fulfilling of that which it promiſeth: by theſe reaſons it cleerly appeareth that the laying vp of the ſacrament, which many do earneſtly require, that it may be extraordinarily diſtributed to the ſicke, is vnprofitable: For either they ſhall receiue it without rehearſing of the inſtitution of Chriſt, or the miniſter ſhall together with the ſigne ioine the true declaration of the myſtery. In ſilence is abuſe and fault. If the promiſes be rehearſed, and the myſtery declared, that they which ſhall receiue it may receiue it with fruit, there is no cauſe why we ſhould doubt that this is the true conſecration. To what end then will that other conſecration come, the force whereof commeth not ſo far as to the ſicke men? But they that doe ſo, haue the example of the old Church. I grant:

This ſacrament ſeuered from the word nothing but a dumbe ſhew.

grant: but in ſo great a matter, and in which we erre not without great danger nothing is ſafer than to follow the truth it ſelfe.

The danger of vnworthily receiuing this ſacrament.

40 Now as we ſee that this holy bread of the Supper of the Lord is ſpirituall meat, no leſſe ſweet and delicate than healthfull to the godly worſhippers of God, by the taſte whereof they feele that Chriſt is their life, whom it raiſeth vp to thankſgiuing, to whom it is an exhortation to mutuall charity among themſelues: ſo on the other ſide it is turned into a moſt noiſome poiſon to all them whoſe faith it doth not nouriſh and confirme, and whom it doth not ſtir vp to confeſſion of praiſe and to charity. For as bodily meat, when it finderh a ſtomacke poſſeſſed with euill humors, being it ſelfe alſo thereby made euill and corrupted doth rather hurt than nouriſh: ſo this ſpirituall meat, if it light vpon a ſoule defiled with malice and naughtineſſe, throweth it downe headlong with greater fall: verily not by the fault of the meat it ſelfe, but becauſe to defiled and vnbeleeuing men nothing is cleane, though otherwiſe it be neuer ſo much ſanctified by the bleſſing of the Lord. For (as Paul ſaith) they that eat and drinke vnworthily are guilty of the body and bloud of the Lord, and doe eat and drinke iudgement to themſelues, not diſcerning the body of the Lord. For ſuch kind of men as without any ſparkle of Faith, without any zeale of charity, doe thruſt themſelues foorth like ſwine to take the ſupper of the Lord, doe not diſcerne the body of the Lord. For in ſo much as they doe not beleeue that that body is their life, they doe as much as in them lieth diſhonour it, ſpoiling it of all the dignity thereof, and finally in ſo receiuing it they prophane and defile it. But in ſo much as being eſtranged and diſagreeing from their brethren, they dare mingle the holy ſigne of the body of Chriſt with their diſagreements, it is no thanke to them that the body of Chriſt is not rent in ſunder, and limbe meale torne in pieces. And ſo not vnworthely they are guilty of the body and bloud of the Lord, which they doe with vngodlineſſe full of ſacriledge ſo fowlly defile. Therefore by this vnworthy eating, they take to themſelues damnation. For whereas they haue no faith repoſed in Chriſt, yet receiuing the ſacrament they profeſſe that there is ſaluation for them nowhere elſe than in him, and doe forſweare all other affiance. Wherefore they themſelues are accuſers to themſelues, they themſelues pronounce witneſſe againſt themſelues, and they themſelues ſeale their owne damnation. Againe when they beeing with hatred and euill will deuided and drawn in ſunder from their brethren, that is from the members of Chriſt, haue no part in Chriſt: yet they doe teſtifie that this is the onely ſaluation to communicate with Chriſt, and to be made one with him. For this cauſe Paul commandeth, that a man prooue himſelfe, before that he eat of this bread or drinke of this cup. Whereby (as I expound it) he meant that euery man ſhould deſcend into himſelfe, and waigh with himſelfe, whether he doe with inward affiance of heart reſt vpon the ſaluation which Chriſt hath purchaſed: whether he acknowledge it with confeſſion of mouth: then whether he doe with deſirous endeuour of innocencie and holineſſe aſpire to the following of Chriſt: whether after his example he be ready to giue himſelfe to his brethren, and to communicate himſelfe to them with whom he hath Chriſt common to him: whether, as he himſelfe is accompted of Chriſt, he doe likewiſe on his behalfe take all his brethren for members of his owne body: whether he couet to cheriſh, defend and helpe them as his owne members. Not for that theſe duties both of faith and charity can now be perfect in vs: but becauſe we ought to endeuour this, and with all our deſires to long toward it, that we may daily more and more encreaſe our faith begun.

Conſciences tormented by that worthineſſe of receiuing which is taught in the Church of Rome.

41 Commonly when they goe about to prepare men to ſuch worthineſſe of eating, they haue in cruell wiſe tormented and vexed poore conſciences: and yet they brought neuer a whit of all thoſe things that might ſerue to the purpoſe. They ſaid that thoſe did eate worthily which were in ſtate of grace. To bee in ſtate of grace they expounded to bee pure and cleanſed from all ſinne. By which doctrine all the men that euer haue at any time been or now be in earth, were debarred from the vſe of this Sacrament. For if we goe about this, to fetch our worthineſſe from our ſelues, we are vtterly vndone: only deſpaire and damnable ruine abideth for vs. Though we endeuour with our whole ſtrengths, we ſhall nothing more preuaile, but that then at laſt we ſhall be moſt vnworthy, when we haue moſt of all trauelled about ſeeking of worthineſſe. To ſalue this ſore, they haue deuiſed a way to attaine worthineſſe: that, as much as in vs lieth, making examination, and requiring of our ſelues accompt of all our doings, we ſhould with contrition, confeſſion, and ſatisfaction cleanſe our vnworthineſſe, which way of clenſing, what maner of thing it is, we haue already ſhewed there where was more conuenient place to ſpeake of it. So much as ſerueth for our preſent purpoſe, I ſay that theſe be two hungry and vaniſhing comforts, to diſmaied and diſcouraged conſciences, and ſuch as are ſtricken with horror of their ſinne. For if the Lord by ſpeciall forbidding admitteth none to the partaking of the Supper but the righteous and innocent: there needeth no ſmall heed that may make a man aſſured of his owne righteouſneſſe which he heareth to be required of God. But whereby is this aſſuredneſſe confirmed vnto vs, that they are diſcharged afore God, which haue done ſo much as in them lay? But although it were ſo, yet when ſhall it be that a man may be bold to aſſure himſelfe that he hath done as much as in him lay? So when there is made no certaine aſſurance of our worthineſſe, the entry ſhal alway remaine ſhut by that horrible forbidding, whereby is pronounced that they eat and drinke iudgement to themſelues, which eat and drinke vnworthily.

The medicinable vertue of this ſacrament vnto men weakened with the conſciences of their owne vnworthineſſe.

42 Now it is eaſie to iudge what manner of doctrine this is which raigneth in the Papacy, and from what Author it hath proceeded, which with the outragious rigor therof, bereaueth and ſpoyleth, miſerable ſinners and ſuch as be tormented with feare and ſorrow, of the comfort of this Sacrament in which yet all the ſweet delicates of the Goſpell were ſet before them. Surely the deuill could by no readier way deſtroy men, than by ſo making them ſenſeleſſe, that they could not perceiue the taſt and ſauor of ſuch food, wherewith it was the will of the moſt good heauenly Father to feed them. Leaſt therefore we run into ſuch headlong downefall, let vs remember that this holy banket is medicine to the ſicke, comfort to ſinners, liberall gift to the poore: which bring no profite to the healthy, righteous, and rich, if any ſuch could be found. For whereas in it Chriſt is giuen vs for meat: we vnderſtand that without him we pine, ſtarue, and faint, like as famine deſtroyeth the liuely ſtrength of the body: Againe, whereas he is giuen vs for life: we vnderſtand that without him we are in our ſelues vtterly dead. Wherefore this is the worthineſſe both the onely and beſt that wee can bring to God, if we offer to him our owne vileneſſe and (as I may ſo call it) vnworthineſſe, that of his mercy he may make vs worthy of him: if we deſpaire in our ſelues, that wee may be comforted in him: if we humble our ſelues, that we may be raiſed vp of him: if wee accuſe our ſelues, that we may be iuſtified of him: moreouer if we aſpire to that vnitie which he commendeth to vs in his ſupper: and as he maketh vs all one in himſelfe, ſo if we wiſh to vs all altogether one ſoule, one heart, one tongue. If we haue theſe things throughly well weighed and conſidered, ſuch thoughts although they ſhake vs yet ſhall neuer ouerthrow vs. As how ſhould we being needy and naked of all good things, we defiled with filthineſſe of ſinnes, we halfe dead, eat the body of the Lord worthily? We will rather thinke that we being poore come to the liberall giuer, we ſicke to the Phiſition, we ſinners to the authour of righteouſneſſe, finally, we dead men to him that giueth life: that that worthineſſe which is commanded of God, conſiſteth chiefely of Faith, which repoſeth all things in Chriſt and nothing in vs: and next of charity, and the ſelfe ſame charity which it is enough to offer vnperfect to God, that he may increaſe it to better, foraſmuch as it cannot be giuen perfect. Some other agreeing with vs in this, that the worthineſſe it ſelfe conſiſteth in Faith and Charity: yet in the meaſure of worthineſſe haue gone farre out of the way, requiring a perfection of Faith, whereunto nothing may be added, and a charity equal with that which Chriſt hath ſhewed toward vs. But hereby they doe none otherwiſe than thoſe other before, driue all men away from comming to this holy Supper. For if their ſentance ſhould take place, no man ſhould receiue but vnworthily, for as much as all without exception ſhould be holden guilty and conuict of their vnperfectneſſe. And truely it were a point of too much amazed dulneſſe, I will not ſay fooliſhneſſe, to require ſuch perfection in the Sacrament, as may make the Sacrament voide and ſuperfluous: which was not ordained for the perfect, but for the weake and feeble to a weake, to ſtir vp, to pricke forward and exerciſe the affection of Faith and Charity, and to correct the default of either of them.

The liberty granted vnto men and their wanton folly ſhewed in ceremonies annexed to the adminiſtration of this Sacrament.

43 But ſo much as concerneth the outward forme of doing, whether faithfull receiue it in their hand or no, whether they deuide it, or euery one eat that which is giuen him: whether they put againe the cup in the hand of the Deacon, or deliuer it to the next: whether the bread be leauened, or vnleauened: whether the wine be red or white: it maketh no matter. Theſe things be indifferent and left in the liberty of the Church. Howbeit it is certaine, that the vſage of the old Church was, that euery one ſhould take it into his hand. And Chriſt ſaid, Diuide it among you. The Hiſtories report that it was leauened and common bread before the time of Alexander Biſhop of Rome, which firſt delighted in vnleauened bread: But for what reaſon I ſee not, vnleſſe it were with a new ſight to draw the eies of the common people to woondering at it, rather than to inſtruct their mindes with good religion. I adiure all them that are touched with any thought but light zeale of godlineſſe, to tell whether they doe not euidently ſee, both how much more brightly the glory of God ſhineth herein, and how much more aboundant ſweetneſſe of ſpirituall comfort commeth to the faithfull, than in theſe cold and player-like triſles, which bring none other vſe but to deceiue the ſenſe of the amazed people. This they call the holding of the people in religion, when being made fooliſh and ſenſeleſſe with ſuperſtition it is drawen whither they liſt. If any man will defend ſuch inuentions by antiquity, I my ſelfe alſo am not ignorant how ancient is the vſe of chreſme, and blowing in Baptiſme: How nigh to the age of the Apoſtles the Supper of the Lord was infected with ruſtineſſe: but this verily is the wawardneſſe of mans boldneſſe, which can not with hold it ſelfe but that it muſt alway play and be wanton in the myſteries of God. But let vs remember that God doth ſo highly eſteeme the obedience of his word, that he willeth vs in it to iudge both his Angels and the whole world. Now, bidding farewell to ſo great a heape of ceremonies: it might thus haue been moſt comlily miniſtred, if it were oft and at leaſt euery weeke ſet before the church but that firſt they ſhould begin with publike praiers: then a ſermon ſhould be made; then the miniſter hauing bread and wine ſet vpon the boord, ſhould rehearſe the inſtitution of the ſupper: and then ſhould declare the promiſes that are in it left vnto vs? and therewithall ſhould excommunicate all them that by the Lords forbidding are debarred from it, afterward they ſhould pray that with what liberality the Lord hath giuen vs this holy foode, he would inſtruct and frame vs alſo with the ſame faith, and thinkefulneſſe of minde to receiue it, and that foraſmuch as we are not of our ſelues, he would of his mercy make vs worthy of ſuch a banket: that then either Pſalmes ſhould be ſung, or ſomewhat read, and the faithfull ſhould in ſeemely order communicate of the holy banket, the Miniſters breaking the bread and giuing it to the people: that when the ſupper is ended, exhortation ſhould be made to pure faith and confeſſion of faith, to charity, and to maners meete for Chriſtians: laſt of all that giuing of thankes ſhould be rehearſed, and praiſes be ſong to God: which being ended the congregation ſhould be let go in peace.

The often receiuing of this ſacrament.

44 Theſe things that wee haue hitherto ſpoken of this Sacrament, doe largely ſhew, that it was not therefore ordayned, that it ſhould be receiued yeerely once, and that ſlightly for manners ſake (as now commonly the cuſtome is) but that it ſhould be in often vſe to all Chriſtians that with often remembrance they ſhould repeate the paſſion of Chriſt: by which remembrance they might ſuſtaine and ſtrengthen their faith, and exhort themſelues to ſing confeſſion of praiſe to God, and to publiſh his goodneſſe: finally by which they might nouriſh mutuall charity, and teſtifie it among themſelues, whereof they ſaw the knot in the vnitie of the body of Chriſt. For ſo oft as we communicate of the ſigne of the body of the Lord, we doe as by a token giuen and receiued, interchangeably binde our ſelues one to another vnto all duties of loue, that none of vs doe any thing whereby he may offend his brother, nor leaue any thing vndone whereby he may helpe him, when need requireth and ability ſufficeth. That ſuch was the vſe of the Apoſtolike Church, Luke rehearſeth in the Acts, when he ſaith that the faithfull were continuing in the doctrine of the Apoſtles, in communicating, in breaking of bread, and in prayers. So was it altogether meete to be done, that there ſhould be no aſſemblie of the Church without the word, prayers, partaking of the Supper and almes. That this order was alſo inſtitute among the Corinthians we may alſo ſufficiently gather of Paul, and it is certaine that in many ages afterward it was in vſe. For thereupon came thoſe old Canons, which they father vpon Anacletus and Calixtus, that when the conſecration is done, all ſhould communicate, that will not be without the dores of the Church. And it is read in thoſe old Canons, which they call the Canons of the Apoſtles: that they which continue not vnto the end, and doe not receiue the holie Communion, muſt be corrected as men that mooue vnquietneſſe to the Church. Alſo in the Councell at Antioch, it was decreed that they which enter into the Church, and heare the Scriptures, and doe abſtaine from the Communion, ſhould be remooued from the Church, till they haue amended this fault. Which although in the firſt Councell at Toletum it was either ſomewhat qualified, or at leaſt ſet foorth in milder words, yet is there alſo decreed, that they, which when they haue heard the Sermon are found neuer to communicate, ſhould be warned: if after warning they abſtaine, they ſhould be debarred from it.

45 Verily by theſe ordinances the holie men meant to retaine and maintaine the often vſe of the Communion, which often vſe they had receiued from the Apoſtles themſelues, which they ſaw to be moſt wholſome for the faithfull, and by little and little by the negligence of the common people to grow out of vſe, Auguſtine teſtifieth of his owne time: The Sacrament (ſaith he) of this thing, of the vnitie of the Lords body, is ſomewhere daily, ſomewhere by certaine diſtances of the daies, prepared vnto the Lords table, and is there receiued at the table, to ſome vnto life, to otherſome vnto deſtruction. And in the firſt Epiſtle to Ianuarius: ſome doe daily communicate of the body and blood of the Lord: ſome receiue it at certaine daies: in ſome places there is no day let paſſe wherein it is not offered: in ſome other places onely vpon the Saturday and the Sunday, and in ſome other places neuer but on the Sunday. But forasmuch as the common people was (as we haue ſaid) ſomewhat ſlack, the holie men did call earneſtly vpon them with ſharp rebukings, leaſt they ſhould ſeeme to winke at ſuch ſlothfulneſſe. Such an example is in Chryſoſtome vpon the Epiſtle to the Epheſians. It is not ſaid vnto him that diſhonoured the banket: wherefore didſt thou ſit downe? but wherefore diddeſt thou come in? Whoſoeuer is not partaker of the myſteries, he is wicked and ſhameleſſe for that he ſtandeth heere preſent. I beſeech you if any be called to a banket, waſheth his hands, ſitteth downe, ſeemeth to prepare himſelfe to eate, and then doth taſte of nothing: ſhall he not ſhame both the banker, and the maker of the banket? So thou ſtanding among them that with prayer doe prepare themſelues to receiue the holie meate, haſt euen in this that thou haſt not gone away, confeſſed that thou art one of the number of them, at the laſt thou doeſt not partake: had it not been better that thou hadſt not been preſent? Thou wilt ſay, I am vnworthie. Therefore neither waſt thou worthie of the communion of prayer, which is a preparing to the receiuing of the holie myſterie.

The firſt beginnings of ſlacknes in communicate.

In 6. cap. Iehan. tract. 26.

In cap. 1. Hom. 16. 12.

46 And truely this cuſtome, which commandeth to communicate yeerely once, is a moſt certaine inuention of the diuell, by whoſe miniſterie ſoeuer it was brought in. They ſay that Zepherinus was author of that decree, which it is not likely to haue been ſuch as we now haue it. For he by his ordinance did peraduenture not after the worſt manner prouide for the Church, as the times then were. For it is no doubt but that then the holie Supper was ſet before the faithfull ſo oft as they came together in aſſemblie, neither is it any doubt but that a good part of them did communicate. But when it ſcarcely at any time happened that all did communicate together, and whereas it was neceſſarie that they which were mingled with prophane men and idolaters, ſhould by ſome outward ſigne teſtifie their faith: the holie man for order and policies ſake, appointed that day, wherein the whole people of Chriſtians ſhould by partaking of the Lords Supper vtter a confeſſion of their faith. The ordinance of Zepherinus being otherwiſe good hath been euill wreſted of them that came after, when a certaine lawe was made of one communicating yeerely: whereby it is come to paſſe, that almoſt all men when they haue once communicate, as though they had gaily diſcharged themſelues for all the reſt of the yeere, ſleepe ſoundly on both eares.

The cuſtome of yeerely once receiuing, peruerſe.

It ought to haue been farre otherwiſe done. Euery weeke at the leſt, the Lords table ſhould be ſet before the aſſembly of the Chriſtians: the promiſes ſhould be declared, which might feed vs ſpiritually at it: none ſhould indeed be compelled by neceſſitie, but all ſhould be exhorted and pricked forward: the ſluggiſhneſſe alſo of the ſlothfull ſhould be rebuked. All ſhould by heapes, as hungrie men, come together to ſuch dainties. Not without rightfull cauſe therefore at the beginning I complained, that by the craft of the diuell this cuſtome was thruſt in, which when it appointeth one certaine day of the yeere, maketh men ſlothfull for all the reſt of the yeere. We ſee in deede that this peruerſe abuſe was crept in euen in the time of Chryſoſtome: but wee may alſo therewithall ſee how much it diſpleaſed him. For hee complaineth with greeuous words in the ſame place which I euen now alleadged, that there is ſo great inequalitie of this matter, that often in ſome times of the yeere they came not euen when they were cleane, but at Eaſter they came euen when they were vncleane. Then he crieth out: O cuſtome, O preſumption. Then in vaine is the daily offring vſed: in vaine we ſtand at the altar: there is none that partaketh together with vs. So farre is it off that he allowed it by his authoritie adioyned to it.

An ordinance to take away halfe this Sacrament from the people.

47 Out of the ſame ſhop proceeded alſo another ordinance, which hath ſtolen away or violently taken away the halfe of the ſupper from the better number of the people of God, namely the ſigne of the blood, which being denied to lay and profane men (for with ſuch titles forſooth they ſet out Gods inheritance) became a peculiar poſſeſſion to ſhauen and annointed men. It is the commandement of the eternall God, that all ſhould drinke: which commandement man dare diſcontinue and repell with a new and contrary law, commanding that not all ſhould drinke. And that theſe law-makers ſhould not ſeeme to fight without reaſon againſt their God, they pretend perils that might happen if this holie cup were commonly giuen to all: as though thoſe dangers had not beene foreſeene and marked of the eternall wiſedome of God. And then ſubtlely forſooth they reaſon, that the one is enough for both. For if (ſay they) it be the body, it is whole Chriſt, which cannot now be ſeuered from his body. Therefore by accompanying the bodie containeth the blood. Lo how our wit agreeth with God, when it hath neuer ſo little begun with looſe raines to be wanton and wilde. The Lord ſhewing bread ſaith that it is his body: when he ſheweth the cup, he calleth it his blood. The boldneſſe of mans reaſon crieth out contrariwiſe, that the bread is the blood, and the wine is the body: as though the Lord had for no cauſe ſeuered his body from his blood both in words and in ſignes: or as though it had euer been heard ſpoken that the body or blood of Chriſt is called God and Man. Verily if he had meant to ſignifie whole himſelfe, he might haue ſaid it is I: as he is wont to ſpeake in the Scriptures, and not, this is my body, this is my blood. But he willing to help our weakeneſſe, did ſet the cup ſeuerally from the bread, to teach that he ſufficeth no leſſe for drinke than for meate. Now let one part be taken away, then we ſhall finde but the one halfe of the nouriſhments in him. Therefore, although it be true which they pretend, that the blood is in the bread by way of accompanying, and againe, the body in the cup, yet they defraud godly ſoules of the confirmation of Faith which Chriſt deliuereth vs as neceſſary. Therefore bidding their ſubtleties farewell, we muſt hold faſt the profit which is by the ordinance of Chriſt in the two earneſts.

Cauillous allegations for defenſe of the halfe communion.

48 I know in deede that the miniſters of Sathan doe heere cauill, as it is an ordinarie thing with them to make mockery of the Scriptures. Firſt they alleadge that of one bare doing ought not to be gathered a rule whereby the Church ſhould be bound to perpetuall obſeruing. But they lie when they ſay that it was but a bare doing: for Chriſt did not onely deliuer the cup, but alſo did inſtitute that his Apoſtles ſhould in time to come doe the ſame. For they are the words of a commander, Drinke ye all of this cup. And Paul ſo rehearſeth that it was a deede, that he alſo commendeth it for a certaine rule. Another ſtarting hole is, that the Apoſtles alone were receiued of Chriſt to the partaking of this Supper whom he had already choſen and taken into the order of the ſacrificing Prieſts. But I would haue them anſwere me to fiue queſtions, from which they ſhall not be able to eſcape, but that they ſhall be eaſily conuinced with their lies. Firſt, by what oracle haue they this ſolution reuealed, being ſo ſtrange from the

the word of God? The Scripture reckoneth twelue that ſate with Ieſus: but it doth not ſo obſcure the dignitie of Chriſt that it calleth them ſacrificing Prieſts, of which name we will ſpeake hereafter in place fit for it. Though he gaue it then to the twelue, yet he commanded that they ſhould doe the ſame, namely, that they ſhould ſo diſtribute it among them. Secondly, why in that better age, from the Apoſtles almoſt a thouſand yeares, were all without exception made partakers of both the ſignes? was the old Church ignorant what gueſts Chriſt had receiued to the Supper? It were a point of moſt deſperate ſhameleſneſſe, heere to ſticke and dally in graunting it to be true. There remaine the Eccleſiaſticall hiſtories, there remaine the bookes of the old writers, which miniſter euident teſtimonies of this matter. The fleſh (ſaith Tertullian) is fed with the body and blood of Chriſt, that the ſoule may be fatted with feeding vpon God. How (ſaid Ambroſe to Theodoſius) wilt thou receiue with ſuch hands the holie body of the Lord? With what boldneſſe wilt thou with thy mouth partake of the cup of the precious blood? And Hierome ſaith. The Prieſts which make the Thankeſgiuing, and doe diſtribute the blood of the Lord to the people. Chryſoſtome, Not as in the old law the prieſt did eate part, and the people part: but one body is ſet before all, and one cup. Thoſe things that pertaine to the Thankeſgiuing are all common betweene the Prieſt and the people. The ſelfe ſame thing doth Auguſtine teſtifie in many places.

49 But why diſpute I about a thing moſt knowne? Let all the Greeke and Latine writers be read ouer: ſuch teſtimonies ſhall each where offer themſelues. Neither was this cuſtome growen out of vſe, while there remained one drop of pureneſſe in the Church. Gregory, whom you may rightly ſay to haue beene the laſt Biſhop of Rome, teacheth, that it was kept in his time. What is the blood of the Lambe, yee haue now learned, not by hearing, but by drinking. His blood is poured into the mouthes of the faithfull. Yea it yet endured foure hundred yeeres after his death, when all things were growen out of kinde. For neither was that taken onely for an vſage, but alſo for an inuiolable law. For then was in force the reuerence of Gods inſtitution, and they doubted not that it was ſacriledge, to ſeuer thoſe things which the Lord had conioyned. For thus ſaith Gelaſius. We haue found, that ſome receiuing onely the portion of the holie body, doe abſtaine from the cup. Let them without doubt, becauſe they ſeeme to be bound with I wot not what ſuperſtition, either receiue the Sacraments whole, or be debarred frō them whole. For the diuiding of this myſterie is not committed without great ſacriledge. Thoſe reaſons of Cyprian were heard, which truely ought to moue a Chriſtian minde. How (ſaith he) doe we teach or prouoke them to ſhed their blood in the confeſſing of Chriſt, if we deny his blood to them that ſhall fight? Or how doe we make them fit for the cup of Martyrdome: if wee doe not firſt in the Church by the right of communion admit them to drinke the cup of the Lord? Whereas the Canoniſts doe reſtraine that decree of Gelaſius to the Prieſts, that is ſo childiſh a cauill that it needs not to be confuted.

The cuſtome of miniſtring the cup to the people not abrogated as long as there continued any drop of pureneſs in the Church.

De conſecr. diſt. 2. cap. comper.

Ser. 5. de lap.

50 Thirdly, why did he ſimply ſay of the bread, that they ſhould eate: but of the cup, that they ſhould all drinke? euen as if he had meant of ſet purpoſe to meete with the craft of Satan. Fourthly, if (as they would haue it) the Lord vouchſafed to admit to his Supper onely ſacrificing Prieſts, what man euer durſt call to the partaking of it, ſtrangers whom the Lord had excluded? yea and to be partaking of that gift, the power whereof was not in their hands, without any commandement of him which onely could giue it. Yea vpon confidence of what warrant doe they vſe at this day to diſtribute to the common people the ſigne of the body of Chriſt, if they haue neither commandement nor example of the Lord? Fiftly, did Paul lie, when he ſaid to the Corinthians, that he had receiued of the Lord that which he had deliuered to them? For afterward he declareth the thing that he deliuered, that all without difference ſhould communicate of both the ſignes. If Paul receiued of the Lord, that all ſhould be admitted without difference: let them looke of whom they haue receiued which doe driue away almoſt all the people of God: becauſe they cannot now pretend God to be the Author of it, with whom there is not yea and nay. And yet ſtill for cloking of ſuch abhominations they dare pretend the name of the Church, and with ſuch such pretence defend it. As though either these Antichrists were the Church, which so easily tread vnder foote, scatter abroad, and destroy the doctrine and institution of Christ: or the Apostolike Church were not the Church, in which the whole force of religion flourished.

THE EIGHTEENTH CHAPTER.

Of the Popish Masse, by which sacriledge the Supper of Christ hath not onely been prophaned, but also brought to nought.

The sacrifice of the Masse being held to be a sacrifice propitiatorie, is nothing but a meere prophanation of the Supper of the Lord.

WIth these and like inuentions Satan hath trauelled, as by ouerspreading of darkenesse to obscure and defile the holie Supper of Christ, that at least the pureneſse of it should not be kept still in the Church. But the head of horrible abhomination was when he aduanced a signe, by which it might not onely be darkened and peruerted, but being vtterly blotted and abolished should vanish and fall out of the remembrance of men: namely when he blinded almost the whole world with a most pestilent error that they should beleeue that the Masse is a sacrifice and oblation to obtaine the forgiuenesse of sinnes. How at the beginning the founder sort of the schoolemen tooke this doctrine, I nothing regard: farewell they with their crabbed subtleties: which howsoeuer they may be defended with cauilling, yet are therefore to be refused of all good men, becauſe they doe nothing else but spread much darkenesse ouer the brightnesse of the supper. Therefore bidding them farewell, let the readers vnderstand that I heere match in fight with that opinion, wherewith the Romish Antichrist and his prophets haue infected the whole world, namely that the Masse is a worke whereby the sacrificing priest which offereth vp Christ, and the other that do partake at the same oblation, do deserue the fauour of God: or that it is a cleansing sacrifice, whereby they reconcile God to themselues. Neither hath this beene receiued onely in common opinion of the people, but the very doing it selfe is so framed, that it is a kind of pacifying wherewith satisfaction is made to God for the purging of the quick and dead. The words also which they vse, do expresse the same: and no other thing may we gather of the daily vse of it. I know how deepe rootes this pestilence hath taken, vnder how great seeming of goodnes it lurketh, how it beareth in shew the name of Christ, how in the one name of Masse many beleeue that they comprehend the whole summe of faith. But when it shall be by the word of God most cleerely prooued, that this Masse, how much soeuer it be coloured and glorious, yet shamefully dishonoreth Christ, burieth and oppresseth his crosse, putteth his death in forgetfulnesse, taketh away the fruit that commeth thereof vnto vs, doth weaken and destroy the sacrament wherein was left the memorie of his death: shall there then be any so deepe rootes, which this most strong axe, I meane the word of God, shall not cut downe and ouerthrow? Is there any face so beautifull, that this light cannot bewray the euill which lurketh vnder it?

Christ dishonored by the sacrifice of the Masse.

2 Let vs therefore shew that which hath beene set in the first place, that in it is intolerable blasphemie and dishonour done to Christ. For he was consecrate of his Father a Priest and bishop, not for a time as we read that they were ordained in the old testament, whose life being mortall their Priesthood also could not be immortall; for which cause also there needed successors that should from time to time be put in the place of them that died. But in place of Christ, which is immortall, there needeth no vicar to be set after him. Therefore he was ordained of the Father a Priest for euer, according to the order of Melchisedech, that he should execute an euerlasting Priesthood. This mystery had been long before figured in Melchisedech, whom when the Scripture had once brought in for the Priest of the liuing God, it neuer afterward made mention of him as though he had had no end of his life. After this point of likenesse, Christ was called a Priest according to his order. Now they that doe daily sacrifice, must needes appoint Priests to make the oblations whom they must appoint as it were successors and vicars in stead of Christ. By which putting in stead of him, they doe not onely spoile Christ of his honour, and plucke from him the prerogatiue of eternall Priesthood, but also trauell to thrust him downe from the right hand of his Father, on which hee cannot sit immortall, but that hee must therewithall remaine the eternall Priest.

Heb. 5. 5. & 7. 17. & 9. 11. & 21.

Psal. 110. 14.

Genes. 14. 18.

Neither

Neither let them say for themselues that their petie sacrificers are not put in place of Christ as if he were dead, but onely are helpers of his eternall Priesthood, which ceaseth not therefore to continue. For they are more strongly holden fast with the words of the Apostle, than that they may so escape: namely, that there were many other Priests made, because they were by death letted to continue. Therefore there is but one that is not letted by death, and he needeth no companions. Yet, such is their frowardnesse, they arme themselues with the example of Melchesidech to defend their wickednesse. For, because it is said that he offered bread and wine, they gather that he was a foreshewing of their Masse: as though the likenesse between him and Christ were in the offering of bread and wine. Which is so emptie and trifling that it needeth no confutation. Melchisedech gaue bread and wine to Abraham and his companions, to refresh them being wearie after their iourney and battle. What is this to a sacrifice? Moses praiseth the gentlenesse of the holy King: these fellowes vnseasonably coyne a mysterie whereof no mention is made. Yet they deceitfully paint their error with another colour, because it followeth by and by after, And he was the priest of the highest God. I answere, that they wrongfully draw to the bread and wine that which the Apostle referreth to the blessing. Therefore when he was the Priest of God he blessed Abraham. Whereupon the same Apostle (than whom we neede to seeke no better expositor) gathereth his excellencie, because the lesser is blessed of the greater. But if the oblation of Melchesidech were a figure of the sacrifice of the Masse, would the Apostle, I pray you, which searcheth out all euen the least things, haue forgotten so earnest and weighty a thing? Now (howsoeuer they trifle) they shall in vaine goe about to ouerthrow the reason which the Apostle himselfe bringeth, that the right and honor of sacrificing priesthood ceaseth among mortall men, because Christ which is immortall, is the onely and perpetuall sacrificing Priest.

Heb. 7. 13.

Heb 7. 7.

3 An other vertue of the Masse was, that it oppresseth and buryeth the crosse and passion of Christ. This verily is most certaine, that the crosse of Christ is ouerthrowen so soone as the Altar is set vp. For if hee offered himselfe for a sacrifice vpon the crosse, that hee might sanctifie vs for euer, and purchase to vs eternall redemption: vndoubtedly the force and effectualnes of that sacrifice continueth without any end. Otherwise wee should thinke nothing more honorably of Christ, than of oxen and calues which were sacrificed vnder the law: the offerings whereof are prooued vnsufficiuall and weake by this that they were oft renued. Wherefore either we must confesse, that the sacrifice of Christ, which hee fulfilled vpon the crosse, wanted the force of eternall cleansing, or that Christ hath made an end of all with one sacrifice once for euer. This is it that the Apostle saith, that this chiefe Bishop Christ once appeared by offering vp of himselfe before the ending of the world, to the driuing away of sinne. Againe, that we are sanctified by the will of God, by the offering of the body of Iesus Christ once. Againe, That Christ with one oblation for euer hath made perfect them that are sanctified: whereunto he adioyneth a notable sentence, that forgiuenesse of sins being once purchased, there remaineth no more any oblation. This also Christ signified by his last saying and vttered among his last gaspings, when hee said, it is ended. We are woont to note the last sayings of men when they are dying, for oracles. Christ dying testifieth that by his owne sacrifice is perfited and fulfilled whatsoeuer was for our saluation. Shall it be lawfull for vs daily to patch innumerable sacrifices to such a sacrifice, (the perfection whereof he hath so shiningly set foorth) as though it were vnperfect? When the holy word of God not only affirmeth, but also crieth out, and protesteth, that this sacrifice was once fully done that the force thereof remaineth euerlasting: who so require an other sacrifice, doe they not accuse this of imperfection and weakenesse? But as for the Masse, which hath beene deliuered in such sort that there may euery day bee made a hundred thousand sacrifices, to what end tendeth it, but that the passion of Christ whereby hee offered him an onely sacrificed oblation to the father, should be buried and drowned? Who, vnlesse he be blind, cannot see that it was the boldnesse of Satan, which wrastled against so open and cleare truth? Neither am I ignorant with what deceits that Father of lying vseth to colour this his fraude, saying that there are not sundry nor diuers sacrifices, but that one selfe same sacrifice crifice is repeated. But ſuch ſmokes are eaſily blowen away. For in the whole diſcourſe the Apoſtle trauelleth to prooue: not onely that there are no other ſacrifices, but that that one ſacrifice was once offered vp, and ſhall no more bee repeated. The ſubteller men doe yet ſlip out at a narrower hole, ſaying, that it is not a repeating but an applying. But this Sophiſticall argument alſo is no leſſe eaſily confuted. For neither did Chriſt once offer vp himſelfe with this condition: that his ſacrifice ſhould be daily confirmed with new oblations: but that by the preaching of the Goſpell, and miniſtring of the holy Supper, the fruit thereof ſhould bee communicated vnto vs. So Paul ſaith that Chriſt our Paſſeouer was offered vp, and biddeth vs to eate of him. This (I ſay) is the meane whereby the Sacrifice of the croſſe is rightly applied to vs, when it is communicated to vs to take the vſe of it, and we with true faith receiue it.

The crosse of Christ thereby buried and oppressed.

1.Cor.5.7.

The weake ſupporters of the Maſſe.

4 But it is woorth the labour to heare, with what other foundation beſide theſe they vphold the ſacrifice of the Maſſe. For they draw to this purpoſe the Propheſie of Malachie, whereby the Lord promiſeth that the time ſhall come when throughout the whole world there ſhall be offered to his name incenſe and a cleane ſacrifice. As though it were a new or vnwonted thing among the Prophets, when they ſpeake of the calling of the Gentiles to expreſſe by the outward ceremonie of the law the ſpirituall worſhipping of God, to which they exhort them, that they might the more familiarly declare to the men of their age, that the Gentiles ſhould be called into the true fellowſhip of religion. Like as alſo they are wont altogether to deſcribe by figures of their law, the truth that was deliuered by the Goſpell. So they ſet for turning to the Lord, aſcending into Ieruſalem: for the worſhipping of God, the offering of all kindes of gifts: for larger knowledge of him which was to be giuen to the faithfull in the kingdome of Chriſt, dreames and viſions. That therefore which they alleadge, is like vnto an other Prophecie of Eſay, where the Prophet foretelleth of three altars to be ſet vp in Aſſyria, Ægypt, and Iurie. For firſt I aske, whether they doe not grant that the fulfilling of this Prophecie is in the kingdome of Chriſt. Secondly, where be theſe altars, or when were they euer ſet vp. Thirdly whether they thinke that to euery ſeuerall kingdome is appointed a ſeuerall Temple, ſuch as was that at Ieruſalem. Theſe things if they weigh, I thinke they will confeſſe, that the Prophet vnder figures agreeable with his time, prophecieth of the ſpirituall worſhip of God to be ſpread abroad into the whole world. Which we giue to them for a ſolution. But of this thing ſith there doe euery where examples commonly offer themſelues, I will not buſie my ſelfe in longer rehearſall of them. Howbeit herein alſo they are miſerably deceiued, that they acknowledge no ſacrifice but of the Maſſe, whereas indeed the faithfull doe now ſacrifice to the Lord, and doe offer a cleane offering, of which ſhall bee ſpoken by and by.

Mal.1.8.

Ioel 2.28.

Eſay 19.21.

By the ſacrifice of the Maſſe, the memorie of the death of Chriſt blotted out.

5 Now I come downe to the third office of the Maſſe, where I muſt declare how it blotteth out the true and onely death of Chriſt, and ſhaketh it out of the remembrance of men. For as among men the ſtrength of a Teſtament hangeth vpon the death of the Teſtator: ſo alſo our Lord hath with his death confirmed the Teſtament whereby hee hath giuen vs forgiueneſſe of ſinnes and eternall righteouſneſſe. They that dare varie or make new any thing in this Teſtament, doe denie his death, and hold it as it were of no force. But what is the Maſſe, but a new and altogether diuers Teſtament? For why? Doth not euery ſeuerall Maſſe promiſe new forgiueneſſe of ſinnes, new purchaſing of righteouſneſſe: ſo that now there bee ſo many Teſtaments, as there be Maſſes? Let Chriſt therefore come againe, and with another death confirme this Teſtament, or rather with infinite deaths confirme innumerable Teſtaments of Maſſes. Haue not I therefore ſaid true at the beginning, that the onely and true death of Chriſt is blotted out by Maſſes? Yea what ſhall we ſay of this that the Maſſe directly tendeth to this end, that if it be poſſible, Chriſt ſhould be ſlaine againe? For where is a Teſtament (ſaith the Apoſtle) there of neceſſitie muſt be the death of the Teſtator. The Maſſe ſheweth it ſelfe to be a new Teſtament of Chriſt: therefore it requireth his death. Moreouer the hoſte which is offered, muſt neceſſarily bee ſlaine and ſacrificed. If Chriſt in euery ſeuerall Maſſe be ſacrificed, then he muſt at euery moment bee in a thouſand places cruelly ſlaine. This is not mine but the Apoſtles ſtles argument, If he had needed to offer himſelfe oft, he muſt oft haue died ſince the beginning of the world. I know that they haue an anſwere in readineſſe, whereby alſo they charge vs with ſlander. For they ſay that that is obiected againſt them which they neuer thought, nor yet can. And we know, that the death and life of Chriſt is not in their hand. We looke not whether they goe about to kill him: onely our purpoſe is to ſhew, what manner of abſurditie followeth of their vngodly and wicked doctrine. Which ſelfe thing I proue by the Apoſtles owne mouth. Though they cry out to the contrarie a hundred times, that this ſacrifice is vnbloodie: I will denie that it hangeth vpon the will of men, that ſacrifices ſhould change their nature, for by this meane the holy and inuiolable ordinance of God ſhould faile. Whereupon followeth that this is a ſure principle of the Apoſtle, that there is required ſhedding of bloud, that waſhing may not be wanting.

Heb.9.16.

The death of Chriſt made vnfruitfull by the ſacrifice of the Maſſe.

6 Now is the fourth office of the Maſſe to be entreated of, namely to take away from vs the fruit that came to vs of the death of Chriſt, while it maketh vs not to acknowledge it and thinke vpon it. For who can call to minde that hee is redeemed by the death of Chriſt when he ſeeth a new redemption in the Maſſe? Who can truſt that ſinnes are forgiuen him: when he ſeeth a new forgiueneſſe? Neither ſhall he eſcape that ſhall ſay, that wee doe for no other cauſe obtaine forgiueneſſe of ſinnes in the Maſſe, but becauſe it is already purchaſed by the death of Chriſt. For he bringeth nothing elſe than as if he ſhould boaſt, that Chriſt hath redeemed vs with this condition that wee ſhould redeeme our ſelues. For ſuch doctrine hath beene ſpread by the miniſters of Satan, and ſuch at this day they maintaine with cryings out with ſword and fire, that we when in the Maſſe we offer vp Chriſt to his Father, by this worke of offering doe obtaine forgiueneſſe of ſinnes, and are made partakers of the paſſion of Chriſt. What now remaineth to the paſſion of Chriſt, but to bee an example of redemption, whereby we may learne to be our owne redeemer? Chriſt himſelfe, when in the Supper he ſealeth the confidence of pardon, doth not bid his Diſciples to ſtick in that doing, but ſendeth them away to the ſacrifice of his death: ſignifying that the Supper is a monument or memoriall (as the common ſpeech is) whereby they may learne that the ſatisfactorie cleanſing ſacrifice, by which the Father was to be appeaſed, muſt haue beene offered but once. For neither is it enough to know that Chriſt is the onely ſacrifice, vnleſſe the onely ſacrificing be ioyned with it, that our faith may be faſtened to his croſſe.

The Sacrament of that holy ſupper thereby defaced, and deſtroyed.

7 Now I come to the concluſion, namely that the holy Supper, in which the Lord had left the remembrance of his paſſion grauen and expreſſed, is by the ſetting vp of the Maſſe, taken away, defaced, and deſtroyed. For the Supper it ſelfe is the gift of God, which was to bee receiued with thankeſgiuing. The ſacrifice of the Maſſe is faigned to pay a price to God, which he may receiue for ſatisfaction. How much difference there is betweene to giue and to receiue, ſo much doth the ſacrifice differ from the Sacrament of the Supper. And this truly is the moſt wretched vnthankfulneſſe of man, that where the largeneſſe of Gods bountie ought to haue beene acknowledged, and thanks to be giuen, therein he maketh God his debtor. The Sacrament promiſed, that by the death of Chriſt we are not onely once reſtored into life, but are continually quickened, becauſe then all the parts of our ſaluation were fulfilled. The ſacrifice of the Maſſe ſingeth a farre other ſong, that Chriſt muſt be daily ſacrificed, that he may ſomewhat profit vs. The Supper ſhould haue beene diſtributed in the common aſſemblie of the Church, that it might informe vs of the communion whereby we all cleaue together in Chriſt Ieſus. The ſacrifice of the Maſſe diſſolueth and plucketh in ſunder this communitie. For after that the error grew in force, that there muſt be ſacrificers that ſhould ſacrifice for the people, the Supper of the Lord as though it were poſted ouer to them, ceaſed to bee communicated to the congregation of the faithfull according to the commandement of the Lord. An entrie was made open to priuate Maſſes, which might rather reſemble a certaine excommunication, than that ſame communitie ordained of the Lord, when that petie ſacrificer willing ſeuerally by himſelfe to deuoure his ſacrifice, doth ſeuer himſelfe from the whole people of the faithfull. I call priuate Maſſe (leaſt any man be deceiued) whereſoeuer there is no partaking of the Lords Supper among the faithfull, although otherwise a great multitude of men be present.

no

Priuate Masses wicked abuses.

8 And whence the very name of Masse first sprung, I could neuer certainly iudge: sauing that it seemeth to me likely that it was taken of the offerings that were giuen. Whereupon the old writers vse it commonly in the plurall number. But to leaue striuing about the name, I say that priuate Masses are directly against the ordinance of Christ, and therefore they are a wicked prophaning of the holy Supper. For what hath the Lord commanded vs? not to take, and diuide it among vs? What manner

1.Cor. 10.16. of obseruing of the commandement doth Paul teach? not the breaking of bread which is the communion of the bodie and blood? Therefore when one taketh it without distributing, what likenesse is there? But that same one man doth it in the name of the whole Church. By what commandement? Is not this openly to mocke God, when one man priuatly taketh to himselfe that which ought not to haue beene done but among many? But because the words of Christ and Paul are plaine enough, we may briefly conclude, that whersoeuer is not breaking of bread to the communion of the faithfull, there is not the supper of the Lord, but a false aud wrongfull counterfaiting of the supper. But a false counterfaiting is a corrupting. Now the corrupting of so great a mysterie is not without wickednesse, Therefore in priuate Masses is a wicked abuse. And (as one fault in religon from time to time breedeth another) after that that manner of offering without communion was once crept in, by litle and little they began in euery corner of Churches to make innumerable Masses, and diuersly to draw the people hither and thither, which should haue come together into one assemblie, that they might reknowledge the mysterie of their owne vnitie. Now let them goe and denie it to be idolatrie, that in their Masses they shew foorth bread to be worshipped in stead of Christ. For in vaine they boast of those promises of the presence of Christ, which howsoeuer they be vnderstood, verily were not giuen to this purpose, that wicked and prophane men so oft as they will, and to whatsoeuer abuse they list, may make the bodie of Christ: but that the faithfull, when with religious obseruation they doe in celebrating of the Supper follow the commandement of Christ, may enioy the true partaking of him.

No commandement in Scripture to warrant Massing sacrificers.

9 Beside that, this peruersnesse was vnknowen to the purer Church. For howsoeuer the more shamelesse sort among our aduersaries doe here goe about to disguise the matter with false colours, yet it is most sure that all antiquitie is against them, as wee haue afore prooued in other things, and it may more certainely be iudged by the continuall reading of olde writers. But ere I make an end of speaking of it, I aske our

1.Sam. 16.22. Massing doctors, sith they know that obedience is more esteemed of God than oblations, and that he more requireth that his voice be harkened to, than that sacrifices bee offered: how they beleeue that this manner of sacrificing is acceptable to God, whereof they haue no certaine commandement, and which they see not to be allowed by any one syllable of the Scripture. Moreouer when they heare the Apostle say, that no man taketh to himselfe the name and honor of sacrificing priesthood, but he that is called as Aaron was: yea and that Christ himselfe did not thrust in himselfe, but obeied the calling of his Father: either they must bring forth God the Author and ordainer of their sacrificing Priesthood, or they must confesse that the honour is not of God, into which they haue with wicked rashnesse broken in vncalled. But they cannot shew one title of a letter that maintaineth their sacrificing priesthood. Why therefore shall not their sacrifices vanish away which cannot be offered without a Priest?

Such sacrifice neuer allowed by old writers as the Church of Rome hath deuised in the Masse.

10 If any man doe thrust in short sentences of the old writers gathered heere and there, and doe by their authoritie trauaile to proue that the sacrifice which is done in the Supper is farre otherwise to be vnderstanded than wee doe expound it: let him bee briefly answered thus: if the question bee of allowing the forged deuise of sacrifice, such as the Papists haue faigned in the Masse, the olde writers doe neuer speake in defence of such sacriledge. They doe indeed vse the word Sacrifice: but there withall they expound, that they meane nothing else but the remembrance of that true and onely sacrifice, which Christ our onely sacrificing Priest (as they each where report of him) made on the Crosse. The Hebrewes (saith Augustine) in the sacrifices of beasts which they offered to God, did celebrate a prophecie of the sacrifice to come, which Christ offered: the Christians doe with the holie oblation and partaking of the body of Christ celebrate a remembrance of the sacrifice alreadie made. Heere verily he teacheth altogether the same thing, which is written in moe words in the booke of Faith to Peter the Deacon, whosoeuer be the author of it. The words be these, Beleeue most stedfastly and doubt not at all, that the onely begotten himselfe, being made flesh for vs, offered himselfe for vs a sacrifice and oblation to God into a sauour of sweetnesse: to whom with the Father and the Holy Ghost in the time of the old Testament beasts were sacrificed: and to whom now with the Father and the Holy Ghost (with whom he hath one Godhead) the holie Church throughout the whole world ceaseth not to offer the sacrifice of bread and wine. For in those fleshly sacrifices was a figuring of the flesh of Christ which he should offer for our sinnes, and of his blood which he should shed to the forgiuenesse of sinnes. But in this sacrifice is thankesgiuing and rehearsall of the flesh of Christ which he offered for vs, and of his blood which the same he hath shed for vs. Whereupon Augustine himselfe in many places expoundeth it to be nothing else but a sacrifice of praise. Finally you shall commonly find in him, that the Supper of the Lord is for no other reason called a sacrifice, but because it is the remembrance, image, and witnesse of that singular, true, and onely sacrifice wherewith Christ hath cleansed vs. Also there is a notable place in his fourth booke of the Trinitie the xxiiij. Chapter, where after that he hath discoursed of the onely sacrifice, he thus concludeth: because in a sacrifice fower things are considered, to whom it is offered, and of whom, what is offered, and for whom. The same he himselfe the one and true Mediator reconciling vs to God by the sacrifice of peace, remaineth one with him to whom he offered: maketh them one in him for whom he offered: is one himselfe which offered, and the thing which he offered. To the same effect also speaketh Chrysostome. But they so challenge the honor of sacrificing priesthood to Christ, that Augustine testifieth it to be the voice of Antichrist if any man make a Bishop intercessor betweene God and men.

Lib. 1. cont. Parm. cap. 8.

11 Yet doe we not deny but that the offering vp of Christ is there so shewed in vs, that the spectacle of the Crosse is in a manner set before our eies: as the Apostle saith that Christ was crucified in the eies of the Galathians, when the preaching of the Crosse was set before them. But forasmuch as I see that those old Fathers also wrested this remembrance another way than was agreeable with the institution of the Lord, (because their supper contained I wot not what repeated or at least renewed forme of sacrificing) the safest way for godly harts shall be to rest in the pure and simple ordinance of God: whose also the supper is therefore called, because in it his authoritie alone ought to be in force. Truly sith I find that they haue kept a godly and true sense of this whole mysterie, and I doe not perceiue that they meant to abate any thing were it neuer so little from the onely sacrifice of the Lord, I cannot condemne them of vngodlinesse: yet I thinke that they cannot be excused, but that they haue offended somewhat in the manner of the celebration. For they counterfaited the Iewish manner of sacrificing more neerely than either Christ had ordained, or the nature of the Gospel did beare. Therefore that same ouerthwart appliance to heauenly things is the onely thing wherein a man may worthily blame them, for that beeing not contented with the simple and naturall institution of Christ, they swarued to the shadowes of the law.

Christ after a sort offered because his offering as it were painted out by this mysterie: in celebration whereof the Fathers not simplie to be allowed, though not to be condemned of vngodlinesse neither. Gal. 3. 1.

12 If a man doe diligently weigh, that this difference is put by the word of the Lord betweene the sacrifices of Moses, and our Thankesgiuing, that whereas those did represent to the Iewish people, the same effectualnesse of the death of Christ, which is at this day deliuered to vs in the supper, yet the maner of representing was diuers. For in those, the Leuiticall priests were commanded to figure that which Christ should performe it: there was brought a sacrifice which should be in the stead of Christ himselfe: there was an altar whereupon it should bee offered: Finally all things were so done, that there was set before their eies an image of the sacrifice which was to be offered to God for a satisfactorie cleansing. But since the time that the sacrifice is ended the Lord hath appointed to vs another order: namely, that it should conueigh to the faithfull people the fruit of the ſacrifice offered to him by the ſonne. Therefore he hath giuen vs a table wherat we ſhould eat, not an altar whereupon ſacrifice ſhould be offered: he hath not conſecrated prieſts to ſacrifice, but miniſters to diſtribute the holy banket. How much more high and holy the myſtery is, ſo much more religiouſly and with greater reuerence it is meet to be handled. Therefore there is no way ſafer, than putting away all boldneſſe of mans vnderſtanding, to ſticke faſt in that alone which the Scripture teacheth. And truly if we conſider that it is the ſupper of the Lord and not of men, there is no cauſe why we ſhould ſuffer our ſelues to be remooued one haire breadth from it by any authority of men or preſcription of yeeres.

1.Cor.11.20. Therefore when the Apoſtle minded to cleanſe it from all faults which had alreadie crept into the Church of the Corinthians, he vſeth the readieſt way thereunto, that is, he calleth it backe to the only inſtitution of it, from whence he ſheweth that a perpetuall rule ought to be fetched.

The name of ſacrifice, two kinds thereof in the law, in the Goſpell, two other thereunto anſwerable.

13 Now leaſt any wrangler, ſhould ſtirre vs vp ſtriſe by reaſon of the names of ſacrifice and ſacrificing prieſt, I will alſo declare, but yet briefly what in the whole diſcourſe I haue meant by a ſacrifice, and what by a ſacrificing prieſt. Who ſo ſtretch the word ſacrifice to all holy Ceremonies and doings of religion, I ſee not by what reaſon they do it. We do know that by the continuall vſe of the Scripture a ſacrifice is called that which the Greeks call ſometime Thuſia, ſometime Proſphora, ſometime Telete. Which being generally taken comprehendeth whatſoeuer is in any wiſe offered to God. Wherefore we muſt make diſtinction: but yet ſo that this diſtinction may haue a ſupernall appliance of ſimilitude from the ſacrifices of the law of Moſes: vnder the ſhadowes whereof the Lord willed to repreſent to his people the whole truth of ſacrifices. Of thoſe although there were diuers formes, yet they may all be referred to two ſorts. For either there was oblation made for ſinne after a certaine manner of ſatisfaction, whereby guiltineſſe was redeemed before God: or it was a ſigne of the worſhiping of God, and a teſtifying of religion: ſometime in ſtead of ſupplication, to craue the fauour of God: ſometime in ſtead of thankſgiuing, to teſtifie thankfulneſſe of mind for benefits receiued: ſometime only for an exerciſe of godlineſſe, to renew the ſtabliſhing of the couenant, to which later ſort pertained burnt offerings, drinke offerings, oblations, firſt fruits, and peace offerings. Wherefore let vs alſo diuide ours into two kinds: and for teachings ſake let vs call the one the ſacrifice of worſhip and of godly deuotion, becauſe it conſiſteth in the honoring and worſhipping of God, which the faithfull both owe and yeeld vnto him: or, if you will, the ſacrifice of Thankſgiuing: for as much as it is giuen to God of none but of them that being loden with immeaſurable benefits, doe render to him themſelues with all their doings. The other may be called propitiatory or of expiation. The ſacrifice of expiation is that which tendeth to appeaſe the wrath of God, to ſatisfie his iudgement, and ſo to waſh and wipe away ſinnes: whereby the ſinner cleanſed from the filthy ſpots of them, and reſtored into purity of righteouſneſſe, may returne into fauour with God himſelfe. So in the

Exod.29.3. law thoſe were called ſacrifices that were offered for the purging of ſinnes: not for that they were ſufficient to recouer the fauour of God, or to put away iniquity: but for that they ſhadowed out ſuch a true ſacrifice which at length was fully done by Chriſt alone: and by him alone, becauſe it could be done by none other: and once, becauſe the effectualneſſe and force of that one ſacrifice which Chriſt hath fully done, is eternall, as he himſelfe hath teſtified with his owne mouth, when he ſaid that it was ended

Iohn 19.30. and fulfilled: that is to ſay, that whatſoeuer was neceſſary to the reconciling of the fathers fauour, to the obtaining of the forgiueneſſe of ſinnes, to righteouſneſſe and to ſaluation, all the ſame was performed and fulfilled with that his only oblation, and there ſo nothing wanted thereof, that there was afterward no place left to any other ſacrifice.

In the ſacrifice of the Maſſe Chriſt blaſphemed and ſold, the ſacrificer himſelfe not authoriſed.

14 Wherefore I determine, that it is a moſt wicked reproch, and blaſphemie not to be ſuffered, as well againſt Chriſt as againſt the ſacrifice which he hath fully done by his death vpon the croſſe for vs, if any man by renewing an oblation thinke to purchaſe the pardon of ſinnes, to appeaſe God, and to obtaine righteouſneſſe. But what is elſe done by Maſſing, but that by deſeruing of new oblation we may be made partakers

partakers of the passion of Christ. And that there might be no measure of madding, they thought it but a small thing to say that there is made indifferently a common sacrifice for the whole Church, vnlesse they further said that it is in their choise to apply it peculiarly to this man or that man to whom they would, or rather to euery one whosoeuer he were that would buy for himselfe such ware with ready mony. Now because they could not reach to the price that Iudas had, yet that they might in some marke resemble their author, they kept the likenesse of number. Iudas sold him for thirty siluer pence: these fellowes sell him after the French account, for thirty brasen pence: but Iudas sold him once, these fellowes sell him as oft they can find a buier. In this sense also we deny that they be sacrificing priests, that is to say, they that with such an oblation are meanes to God for the people, they that appealing God, may purchase the satisfactory purging of sinnes. For Christ is the only Bishop and sacrificing Priest of the new Testament, into whom all Priesthoods are remooued, and in whom they be shut vp and ended. And if the Scripture had made no mention of the eternall priesthood of Christ: yet for as much as God, since that he hath taken away those olde priesthoods, hath ordained none, the Apostles argument remaineth inuincible, that no man taketh honour to himselfe, but he that is called of God. By what affiance therfore dare these robbers of God, that boast themselues for the butchers of Christ, call themselues the sacrificing Priests of the liuing God?

The common price of a Masse in France is three karolus, which make twenty deniers, about the value of a sterling grote. Heb. 5. 4.

15 Plato hath an excellent place in his second booke of common weale. Where when he entreateth of the old manners of expiation, and laugheth to scorne the foolish confidence of euill men and wicked doers, which thought that their wicked doings were by these as by couerings hidden that the Gods could not see them, and did, as if they had gotten warrant of the Gods by couenant, more carelesly follow their owne lusts: he seemeth throughly to touch the manner of satisfactory purging of the Masse, such as is at this day in the world. To beguile and vndermine another man, all men know to be vnlawfull. To griue widdowes with wrongfull dealings, to rob the fatherlesse, to trouble the poore, by euill crafty meanes to catch other mens goods to themselues, with forswearings and deceits to enter forceably into any mans possessions, to oppresse any man with violence and tyrannous feare, all men confesse to be wicked. How therefore dare so many commonly do all these things, as though they should freely be bold to doe them? Truly, if we rightly weigh it, no other cause doth so much encourage them, but because they haue confidence, that by the sacrifice of a Masse, as by paiment of full price for recompence, they shall satisfie God, or at the lest that this is an easie way to compound with him. Then Plato proceedeth further to scorne their grosse blockishnesse, which thinke that by such satisfactory cleansings those paines are redeemed that otherwise they should suffer in hell. And whereto serue at this day the yeerly obites, and the greater part of Masses, but that they which throughout all their life haue beene most cruell tyrants, or most rauenous robbers, or giuen foorth to all mischieuous doings, should as though they were redeemed by this price, escape the fire of purgatory?

The very practise of the Church of Rome in their masse and the grossenesse thereof condemned euen by Plato himselfe.

16 Vnder the other kind of sacrifice, which we haue called the sacrifice of thanksgiuing, are contained all the dutifull workes of charity, which when we extend to our brethren, we honour the Lord himselfe in his members: then, all our praiers, prailings, giuings of thanks, and whatsoeuer we doe to the worshipping of God. All which things finally doe hang vpon the greater sacrifice, whereby we are in soule and body hallowed to be a holy temple to the Lord. For neither is it enough, if our outward doings be applied to the obeying of him: but first our selues, and then all that is ours ought to be consecrate and dedicate to him: that whatsoeuer is in vs, may serue his glory, and may sauour of zealous endeuour to aduance it. This kind of sacrifice tendeth nothing at all to appease the wrath of God, nothing at all to obtaine forgiuenesse of sinnes, nothing at all to deserue righteousnesse: but is occupied only in magnifying and extolling of God. For it cannot be pleasant and acceptable to God, but at their hands, whom by forgiuenesse of sinnes already receiued he hath by other meanes reconciled to himselfe, and therefore acquited them from guiltinesse. But it is so necessary for the Church, that it cannot be away from it. Therefore it shall be euerlasting, so long as the people of God shall continue, as wee haue before alreadie shewed out of the Prophet: for in that meaning I will take this prophecie, For from the rising of the Sunne to the going downe thereof, great is my name among the Gentiles, and in euerie place incense shall be offered to my name, and a cleane offering: becausse my name is terrible among the Gentiles, saith the Lord: so far is it off, that we would put it away. So Paul biddeth vs to offer our bodies a sacrifice liuing, holie, acceptable to God, a reasonable worship. Where he spake very pithily, when he added that this is our reasonable worshipping: for he meant the spirituall manner of worshipping of God, which he did secretly set in comparison against the carnall sacrifices of the law of Moses. So liberall doing of good and communicating, are called sacrifices by which God is pleased. So the liberalitie of the Philippians, whereby they had relieued the pouertie of Paul, is called a sacrifice of sweet smelling. So all the good works of the faithfull are called spirituall sacrifices.

The sacrifice of praise and thanksgiuing.

Psal.141.2. Osee 14. 3. Psal.51.21. Hebr.13.15. 1.Pet.2.9.

17 And why do I seeke out many examples? For commonly this manner of speaking is often found in the Scriptures. Yea and while the people of God was yet holden vnder the outward schooling of the law, yet the Prophets did sufficiently expresse, that vnder those carnall sacrifices was the truth, which the Christian Church hath common with the nation of the Iewes. After which manner Dauid prayed, that his prayer might as incense ascend into the sight of God. And Osee called giuing of thanks, the calues of lips, which in another place Dauid calleth the sacrifices of praise. Whom the Apostle himselfe following, calleth them also the sacrifices of praise, and expoundeth them the fruits of lips confessing to his name. This kind of sacrifice the Supper of the Lord cannot want: wherein when we declare his death and render thanksgiuing, we doe nothing but offer the sacrifice of praise. Of this office of sacrificing, all wee Christians are called a kingly Priesthood: becausse by Christ we offer to God that sacrifice of praise of which the Apostle speaketh, the fruit of lips that confesse to his name. For neither doe we with our gifts appeare in the sight of God without an intercessor. Christ is he, which being the Mediator comming betweene, we offer vs and ours to the Father. He is our Bishop, which being entred into the sanctuarie of heauen, hath opened the entrie to vs. He is the altar, vpon which we lay our gifts, that in him we may be bold all that we are bold. It is he (I say) that hath made vs a kingdome and Priests to the Father.

Masse a grand deceiuer of the world.

Reuel.1.6.

18 What remaineth, but that the blinde may see, the deafe may heare, children themselues may vnderstand this abhomination of the Masse? which being offered in a golden cup, hath made drunke the kings and peoples of the earth from the highest to the lowest, hath so striken them with drowsinesse and giddinesse, that being become more senselesse than bruite beasts, they haue set the whole ship of their safetie onely in this deadly deuouring gulfe. Truely Satan neuer did bend himselfe with a stronger engine than this to assaile and vanquish the kingdome of Christ. This is the Helene, for whom the enemies of the truth fight at this day with so great rage, so great furiousnesse, so great crueltie: and a Helene indeed, with whom they so defile themselues with spirituall whoredome, which is the most cursed of all. I doe not heere so much as once touch with my little finger those grosse abuses wherewith they might colour the vnholie pureneſſe of their holie Masse: how filthie marketings they vse, how vnhonest gaines they make with their massings, with how great rauening they fill their couetousnesse. Onely I doe point vnto, and that with few and plaine words, what maner of thing is euen the very holiest holinesse of the Masse, for which it hath deserued in certaine ages past to be so honorable and to be had in so great reuerence. For, to haue these so great mysteries set out according to their worthinesse, requireth a greater worke: and I am vnwilling to mingle herewith those filthie vncleannesses that commonly shew themselues before the eies and faces of all men, that all men may vnderstand, that the Masse taken in her most picked pureneſſe, and wherewith it may be set out to the best shew, without her appendances, from the roote to the top swarmeth full of all kind of wickednesse, blasphemie, idolatrie, and sacriledge.

* No Sacrament in the Church but onely Baptisme, and the Lords Supper.

19 * The readers now haue in a manner almost all those things gathered into an abridgement, which wee haue thought behouefull to be knowen concerning these two two Sacraments: the vſe of which hath beene deliuered to the Chriſtian Church from the beginning of the new teſtament, to continue to the very end of the world: namely, that Baptiſme ſhould be as it were a certaine entry into it, and an admiſſion into faith: and the Supper ſhould be as it were a continuall food, wherwith Chriſt ſpiritually feedeth the family of his faithfull. Wherefore as there is but one God, one faith, one Chriſt one Church, his body: ſo there is but one Baptiſme, and is not oft miniſtred againe. But the Supper is from time to time diſtributed, that they which haue beene once receiued into the Church, may vnderſtand that they be continually fed with Chriſt. Beſid theſe two as there is no other ſacrament ordained of God, ſo neither ought the Church of the faithfull to acknowledge any other. For that, it is not a thing that lieth in the choiſe of man to raiſe and ſet vp new ſacraments, he ſhal eaſily vnderſtand that remembreth that which hath beene heere before plainly enough declared, that is, that ſacraments are appointed of God to this end, that they ſhould inſtruct vs of ſome promiſe of his, and teſtifie to vs his good will toward vs: and he alſo that calleth to minde, that none hath beene Gods counſeller, that might promiſe vs any certainty of his will, or aſſure vs, and bring vs out of care, what affection he beareth toward vs, what he will giue, or what he will deny vs. For therewith is alſo determined, that no man can ſet foorth a ſigne to be a teſtimony of any will or promiſe of his: it is he himſelfe alone, that can by a ſigne giuen teſtifie to vs of himſelfe. I will ſpeake it more briefely, and peraduenrure more groſly, but more plainely, A Sacrament can neuer be without promiſe of ſaluation. All men gathered on a heape together can of themſelues promiſe nothing of our ſaluation. Therefore neither can they of themſelues ſet foorth or ſet vp a Sacrament.

Eſa. 40. 13. Rom. 11. 34.

20 Therefore let the Chriſtian Church be contented with theſe two, and let her not onely not admit or acknowledge any third for the preſent time, but alſo not deſire or looke for any to the end of the world. For whereas certaine diuerſe Sacraments, beſide thoſe their ordinarie ones, were giuen to the Iewes according to the diuerſe courſe of times, as Manna, Water ſpringing out of the rocke, the Braſen Serpent and ſuch other: they were by this change put in minde that they ſhould not ſtay vpon ſuch figures whoſe ſtate was not very ſteadfaſt: but that they ſhould looke for ſome better thing from God, which ſhould continue without any decaying, and without any end. But we are in a farre other caſe, to whom Chriſt is openly ſhewed: in whom all the treaſures of knowledge and wiſedome are hidden with ſo great abundance and plenty, that either to hope for or looke for any new encreaſe to theſe treaſures, is verily to mooue God to wrath, and to prouoke him againſt vs. We muſt hunger for, ſeeke, looke vpon, learne, and throughly learne Chriſt alone, vntill that great day ſhall appeare, wherein the Lord ſhall openly ſhew to the full the glory of his kingdome, and himſelfe ſuch as he is, to be beholden of vs. And for this reaſon this our age is in the Scriptures ſignified by the laſt houre, the laſt daies, the laſt times, that no man ſhould deceiue himſelfe with vaine looking for any new doctrine of reuelation. For many times and in many ſorts he ſpake before of his Prophets, in theſe laſt daies the heauenly Father hath ſpoken in his beloued Sonne, which onely can manifeſtly ſhew the Father: and indeed he hath manifeſtly ſhewed him to the full, ſo much as behoueth vs, while we now behold him by a glaſſe. As therefor this is now taken away from men, that they cannot make new Sacraments in the Church of God: ſo it were to be wiſhed, that as little as were poſſible of mans inuention might be mingled with thoſe Sacraments that are of God. For like as when water is powred in, the wine departeth and is delayed: and as with leauen ſcattered among it, the whole lumpe of dowe waxeth ſower: ſo the pureneſſe of the myſteries of God is nothing elſe but defiled when man addeth any thing of his owne. And yet we ſee how farre the Sacraments are ſwarued out of kinde from their naturall pureneſſe, as they be handled at this day. There is echwhere too much of pompes, ceremonies, and geſturings: but of the word of God in the meane time there is neither any conſideration or mention, without which euen the Sacraments themſelues are not Sacraments. Yea and the very ceremonies that are ordained of God, in ſo great a rout cannot once liſt vp their head, but lie as it were oppreſſed. How little is that ſeene in Baptiſme, which onely ought there to haue ſhined and beene looked vpon, as we haue in an other place rightfully complained, euen Baptiſme it ſelfe? THE NINETEENTH CHAPTER.

Of the fiue falſely named Sacraments: where is declared, that the other fiue which haue beene hitherto commonly taken for Sacraments, are not Sacraments: and then is ſhewed what manner of things they be.

A Sacrament defined to be a viſible ſigne of inuiſible grace, and this applied in the ſchoole of Rome to fiue other beſides thoſe two before handled.

OVr former diſcourſe concerning Sacraments might haue obtained this with the ſober and willing to learne, that they ſhould not ouer curiouſly proceed any further, nor ſhould without the word of God embrace any other Sacraments beſide thoſe two which they knew to be ordained of the Lord. But foraſmuch as that opinion of the ſeauen Sacraments, being commonly vſed in all mens talke, hauing wandred through all ſchooles and preachings, hath by very ancienty gathered rootes, and is yet ſtill ſettled in the mindes of men: I thought that I ſhould doe a thing worth the trauell, if I ſhould ſeuerally and more neerely ſearch thoſe other fiue that are commonly adnumbred among the true and naturall Sacraments of the Lord, and wiping away all deceitfull colour, ſhould ſet them foorth to be ſeene of the ſimple ſuch as they be, and how falſely they haue beene hitherto taken for Sacraments. Firſt, I here proteſt to all the godly, that I doe not take in hand this contention about the name for any deſiring of ſtriuing, but that I am by weighty cauſes led to fight againſt the abuſe of it. I am not ignorant that Chriſtians are Lords, as of words, ſo of all things alſo, and therfore may at their will apply words to things, ſo that a godly ſenſe be kept, although there be ſome vnproperneſſe in the ſpeaking. All this I grant: although it were better that the words ſhould be made ſubiect to things, than things to the words. But in the name of Sacrament there is another conſideration. For they which make ſeuen Sacraments, doe therewithall giue to them all this definition, that they be viſible formes of inuiſible grace: they make them altogether veſſels of the holy Ghoſt: inſtruments of giuing of righteouſneſſe, cauſes of the obtaining of grace. Yea and the maſter of the ſentences himſelfe denieth that the Sacraments of the Law of Moſes are properly called by this name, becauſe they did not deliuer in deed the thing that they figured. Is it, I beſeech you, to be ſuffered, that thoſe ſignes which the Lord hath hallowed with his owne mouth, which he hath garniſhed with excellent promiſes, ſhould not be accounted for Sacraments: and in the meane time this honour ſhould be conueighed away to thoſe vſages which men either haue deuiſed of themſelues, or at leaſt doe obſerue without expreſſe commandemnt of God? Therfore either let them change the definition, or let them abſtaine from the wronfull vſing of this word, which doth afterward engender falſe opinions and full of abſurdity. Extreame annointing (ſay they) is a figure and cauſe of inuiſible grace, becauſe it is a Sacrament: If wee ought in no wiſe to grant that which they gather vpon it, then truely we muſt reſiſt them in the name it ſelfe, leaſt thereby we admit that it may giue occaſion to ſuch an errour. Againe when they would prooue it to be a Sacrament they adde this cauſe, for that it conſiſteth of the outward ſigne and the word. If wee finde neither commandement nor promiſe of it, what can we doe elſe but cry out againſt them?

In no mans power but in Gods alone to inſtitute Sacraments.

2 Now appeareth that we brawle not about the word, but doe mooue a controuerſie not ſuperfluous concerning the thing it ſelfe. Therfore this we muſt ſtronly holdfaſt, which we haue with inuincible reaſon before confirmed, that the power to inſtitute a Sacrament is in the hand of none but of God onely. For a Sacrament ought with a certaine promiſe to raiſe vp and comfort the conſciences of the faithfull: which could neuer receiue this certainty from man. A Sacrament ought to be to vs a witneſſing of the good will of God toward vs, whereof none of all men or Angels can be witneſſe, foraſmuch as none hath beene of Gods councell. Therefore it is hee alone which doth with right authority teſtifie of himſelfe to vs by his word. A Sacrament is a ſeale, wherewith the teſtament or promiſe of God is ſealed. But it could not be ſealed with bodily things and elements of this world, vnleſſe they be by the power of God framed and appointed thereunto. Therefore man cannot ordaine a Sacrament, becauſe this is not in the power of man, to make that ſo great myſteries of God ſhould lie hidden vnder ſo baſe things. The word of God muſt goe before, which may make a Sacrament to be a Sacrament, as Auguſtine very well teacheth. Moreouer it is profitable that there be kept ſome difference betweene the Sacrament and other ceremonies, vnleſſe we will fall into many abſurdities. The Apoſtles prayed kneeling: therefore men ſhall not kneele without a Sacrament. It is ſaid that the Diſciples praied toward the Eaſt: therefore the looking into the Eaſt ſhall be a Sacrament. Paul willeth men in euery place to lift vp pure hands, and it is rehearſed that holy men oftentimes praied with their hands lifted vp, then let the lifting vp of hands alſo be made a Sacrament. Finally let all the geſtures of the holy ones turne into Sacraments. Howbeit I would not alſo much paſſe vpon theſe things, if ſo that they were not ioyned with thoſe other greater diſcommodities.

Hom. in Ioan. 80.

Act. 19. 40. & 10. 3. 6. 1. Tim. 2. 8.

3 If they will preſſe vs with the authority of the old Church, I ſay that they pretend a falſe colour. For this number of ſeuen is no where found among the Eccleſiaſticall writers: neither is it certaine at what time it firſt crept in. I grant indeed that ſometime they be very free in vſing the name of a Sacrament: but what meane they thereby? euen all ceremonies and outward rites, and all exerciſes of godlineſſe. But when they ſpeake of thoſe ſignes that ought too be witneſſes of the grace of God toward vs, they are contented with theſe two, Baptiſme, and the Supper. Leaſt any man ſhould thinke that I falſely boaſt of this, I will heere rehearſe a few teſtimonies of Auguſtine. To Ianuarius he ſaith. Firſt I would haue thee to hold faſt that which is the chiefe point of this diſputation, that our Lord Chriſt (as he himſelfe ſaith in the Goſpell) hath made vs ſubiect to a light yoake and a light burden. Wherefore he hath bound together the fellowſhip of the new people with Sacraments very few in number, very eaſie in obſeruing, very excellent in ſignification. As are Baptiſme hallowed in the name of the Trinity, and the Communicating of the body and blood of the Lord, and whatſoeuer elſe is ſet foorth in the Canonicall Scriptures. Againe, in his booke of Chriſtian doctrine. Since the Lords reſurrection, the Lord himſelfe and the doctrine of the Apoſtles hath deliuered certain few ſignes inſteed of many, and thoſe moſt eaſie to be done, moſt reuerend in vnderſtanding, moſt pure in obſeruing: as is Baptiſme and the celebrating of the body and blood of the Lord. Why doth he here make no mention of the holy number, that is, of the number of ſeuen? It is likely that he would not haue paſſed it ouer, if it had beene at that time ordained in the Church, ſpecially ſith he is otherwiſe in obſeruing of numbers more curious than need were? Yea, when he nameth Baptiſme and the Supper, and ſpeaketh nothing of the reſt: doth he not ſufficiently ſignifie, that theſe two myſteries doe excell in ſingular dignity, and that the other ceremonies doe reſt beneath in a lower degree? Wherefore I ſay that theſe Sacramentary Doctors are deſtitute not onely of the word of the Lord, but alſo of the conſent of the old Church, how much ſoeuer they glory of this pretence. But now let vs come downe to the ſpeciall things themſelues.

Although the word Sacrament be in the Fathers largely applied, yet S. Auguſtine ſpeaking of thoſe principall myſteries which Chriſt hath left vnto his Church, doth mention only Baptiſme and the celebrating of the body and blood of Chriſt. Epiſt. 118. Lib. 3. cap. 9.

Of Confirmation

4 This was the manner in old time, that the children of Chriſtians, when they were growen to age of diſcretiō ſhould be brought before the Biſhop: that they ſhould fulfill that duty which was required of thoſe that being growen in yeeres did offer themſelues to Baptiſme. For theſe ſat among thoſe that were to be catechiſed, till being fully inſtructed in the myſteries of the faith, they could make a confeſſion of their faith before the Biſhop and the people. Therefore they that were baptiſed being infants, becauſe they had not then made confeſſion of their faith before the Church, were about the end of their childe-hood or in the beginning of their yeeres of diſcretion preſented againe by their parents, and were examined of the Biſhop according to the forme of the Catechiſme, which they had then certaine and common. And that this doing, which otherwiſe ought worthily to be graue and holy, might haue the more reuerence uerence and dignitie, there was added alſo the Ceremonie of laying on of hands. So that ſame child, his faith being allowed, was let goe with ſolemne bleſſing. The old writers doe oft make mention of this manner. Leo the Pope writeth: If any returne from Hereticks, let him not be baptiſed againe (but which he wanted among the Hereticks) let the vertue of the ſpirit be giuen him by the Biſhops laying on of his hands. Heere our aduerſaries will crie out, that it is rightfully called a Sacrament, in which the holy Ghoſt is giuen, but Leo himſelfe doth in an other place declare what he meaneth by thoſe words: Who ſo (ſaith he) is baptiſed among hereticks, let him not be rebaptiſed, but with calling vpon the holy Ghoſt, let him be confirmed with laying on of hands: becauſe he receiued onely the forme of baptiſme without ſanctifying. Hierome alſo maketh mention of it, writing againſt the Luciferians. But although I doe not denie that Hierome ſomewhat erreth therein, for that he ſaith that it is an obſeruation of the Apoſtles: yet he is moſt farre from theſe mens follies, and the very ſame alſo he qualifieth, when he addeth, that this bleſſing is giuen to the Biſhops onely, rather in honour of their prieſthood than by the neceſſitie of law. Therefore ſuch laying on of hands, which is done ſimplie in ſtead of bleſſing, I praiſe, and would that it were at this day reſtored to the pure vſe thereof.

The cauſe and manner of ancient confirmation, with the opinions of Leo & Hierome concerning it.

Epi. 77.

For confirmation as at this day they vſe it in the Church of Rome, there is in the word of God no warrãt.

5 But the later age hauing in a manner blotted out the thing it ſelfe, hath ſet I wot not what faigned confirmation for a Sacrament of God. They haue faigned that the vertue of confirmation is, to giue the holy Ghoſt to the encreaſe of Grace, which in baptiſme was giuen to innocencie: to ſtrengthen them to battaile, which in baptiſme were new begotten to life. This Confirmation is celebrate with annoynting, and with this forme of words, I ſigne thee with the ſigne of the holie croſſe, and confirme thee with the chreſme of ſaluation, in the name of the Father, and of the Sonne, and of the holie Ghoſt. All this is gaily and trimly done. But where is the word of God, that may promiſe heere the preſence of the holy Ghoſt? They cannot bring foorth one title. Whereby then will they certifie vs, that their chreſme is the veſſell of the holie Ghoſt? We ſee oyle, that it is a thicke and fat liquor and nothing elſe. Let the word (ſaith Auguſtine) be added to the element, and there ſhall be made a Sacrament. Let them (I ſay) bring foorth this word, if they will haue vs in the oyle to looke vpon any thing but the oyle. If they did acknowledge themſelues miniſters of the Sacraments, as they ought, we needed to ſtriue no longer. This is the firſt law of a miniſter, that he doe nothing without commandement. Go to, let them bring forth any commandement of this point of miniſterie, and I will not ſpeake one word more. If they haue no commandement, they cannot excuſe their boldneſſe full of ſacriledge. After this manner the Lord asked the Phariſees, whether the baptiſme of Iohn were from heauen or from men: if they had anſwered, from men, then he had made them confeſſe that it was trifling and vaine: if from heauen, then were they compelled to acknowledge the doctrine of Iohn. Therefore leaſt they ſhould too much ſlander Iohn, they durſt not confeſſe that it was from men. If therefore Confirmation be from men, it is prooued to be vaine and trifling: if they will perſwade vs that it is from heauen, let them prooue it.

Matt. 12. 25.

Impoſition of hands vſed by the Apoſtles, no preſident for popiſh confirmation.

6 They doe indeed defend themſelues with the example of the Apoſtles, whom they thinke to haue done nothing raſhly. This is well in deede: neither would wee blame them, if they ſhewed themſelues followers of the Apoſtles. But what did the Apoſtles? Luke reporteth in the Acts, that the Apoſtles which were at Hieruſalem, when they heard that Samaria had receiued the word of God, ſent thither Peter and Iohn: they prayed for the Samaritans, that they might receiue the holy Ghoſt, which was not yet come into any of them, but they were baptiſed onely in the name of Ieſus: when they had prayed, they laid their hands vpon them: by which laying on, the Samaritans receiued the holy Ghoſt. And of this laying on of hands he diuers times maketh mention. I heare what the Apoſtles did: that is, they faithfully executed their miniſterie. The Lord willed that thoſe viſible and wonderfull graces of the holie Ghoſt, which he then poured out vpon his people, ſhould be miniſtred and diſtributed of his Apoſtles by the laying on of hands. But vnder this laying on of hands: I thinke there was not contained any higher myſterie: but I expound it, that they adioyned adioyned ſuch a ceremonie, that by the very outward doing they might ſignifie, that they commended and as it were offered to God him vpō whom they laid their hands. If this miniſterie which the Apoſtles then executed, were yet ſtill remayning in the Church, the laying on of hands alſo ought to be kept. But ſince that ſame grace hath ceaſed to be giuen, whereto ſerueth the laying on of hands? Truely the holy Ghoſt is yet preſent with the people of God, without whom being guider and directer, the Church of God cannot ſtand. For we haue the eternall promiſe and which ſhall euer ſtand in force, by which Chriſt calleth to himſelfe them that thirſt, that they may drinke liuing waters. But thoſe miracles of powers, and manifeſt workings, which were diſtributed by the laying on of hands, haue ceaſed, neither behooued it that they ſhould be but for a time. For it behooued that the preaching of the Goſpell while it was new, ſhould be gloriouſly ſet foorth and magnified, with vnheard of, and vnwonted miracles. From which when the Lord ceaſed, he did not by and by forſake his Church, but taught that the royaltie of his kingdome and the dignitie of his word was excellently enough diſcloſed. In what point therefore will theſe ſtage-players ſay that they follow the Apoſtles? They ſhould haue done it with laying on of hands, that the euident power of the holy Ghoſt might by and by ſhew foorth it ſelfe. This they bring not to paſſe: why therefore doe they boaſt that the laying on of hands maketh for them, which we reade in deede that the Apoſtles vſed, but altogether to another end? Iohn 7. 37.

Act. 8. 21.

7 This hath like reaſon as if a man ſhould teach that the breathing wherewith the Lord breathed vpon his Diſciples, is a Sacrament whereby the holy Ghoſt is giuen. But whereas the Lord did this once, he did not alſo will that we ſhould doe the ſame. After the ſame manner alſo the Apoſtles laid on their hands, during the time that it pleaſed the Lord that the viſible graces of the holy Ghoſt ſhould be diſtributed at their prayers: not that they which come after, ſhould onely player-like and without the thing in deede counterfait an emptie and cold ſigne, as theſe Apes doe. But if they prooue that in laying on of hands they follow the Apoſtles, (wherein they haue no like thing with the Apoſtles, ſauing I wot not what ouerthwart wrongfull counterfaiting) yet whence commeth their oyle which they call the oile of ſaluation? Who taught them to ſeeke ſaluation in oyle? Who taught them to giue to it the power of ſtrengthening? Did Paul, which draweth vs farre away from elements of the world, which condemneth nothing more than the ſticking to ſuch petty obſeruation? But this I boldly pronounce not of my ſelfe, but from the Lord. Who ſo call oyle the oyle of ſaluation, they forſweare the ſaluation which is in Chriſt, they deny Chriſt, they haue no part in the kingdome of God. For oyle is for the belly, and the belly for oyle, the Lord ſhall deſtroy both. For all theſe weake elements, which decay with very vſe, belong nothing to the kingdome of God, which is ſpirituall, and ſhall neuer decay. What then? will ſome men ſay: doe you meaſure with the ſame meaſure, the water wherewith we be baptiſed, and the bread and wine vnder which the Supper of the Lord is giuen? I anſwere, that in Sacraments giuen of God, two things are to be looked vnto: the ſubſtance of the bodily thing which is ſet before vs, and the forme that is by the word of God printed in it, wherein lieth the whole ſtrength. In reſpect therefore that the bread, wine, and water that are in the Sacraments offered to our ſight, doe keepe their owne ſubſtance, this ſaying of Paul alway hath place, Meate for the belly, and the belly for meates: God ſhall deſtroy them both. For they paſſe and vaniſh away with the faſhion of this world. But in reſpect that they be ſanctified by the word of God, that they may be Sacraments, they doe not hold vs in the fleſh, but doe truely and ſpiritually teach vs. Iohn 20. 22. Gal. 4. 9. Col. 2. 20. 1. Cor. 6. 13.

8 But let vs yet more neerely looke into it, how many monſters this fat liquor foſtereth and feedeth. Theſe annointers ſay, that the holy Ghoſt is giuen in baptiſme, to innocencie: in confirmation, to encreaſe of grace: that in Baptiſme, we are new begotten into life: in confirmation, we are prepared to battle. And they are ſo paſt ſhame, that they deny that Baptiſme can well be done without confirmation. O wickedneſſe! Are we not therefore in Baptiſme buried together with Chriſt, being made partakers of his death, that we may be alſo partners of his reſurrection? But this fellowſhip

With derogation from baptiſme, force giuen vnto confirmation which doth not belong vnto it.

Rom.6.4. lowship with the death and life of Christ Paul expoundeth to bee the mortifiyng of our flesh, and quickning of our Spirit: for that our olde man is crucified, that wee may walke in newnesse of life. What is to be armed to battell if this be not? If they counted it a matter of nothing to treade vnder feete the word of God: why did they not yet at least reuerence the Church, to whom they will in euery point seeme so obedient? But what can be brought so forth more strong against their doctrine, than that decree of the Millenitane Councell? Who so saith that Baptisme is giuen only for forgiuenesse of sinnes, and not for a helpe of grace to come, accursed be he. But whereas Luke, Act.8.16. in the place which we haue alleadged, saith that they were baptised in the name of Iesus Christ, which had not receiued the holy Ghost: he doth not simply deny that they were endued with any gift of the holy Ghost, which beleeued in Christ with heart, and confessed him with mouth: but meaneth of that receiuing of the holie Ghost, whereby the open powers and visible graces were receiued. So is it said that the Act.2.4. Apostles receiued the Spirit on the day of Pentecost, whereas it had beene long before said vnto them of Christ, it is not you that speake, but the Spirit of my Father which speaketh in you. Behold all ye that are of God, the malicious and poysonous deceit of Sathan. That thing which was truely giuen in Baptisme, he lyingly saith to be giuen in his confirmation, that he may by stealth lead you vnware from Baptisme. Who now can doubt that this is the doctrine of Sathan, which cutting away from Baptisme the promises properly belonging to Baptisme, doth conuey away and remooue them, to an other thing? It is found (I say) vpon what manner of foundation this godly annointing standeth. The word of God is, that all they which are baptised in Christ, haue put on Christ with his gifts. The word of the Annointers is, that they receiued in Baptisme no promise, by which they may bee armed in battailes. That is the voice of truth, therefore this must be the voice of lying. Therefore I can more truely define this confirmation than they haue hitherto defined it: namely, that it is a notable slander of Baptisme, which darkeneth, yea abolisheth the vse thereof: that it is a false promise of the Diuell, which draweth vs away from the word of God. Or if you will, it is oyle defiled with the lying of the Deuill, which as it were by ouerspreading of darknesse deceiueth the eyes of the simple.

Gal.3.27. De conse. dist. 5. cap. Sp.

Christianitie imagined imperfect without Confirmation and but halfe Christianitie. Verba cap. 1 de conse. dist. 5. con. aurel. cap. vt Iemni.

9 They adde furthermore, that all the faithfull ought after Baptisme to receiue the holy Ghost by laying on of hands, that they may bee found full Christians: because he shall neuer a be Christian, that is not chresmed with the Bishops Confirmation. These be their owne sayings word for word. But I had thought that whatsoeuer things pertained to Christianitie, were all set foorth in writing and comprehended in Scriptures. Now, as I perceiue, the true forme of religion is to be sought and learned from elsewhere than out of the Scriptures. Therefore the whole wisedome of God, the heauenly trueth, the whole doctrine of Christ, doth but begin Christians, and oyle maketh them perfect. By this sentence are damned all the Apostles, and so many Martyrs, whom it is most certaine to haue neuer beene chresmed: forasmuch as the oyle was not yet made, which being poured vpon them, they might fulfill all the parts of Christianitie, or rather might bee made Christians which yet were none. But, though I hold my peace, they doe largely confute themselues. For how many of the number of their owne people doe they annoint after Baptisme? why therefore doe they suffer such halfe Christians in their flocke, whose imperfection might easily bee holpen? Why doe they with so careless negligence suffer them to omit that which was not lawfull to bee omitted without grieuous offence? Why doe they no more seuerely call vpon the keeping of a thing so necessarie, and without which saluation cannot bee obtained, vnlesse peraduenture some bee preuented by death? Verily when they so freely suffer to be despised, they secretly confesse that it is not of so great value as they boast it.

* Confirmation preferred before Baptisme in worthinesse, because that administred by a Bishop

* 10 Last of all they determine that this holy annointing is to be had in greater reuerence than Baptisme: because this annointing is peculiarly ministred by the hands of the chiefe Bishops, but Baptisme is commonly distributed by euery Priest. What may a man here say, but that they are vtterly mad, which so flatter their owne inuentions, that in comparison of them they carelesly despise the holy ordinances of God?

O mouth that robbeſt God, dareſt thou ſet a fat liquor onely defiled with the ſtinke of thine owne breath, and enchanted with murmuring ſound of wordes, againſt the Sacrament of Chriſt, and to compare it with water hallowed with the word of God? But thy wickednesse accounted this but a ſmall matter, vnleſſe thou didſt alſo prefer it aboue the ſame. Theſe be the anſwers of the holy ſea, theſe be the Oracles of the Apoſtolicke treſtle. But ſome of them, euen in their owne opinion, begun ſomewhat to qualifie this vnbridled madneſſe. It is (ſay they) to be worſhipped with greater reuerence: peraduenture not for the greater vertue and profit that it giueth: but becauſe it is giuen of the worthier men, and is made in the worthier part of the bodie, that is, in the forehead: or becauſe it bringeth a greater increaſe of vertues, although Baptiſme auaile more to forgiueneſſe. But in the firſt reaſon do they not bewray themſelues to be Donatiſts, which meaſure the force of the Sacrament by the worthineſſe of the miniſter. But I will admit, that Confirmation be called the worthier by reaſon of the worthineſſe of the Biſhops hand. But if a man aske of them, from whence ſo great prerogatiue hath beene giuen to Biſhops, what reaſon will they bring beſide their owne luſt? The Apoſtles alone vſed that power, which alone diſtributed the holy Ghoſt. Are the Biſhops alone Apoſtles? Yea are they Apoſtles at all? But let vs alſo grant them that: why doe they not by the ſame argument affirme, that Biſhops alone ought to touch the Sacrament of the blood in the Supper of the Lord: which they therefore denie to lay men, becauſe the Lord gaue to the Apoſtles alone? If to the Apoſtles alone, why doe they not conclude: therefore to the Biſhops alone? But in that place they make the Apoſtles, ſimple Prieſts: but now the giddineſſe of their head carrieth them another way, ſuddenly to create them Biſhops. Finally Ananias was no Apoſtle, to whom yet Paul was ſent that he ſhould receiue his ſight, be baptiſed, and be filled with the holy Ghoſt. I will adde this alſo to the heape. If by the law of God this was the proper office of Biſhops, why haue they beene ſo bold to giue it away to common Prieſts? as we read in a certaine Epiſtle of Gregorie.

Act. 19. 17. Diſt. 19. cap. Peruenit.

11 As for their other reaſon, how trifling, fond, and fooliſh is it, to call their confirmation worthier than the baptiſme of God, becauſe in it the forehead is annointed with oyle, and in baptiſme the hinder part of the head, as though baptiſme were done with the oyle and not with the water? I call all the godly to witneſſe, whether thoſe loſels doe not endeuor themſelues to this onely end, to corrupt the pureneſſe of the Sacraments, with their leauen. I haue already ſpoken this in another place, that in the Sacraments, that which is of God, ſcarcely glimmereth through at holes, among the route of the inuentions of men, If any man did not beleeue me therein, let him now at leaſt beleeue his owne Maſters. Loe paſſing ouer the water, and making no accompt of it, they highly eſteeme the onely oyle in baptiſme. We therefore on the contrarie ſide doe ſay that in Baptiſme the forehead alſo is dipped in water. In compariſon of this, we eſteeme not your oyle worth one peece of dung, whether it be in baptiſme or in confirmation. If any alleadge that it is ſould for more: by this adding of price, the goodneſſe (if any were in it) is corrupted: ſo much leſſe may they commend a moſt filthy deceit by theft. In the third reaſon they bewray their owne vngodlineſſe, while they prate that in confirmation is giuen a greater increaſe of vertues than in baptiſme. By the laying on of hands the Apoſtles diſtributed the viſible graces of the ſpirit. In what thing doe theſe mens fat liquor ſhew it ſelfe fruitfull? But away with theſe qualifiers, that couer one ſacriledge with many ſacriledges. It is like the Gordian: which it is better to breake in ſunder, than to labour ſo much in vndoing it.

Confirmation the worthier becauſe in it the former, in baptiſme the hinder part of the head annointed.

12 But now when they ſee themſelues deſtitute of the word of God and probable reaſon, they pretend as they are wont, that it is a moſt ancient obſeruation and ſtabliſhed by conſent of many ages. Although that were true, yet they winne nothing thereby. A Sacrament is not from the earth, but from heauen: not from men, but from God alone. They muſt prooue God to be the Author of their confirmation if they will haue it taken for a ſacrament. But why do they obiect antiquitie, whereas the old writers, when they minde to ſpeake properly, doe no where reckon moe ſacraments than two? If a fortreſſe of our faith were to be ſought from men, wee haue an inuincible tower, that the old fathers neuer acknowledged thoſe for ſacraments which theſe men doe

Confirmation not eſtabliſhed by conſent of antiquitie, and if it were yet not proued thereby a ſacrament.

doe lyingly faigne to the ſacraments. The old writers ſpeake of the laying on of hands: but doe they call it a Sacrament? Auguſtine plainely affirmeth that it is no other thing than praier. Neither let them heere barke againſt me with their ſtinking diſtinctions, that Auguſtine meant that, not of the laying on of hands vſed to confirmation, but which was vſed to healing or reconciliation. The booke remaineth and is abroad in the hands of men. If I wreſt it to any other ſenſe than Auguſtine himſelfe wrote it, I giue them leaue after their ordinary manner to oppreſſe me, not only with railing: but alſo with ſpitting at me. For he ſpeaketh of them that returned from ſchiſme to the vnity of the Church. He denieth that they needed to be newly baptiſed: for he ſaith, that the laying on of hands ſufficeth, that by the bond of peace the Lord may giue them the holy Ghoſt. But for as much as it might ſeeme an abſurdity, that the laying on of hands ſhould be done of new rather than Baptiſme: he ſheweth a difference. For (ſaith he) what other thing is the laying on of hands, than praier vpon a man? And that this is his meaning appeareth by another place, where he ſaith: Hand is laid vpon Heretikes amended, for the coupling of Charitie, which is the greateſt gift of the holy Ghoſt, without which whatſoeuer holy thinges are in man they auaile not to ſaluation.

Liber. 2. de bap. contra Donat. c. 16.

Lib. 5 ca. 23.

The ancient right, and profitable vſe of true confirmation.

13 But I would to God we did keepe ſtill the maner which I haue ſaid to haue beene in the old time, before that this vntimely deliuered image of a Sacrament was borne: not that it ſhould be ſuch a confirmation as they faigne, which cannot once be named without iniury to Baptiſme: but a Catechiſing, whereby children or they that were neere to the age of diſcretion did declare an account of their faith before the Church. But it ſhould be the beſt manner of Catechiſing, if a forme were written to that vſe, containing and familiarly ſetting out a ſumme in a manner of all the Articles of our religion, in which the whole Church of the faithfull ought without controuerſie to agree: that a child being ten yeeres old ſhould offer himſelfe to the Church to declare a confeſſion of his faith, ſhould be examined of euery article, and anſwer to euery one: if he were ignorant of any thing, or did not vnderſtand it, he might be taught. So ſhould he, before the Church witneſſing and beholding it, profeſſe the onely, true, and pure faith, wherewith the people of the faithfull doth with one minde worſhip the one God. If this diſcipline were at this day in force, truely the ſlothfulneſſe of ſome parents would be whetted, who doe careleſly neglect the inſtruction of their children as a thing nothing belonging to them, which then without open ſhame they could not omit: there ſhould be among Chriſtian people a greater conſent of faith, and not ſo great ignorance and rudeneſſe of many: ſome ſhould not be ſo raſhly carried away with new and ſtrange doctrines: finally all ſhould haue as it were a certaine orderly inſtruction of Chriſtian learning.

Of Penance.

The ancient laying on of hands by the Biſhop and Clergy after penance holy and healthfull for the Church.

14 In the next place they ſet Penance, of which they intreat ſo confuſedly and diſorderedly, that conſciences can beare away no ſure or ſound thing of their doctrine. We haue already in another place declared at large what we haue learned out of the Scriptures concerning repentance, and then what they alſo teach of it. Now we haue this onely to touch, what reaſon they had that raiſed vp the opinion, which hath heertofore raighned in Churches and Schooles, that it is a Sacrament. But firſt I will briefly ſay ſomewhat of the vſage of the old Church, the pretence whereof they haue abuſed to ſtabliſh their faigned inuention. This order they kept in publike penance, that they which had fully done the ſatisfactions enioyned them, were reconciled with ſolemne laying on of hands. That was the ſigne of abſolution, whereby both the ſinner himſelfe was raiſed vp before God with truſt of pardon and the Church was admoniſhed gently to receiue him into fauour, putting away the remembrance of his offence. This Cyprian oftentimes calleth, to giue peace. That this doing might be of great dignity, and haue more commendation among the people it was ordained that the biſhops authority ſhould alway be vſed for the meane herein. From hence came that decree of the ſecond Councell at Carthage: Be it not lawfull to a Prieſt at the Maſſe publikely to reconcile a penitent. And another decree of the Councell at Arauſium, let thoſe which in time of their penance depart out of this life, be admitted to the Communion without the laying on of hands vſed in the reconciling: if they recouer of their ſicknes let them ſtand in the degree of penitents, and when the time is fully expired, let them receiue of the Biſhop the laying on of hands vſed in reconciling. Againe the decree of the third Councell at Carthage: Let not the Prieſt without the authoritie of the Biſhop, reconcile a penitent. All theſe tended to this end, that the ſeueritie which they would haue to be vſed in that behalfe, ſhould not with too much lenitie grow to decay. Therefore they willed the Biſhop to be iudge of it, which was likely that he would be more circumſpect in the examination thereof. Howbeit Cyprian in a certaine place ſheweth, that not onely the Biſhop, but alſo the whole Clergie laid their hands on him. For thus he ſaith. At the full time they doe penance, then they come to the Communion, and by the laying on of hands of the Biſhop and the Clergie they receiue power to partake of the Communion. Afterward by proceſſe of time it came to this point, that beſide publick penance they vſed this ceremonie alſo in priuate abſolutions. Hereupon came that diſtinction in Gratian betweene publick and priuate reconciliation. I iudge that ſame old vſage of which Cyprian maketh mention, to haue been holie and healthfull for the Church, and I would that it were at this day reſtored. As for this latter, although I dare not diſallow it, or ſpeake more ſharply againſt it, yet I thinke it to be leſſe neceſſarie. Howſoeuer it be, yet we ſee that the laying on of hands in penance is a ceremonie ordained of men, not of God, which is to be ſet among meane things and outward exerciſes: and thoſe verily which are not to be deſpiſed, but which ought to be in a lower degree than thoſe that are commended vnto vs by the word of the Lord.

Cap. 33.

Decret. 26. quæſt. 6.

15 But the Romaniſts and Schoolemen, (which haue an ordinarie cuſtome to corrupt all things with wrong expounding them) doe heere very carefully trauell in finding out a Sacrament. Neither ought it to ſeeme any maruell, for they ſeeke a knot in a ruſh. But where they haue it beſt, they leaue a thing entangled in ſuſpenſe, vncertaine, and confounded and troubled with diuerſitie of opinions. They ſay therefore that the outward penance is a Sacrament, and if it bee ſo, that it ought to bee taken for a ſigne of the inward penance, that is, of the contrition of heart, which ſhall bee the thing of the Sacrament: or that they both together are a Sacrament, not two Sacraments, but one full one. But, that the outward penance is onelie the Sacrament: the inward is both the thing and the Sacrament: and that the forgiueneſſe of ſinnes is called the thing and not the Sacrament. Let them which keepe in remembrance the definition of a Sacrament which we haue aboue ſet, examine thereby that which theſe men call a Sacrament, and they ſhall finde that it is not an outward ceremonie ordained of the Lord for the confirming of our faith. If they cauill that my definition is not a law which they need to obey: let them heare Auguſtine, whom they faigne that they eſteeme as moſt holy. Viſible Sacraments (ſaith hee) were ordained for carnall mens ſake, that by degrees of Sacraments they may bee conueighed from thoſe things that are ſeene with eies to thoſe things that are vnderſtanded. What like thing doe either they themſelues ſee, or can they ſhew to other in that which they call the Sacrament of Penance? The ſame Auguſtine ſaith in another place: It is therefore called a Sacrament, becauſe in it one thing is ſeene, and another thing is to be vnderſtanded. That which is ſeene hath a bodily forme, that which is vnderſtanded, hath a ſpirituall fruit. Neither doe theſe things in any wiſe agree with the Sacrament of Penance ſuch as they faigne it, where there is no bodily forme that may repreſent a ſpirituall fruit.

16 And, to kill theſe beaſtes vpon their owne fighting place, if there be any Sacrament here to be ſought, may it not bee much more colourably ſaid that the abſolution of the Prieſt is a Sacrament, than Penance either inward or outward? for it might readily bee ſaid, that it is a ceremonie to aſſure our faith of the forgiueneſſe of ſinnes, and hath a promiſe of the keies as they call it, Whatſoeuer yee ſhall binde or looſe vpon earth, ſhall be bound or looſed in heauen. But ſome man would haue obiected, that the moſt part of them that are abſolued of the Prieſts obtaine no ſuch thing by ſuch abſolution, whereas by their doctrine the Sacraments of the new law ought to worke indeed that which they figure. This were but to be laughed at. For, as in the Supper, they they make a double eating, a Sacramentall eating, which is equally common to good and to euill, and a ſpirituall eating which is onely proper to the good: why might they not alſo faigne that abſolution is receiued two waies? Yet could I not hitherto vnderſtand what they meant with this their doctrine, which we haue alreadie taught how far it diſagreeth from the truth of God, when we purpoſely intreated of that argument. Heere my mind is onely to ſhew, that this doubt withſtandeth not, but that they may call the abſolution of the Prieſt a Sacrament. For they might anſwere by the mouth of Auguſtine that ſanctification is without the viſible ſacrament, and the viſible ſacrament without inward ſanctification. Againe, that the ſacraments doe worke in the onely elect that which they figure. Againe, that ſome do put on Chriſt ſo farre as to the partaking of the Sacrament, otherſome to ſanctification: the one, the good and euill equally doe: this other the good onely. Truely they haue more than childiſhly erred and be blinded in the cleere ſunne, which trauelling with great hardneſſe, yet eſpied not a thing ſo plaine and open to euery man.

Lib. 3. quæ. vet. Teſtament. De bap. par. Liber 5. de bap. contr. Donat.

17 Yet leaſt they ſhould waxe too proud, in what part ſoeuer they ſet the Sacrament, I denie that it ought rightfully to be taken for a Sacrament. Firſt, becauſe there is no ſpeciall promiſe to it, which is the onely ſubſtance of a Sacrament. Againe, becauſe whatſoeuer ceremonie is heere ſhewed foorth, it is the meere inuention of men: whereas we haue alreadie prooued that the ceremonies of Sacraments cannot be ordained but of God. Therefore it was a lie and deceit which they haue inuented of the Sacrament of penance. This faigned Sacrament they haue garniſhed with a meete commendation, calling it a ſecond boord after ſhipwracke, becauſe if a man haue by ſinning marred the garment of innocencie which he receiued in Baptiſme, he may by penance repaire it. But it is the ſaying of Hierom. Whoſe ſoeuer it be, it cannot be excuſed but that it is vtterly wicked if it be expounded after their meaning. As though Baptiſme be blotted out by ſinne, and is not rather to be called to remembrance of euerie ſinner, ſo oft as he thinketh of the forgiueneſſe of ſinne, that he may thereby gather vp himſelfe, and recouer courage, and ſtrengthen his faith? that he ſhall obtaine the forgiueneſſe of ſinnes which is promiſed him in Baptiſme. But that which Hierome hath ſpoken hardly and vnproperly, that by penance Baptiſme is repaired (from which they fall away that deſerue to be excommunicate from the Church) theſe good expoſitors draw to their wickedneſſe. Therefore you ſhall moſt fitly ſpeake, if you call Baptiſme the ſacrament of penance, ſith it is giuen for a confirmation of grace, and ſeale of confidence, to them that purpoſe repentance. And leaſt you ſhould thinke this to be our deuiſe, beſide this that it agreeth with the words of the Scripture, it appeereth that it was in the old Church commonly ſpoken like a moſt certaine principle. For in the booke of Faith to Peter, which is ſaid to be Auguſtines, it is called the Sacrament of Faith and of peſſance. And why flee we to vncertaine ſayings? As though we could require any thing more plaine, than that which the Euangeliſt reciteth: that Iohn preached the baptiſme of repentance vnto forgiueneſſe of ſinnes?

Of extreme vnction as they call it.

18 The third faigned Sacrament is extreme vnction, which is not done but of the Prieſt, and that in extremes (ſo they terme it) and with oyle conſecrate of the Biſhop, and with this forme: By this holie annointing, and by his moſt kinde mercie, God pardon thee, whatſoeuer thou haſt offended by ſeeing, by hearing, by ſmelling, feeling, taſting. They faigne that there be two vertues of it, the forgiueneſſe of ſinnes, and eaſe of bodily ſickneſſe if it be ſo expedient: if not, the ſaluation of the ſoule. They ſay that the inſtitution of it is ſet of Iames, whoſe words are theſe: Is any ſicke among you? Let him bring in the Elders of the Church, and let them pray ouer him, annointing him with oyle in the name of the Lord: and the praier of faith ſhall ſaue the ſicke man, and the Lord ſhall raiſe him vp: and if he be in ſinnes, they ſhall be forgiuen him. Of the ſame ſort is this annointing, of which we haue aboue ſhewed that the other laying on of hands is, namely a playerlike hypocriſie, whereby without reaſon and without fruit they would reſemble the Apoſtles. Marke rehearſeth that the Apoſtles at their firſt ſending, according to the commandement which they haue receiued of the the Lord, raiſed vp dead men, caſt out diuels, cleanſed leprous men, healed the ſicke, and that in healing of the ſicke they vſed oile. They annointed (ſaith he) many ſicke men with oile, and they were healed. Hereunto Iames had reſpect, when he commanded the Elders to be called together to annoint the ſicke man. That vnder ſuch Ceremonies is contained no higher myſtery, they ſhall eaſily iudge which marke how great liberty the Lord and his Apoſtles vſed in theſe outward things. The Lord going about to reſtore ſight to the blind man, made clay of duſt and ſpettle, ſome he healed with touchings, other ſome with his word. After the ſame manner the Apoſtles healed ſome diſeaſes with the word only, ſome with touching, other ſome with annointing. But it is likely that this annointing was not (as all other things alſo were not) cauſeleſly put in vre, I grant: yet not that it ſhould be a meane of healing, but only a ſigne, that the dulneſſe of the vnskilfull might be put in mind from whence ſo great power proceeded, to this end that they ſhould not giue the praiſe thereof to the Apoſtles. And that the holy Ghoſt and his gifts are ſignified by oile it is a common and vſuall thing. But that ſame grace of healing is vaniſhed away, like as alſo the other miracles, which the Lord willed to be ſhewed for a time, whereby he might make the new preaching of the Goſpell maruellous for euer. Therefore though we grant neuer ſo much, that annointing was a ſacrament of thoſe powers which were then miniſtred by the hands of the Apoſtles, it now nothing pertaineth to vs to whom the miniſtration of ſuch powers is not committed.

Iohn 9 6. Mat. 9. 29. Luke 18. 42. Act. 3. 6. & 5. 16. & 19. 12. Pſal. 45. 8.

19 And by what greater reaſon doe they make a ſacrament of this annointing, than of all other ſignes that are rehearſed to vs in the Scripture? Why doe they not appoint ſome Syloah to ſwim in, whereinto at certaine ordinary recourſes of time ſicke men may plunge themſelues? That (ſay they) ſhould be done in vaine. Truly no more in vaine than annointing. Why doe they not lie along vpon dead men, becauſe Paul raiſed vp a dead child with lying vpon him? Why is not clay made of ſpittle and duſt, a Sacrament? But the other were but ſingular examples: but this is giuen of Iames for a commandement. Verily Iames ſpake for the ſame time, when the Church yet ſtill enioyed ſuch bleſſing of God. They affirme indeed that there is yet ſtill the ſame force in their annointing: but we find it otherwiſe by experience. Let no man now maruell, how they haue with ſuch boldneſſe mocked ſoules, which they know to be ſenſleſſe and blind when they are ſpoiled of the word of God, that is, of their life and light: ſith they are nothing aſhamed to goe about to mocke the liuing and feeling ſenſes of the body. Therefore they make themſelues worthy to be ſcorned, while they boaſt that they are endued with the grace of healings. The Lord verily is preſent with his in all ages, and ſo oft as need is he helpeth their ſickneſſes no leſſe than in old time: but he doth not ſo vtter thoſe manifeſt powers, nor diſtributeth miracles by the hands of the Apoſtles: becauſe this gift both was but for a time, and alſo is partly fallen away by the vnthankfulneſſe of men.

Extreme annointing a forceleſſe and vnwarranted ceremonie.
Iohn 9. 7. Act. 10. 10.

20 Therefore as not without cauſe the Apoſtles haue by the ſigne of oile openly teſtified, that the grace of healings committed to them was not their owne power, but the power of the holy Ghoſt: ſo on the other ſide they are wrong doers to the holie Ghoſt, which make a ſtinking oile and of no force, to be his power. This is altogether like as if one would ſay that all oile is the power of the holy Ghoſt, becauſe it is called by that name in Scripture: that euery doue is the holy Ghoſt, becauſe he appeared in that forme. But theſe things, let them looke too. So much as for this preſent is enough for vs, we doe moſt certainly perceiue that their annointing is no Sacrament: which is neither a Ceremonie ordained of God, nor hath any promiſe. For when we require theſe two things in a Sacrament, that it be a ceremonie ordained of God, and that it haue a promiſe of God: we doe therewithall require that the ſame ceremonie be giuen to vs, and that the promiſe belong vnto vs. For no man doth affirme that Circumciſion is now a Sacrament of the Chriſtian Church, although it both was an ordinance of God, and had a promiſe knit vnto it: becauſe it was neither commanded to vs, nor the promiſe which was adioined to it was giuen to vs with the ſame condition. That the promiſe which they proudly boaſt of in their annointing, is not giuen to vs, we haue euidently ſhewed, and they themſelues declare by experience.

Extreme annointing hath neither ordinance of God to be grounded on nor promiſe of grace annexed.
Mat. 3. 16. Iohn 1. 32.

rience. The ceremonie ought not to haue been vſed, but of them that were endued with the grace of healings, not of theſe butchers that can more skill of flaying and murthering than of healing.

If S. Iames did command anointing as a thing to continue in the Church, yet not annointing at ſuch vnſeaſonable time, by ſuch perſons, with ſuch oile in ſuch perſwaſion, as the Church of Rome vſeth. Iam. 5. 14.

21 Howbeit although they obtaine this, that that which Iames commandeth concerning annointing, agreeth with this age (which they are moſt farre from) yet euen ſo they ſhall not haue much preuailed in prouing of their vnction wherewith they haue hitherto annointed vs. Iames willeth that all ſicke men be annointed: theſe men infect with their fat liquor, not ſicke men, but corpſes halfe dead, when the life lieth alreadie labouring at the top of their lips, or (as they themſelues terme it) in extremes. If they haue in their Sacrament a preſent medicine, whereby they may either eaſe the ſharpneſſe of diſeaſes, or at leaſt may bring ſome comfort to the ſoule, they are too cruell that doe neuer heale in time. Iames willeth that the ſicke man be annointed of the elders of the Church: theſe men allow no annointer but the pety ſacrificing Prieſt. Whereas they expound in Iames presbyteros the Elders to be Prieſts, and fondly ſay that the plurall number is there ſet for comelineſſe ſake: that is but trifling: as though the Churches at that time abounded with ſwarms of ſacrificing Prieſts, that they might goe in a long pompous ſhew to carie a Pageant of holy oile. When Iames ſimply biddeth that ſicke men be annointed, I vnderſtand by it none other annointing but of common oile: and none other is found in Markes reherſall. Theſe men vouchſafe to haue none other oile, but that which is hallowed of the Biſhop, that is to ſay, warmed with much breathing on it, enchanted with much mumbling, and with the knee bowed nine times ſaluted in this manner: thriſe haile holy oile: thriſe haile holy chriſme: thriſe haile holy balme. Out of whom haue they ſucked ſuch coniurations? Iames ſaith: that when the ſicke man is annointed with oile, and praier hath been pronounced ouer him, if he be in ſinnes they ſhall be forgiuen him: namely, that the guiltineſſe being taken away, they may obtaine releaſe of the paine: not meaning that ſinnes are put away with fat liquor, but that the praiers of the faithfull whereby the afflicted brother is commended to God, ſhall not be vaine. Theſe men doe wickedly lie, that by their holy, that is to ſay, abominable annointing, ſinnes are forgiuen. Loe how gaily they ſhall preuaile, when they haue been at large ſuffered to abuſe the teſtimony of Iames at their pleaſure. And leaſt we ſhould need to trauell long in proofe hereof, their owne Chronicles doe diſcharge vs of this hardneſſe. For they report that Pope Innocentius which in Auguſtines time gouerned the Church of Rome, ordained that not only Prieſts, but alſo all Chriſtians ſhould vſe oile to annoint for their neceſſity and others. Author hereof is Sigebert in his Chronicles.

Of Eccleſiaſticall Orders.

In their ſacrament of orders ſeuen petie ſacraments contained or as ſome of them do thinke moe.

22 The fourth place in their regiſter hath the Sacrament of Order, but the ſame ſo fruitfull, that it breederh out of it ſelfe ſeuen little Sacraments. But this is verie worthie to be laughed at, that whereas they affirme that there be ſeuen Sacraments, when they goe about to rehearſe them, they reckon vp thirteene. Neither can they alleadge for themſelues, that they are but one Sacrament, becauſe they tend all to one Prieſthood, and are as it were certaine degrees vnto it. For ſith it is euident that in euery one of them are ſeuerall Ceremonies, and they themſelues ſay that there be diuers graces: no man can doubt but that they ought to be called ſeuen Sacraments if their opinions be receiued. And why ſtriue we about it as though it were a thing doubtfull, for as much as they themſelues doe plainlie and ſeuerally declare ſeuen? But firſt we will briefly knit vp by the way, how many and how vnſauorie abſurdities they thruſt in vnto vs, when they goe about to commend to vs their Orders in ſtead of Sacraments: and then we will ſee whether the Ceremonie which Churches vſe in ordering of Miniſters, ought to be called a Sacrament at all. They make therefore ſeuen Eccleſiaſticall orders or degrees, which they garniſh with the name of a Sacrament. Thoſe be dorekeepers, Readers, Exorciſtes, Acoluthes or followers, Subdeacons, Deacons, Prieſts. And ſeuen they ſay that they be, for the ſeuenfold grace of the holy Ghoſt, wherewith they ought to be endued that are promoted vnto them. But it is increaſed and more largely heaped to them in their promotion. Now the number it ſelfe is hallowed with a wronfull expounding of the Scripture, when they thinke that they haue read in Eſay ſeuen vertues of the holy Ghoſt, whereas both indeed Eſay there rehearſeth but ſixe, and alſo the Prophet meant not to comprehend them all in that place: for he is elſewhere as well called the Spirit of life, of ſanctification, of adoption of the children, as he is in that place called the Spirit of wiſedome, of vnderſtanding, of counſell, of ſtrength, of knowledge, and of the feare of the Lord. Howbeit ſome ſubtler men make not ſeuen orders, but nine, after the likeneſſe (as they ſay) of the Church triumphing. But among them alſo there is ſtrife: becauſe ſome would haue the ſhauing of the Cleargie to be the firſt order of all, and Biſhopricke the laſt: otherſome excluding ſhauing altogether, reckon Archbiſhopricke among the orders. Iſidore otherwiſe diuideth them. For he maketh Pſalmiſts and Readers to be diuers: he appointeth the Pſalmiſts for ſongs, and the Readers to the reading of the Scriptures, wherewith the people may be inſtructed. And this diſtinction is kept by the Canons. In ſo great diuerſity what will they haue vs to follow or flee? Shall we ſay that there be ſeuen orders? So teacheth the maſter of the ſchoole: but the moſt illuminate doctors doe otherwiſe determine. Againe they alſo diſagree among themſelues. Moreouer the moſt ſacred Canons call vs another way. Thus forſooth do men agree, when they diſpute of godly matters without the word of God.

23 But this exceedeth all follie, that in euery one of theſe they make Chriſt fellow with them. Firſt (ſay they) he executed the office of dore-keeper, when he did with a whip made of cords, driue the buiers and ſellers out of the temple. He ſignifieth himſelfe to be a dorekeeper, when he ſaith, I am the dore. He tooke vpon him the office of Reader, when he read Eſay in the Synagogue. He did the office of an Exorciſt, when touching the tongue and eares of the deafe and dumbe man, he reſtored to him his hearing. He teſtified himſelfe to be an Acoluth or follower in theſe words. He that followeth me walketh not in darkneſſe. He executed the office of Subdeacon, when being girded with a linnen cloth he waſhed the diſciples feet. He did beare the perſon of a Deacon, when he diſtributed his body and bloud in the Supper. He fulfilled the office of Prieſt, when he offered himſelfe vpon the croſſe a ſacrifice to his Father. Theſe things cannot ſo be heard without laughing, that I maruell that they were written without laughing, if yet they were men that wrote them. But moſt notable is their ſubtletie wherewith they play the Philoſophers about the name of Acoluth, calling him a Ceroferar, a taper bearer with a word (as I thinke) of ſorcerie, truly ſuch a one as was neuer heard of in all nations and languages, whereas Acoluthos in Greeke ſimply ſignifieth a follower. Howbeit if I ſhould earneſtly tarry in confuting theſe men, I ſhould my ſelfe alſo worthily be laughed at, they are ſo trifling and very mockeries.

24 But that they may not be able yet ſtill with falſe colours to deceiue euen very ſilly women, their vanitie is by the way to bee vttered. They create with greate pompe and ſolemnity their Readers, Pſalmiſts, Dorekeepers, Acoluthes, to execute thoſe offices, whereunto they appoint very children, or thoſe whom they call lay men. For who for the moſt part lighteth the candles, who powreth wine and water into the cruet, but a childe or ſome baſe fellow of the laity, that maketh his gaine thereof? Doe not the ſame men ſing, Doe they not ſhut and open the Church dores? For who euer ſaw in their temples an Acoluth, or Dorekeeper executing his office? But rather he that when he was a boy did the office of an Acoluth, when he is once admitted into the order of Acoluthes, ceaſeth to be that which he beginneth to bee called, that they may ſeeme to will of purpoſe to caſt off the office when they take vpon them the title. Behold why they haue need to be conſecrate by Sacraments, and to receiue the holy Ghoſt, namely, that they may do nothing. If they alleadge for excuſe, that this is the frowardneſſe of times, that they forſake and neglect their miniſteries: let them therewithall confeſſe that there is at this day in the Church no vſe nor fruit of their holy orders, which they maruellouſly aduance, and that their whole Church is full of curſe: becauſe it ſuffereth tapers and cruets to be handled of children and prophane men, which none are worthy to touch but they that are conſecrate Acoluthes: and becauſe it committeth the ſongs to children, which ought not to be heard but of a hallowed mouth. As for their Exorciſts, to what end do they conſecrate them? I heare that the Iewes had their Exorciſts: but I ſee that they were ſo called of the exorciſines or coniurations which they vſed. Of theſe counterfait exorciſts who euer heard it ſpoken, that they ſhewed any example of their profeſſion? It is fained that they haue power giuen them to lay their hands vpon mad men, them that are to be catechiſed, and men poſſeſſed with diuels: but they cannot perſwade the diuels that they haue ſuch power, becauſe the diuels doe not only not yeeld to their commandements, but alſo vſe commanding authority ouer them. For a man can ſcarcely find euery tenth of them, that is not led with an euill Spirit. Therefore whatſouer things they babble concerning their pety Orders, they are patched together of fooliſh and vnſauory lies. Of the old Acoluthes, and Dorekeepers, and Readers, we haue ſpoken in another place, when we declared the order of the Church. Our purpoſe here is only to fight againſt that new found inuention of the ſeuenfold ſacrament in Eccleſiaſticall orders. Of which there is no where any thing read, but among theſe fooliſh praters the Sorboniſts and Canoniſts.

Act. 19. 13.

25 Now let vs conſider of the ceremonies which they vſe about it. Firſt whomſoeuer they receiue into their order of ſoldiers, they doe with one common ſigne enter them into Clergie. For they ſhaue them in the crowne, that the crowne may betoken kingly dignity, becauſe Clerks ought to be kings, that they may rule themſelues and other. For Peter ſpeaketh thus of them, Ye are a choſen kind, a kingly prieſthood, a holy nation, a people of purchaſe. But it was ſacriledge to take to themſelues alone that which is giuen to the whole Church, and proudly to glory of the title which they had taken from the faithfull. Peter ſpeaketh to the whole Church: theſe fellows wreſt it to a few ſhauen men: as though it were ſaid to them alone: be ye holy: as though they alone were purchaſed by the bloud of Chriſt: as though they alone were by Chriſt made a kingdome and prieſthood to God. Then they aſſigne alſo other reaſons: the top of their head is made bare, that their mind may be declared to be free vnto the Lord, which with open face may behold the glory of God. Or that they may be taught that the faults of their mouth and their eies muſt be cut off. Or the ſhauing of their head is the putting away of temporall things, and the hairie compaſſe about the crowne are the remnants of goods that are retained for their ſuſtenance. All inſignes: becauſe forſooth the vaile of the temple is not yet cut in ſunder. Therefore being perſwaded that they haue gaily diſcharged their duties, becauſe they haue figured ſuch things by their crowne, of the very things indeed they performe nothing at all. How long will they mocke vs with ſuch falſe colours and deceits? The Cleargie by ſhearing off a few haires doe ſignifie that they haue caſt away the abundance of temporall goods, that they behold the glory of God, that they haue mortified the luſt of the eares and eies: but there is no kind of men more rauening, more ſenſlefly dull, more luſtfull. Why doe they not rather truly performe holineſſe, than with falſe and lying ſignes counterfait a ſhew of it?

26 Moreouer when they ſay that the crowne of the Cleargie hath the beginning and reaſon from the Nazarites: what other thing doe they alleadge than that their myſteries are ſprung out of the Iewiſh ceremonies, or rather that they are meere Iewiſhneſſe? But whereas they further ſay, that Priſcilla, Aquila, and Paul himſelfe, taking a vow vpon them did ſheare their heads, that they might be purified: they bewray their groſſe ignorance. For it is no where read of Priſcilla: and of Aquila alſo it is doubtfull: for that ſame ſhearing may as well be referred to Paul as to Aquila. But, that we may not leaue to them that which they require, that they haue an example of Paul: the ſimpler muſt note, that Paul did neuer ſheare his head for any ſanctification, but only to ſerue the weakneſſe of his brethren. I am wont to call ſuch vowes the vowes of charity not of godlineſſe: that is to ſay, not taken in hand for any ſeruice of God, but to beare with the rudeneſſe of the weake: as he himſelfe ſaith, that he was made a Iew to the Iewes, &c. Therefore he did this, and the ſame but once, and for a ſhort time, that he might for a time faſhion himſelfe to the Iewes. Theſe men when they will without any vſe counterfait the purifying of the Nazarites, what doe they elſe elſe but raiſe vp another Iewiſhneſſe, when they wrongfully couet to follow the olde Iewiſhneſſe? With the ſame religiouſneſſe was that decretall Epiſtle made, which according to the Apoſtle, forbiddeth Clearkes that they ſhould not ſuffer their haire to grow, but ſheare it round like a bowle. As though the Apoſtle, when he teacheth what is comely for all men, were carefull for the round ſhearing of the Cleargie. Heereby let the Readers conſider, of what force and worthineſſe are thoſe other myſteries that follow, into which there is ſuch an entrie.

Cap. prohibemus. Diſt. 25. 1. Cor. 11. 4.

27 Whence the ſhearing of Clerkes tooke beginning, appeareth ſufficiently euen by Auguſtine alone. Whereas at that time none ſuffered their haire to grow, but nice men, and ſuch as coueted a ſmoothneſſe and trimneſſe not meete enough for men: it ſeemed to be a point of no good example, if that were permitted to the Clergie. Therfore Clearkes were commanded either to ſheare their head or to ſhaue it, that they ſhould not beare any ſhew of woman-like trimming. But this was ſo common, that certaine Monkes, that they might the more ſet out their holineſſe with notable and ſeuerall attire from other men, did let their haire grow long. But afterward when the faſhion turned to wearing of haire, and certaine nations were added to Chriſtiandome which alway vſed to weare long haire, as Fraunce, Germanie, and England: it is likely that Clerkes did euery where ſheare their heads, leaſt they ſhould ſeeme to couet the gaineſſe of haire. At the laſt in a corrupter age, when all olde ordinances were either peruerted or gone out of kinde into ſuperſtition, becauſe they ſaw no cauſe in the ſhearing of the Cleargie (for they had retained nothing but a fooliſh counterfaiting) they fled to a myſterie, which now they ſuperſtitiouſly thruſt in vnto vs for the approouing of their Sacrament. The dore-keepers at their conſecration receiue the keies of the Church, whereby they may vnderſtand that the keeping of it is committed to them. The readers receiue the holy Bible. The exorciſts receiue the formes of exorciſmes, which they ſhould vſe ouer mad men & them that are to be catechiſed. The Acoluthes receiue their tapers and cruet. Loe theſe are the ceremonies wherin (if God will) there is ſo much ſecret power, that they may be not onely ſignes and tokens, but alſo cauſes of inuiſible grace. For this they require by their definition, when they will haue them taken among the Sacraments. But to make an end in few words, I ſay it is an abſurditie that in their Schooles and Canons they make theſe leſſer orders Sacraments: whereas euen by their owne confeſſion that teach this, they were vnknowen to the primitiue Church, and deuiſed many yeeres after. For Sacraments, ſith they containe the promiſe of God, cannot be ordained of Angels, nor of men, but of God alone, whoſe office alone it is to giue promiſe.

Lib. 4. Sent. Diſt. 24. c. 8.

28 There remaine three orders, which they call the greater. Of the which, Subdeaconrie (as they call it) was remooued into that number, ſince that the route of the ſmaller ones began to grow. But becauſe they ſeeme to haue a teſtimonie for theſe out of the word of God, they doe peculiarly for honors ſake, call them holy orders. But now it is to be ſeene, how crookedly they abuſe the ordinances of God to their pretence. We will begin at the order of the Prieſthood or the ſacrificers office. For by theſe two names they ſignifie one thing, and ſo they call them to whom they ſay that it pertaineth to offer vpon the Altar the ſacrifice of the bodie and blood of Chriſt, to pronounce prayers, and to bleſſe the gifts of God. Therefore at their conſecration they receiue the patine with the hoſtes, for tokens of power giuen to them, to offer acceptable ſacrifices to God. And their hands are annointed: by which ſigne they are taught, that they haue power giuen them to conſecrate. But of the Ceremonies wee ſhall ſpeake heereafter. Of the thing it ſelfe I ſay: it ſo hath no title of the word of God which they pretend, that they could not more wickedly corrupt the order ſet by God. Firſt verily this ought to ſtand for a thing confeſſed (which wee haue affirmed in entreating of the Popiſh Maſſe) that they are all wrong-doers to Chriſt, which call themſelues ſacrificing Prieſts, or offer a ſacrifice of appeaſinent. Hee was appointed and conſecrate of the Father a Prieſt with an oath, according to the order of Melchiſedech, without any end, without any ſucceſſor. Hee once offered a ſacrifice of eternall ſatisfactorie cleanſing, and reconciliation: and now alſo being entred into the ſanctuarie of heauen, he maketh interceſſion for vs. In him we we are all ſacrificing Prieſts, but to praiſes and giuings of thankes, finally to offer vs and ours to God. It was his ſingular office alone, with his offering to appeaſe God, and to purge ſinnes. When theſe men take that vpon them, what remaineth but that their ſacrificing Prieſthood is vngodly and full of ſacrilege? Truely they are too wicked, when they dare garniſh it with the name of a Sacrament. As touching the true office of Prieſthood, which is commended to vs by the mouth of Chriſt, I willingly account it in that degree. For therein is a ceremonie, firſt taken out of the Scriptures, then ſuch a one as Paul teſtifieth not to be vaine nor ſuperfluous, but a faithfull ſigne of ſpirituall grace. But whereas I haue not ſet it for a third in the number of Sacraments, I did it becauſe it is not ordinarie and common among all the faithfull, but a ſpeciall rite for one certaine office. But ſith this honour is giuen to the Chriſtian miniſterie, there is no cauſe therefore why the Popiſh ſacrificers ſhould bee proud. For Chriſt commanded diſtributers of his Goſpell and myſteries to bee ordained, not ſacrificers to be conſecrated. He gaue them commandement to preach the Goſpell and to feede the flocke, not to offer ſacrifices. Hee promiſed them the grace of the Holy Ghoſt, not to make ſatisfactorie purging of ſinnes, but rightly to execute and to maintaine the gouernment of the Church.

Blowing and giuing the holy Ghoſt in ordaining of Prieſts. Iohn 20. 22.

29 The ceremonies agree very well with the thing it ſelfe. Our Lord when hee ſent forth the Apoſtles to preach the Goſpell, did blow vpon them. By which ſigne he repreſented the power of the holy Ghoſt which he gaue vnto them. This blowing theſe good men haue retained, and as though they did put foorth the holy Ghoſt out at their throate, they whiſper ouer their ſilly Prieſts that they make, Receiue the holy Ghoſt. So leaue they nothing which they doe not ouerthwartly counterfait: I will not ſay like players (which vſe their geſturings neither without art nor without ſignification) but like Apes, which counterfait euery thing wantonly and without any choiſe We keepe (ſay they) the example of the Lord. But the Lord did many things which he willed not to be examples to vs. The Lord ſaid to the Diſciples, Receiue the holy Ghoſt. He ſaid alſo to Lazarus, Lazarus come foorth, He ſaid to the Man ſicke of the Palſie, Riſe, and walke. Why doe not they ſay the ſame to all dead men and ſicke of the Palſie? He ſhewed a proofe of his diuine power, when in blowing vpon the Apoſtles he filled them with the grace of the holy Ghoſt. If they goe about to doe the ſame thing, they enuiouſly counterfait God, and doe in a manner chalenge him to ſtriue with them: but they are far from the effect, and do nothing with this fooliſh geſturing but mocke Chriſt. Verily they be ſo ſhameleſſe, that they dare affirme that they giue the holy Ghoſt. But how true that is, experience teacheth, which crieth out that ſo many as be conſecrated Prieſts are of Horſes made Aſſes, of fooles made mad men. Neither yet doe I ſtriue with them for that: onely I condemne the ceremonie it ſelfe, which ought not to haue beene drawen to bee an example, forasmuch as it was vſed of Chriſt for a ſingular ſigne of one myracle: ſo farre is it off, that the excuſe of following his example ought to defend them.

Iohn 20. 22. Iohn 11. 43. Matt. 9. 5. Iohn 5 8.

Vocation of Prieſts to the imitation of the Sonnes of Aaron. Lib. 4. Sent. diſt. 24. cap. 8. & in can. diſt. 21. cap 1.

30 But of whom receiued they the annointing? They anſwere that they receiued it of the Sonnes of Aaron, from whom their order alſo tooke beginning. Therefore they had rather alway to defend themſelues with wrongfull examples, than to confeſſe that themſelues haue deuiſed that which they vſe without cauſe. But in the meane time they conſider not, that while they profeſſe themſelues the ſucceſſors of the Sons of Aaron, they are wrong doers of the Prieſthood of Chriſt, which alone was ſhadowed and figured by all the old ſacrificing Prieſthoods. In him therefore they were all contained and fulfilled, in him they ceaſed, as wee haue ſometimes already repeated, and the Epiſtle to the Hebrewes without helpe of any gloſſes teſtifieth. But if they bee ſo much delighted with the ceremonies of Moſes, why doe they not haſtily take Oxen, Calues, and Lambes to make ſacrifices? They haue indeed a good part of the olde Tabernacle and of the whole Iewiſh manner of worſhipping: but yet this wanteth in their religion, that they doe not ſacrifice Calues and Oxen. Who cannot ſee, that this obſeruation of annointing is much more hurtfull than Circumciſion, ſpecially when there is adioyned ſuperſtition and Phariſiacall opinion of the worthineſſe of the worke? For the Iewes did ſet in Circumciſion, truſt of righteouſneſſe: theſe men men doe ſet in annointing, ſpirituall graces. Therefore while they couet to be counſaiters of the Leuites, they are made Apoſtataes from Chriſt, and doe put themſelues from the office of Paſtors.

31 This is (if God will) the holy oyle that printeth the marke that cannot bee raced out. As though oyle could not be wiped away with duſt and ſalt, or if it ſticke faſter, with ſope. But this marke is ſpirituall. What hath oyle to doe with the Soule? Haue they forgotten that which they oft chaunt to vs out of Auguſtine, that if the word be taken from the water, it ſhall be nothing but water, and that it hath this from the word that it is a Sacrament? What word will they ſhew in their fat liquor? Will they ſhew the commandement that was giuen to Moſes, concerning the annointing of the Sonnes of Aaron? But there is alſo commandement giuen, of the coate, the Ephod, the hat, the crowne of holineſſe, with which Aaron was to be garniſhed, and of the coates, girdles, and miters, wherewith the ſonnes of Aaron were to be clothed. There is commandement giuen, to kill a Calfe, and burne the fat of him for incenſe, to cut Rammes and burne them, to ſanctifie their eares and garments with the blood of another Ramme, and innumerable other obſeruations, which being paſſed ouer, I maruell why the only annointing of oyle pleaſeth them. But if they loue to be ſprinkled, why are they rather ſprinkled with oyle than with blood? Forſooth they goe about a wittie thing, to make one Religion of Chriſtianitie, Iewiſhneſſe, and Paganiſme, as it were of patches ſowed together. Therefore their annointing ſtinketh which is without the ſalt, that is, the word of God. There remaineth laying on of hands, which as I grant in true and lawfull Orderings to bee a Sacrament, ſo I denie that it hath any part in this play, where they neither obey the commandement of Chriſt, nor haue reſpect to the end whereunto the promiſe ought to lead vs. If they will not haue the ſigne denied them, they muſt apply it to the thing it ſelfe, whereunto it is appointed.

No reaſon why the Church of Rome ſhould in the matter of her Veſſels, vſe the ceremonie of annointing more than the reſt, which were vſed in the maſſe of Leuiticall Prieſts: the laying on of hands idle in that action which no commandement of God doth warrant. Exod. 30. 31.

32 About the order alſo of Deaconrie I would not ſtriue with them, if that ſame miniſterie which was in the Apoſtles time and in the purer Church, were reſtored to the vncorrupted ſtate thereof. But what like thing haue they whom thoſe men faigne to be Deacons? I ſpeake not of the men (leaſt they ſhould complaine that the doctrine is wrongfully weighed by the faultes of the men) but I affirme that for thoſe whom they deliuer vs by their doctrine, they vnworthily fetch teſtimonie from the example of them whom the Apoſtolicke Church ordained Deacons. They ſay that it pertaineth to their Deacons to ſtand by the Prieſts, to miniſter in all things that are done in the Sacraments, namely in Baptiſme, in the Chreſme, in the Patine, in the Chalice: to bring in the offerings and lay them vpon the Altar, to make ready the Lords Table, and to couer it: to carry the Croſſe, to pronounce and ſing the Goſpel and Epiſtle to the people. Is heere any one word of the true miniſterie of Deacons? Now let vs heare the inſtituting of them. Vpon the Deacon that is ordered, the Biſhop alone layeth his hand. He laieth a praier booke and a Stoale vpon his left ſhoulder, that he may vnderſtand that he hath receiued the light yoke of the Lord, whereby hee may ſubdue to the feare of God thoſe things that pertaine to the left ſide. He giueth him the text of the Goſpell, that hee may perceiue himſelfe to bee a publiſher of it. And what belong theſe things to Deacons? They doe euen like as if a man would ſay that he ordained them Apoſtles whom hee appointed onely to burne frankincenſe, to trim the Images, to ſweepe the Churches, to catch Mice, to driue away Dogs. Who could ſuffer ſuch kinde of men to bee called Apoſtles, and to be compared with the very Apoſtles of Chriſt? Therefore let them not heereafter lyingly ſay that thoſe be Deacons, whom they inſtitute onely for their enterlude-like plaies. Yea and by the very name it ſelfe they ſufficiently declare what manner of office they haue. For they call them Leuites, and will haue their order and beginning referred to the children of Leui. Which I giue them leaue to doe, ſo that they doe not afterward garniſh them with the fethers of other,

The order of Deaconrie.

33 Of Subdeacons to what purpoſe is it to ſpeake? For whereas indeed they were in olde time appointed for care of the poore, they aſſigne to them I wot not what trifling buſineſſe, as to bring the chalice with the patine, the little cruet with water, and the the towell to the Altar, to powre water to wash hands, &c. Now whereas they speake of receiuing and bringing in of offerings, they meane those which they deuoure as abandoned to their holy vse. With this office very well agreeth the forme of their consecrating. That he receiue of the Bishop, the patine and the chalice: of the Archdeacon, the cruet with water, the manuale, and such other baggage. Within these trifles they require to haue vs confesse that the holy Ghost is enclosed. What godly man can abide to grant this? But, to make once an end, wee may determine the same of them that we doe of the rest. Neither neede we to repeate further these things that are aboue declared. This may be enough to teach the sober and willing to learne (whom I haue taken in hand to instruct) that there is no Sacrament of God but where is shewed a Ceremonie ioyned with a promise: or rather verily but where is a promise seen in a Ceremonie. Heere is not found one syllable of any certaine promise: therefore it were in vaine to seeke a Ceremonie to confirme the promise. Againe of those Ceremonies that they vse, it is not read that any one is institute of God. Therefore heere can be no Sacrament.

Of Matrimonie.

Matrimonie not thereby proued a sacrament because it resembleth our coniowning with Christ.

34 The last is Matrimonie, which as all men confesse to be ordained of God, so no man vntill the time of Gregorie euer saw that it was giuen for a Sacrament. And what sober man would euer haue thought it? It is a good and holy ordinance of God, so tillage, carpentrie, shoomakers craft, barb ers craft, are lawfull ordinances of God, and yet they are no Sacraments. For there is not onely this required in a Sacrament, that it be the worke of God, but that it be an outward Ceremonie appointed of God to confirme a promise. That there is no such thing in Matrimonie, very children also can iudge. But (say they) it is a signe of the holy thing, that is, of the spirituall conioyning of Christ with the Church. If by this word Signe, they vnderstand a Token set before vs of God to this end to raise vp the assurednesse of our faith, they are far beside the truth. If they simply take a signe for that which is brought to expresse a similitude, I will shew how wittily they reason. Paul saith, as one starre differeth from another star in brightnesse, so shall bee the resurrection of the dead. Loe here is one Sacrament. Christ saith, The kingdome of heauen is like a graine of mustard seede. Loe heere is another. Againe, The kingdome of heauen is like vnto leauen. Loe here is the third. Esay saith, Behold, the Lord shall feede his flocke as a shepheard. Loe here the fourth. In another place, The Lord shall goe foorth as a Giant. Loe here is the fift. Finally what end or measure shall there be? There is nothing but by this meane it shalbe a Sacrament. How many parables & similitudes are in the Scripture, so many Sacraments there shall be. Yea and theft shall be a Sacrament because it is written, the day of the Lord is like a theefe. Who can abide these Sophisters prating so foolishly? I grant indeed that so oft as wee see a vine, it is very good to call to remembrance that which Christ saith, I am a vine, ye be branches, my Father is the vine-dresser. So oft as a shepheard with his flocke commeth toward vs, it is good also that this come to our minde, I am a good shepheard, my sheepe heare my voice. But if any man adde such similitudes to the number of Sacraments, he is meete to be sent to Antycira.

S. Pauls words wrested to proue Matrimonie a Sacrament.

35 But they still lay foorth the words of Paul, in which he giueth to Matrimonie the name of a Sacrament: he that loueth his wife, loueth himselfe. No man euer hated his owne flesh, but nourisheth it and cherisheth it, euen as Christ doth the Church: because we are members of his bodie, of his flesh and of his bones. For this a man shall leaue his Father and mother, and shall cleaue to his wife, and they shall be two in one flesh. This is a great sacrament: but I say in Christ and in the Church. But so to handle the Scriptures, is to mingle heauen and earth together. Paul, to shew to maried men what singular loue they ought to beare to their wiues, setteth foorth Christ to them for an example. For as he poured forth the bowels of his kindnesse vpon the Church which he had espoused to himselfe: so ought euery man to be affectioned toward his owne wife. It followeth after, he that loueth his wife loueth himselfe: as Christ loued the Church. Now to teach how Christ loued the Church as himselfe, yea how he made himselfe one with his spouse the Church, he applieth to him those things which Moſes reporteth that Adam ſpake of himſelfe. For when Euah was brought into his ſight, whom he knew to haue beene ſhapen out of his ſide: This woman (ſaith he) is a bone of my bones, and fleſh of my fleſh. Paul teſtifieth that all this was ſpiritually fulfilled in Chriſt and vs, when he ſaith that we are members of his bodie, of his fleſh, and of his bones, yea and one fleſh with him. At length he addeth a concluding ſentence, This is a great myſterie. And leaſt any man ſhould be deceiued with the double ſignifying of the words, hee expreſſeth that he ſpeaketh not of the fleſhly conioyning of man and woman, but of the ſpirituall mariage of Chriſt and the Church. And truely it is indeed a great myſterie, that Chriſt ſuffered a rib to be taken from himſelfe, whereof we might be ſhapen: that is to ſay, when he was ſtrong, he willed to be weake, that we might be ſtrengthned with his ſtrength: that now we may not our ſelues liue, but he may liue in vs.

Gen. 3. 23.

Gal. 2. 20.

36 The name of Sacrament deceiued them. But was it rightfull that the whole Church ſhould ſuffer the puniſhment of their ignorance? Paul ſaid Myſterie: which word when the tranſlator might haue left being not vnuſed with Latin eares, or might haue tranſlated it a Secret: hee choſe rather to put in the word Sacrament, yet in no other ſenſe than Paul had in Greeke called it a myſterie. Now let them goe and with crying out raile againſt the skill of tongues, by ignorance whereof they haue ſo long moſt fowly beene blinde in an eaſie matter, and ſuch as offereth it ſelfe to bee perceiued of euery man. But why doe they in this one place ſo earneſtly ſticke vpon this litle word Sacrament, and ſome other times doe paſſe it ouer vnregarded? For alſo in the firſt Epiſtle to Timothie the Tranſlator hath vſed it, and in the ſelfe ſame Epiſtle to the Ephesians: in euerie place for Myſterie. But let this ſlipping bee pardoned them: at leaſt the lyers ought to haue had a good remembrance. For, when they haue once ſet out Matrimonie with title of a Sacrament, afterward to call it vncleannetſe, defiling, and fleſhly filthineſſe, how giddy lightneſſe is this? how great an abſurditie is it to debarre Prieſts from a Sacrament? If they denie that they debarre them from the Sacrament, but from the luſt of copulation: they eſcape not ſo away from mee. For they teach that the copulation it ſelfe is a part of the Sacrament, and that by it alone is figured the vniting that we haue with Chriſt in conformitie of nature: becauſe man and woman are not made one but by carnall copulation. How beit ſome of them haue heere found two Sacraments: the one of God and the Soule, in the betrothed man and woman: the other of Chriſt and the Church, in the husband and the wife. Howſoeuer it be, yet copulation is a Sacrament, from which it is vnlawfull that any Chriſtian ſhould be debarred: Vnleſſe peraduenture the Sacraments of Chriſtians doe ſo ill agree, that they cannot ſtand together. There is alſo another abſurditie in their doctrine. They affirme that in the Sacrament is giuen the grace of the holy Ghoſt: they teach that copulation is a ſacrament: and they deny that at copulation the holy Ghoſt is at any time preſent.

37 And, becauſe they would not ſimply mocke the Church, how long a row of errors, lies, deceits, and wickednetſes haue they knit to one error? ſo that a man may ſay, that they did nothing but ſeeke a Den of abhominations, when they made of Matrimonie a Sacrament. For when they once obtained this, they drew to themſelues the hearing of cauſes of Matrimonie: for it was a ſpirituall matter, which prophane Iudges might not meddle with. Then they made lawes, whereby they ſtabliſhed their tyranny, but thoſe partly manifeſtly wicked againſt God, and partly moſt vniuſt toward men. As are theſe: That mariages made betweene yong perſons without conſent of their Parents, ſhould remaine of force and ſtabliſhed, that the mariages bee not lawfull betweene the kinſfolkes to the ſeuenth degree: and if any ſuch bee made, that they bee diuorced. And the very degrees they faigne againſt the lawes of all nations, and againſt the ciuill gouernment of Moſes. That it bee not lawfull for a man that hath put away an adultreſſe, to marrie another. That ſpirituall kinſfolkes may not bee coupled in mariage. That there bee no mariages celebrated, from Septuageſime to the vtas of Eaſter, in three weekes before Midſommer, nor from Aduent, to Twelftide. And innumerable other like, which it were long to rehearſe. At length wee muſt creepe out of their mire, wherein our talke hath now tarried longer

THE TVVENTIETH CHAPTER.

Of Ciuill Gouernment.

Magiſtracie not taken away by the libertie which is promiſed in the Goſpell.

NOw whereas wee haue aboue ſet two kindes of gouernment in man, and whereas wee haue ſpoken enough of the one kinde which conſiſteth in the Soule or in the inward man, and hath reſpect to eternall life: this place requireth that we ſpeake ſomewhat alſo of the other, which pertaineth onely to the ciuill and outward righteouſneſſe of manners. For the courſe of this matter ſeemeth to be ſeuered from the ſpirituall doctrine of Faith, which I tooke in hand to entreat of: yet the proceeding ſhall ſhew that I doe rightfully ioyne them together, yea that I am of neceſſitie compelled to doe it: ſpecially ſith on the one ſide, madde and barbarous men doe furiouſly goe about to ouerthrow this order ſtabliſhed by GOD: and on the other ſide the flatterers of Princes, aduancing their power without meaſure, ſticke not to ſet it againſt the Empire of God himſelfe. Vnleſſe both theſe miſchiefes bee met withall, the pureneſſe of Faith ſhall bee loſt. Beſide that it is not ſinally for our behoofe, to know how louingly God hath in this behalfe prouided for mankinde, that there may flouriſh in vs a greater deſire of godlineſſe to witneſſe our thankfulneſſe. Firſt, ere we enter into the thing it ſelfe, wee muſt hold faſt that diſtinction which wee haue aboue ſet, (leaſt as it commonly happeneth to many) wee vnwiſely mingle theſe two things together, which haue altogether diuerſe conſideration. For when they heare that libertie is promiſed by the Goſpell, which acknowledgeth among men no King and no Magiſtrate, but hath regard to Chriſt alone: they thinke that they can take no fruit of their libertie, ſo long as they ſee any power to haue preeminence ouer them. Therefore they thinke that nothing ſhall bee ſafe, vnleſſe the whole world be reformed into a new faſhion: where may neither be Iudgements, nor Lawes, nor Magiſtrates, nor any ſuch thing which they thinke to withſtand their libertie. But whoſoeuer can put difference betweene the bodie and the Soule, betweene this preſent and tranſitorie life, and that life to come and eternall: hee ſhall not hardly vnderſtand that the ſpirituall kingdome of Chriſt, and the ciuill gouernment are things farre a ſunder. Sith therefore that is a Iewiſh vanitie, to ſeeke and incloſe the kingdome of Chriſt vnder the elements of the world: let vs rather thinking, as the Scripture plainly teacheth, that it is a ſpirituall fruit, which is gathered of the benefit of Chriſt, remember to keepe within the bonds thereof this whole libertie which is promiſed and offered vs in him. For what is the cauſe why the ſame Apoſtle which biddeth vs to ſtand, and not to bee made ſubiect to the yoke of bondage, in another place forbiddeth bond-ſeruants to be carefull of their ſtate: but becauſe ſpirituall libertie may very well agree with ciuill bondage? In which ſenſe alſo theſe his ſayings are to bee taken: In the kingdome of God there is no Iew, nor Grecian, no male, nor female, no bondman, nor freeman. Againe, There is no Iew, nor Grecian, Circumciſion, Vncircumciſion, Barbarian, Scythian, Bondman, Freeman: but Chriſt is all in all. Whereby he ſignifieth, that it maketh no matter in what eſtate thou be among men, nor vnder the lawes of what nation thou liueſt: foraſmuch as in theſe things conſiſteth not the kingdome of Chriſt.

Gal. 5. 1. 1. Cor. 7. 21.

Gal. 3. 28. Col. 3. 11.

The vſe of ciuill gouernment among ſt Chriſtians.

2 Yet doth not this diſtinction tend heereunto, that we ſhould thinke that the whole order of Policie is an vncleane thing, nor pertaining at all to Chriſtian men. So indeed doe the phrenticke men, that are delighted with vnbridled licentiouſneſſe, cry out and boaſt. For ſith wee be dead by Chriſt to the elements of the world, and being remooued into the kingdome of God doe ſit among the heauenly ones: they thinke that it is vnworthy for vs, and farre beneath our excellence, to bee occupied with theſe prophane and vncleane cares that are buſied about affaires not pertaining to a Chriſtian man. To what purpoſe (ſay they) are lawes without iudgements and iudgement ſeates? But what hath a Chriſtian man to doe with iudgements themſelues? yea if it be not lawfull to kill, whereto ſerue lawes and iudgements among vs?

But

But as wee haue euen now giuen warning, that this kinde of gouernment is ſeuerall from that ſpirituall and inward kingdome of Chriſt: ſo is it alſo to be knowen that they nothing diſagree together. For the Ciuill gouernment doth now begin in vs vpon earth certaine beginnings of the heauenly kingdome, and in this mortall and vaniſhing life, doth as it were enter vpon an immortall and incorruptible bleſſednesſe: but the intent of his ſpirituall gouernment is, ſo long as wee ſhall liue among men, to cheriſh and maintaine the outward worſhipping of God, to defend the ſound doctrine of Godlineſſe and the ſtate of the Church, to frame our life to the fellowſhip of men, to faſhion our manners to ciuill righteouſneſſe, to procure vs into friendſhip one with another, to nouriſh common peace and quietneſſe: all which I grant to be ſuperfluous, if the kingdome of God, ſuch as it is now among vs doe deſtroy this preſent life. But if the will of God be ſo, that we while we long toward the heauenly countrey, ſhould be wayfairing from home vpon the earth: and ſith the vſe of ſuch wayfairing needeth ſuch helpes: they which take them from man, doe take from him his very nature of man. For whereas they alleadge that there is ſo great perfection in the Church of God, that her owne moderate gouernment ſufficeth it for a law: they themſelues doe fooliſhly imagine that perfection which can neuer bee found in the common fellowſhip of men. For ſith of naughtie men the pride is ſo great, and the wickedneſſe ſo obſtinate, as cannot be reſtrained with great ſharpneſſe of lawes: what thinke wee that they will doe, if they ſee vnpuniſhed libertie lie open to their lewdneſſe, which cannot euen with force be ſufficiently compelled not to doe euill.

Religion by ciuill policie maintained.

3 But of the order of Policie, there ſhall be another fitter place to entreat. Now our meaning is to haue this onely vnderſtanded, that to thinke to driue it away, is outragious barbarouſneſſe, the vſe whereof is no leſſe among men, than of bread, water, the ſunne, and aire, but the dignitie much more excellent. For it tendeth not only heereunto (which is the onely commoditie of all thoſe things) that men may breath, eate, drinke and bee cheriſhed (although indeede it comprehendeth all theſe things, while it maketh that they liue together) yet I ſay, it tendeth not heereunto onely: but alſo that idolatrie, ſacriledges againſt the name of God, blaſphemies againſt his truth, and other offences of religion may not riſe vp and be ſcattered among the people, that common quiet be not troubled, that euery man may keepe his owne ſafe and vnappaired, that men may vſe their affaires together without hurt, that honeſtie and modeſtie be kept among them: finally that among Chriſtians may bee a common ſhew of religion, and among men may be man-like ciuilitie. Neither let any man be mooued, for that I doe now referre the care of ſtabliſhing of religion to the Policie of men, which I ſeemed before to haue ſet without the iudgement of men. For I doe no more heere, than I did before, giue men leaue after their owne will to make lawes concerning religion and the worſhipping of God, when I allow the ordinance of Policie, which endeuoureth hereunto, that the true religion which is contained in the law of GOD, be not openly and with publicke ſacriledges freely broken and defiled. But the Readers being holden by the very plainneſſe of order, ſhall better vnderſtand what is to bee thought of the whole kinde of Ciuill gouernment, if we ſeuerally entreat of the parts thereof. There be three parts of it: the Magiſtrate which is the gouernour and keeper of the lawes: the Lawes according to which he gouerneth: the People, which are gouerned by the lawes, and obey the Magiſtrate. Therefore let vs firſt conſider of the office of the Magiſtrate, whether it be a lawfull vocation and allowed of God, what maner of office he hath, and how great is his power, then with what lawes a Chriſtian ciuill ſtate is to be ordered: then laſt of all, what profit of the lawes commeth to the people, what reuerence is due to the Magiſtrate.

The magiſtrates office allowed of God. Exod. 22. 8. Pſal. 82. 1. & 6.

4 The Lord hath not onely teſtified that the office of Magiſtrates is allowed and acceptable to him, but alſo ſetting out the dignitie thereof with moſt honourable titles, hee hath maruellouſly commended it vnto vs. That I may rehearſe a few of them. Whereas whoſoeuer bee in place of Magiſtrates are named Gods, let no man thinke that in that naming is ſmall importance. For thereby is ſignified that they haue commandement from God, that they are furniſhed with the authoritie of God, doe altogether beare the perſon of God, whoſe ſtead they doe after a certaine manner

Iohn 10.35. supply. This is not my cauillation, but the expoſition of Chriſt. If the Scripture (ſaith he) called them Gods to whom the word of God was giuen: What is this elſe, but that God hath committed his buſineſſe to them, that they ſhould ſerue in his office, and (as Moſes and Ioſaphat ſaid to their Iudges whom they appointed in euery ſeuerall Citie of Iuda) that they ſhould ſit in iudgement, not for man but for God? To the ſame purpoſe maketh this that the wiſedome of God affirmeth by the mouth of Salomon, that it is his worke, that Kings raigne, and counſellers decree righteous things, that Princes beare principalitie, and all the Iudges of the earth execute iudgement. For this is all one in effect as if it had beene ſaid, that it commeth not to paſſe by the peruerſneſſe of men, that the gouernment of all things in earth is in the hand of Kings and other Rulers, but by the prouidence and holy ordinance of God, to whom it ſo ſeemed good to order the matters of men: for as much as hee is both preſent and Preſident among them in making of lawes and in executing vprightneſſe of iudgements. Which Paul alſo plainely teacheth, when he reckoneth gouernments among the gifts of God, which being diuerſly diſtributed according to the diuerſitie of grace, ought to be emploied of the ſeruants of Chriſt to the edification of the Church. For although hee there properly ſpeaketh of a Councell of graue men, which in the primitiue Church were appointed that they ſhould haue the rule of ordering the publik diſcipline (which office in the Epiſtle to the Corinthians he calleth Gouernment) yet for as much as we ſee that the end of ciuill power commeth to the ſame point, it is no doubt but that hee commendeth vnto vs all kinde of iuſt gouernment. But hee ſpeaketh more plainely, where he purpoſely maketh a full diſcourſe of that matter. For both he ſheweth that power is the ordinance of God, and that there are no powers, but they are ordained of God: and that the Princes themſelues are the miniſters of God, to the well doers vnto praiſe: to the euill, reuengers vnto wrath. Hereunto may be added alſo the examples of holy men: of which ſome haue poſſeſſed kingdomes, as Dauid, Ioſias, Ezechias: otherſome, Lordſhips, as Ioſeph and Daniel: otherſome, Ciuill gouernments in a free people, as Moſes, Ioſue, and the Iudges: whoſe offices the Lord hath declared that he alloweth. Wherefore none ought now to doubt that the ciuill power is a vocation not onely holy and lawfull before God, but alſo the moſt holy, and the moſt honeſt of all other in the whole life of men.

The office of the ciuill magiſtrate no leſſe allowable in the ſight of God & needfull for men vnder Chriſt than it was before.

5 They which couet to bring in a ſtate without Rulers, take exception and ſay that although in olde time there were Kings and Iudges ouer the rude people, yet at this day that ſeruile kinde of gouerning agreeth not with the perfection which Chriſt hath brought with his Goſpell. Wherein they bewray not onely their ignorance, but alſo their diueliſh pride, while they take vpon themſelues perfection, of which not ſo much as the hundreth part is ſeene in them. But what manner of men ſoeuer they bee, it is eaſie to confute it: becauſe where Dauid exhorteth all Kings and Rulers to kiſſe the Sonne of God, hee doth not bid them, giuing ouer their authoritie, to take themſelues to a priuate life, but to ſubmit the power that they beare to Chriſt, that hee alone may haue preeminence aboue all. Likewiſe Eſay, when hee promiſeth that Kings ſhall be foſter-fathers of the Church, and Queenes ſhall bee nourſes, hee doth not depoſe them from their honour: but rather doth by an honorable title make them defenders to the godly worſhippers of God. For, that Prophecie pertaineth to the comming of Chriſt. I doe wittingly paſſe ouer many teſtimonies which doe each where offer themſelues, and eſpecially in the Pſalmes wherein all Gouernours haue their right maintained. But moſt cleare of all is the place of Paul, where admoniſhing Timothie that in the common aſſembly, praiers muſt be made for Kings, hee by and by addeth a reaſon, That wee may vnder them lead a quiet life with all godlineſſe and honeſtie: in which words he committeth the ſtate of the Church to their defence and ſaue-garding.

The benefit which Magiſtrates themſelues may take by conſidering that they are appointed miniſters of the righteouſneſſe of God.*

*6 Which conſideration ought continually to buſie the Magiſtrates themſelues, for as much as it may put a great ſpurre to them whereby they may bee pricked forward to their dutie, and bring them a ſingular comfort whereby they may mitigate the hardnes of their office, which truly are both many and great. For with how great an endeuor of vprightnes, wiſedom, mildnes, continency, & innocency, ought they to charge themſelues, themselues, which know themselues to be appointed ministers of the righteousnesse of God? By what assiance shall they admit vniustice to their iudgement seate, which they heare to be the throne of the liuing God? By what boldnesse shall they pronounce a wrongfull sentence with that mouth, which they vnderstand to be appointed an instrument for the truth of God? With what conscience shall they subscribe to wicked decrees with the hand which they know to be ordained to write the actes of God? In a summe, if they remember that they bee the vicegerents of God, they must watch with all care, earnestnesse, and diligence, that they may represent in themselues vnto men a certaine image of the prouidence, preseruation, goodnes, good will, and righteousnesse of God. And they must continually set this before their eies, that if all they be accursed, that doe execute in deceit the worke of the vengeance of God, they are much more grieuously accursed, that vse themselues deceitfully in a rightfull vocation. Therefore when Moses and Iosaphat minded to exhort their Iudges to their dutie, they had nothing more effectuall to moue their minds withall, than that which we haue before rehearsed, Looke what yee doe. For yee sit in iudgement not for man but for God: namely, he which is neere to you in the cause of iudgement. Now therefore let the feare of the Lord be vpon you. Looke and be diligent: because there is no peruersenesse with the Lord our God. And in another place it is said, God stood in the assemblie of the Gods, and sitteth iudge in the middest of the gods, that they may be encouraged to their duetie when they heare that they be the deputies of God, to whom they must one day yeeld account of the gouernement of their charge. And worthily this admonition ought to be of great force with them. For if they make any default, they are not onely wrong doers to men whom they wickedly vexe, but also slanderers to God himselfe, whose holie iudgements they defile. Againe they haue also whereupon they may singularly comfort themselues, when they consider with themselues that they are not busied in prophane affaires, and such as are not fit for the seruant of God, but in a most holie office, namely forasmuch as they are the deputies of God.

7 As for them that are not moued with so many testimonies of Scripture from being bold to raile at this holie ministerie, as a thing disagreeing with Christian religion and godlinesse: what doe they else but raile at God himselfe, the dishonour of whom cannot but be ioyned with the reproch of his minister? And verily they doe not refuse the Magistrates, but doe cast away God, that he should not raigne ouer them. For if the Lord said this truely of the people of Israell: because they had refused the gouernment of Samuel: why shall it be lesse truely said at this day of them that giue themselues leaue to rage against all gouernments ordained of God? But sith the Lord said to the Disciples, that the kings of nations beare rule ouer them, but that among them it is not so, where he that is the first must be made the least: by this saying it is forbidden to all Christians that they should not take kingdomes or gouernment vpon them. O handsome expositors. There rose a strife among the Disciples which of them excelled other: the Lord, to suppresse this vaine ambition, taught them that their ministerie is not like vnto kingdomes, in which one man hath preeminence aboue the rest. I beseech you, what doth this comparison make to the dishonour of kingly dignitie? yea what doth it proue at all, but that the ministerie of an Apostle is not the office of a king? Moreouer although among the Magistrates themselues there be diuers formes, yet there is no difference in this behalfe but that we ought to take them all for the ordinances of God. For Paul also doth comprehend them altogether, when he saith, that there is no power but of God: and that which best liked him of all, is commended with notable testimonie aboue the other, namely the power of one: which because it bringeth with it a common bondage of all (except that one man to whose will it maketh all things subiect) in old time could lesse be allowed of noble and the excellent sort of natures. But the Scripture to meete with their vniust iudgements, expresly by name: affirmeth, that it is the prouidence of Gods wisedome that Kings doe raigne, and peculiarly commandeth the King to be honored.

Reuilers of Magistrates, are railers at God: the rule of kings not taken away because the Apostles were by Christ forbidden to rule as kings.

lawfull to consult of the framing of any common weale. And also the same could not be simply determined without rashnesse, forasmuch as a great part of the order of this question consisteth in circumstances. And if thou compare also the states themselues together without circumstances, it shall not be easie to discerne, which of them ouerweigheth the other in profitablenesse, they match so equally together. There is an easie way to fall from kingdome into tyranny: but not much harder is it to fall from the rule of the chiefest men to the faction of a few: but most easie of all from the peoples gouernment, to sedition. Truely if those three formes of gouernments which the Philosophers set out, to be considered in themselues I will not deny that either the gouernment of the chiefest men, or a state tempered of it and common gouernment far excelleth all other, not of it selfe, but because it most seldome chanceth that kings so temper themselues that their will neuer swarueth from that which is iust and right: againe, that they be furnished with so great sharpnesse of iudgement and wisdome that euery one of them seeth so much as is sufficient. Therefore the fault or default of men maketh, that it is safer and more tolerable that many should haue the gouernment, that they may mutually one helpe another, one teach and admonish another, and if any aduance himselfe higher than is meete, there may be ouerseers and masters to restraine his wilfulnesse. This both hath alway beene approoued by experience, and the Lord also hath confirmed it with his authority, when he ordained among the Israelites a gouernement of the best men very neere vnto common gouernment, at such time as he minded to haue them in best estate, till he brought foorth an image of Christ in Dauid. And as I willingly grant that no kinde of gouernment is more blessed than this, where liberty is framed to such moderation as it ought to be, and is orderly stablished to continuance: so I count them also most blessed, that may enioy this estate: and if they stoutly and constantly trauell in preseruing and retaining it, I grant that they doe nothing against their duty. Yea and the magistrates ought with most great diligence to bend themselues heereunto, that they suffer not the liberty of the people, of which they are appointed gouernours, to be in any part minished, much lesse to be dissolued: if they be negligent and litle carefull therein, they are false Faith-breakers in their office, and betrayers of their Country. But if they would bring this kinde to themselues, to whom the Lord hath appointed another forme of gouernment, so that thereby they be moued to desire a change, the very thinking thereof shall not onely be fooliſh and superfluous, but also hurtful. But as if thou bend not thine eies onely to one City, but looke about or behold the whole world together, or at least spread abroad thy sight into farther distances of countries, without doubt thou shalt finde that this is not vnprofitably appointed by the prouidence of God, that diuerse Countries should be ruled by diuerse kindes of gouernement. For the elementes hange together but by an vnequall temperature, so Countries also are with their certaine inequality very well kept in order. Howbeit all these thinges also are spoken in vaine to them whom the will of the Lord shall satisfie. For if it be his pleasure to set Kings ouer kingdomes, Senates, or Officers ouer Free-cities, whomsoeuer hee maketh Rulers in the places where wee are conuersant, it is our dutie to shew our selues yeelding and obedient vnto them.

The office of the magistrat reaching vnto both the tables of the law.

9 Now the office of Magistrates is in this place to be declared by the way, of what sort it is described by the word of God, and in what things it consisteth. If the Scripture did not teach, that it extendeth to both the tables of the Law, we might learne it out of the prophane writers. For none hath intreated of the duty of Magistrates, of making of laws and of publicke weale, that hath not begun at religion and the worshipping of God. And so haue they all confessed, that no policy can be happily framed, vnlesse the first care be of godlinesse, and that those lawes be preposterous which neglecting the right of God, doe prouide onely for men. Sith therefore withall the Philosophers religion hath the first place, and sith the same hath alway beene obserued by the vniuersall consent of all Nations, let Christian Princes and Magistrates be ashamed of their slothfulnesse, if they endeuour not themselues to this care. And we haue already shewed, that this duty is specially enioyned them of God: as it is meete, that they should imploy their trauell to defend and maintaine his honour, whose Vicegerentes rents they be, and by whose benefit they gouerne. For this cause also chiefly are the holy Kings praised in Scripture, for that they restored the worship of God being corrupted or ouerthrowen, or tooke care of religion, that it might florish pure and safe vnder them. But contrariwise the holie historie reckoneth states without gouernours, among faults, saying, that there was no King in Israel, and that therefore euerie man did what pleased himselfe. Whereby their follie is confuted, which would haue them, neglecting the care of God, onely to applie themselues to be iudges of law among men. As though God appointed gouernours in his name to decide controuersies, and omitted that which was of much weightier importance, that he himselfe should be worshipped according to the prescribed rule of his lawe. But a desire to innouate all things without punishment mooueth troublesome men to this point, that they wish all reuengers of the breach of peace to be taken away. As for so much as perteineth to the second table, Ieremie warneth kings, to doe iudgement and righteousnesse, to deliuer the forceably oppressed from the hand of the false accuser, not to greeue the stranger and widow, not to doe wrong, and not to shed innocent bloud. To the same purpose maketh the exhortation which is read in the 82. Psalme, that they should render right to the poore and needie, acquite the poore and needie, deliuer the poore and needie from the hand of the oppressor. And Moses giueth charge to the Princes whom he had sent in his stead: let them heare the cause of their brethren, and iudge betweene a man and his brother and a stranger, and not know faces in iudgement, let them heare as well the little as the great, and be not afraid of any man: because it is the iudgement of God. But I speake not of these things: that kings should not get to themselues multitudes of horses, nor cast their mindes to couetousnesse, nor to be lifted vp aboue their brethren: that they may be continually busied in studying vpon the lawe of the Lord all the daies of their life: that Iudges swarue not to the one side, nor receiue gifts: because in declaring heere the office of Magistrates, my purpose is not so much to instruct the Magistrates themselues, as to teach other what Magistrates be, and to what end they are set of God. Wee see therefore that they be ordained, defenders and reuengers of innocencie, honestie, and quietnesse, whose onely endeuour should be to prouide for the common safetie and peace of all men. Of which vertues Dauid professeth that he will be an examplar, when he shall be aduanced to the royall seate: that is, that he will not consent to any euill doings, but abhorre wicked men, slanderers, and proud men, and get to himselfe from each where honest and faithfull men. But sith they cannot performe this, vnlesse they defend good men from the wrongs of the euill, let them help the good with succour and defence, let them also bee armed with power whereby they may seuerally suppresse open euill doers and wicked men, by whose lewdnesse the common quiet is troubled or vexed. For wee throughly finde this by experience which Solon said, that commonweales consist of reward and punishment, and that when those be taken away, the whole discipline of cities faileth and is dissolued. For the care of equitie and iustice waxeth cold in the minds of many vnlesse there be due honour readie for vertue: neither can the wilfulnesse of wicked men be restrained but by seueritie and chastisement of paines. And these two parts the Prophet comprehendeth, when he biddeth kings and other gouernours to doe iudgement and righteousnesse. Righteousnesse is, to take into charge of tuition, to imbrace, to defend, to reuenge, to deliuer the innocent. Iudgement is, to withstand the boldnesse of wicked men, to represse their violence, to punish their offences.

If by the lawe of God all Christians are forbidden to kill, and the Prophet prophecieth of the holie mount of God, that is, the Church, that in it they shall not afflict nor hurt: how many magistrates be together both godly and bloud shedders? But if wee vnderstand, that the Magistrate in executing of punishments doth nothing of himselfe, but executeth the very selfe iudgements of God, we shall be nothing combred with this doubt. The law of the Lord forbiddeth to kill: least manslaughter should be vnpunished, the lawmaker himselfe giueth to the ministers the sword in their hand, which they should drawe foorth against all man slayers. To afflict and to hurt, is not the doing of the godly: but this is not to hurt, not to afflict, by the Lords commandement to reuenge the afflictions of the godly. I would to God that this were alway present before our mindes, that nothing is heere done by the rashnesse of man, but all things by the authority of God that commandeth, which going before vs, we neuer swarue out of the right way. Vnlesse perhapes there be a bridle put vpon the righteousnesse of God, that it may not punish wicked doings. But if it be not lawfull to appoint any law to it, why

Rom. 13.4. shall we cauill against the ministers of it? They beare not the sword in vaine, saith Paul: for they be the ministers of God to wrath, reuengers to euill doers. Therefore if Princes and other Rulers know that nothing shall be more acceptable to God than their obedience, let them apply this ministery, if they desire to shew their godlinesse, righteousnesse, and vncorruptnesse allowable to God. With this affection was Moses led,
Exod. 2. 12. Act. 7. 28. Exod. 32. 27. 1. King. 15. when knowing himselfe appointed by the power of the Lord to be the deliuerer of his people, he laid his hands vpon the Ægyptian. Whereupon he also rehearseth this among the vertues of a king, to slay the wicked of the land, that all workers of wickednesse may be driuen out of the City of God. To which purpose also pertaineth the praise that is giuen to Salomon. Thou hast loued righteousnesse and hast hated wickednesse. How doth that milde and gentle nature of Moses burne out into so great cruelty, that being sprinkled and embrued with the blood of his breathren, he runneth through out the Campe to new slaughters? How doth Dauid, a man of so great gentlenesse in all his life, among his last breathings make that bloody testament, that his sonne should not bring the hoare haire of Ioab and Semi in peace to the graue? But they both when they executed the vengeance committed to them of God, so sanctified with cruell dealing their hands which they had defiled with

Againe, he that iustifieth the wicked, and he that condemneth the righteous, both are abomination

Againe, Who so saith to the wicked man, thou art righteous, him peoples and nations do curse. Now if their true righteousnesse be, with drawen sword to pursue guilty and wicked men: let them put vp their sword and hold their hands pure from blood, while in the meane time desperate men do raigne with murders and slaughters: then they shall make themselues guilty of most great wickednesse, so much lesse shall they get thereby the praise of godlinesse and righteousnesse. Onely let there bee no precise and cruell rigorousnesse, and that iudgement seat which may worthily bee called the rocke of accused men. For I am not he that either fauour extreame cruelty, or doe thinke that righteous iudgement can be pronounced, but while clemency the best and surest Counseller of Kings, as Salomon affirmeth, the preseruer of the kings throne is assistant, which a certaine man in old time truly said to be the principall gift of Princes. Yet a magistrate must take heed to both, that he doe neither with rigorousnesse of minde, wound rather than heale, or by superstitious affection of clemency fall into a most cruell gentlenesse, if with soft and loose tenderneste he be dissolute to the destruction of many men. For this was in old time not without cause commonly spoken vnder the Empire of Nerua, that it is indeed euill to liue vnder a Prince vnder whom nothing is lawfull, but much worse vnder whom all things, are lawfull.

The lawfulnes of warres iustly taken in hand.

11 But sith sometime kings and peoples must of necessity take sword in hand to execute such publike vengance, by this reason we may also iudge that the warres are lawfull which are so taken in hand. For if there be power deliuered them, wherby they may maintaine quiet to their dominion, whereby they may keepe downe the seditious stirres of vnquiet men, whereby they may helpe the forceably oppressed, whereby they may punish euill doings: can they at fitter seasons vtter it, than to suppresse his rage

rage which troubleth both priuately the reſt of euery man, and the common quiet of all men, which ſeditiouſly maketh vprores, which committeth violent oppreſſions and haynous euill doings? If they ought to be preſeruers and defenders of the lawes, they muſt alſo ouerthrow the enterpriſes of all them by whoſe wicked doing the diſcipline of lawes is corrupted. Yea if they worthily puniſh thoſe theeues whoſe iniuries haue extended only to a few: ſhal they ſuffer a whole country to be without puniſhment vexed and waſted with robberies? For it maketh no difference whether he be a king or one of the baſeſt of the commonalty, that inuadeth anothers country into which he hath no right, and ſpoileth it like an enemie: all are a like to be taken and puniſhed for robbers. This therefore both naturall equity, and the rule of duty teacheth that Princes are armed not onely to reſtraine priuate duties with iudiciall puniſhments, but alſo to defend with war the dominions committed to their charge, if at any time they be enimy-like aſſailed. And ſuch wars the holy Ghoſt by many teſtimonies of ſcripture declareth to be lawfull.

Warre not forbidden Chriſtians in the Goſpell.

12 If it be obiected againſt me, that in the New Teſtament is neither witneſſe nor example which teacheth that war is a thing lawfull for Chriſtians: firſt I anſwer, that the ſame rule of making war which was in old time remaineth alſo at this day, and that on the contrary ſide there is no cauſe that may debar magiſtrates from defending of their ſubiects. Secondly, that an expreſſe declaration of theſe matters is not to be ſought in the writings of the Apoſtles, where there purpoſe is not to frame a ciuill ſtate but to ſtabliſh the ſpirituall kingdome of Chriſt. Laſt of all I ſay that in them alſo is ſhewed by the way, that Chriſt hath by his comming changed nothing in this behalfe. For if Chriſtian doctrine (that I may ſpeake in Auguſtines owne words) condemned all warres, this ſhould rather haue beene ſaid to ſouldiers when they asked counſell of ſaluation, that they ſhould caſt away their weapons, and vtterly withdraw themſelues from the war. But it was ſaid to them: ſtrike no man, do no man wrong, let your wages ſuffice you. Whom he taught that their wages ought to ſuffice them, he did verily not forbid them to be warriers. But all Magiſtrates ought heere to take great heed, that they nothing at all follow their owne deſires: but rather, if they muſt puniſh let them not be borne away with a headlong angrineſſe, let them not be violently carried with hatred, let them not broile with vnappeaſable rigor, yea let them (as Auguſtine ſaith) pity common nature in him in whom they puniſh his priuate fault. Or if they muſt put on armour againſt the enemy, that is, the armed robber, let them not lightly ſeeke occaſion thereof, nor take it being offered vnleſſe they be driuen to it by extreame neceſſity. For if we ought to performe much more than that heathen man required, which would haue war to ſeeme a ſeeking of peace: truely we ought firſt to attempe all things ere we ought to trie the matter by war. Finally, in both kinds let them not ſuffer themſelues to be caried with any priuate affection, but be led onely with common feeling. Otherwiſe they doe very ill abuſe their power, which is giuen them, not for their owne commodity, but for others benefit and miniſtery. Moreouer of the ſame rightfull rule of making of war hangeth the order both of Gariſons, and Leagues, and other ciuill fortifications. Garriſons I call thoſe that are placed in towns to defend the borders of the Countrie: Leagues, which are made with Princes adioyning for this couenant that if any trouble happen in their lands they may mutually helpe them, and ioyne their forces in common together to ſuppreſſe the common enemies of mankinde: Ciuill fortification, whoſe vſe is in the art of war.

The lawfulneſſe of tributes and taxes which the dutie of Princes in that reſpect.

13 This alſo I will laſt of all adde, that tributes and taxes are the lawfull reuenues of Princes, which they may chiefely employ to ſuſtaine the common charges of their office: which yet they may likewiſe vſe to their priuate royalty which is after a certain maner conioyned with honour of the princely ſtate that they beare. As we ſee that Dauid, Ezechias, Ioſias, Ioſophat, and other holy Kings, and Ioſeph alſo and Daniel, according to the ſtate of the perſon that they did beare, were without offence of godlineſſe ſumptuous of the common charge, and we read in Ezechiel that there was a very large portion of land aſſigned to the Kings. Where although he paint out the ſpirituall kingdome of Chriſt, yet he fetcheth the examplar of his ſimilitude from the lawfull kingdome of men. But yet ſo that Princes againe on their behalfes ſhould remember, that their their treasure chambers are not so much their owne priuate cofers, as the treasuries of the whole people (for so Paul testifieth) which they may not without manifest wrong prodigally waste or spoile: or rather that it is the very bloud of the people, which not to spare, is most cruell vnnaturalnesse: and let them thinke, that their impositions, and subsidies, and other kinds of tributes, are nothing but the supports of publicke necessitie, wherewith to wearie the poore communaltie without cause is tyrannicall extortion. These things doe not encourage Princes to wastfull expence and riot, (as verily there is no neede to adde a firebrand to their lusts that are of themselues too much alreadie kindled) but sith it much behooueth that they should with pure conscience before God be bold to doe all that they are bould to doe, least with wicked bouldnesse they come into the despising of God, they must be taught how much is lawfull for them. Neither is this doctrine superfluous for priuate men, that they should not rashly and stubbornely giue themselues leaue to grudge at any expences of Princes, although they exceede common and ciuill measure.

Rom. 13.6.

14 Next to the Magistrate in ciuill states are lawes, the most strong sinewes of common wealthes, or (as Cicero calleth them according to Plato) the soules, without which the Magistrate can not stand, as they againe without the Magistrate haue no liuely force. Therefore nothing could be more truely said, than that the lawe is a dumbe Magistrate, and that the Magistrate is a liuing law. But whereas I promised to speake, with what lawes a Christian ciuill state ought to be ordered, there is no cause why any man should looke for a long discourse of the best kinde of lawes, which both should be infinite, and pertained not to this present purpose and place: yet in a few words, and as it were by the way, I will touch what lawes it may vse godlily before God, and be rightly gouerned by them among men. Which selfe thing I had rather to haue vtterly passed ouer with silence, if I did not vnderstand that many doe herein perilously erre. For there be some that denie that a common weale is well ordered, which neglecting the ciuill lawes of Moses, is gouerned by the common lawes of nations. How dangerous and troublesome this sentence is, let other men consider, it shall be enough for me to haue shewed that it is false and foolish. That common diuision is to be kept, which diuideth the whole law of God published into morall, ceremoniall, and iudiciall lawes: and all the parts are to be seuerally considered, that wee may know what of them pertaineth to vs, and what not. Neither in the meane time let any man be combred with this doubt, that iudicials and ceremonials also pertaine to the morall lawes. For although the old writers which haue taught this diuision, were not ignorant that these two later parts had their vse about manners, yet because they might be changed and abrogate, the morals remaining safe they did not call them morals. They called that first part peculiarly by that name, without which cannot stand the true holinesse of manners, and the vnchangeable rule of liuing rightlie.

A false and foolish opinion, that a state cannot be well ordred by the common lawes of nations except the ciuill lawes of Moses be obserued.

15 Therefore the morall law (that I may first begin thereat) sith it is contained in two chiefe points, of which the one commandeth simplie to worship God with pure faith and godlinesse, and the other to embrace men with vnfaigned loue, is the true and eternall rule of righteousnesse prescribed to the men of all ages and times that will be willing to frame their life to the will of God. For this is his eternall and vnchangeable will, that he himselfe should be worshipped of vs all, and that we should mutually loue one another. The ceremoniall law was the schooling of the Iewes, wherewith it pleased the Lord to exercise the certaine childhood of that people, till that time of fulnesse came, wherein he would to the full manifestly shew his wisdome to the earth, and deliuer the truth of those things which then were shadowed with figures. The iudiciall law giuen to them for an order of ciuill state, gaue certaine rules of equity and righteousnesse, by which they might behaue themselues harmlesly and quietly together. And as that exercise of ceremonies properly pertained indeed to the doctrine of godlinesse (namely which kept the Church of the Iewes in the worship and religion of God) yet it might be distinguished from godlinesse it selfe: so this from of iudiciall orders (although it tended to no other end, but how the selfe-same charity might best be kept which is commanded by the eternall law of God) yet had a certaine thing differing from the very commandement of louing. As therefore the Ceremonies might be abrogate, godlineſſe remaining ſafe and vndeſtroyed: ſo theſe iudiciall ordinances alſo being taken away, the perpetuall duties and commandements of charitie may continue. If this be true, verily there is libertie left to euerie nation to make ſuch lawes as they ſhall foreſee to be profitable for them: which yet muſt be framed after the perpetuall rule of charitie, that they may in deed varie in forme, but haue the ſame reaſon. For I thinke that thoſe barbarous and ſauage lawes, as were thoſe that gaue honour to theeues, that allowed common copulations, and other both much more filthie and more againſt reaſon, are not to be taken for lawes: for as much as they are not onely againſt all righteouſneſſe, but alſo againſt naturall gentleneſſe and kindneſſe of men.

The diuerſity of lawes, and the neceſſity that they ſhould be diuers, as times and places and occaſions differ.

16 This which I haue ſaid ſhall be plaine, if in all lawes we behold theſe two things as we ought, the making and the equitie of the lawe, vpon the reaſon whereof the making it ſelfe is founded and ſtayeth. Equitie, becauſe it is naturall, can be but one of all lawes: and therefore one lawe, according to the kind of matter, ought to be the propounded end to all lawes. As for making of lawes, becauſe they haue certaine circumſtances vpon which they partly hang, ſo that they tend all together to one marke of equitie, though it be diuers it maketh no matter. Now ſith it is certaine that the law of God which we call morall is nothing elſe but a teſtimonie of the naturall lawe, and of that conſcience which is engrauen of God in the minds of men, the whole rule of this equity whereof we now ſpeake is ſet foorth therein. Therefore it alone alſo muſt be both the marke and rule and end of all lawes. Whatſoeuer lawes ſhall be framed after that rule, directed to that marke, and limited in that end, there is no cauſe why we ſhould diſallow them, howſoeuer they otherwiſe differ from the Iewiſh law or one from another. The law of God forbiddeth to ſteale. What paine was appointed for theefs in the ciuill ſtate of the Iewes, is to be ſeene in Exodus. The moſt ancient lawes of other Nations puniſhed theft with recompence of double: the lawes that followed afterward, made difference betweene manifeſt theft and not manifeſt. Some proceeded to baniſhment, ſome to whipping, ſome at laſt to the puniſhment of death. Falſe witneſſe was amongſt the Iewes puniſhed with recompence of equall paine, in ſome places onely with great ſhame, in ſome places with hanging, in other ſome with the Croſſe. Manſlaughter all lawes vniuerſally doe reuenge with blood, yet with diuers kinds of death. Againſt adulterers in ſome places were ordained ſeuerer paines, in ſome places lighter. Yet we ſee how with ſuch diuerſity all tend to the ſame end. For with one mouth they altogether pronounce puniſhment againſt all the offences which haue beene condemned by the eternall law of God, as manſlaughters, theſts, adultery, falſe witneſſings: but in the maner of puniſhment they agree not. Neither is the ſame needfull, nor yet expedient. There is ſome country, which vnleſſe it ſhew rigor with horrible examples againſt manſlayers, ſhould immediately be deſtroyed with murders and robberies. There is ſometime that requireth the ſharpneſſe of paines to be increaſed. If there ariſe any trouble in a common-weale, the euils that are wont to grow thereof muſt be amended with new ordinances. In time of warre all humanity would in the noiſe of armour fall away, vnleſſe there were caſt into men an vnwoonted feare of puniſhments. In barrenneſſe, in peſtilence, vnleſſe greater ſeueritie be vſed, all things will come to ruine. Some nation is more bent to ſome certaine vice, vnleſſe it be more ſharply ſuppreſſed. How malicious and enuious ſhall he be againſt the publicke profite, that ſhall bee offended with ſuch diuerſitie which is moſt fit to hold faſt the obſeruing of the lawe of God? For, that which ſome ſay, that the lawe of God giuen by Moſes is diſhonoured, when it being abrogate, new are preferred aboue it, is moſt vaine. For neither are other preferred aboue it, when they are more allowed, not in ſimple compariſon, but in reſpect of the eſtate of the times, place, and nation: neither is that abrogate which was neuer made for vs. For the Lord gaue not the lawe by the hand of Moſes, which ſhould be publiſhed into all nations, and flouriſh euerie where: but when he had receiued the nation of the Iewes into his faith, defence, and protection, hee willed to be a lawmaker peculiarly to them, and like a wiſe lawmaker, hee had in making of his lawes a certaine ſingular conſideration of them.

Exod. 22. 1.

Deut. 19. 18.

17 Now remaineth that wee conſider that which wee haue ſet in the laſt place, what what profit of lawes, iudiciall orders, and magistrates, commeth to the common fellowship of Christians. Wherewith also is coupled another question, how much priuate men ought to yeeld to Magistrates, and how farre their obedience ought to proceede. Many thought the office of Magistrates to be superfluous among Christians, because forsooth they cannot godlily craue their aide, namely sith they are forbidden to reuenge, to sue in the lawe, and to haue any controuersie. But whereas Paul contrariwise plainly testifieth, that he is the minister of God to vs for good: we thereby vnderstand, that he is so ordained of God, that we being defended by his hand and succours against the maliciousnesse and iniuries of mischeuous men, may liue a quiet and assured life. If he be in vaine giuen vs of the Lord for defence, vnlesse it be lawfull for vs to vse such benefite: it sufficiently appeereth that he may also without vngodlinesse be called vpon and sued vnto. But heere I must haue to doe with two kinds of men. For there be many men that boile with so great rage of quarelling at the lawe, that they neuer haue quiet with themselues vnlesse they haue strife with other. And their controuersies they exercise with deadly sharpnesse of hatred, and with mad greedinesse to reuenge and hurt, and doe pursue them with vnappeasable stiffenesse euen to the very destruction of their aduersarie. In the meane time, that they may not be thought to doe any thing but rightfully, they defend such peruersnesse with colour of lawe. But though it be graunted thee to goe to law with thy brother, yet thou mayst not by and by hate him, nor be carried against him with furious desire to hurt him, nor stubbornly to pursue him.

What profit Christians receiue by lawes, iudiciall orders and magistrates.

Rom. 13. 4.

A rule according whereunto both pleintifes and defendants may vse the help of the Magistrate in a question of their right well and lawfully.

18 Let this therefore be said to such men, that the vse of lawes is lawfull, if a man doe rightly vse it. And that the right vse both for the pleintife to sue, and for the defendant to defend, as if the defendant being summoned doe appeere at an appointed day, and doth with such exception as he can, defend his cause without bitternesse, but onely with this affection to defend that which is his owne by lawe: and if the pleintife being vnworthily oppressed either in his person or his goods, doe resort to the defence of the Magistrate, make his complaint, and require that which is equitie and conscience, but farre from all greedie will to hurt or reuenge, farre from sharpnesse and hatred, farre from burning heate of contention, but rather readie to yeeld of his owne and to suffer any thing, than to be caried with an enimie like minde against his aduersarie. Contrariwise when being filled with malice of minde, corrupted with enuie, kindled with wrath, breathing out reuenge, or finally so enflamed with the heate of the contention, they giue ouer any part of charitie, the whole proceeding euen of a most iust cause cannot but be wicked. For this ought to be a determined principle to all Christians, that a controuersie though it be neuer so righteous, can neuer be rightly pursued of any man, vnlesse he beare as good will and loue to his aduersarie, as if the matter which is in the controuersie were alreadie concluded and ended by compesition. Some man will heere peraduenture say, that such moderation is so neuer vsed in going to law, that it should be like a miracle, if any such were found. I graunt in deede, as the manners of these times be, that there is seldome seene an example of a good contender in law, yet the thing it selfe being defiled with addition of no euill, ceaseth not to be good and pure. But when we heare that the helpe of the Magistrate is a holy gift of God: we must so much the more diligently take heed, that it be not defiled by our fault.

All contending at Law not precisely to be condemned.
Act. 22. 1. and 24. 12. and 25. 10. Numb. 15. 18. Matt. 5. 19. Deut. 22. 35. Rom. 12. 19.

10 As for them that precisely condemne all contendings at law, let them vnderstand that they doe therewithall despise the holy ordinance of God, and a gift of that kinde of gifts which may be cleane to the clane: vnlesse peraduenture they will accuse Paul of wicked doing, which did both put away from himselfe the slanders of his accusers with declaring also their deceit and maliciousnesse, and in iudgement claimed for himselfe the prerogatiue of the City of Rome, and when neede was he appealed from an vnrighteous gouernour to the Emperours iudgement seat. Neither withstandeth it, that all Christians are forbidden to desire reuenge, which we also doe driue far away from Christian iudgement seates. For, if the contention be about a common case, he goeth not the right way that doth not with innocent simplicity, commit his cause to the Iudge as to a common defender, thinking nothing lesse than to render mutuall recompence compence of euill, which is the affection of reuenge: or if any matter of life and death, or any great criminall action bee commenced, wee require that the accuser be such a one, as commeth into the Court being taken with no boiling heate of reuenge, and touched with no displeasure of priuate iniurie, but onely hauing in minde to withstand the enterprises of a mischieuous man, that they may not hurt the common weale. But if thou take away a reuenging minde, there is no offence done against that commandement whereby reuenge is forbidden to Christians. But they are not only forbidden to desire reuenge, but they are also commanded to waite for the hand of the Lord, which promiseth that hee will bee a present reuenger for the oppressed and afflicted: but they doe preuent all reuenge of the heauenly defendor, which require helpe at the Magistrates hand either for themselues or other. Not so. For wee must thinke that the Magistrates reuenge is not the reuenge of man, but of God, which (as Paul saith) hee extendeth and exerciseth by the ministerie of man for our good. Rom. 13 4.

20 And no more doe we disagree with the words of Christ, by which he forbiddeth to resist euill, and commandeth to turne the right cheeke to him that hath giuen a blow on the left, and to suffer him to take away thy cloake that taketh away thy coate, Hee willeth indeed there that the mindes of his should so much abhorre from desire of recompensing like for like, that they should sooner suffer double iniurie to be done to themselues, than to desire to reacquite it: from which patience neither doe wee also lead them away. For Christians truely ought to be a kinde of men made to beare reproches and iniuries, open to the malice, deceits, and mockeages, of naughtie men: and not that onely but also they must bee bearers of all these euils, that is to say, so framed with all their hearts, that hauing receiued one displeasure they make themselues ready for another, promising to themselues, nothing in their whole life but the bearing of a continuall crosse. In the meane time also they must doe good to them that do them wrong, and wish well to those that curse them, and (which is their onely victorie) striue to ouercome euill with good. Being so minded they will not seeke eye for eye, tooth for tooth, as the Pharisees taught their Disciples to desire reuenge, but (as we are taught of Christ) they will so suffer their bodie to be mangled, and their goods to bee maliciously taken from them, that they will forgiue, and of their owne accord pardon those euils so soone as they are done to them. Yet this euennesse and moderation of mindes shall not withstand, but that the friendship toward their enemies remaining safe they may vse the helpe of the Magistrate to the preseruing of their goods, or for zeale of publicke commoditie may sue a guiltie and pestilent man to be punished, whom they know that hee cannot bee amended but by death. For Augustine truely expoundeth that all these commandements tend to this end, that a righteous and godly man should bee readie to beare patiently the malice of them whom hee seeketh to haue made good men, that rather the number of the good may increase, not that hee should with like malice adde himselfe also to the number of the euill: then, that they more pertaine to the preparation of the heart, which is inwardly, than to the worke which is done openly: that in secret may be kept patience of minde with good will, but openly that may be done which we see may bee profitable to them to whom wee ought to beare good will.

The patience which Christians are inioyned to vse in no let but that they may also vse the Magistrate against the iniuries of vniust men. Matth. 5. 39.

Epist. 5. ad Marcel.

21 But this which is wont to bee obiected, that contendings in law are altogether condemned of Paul, is also false: It may easily bee perceiued by his words, that there was an innumerable rage of striuing at law in the Church of the Corinthians: so farre foorth that they did make the Gospell of Christ and the whole religion which they professed, open to the cauillations and euill speakings of the wicked. This is the first thing that Paul blameth in them, that by their intemperance of contentions, they brought the Gospell in slaunder among the vnbeleeuers. And then this point also, that in such sort they striued among themselues brethren with brethren. For they were so farre from bearing of wrongs, that they greedily gaped one for anothers goods, prouoked one another, and being vnprouoked did hurt. Therefore hee inueigheth against that rage of contending, and not simply against all controuersies. But he pronounceth that it is a fault or a weaknesse, that they did not rather suffer losse of of their goods than to trauell euen to contentions for the preſeruing of them: namely when they were ſo eaſilie mooued with euery damage, and for moſt ſmall cauſes did runne to the Court of Lawe and to controuerſies, he ſaith that this is a prooſe that they were of a minde too readie to anger, and not well framed to patience. Chriſtians verily ought to doe this, that they had alway rather to yeeld of their owne right than to goe to law, from whence they can ſcarcely get out againe but with a minde too much mooued and kindled to hatred of their brother. But when a man ſeeth that without loſſe of charitie he may defend his owne, the loſſe whereof ſhould be a ſore hinderance vnto him: if he doe ſo he offendeth nothing againſt this ſaying of Paul. Finally (as wee haue taught in the beginning) charitie ſhall giue euerie man beſt counſell, without which whatſoeuer controuerſies are taken in hand, and beyond which whatſoeuer doe proceede, we hold it out of controuerſie that they be vniuſt and wicked.

The reuerend eſtimation which ſubiects ought to haue of their Magiſtrates.

22 The firſt duetie of Subiects toward their Magiſtrates is, to thinke moſt honorablie of their office, namely which they acknowledge to be a iuriſdiction committed of God, and therefore to eſteeme them and reuerence them as the miniſters and deputies of God. For a man may finde ſome, which yeeld themſelues very obedient to their magiſtrates, and would not that there were not ſome whom they ſhould obey, becauſe they ſo know it to be expedient for the common benefit: but of the Magiſtrates themſelues they thinke no otherwiſe than of certaine neceſſarie euils. But Peter requireth ſomewhat more of vs, when he commandeth that the King be honored, and Salomon, when he commandeth God and the King to be feared: For Peter vnder the word of honoring containeth a ſyncere and well deeming eſtimation: and Salomon ioyning the King with God, ſheweth that he is full of a certaine holie reuerence and dignitie. This is alſo a notable commendation in Paul, that we obey not onely for wrath but for conſcience. Whereby he meaneth that Subiects ought to be led not onely with feare of Princes and Rulers to be holden in their ſubiection (as they are wont to yeeld to their armed enemie, which ſee that vengeance ſhall readily be taken vpon them if they reſiſt) but becauſe the obediences that are ſhewed to them are ſhewed to God himſelfe, for as much as their power is of God. I ſpeake not of the men, as if the viſor of dignitie did couer fooliſhneſſe, or ſluggiſhneſſe, or cruelties, or wicked maners, and full of miſchieuous doing: but I ſay that the decree it ſelfe is worthie of honour and reuerence: that whoſoeuer be rulers may be eſteemed with vs, and haue reuerence, in reſpect of their being rulers.

Rom. 13. 5.

The obedience which we owe vnto Magiſtrates in our outward actions.

23 Of this then alſo followeth another thing: that with minds bent to the honouring of them, they declare their obedience in prooſe to them: whether it be to obey their proclamations, or to pay tribute, or to take in hand publicke offices and charges that ſerue for common defence, or to doe any other of their commandements. Let euery ſoule (ſaith Paul) be ſubiect to the higher powers. For he that reſiſteth the power, reſiſteth the ordinance of God. The ſame Paul writeth to Titus: Warne them that they be ſubiect to rulers and powers, that they obey the Magiſtrates, that they be readie to euerie good worke. And Peter ſaith, Bee yee ſubiect to euerie humane creature (or rather as I tranſlate it, Ordinance) for the Lords ſake, either to the King as moſt excellent, or to the rulers that are ſent by him, to the puniſhment in deede of euill doers, but to the praiſe of well doers. Moreouer that they ſhould teſtifie that they doe not faigne ſubiection, but are ſincerely and heartily ſubiect, Paul addeth that they ſhould commend to God the ſafetie and proſperitie of them vnder whom they liue. I exhort (ſaith he) that there be made prayers, beſeechings, interceſſions, thankeſgiuings for all men, for Kings and for all that be ſet in ſuperioritie, that wee may liue a peaceable and quiet life with all godlineſſe and honeſtie. Neither let any man heere deceiue himſelfe. For ſith the Magiſtrate cannot be reſiſted, but that God himſelfe muſt alſo be reſiſted: although it may be thought that an vnarmed magiſtrate may freely be deſpiſed, yet God is armed which will ſtrongly take vengeance on the deſpiſing of himſelfe. Moreouer vnder this obedience I containe moderation, which priuate men ought to binde themſelues to keepe in caſes touching the publicke ſtate, that they doe not of their owne head intermedle in publicke buſineſſe, or raſhly breake breake into the office of the Magiſtrate, and enterpriſe nothing publickly. If any thing ſhall in a publicke ordinance be behoouefull to be amended, let not themſelues raiſe vprores, nor put their hands to the doing of it, which they all ought to haue faſt bound in this behalfe: but let them commit it to the iudgement of the Magiſtrate, whoſe hand alone is heerein at libertie. I meane, that they preſume to doe nothing vncommanded. For when the commandement of the ruler is adioyned, then are they alſo furniſhed with publicke authoritie. For as they are wont to call the counſellers of a King, his eares and eies: ſo not vnfitly a man may call them the hands of the Prince, whom by his commandement he ſetteth in authoritie for the doing of things.

The euill dealings of Magiſtrates the cauſe why men thinke they may withdraw both reuerence and obedience from them.

24 Now for as much as we haue hitherto deſcribed a Magiſtrate ſuch as is in deed the ſame that he is called, namely, the father of the countrey, and (as the Poet calleth him) the paſtor of the people, the keeper of peace, the protector of righteouſneſſe, the reuenger of innocencie: he is worthily to be iudged a mad man, that alloweth not ſuch a gouernment. But whereas this is in a manner the experience of all ages, that of Princes ſome being careleſſe of all things, to the foreſeeing whereof they ought to haue beene heedfully bent, doe without all care ſlothfully wallow in delights: otherſome addicted to their gaine, doe ſet out to ſale all lawes, priuiledges, iudgements, and graunts: otherſome ſpoile the poore communaltie of monie which they may after waſte vpon mad prodigall expendings: otherſome exerciſe meere robberies, in pilling of houſes, defiling of virgins and matrones, murdering of innocents: many cannot be perſwaded that ſuch ſhould be acknowledged for Princes, whoſe authoritie they ought to obey ſo farre as they may. For in ſo great hainous vnworthineſſe among doings ſo much contrary to the duty not onely of a Magiſtrate, but alſo of a man, they behold no forme of the image of God, which ought to ſhine in a Magiſtrate: when they ſee no token of that miniſter of God, which was giuen for praiſe to the good, and for vengeance to the euill: ſo neither doe they alſo acknowledge ſuch a gouernor, whoſe dignitie and authoritie the Scripture commendeth vnto vs. And truly this feeling of affection hath alway been naturally planted in the minds of men, no leſſe to hate and abhor tyrants, than to loue and honor lawfull kings.

Subiection due from vs euen to thoſe Magiſtrates who towards vs neglect their duty and abuſe their authority.

25 But if we looke to the word of God, it will leade vs further, that we be ſubiect not onely to the gouernment of thoſe princes which execute their office toward vs well and with ſuch faithfulneſſe as they ought, but alſo of all them, which by what meane ſoeuer it be, haue the dominion in poſſeſſion although they performe nothing leſſe than that which pertaineth to the dutie of Princes. For though the Lord teſtifieth that the Magiſtrates is a ſpeciall great gift of his liberalitie for preſeruing of the ſafetie of men, and appointeth to Magiſtrates themſelues their bounds: yet he doth therewithall declare, that of what ſort ſoeuer they be, they haue not their authoritie but from him: that thoſe in deede, which rule for benefit of the commonweale, are true examplars and patterns of his bountifulneſſe: that they that rule vniuſtly and wilfully, are raiſed vp by him to puniſh the wickedneſſe of the people: that all equally haue that maieſtie wherewith he hath furniſhed a lawfull power. I will proceed no further, till I haue added ſome certaine teſtimonies of that point. Yet we neede not much to labour to prooue that a wicked King is the wrath of God vpon the earth, for as much as I thinke that no man will ſay the contrary, and otherwiſe there ſhould be no more ſaid of a King than of a common robber that violently taketh away thy goods, and of an adulterer that defileth thy bed, of a murderer that ſeeketh to kill thee, whereas the Scripture reckeneth all ſuch calamities among the curſes of God. But let vs rather tarie vpon prooving that which doth not ſo eaſily ſettle in the minds of men: that in a moſt naughtie man, and moſt vnworthie of all honour if ſo that he haue the publicke power in poſſeſſion, remaineth that noble and diuine power which the Lord hath by his word giuen to the miniſters of his righteouſneſſe and iudgement, and therefore that he ought of his ſubiects to be had in as great reuerence and eſtimation, ſo much as pertaineth to publicke obedience, as they would haue the beſt King if he were giuen them.

26 Firſt, I would haue the readers to perceiue and diligently to marke that prouidence

The prouidence of God in disposing kingdomes and vsing the seruice of wicked Kings.

dence and singular doings of God, which is in the Scripture not without cause so oft rehearsed vnto vs, in distributing of kingdomes and making Kings whom it pleaseth him. In Daniel, it is said: The Lord changeth times and courses of times, hee casteth away and maketh Kings. Againe: That the liuing may know that the Highest is mightie in the kingdome of men, and he shall giue it to whom he will. With which manner of sentences whereas the whole Scripture aboundeth, yet that same Prophecie of Daniel specially swarmeth full. Now what manner of King was Nabuchadonezar, he that conquered Hierusalem, it is sufficiently knowen, namely a strong inuader and destroier of other. Yet in Ezechiel the Lord affirmeth that he gaue him the land of Aegypt for the seruice that he had done to him in wasting of it. And Daniel said to him. Thou King art King of Kings, to whom the King of heauens hath giuen a mighty, and strong, and glorious kingdome: to thee, I say, he hath giuen it, and all the lands where dwell the children of men, the beasts of the wood and foules of the aire: he hath deliuered them into thy hand, and hath made thee to beare rule ouer them. Againe he said to his son Belshazzar: the highest God hath giuen to Nabuchadonezar thy Father kingdome and royaltie, honour and glorie: and by reason of the royaltie that he gaue him, all peoples, tribes, and languages were trembling and fearefull at his sight. When we heare that a King is ordained of God, let vs thereof call to remembrance those heauenly warnings concerning the honour and fearing of a King: then wee shall not doubt to accompt, a most wicked Tyrant in the same place wherein the Lord hath vouchsafed to set him: Samuel when hee gaue warning to the people of Israel, what manner of things they should suffer at the hands of their Kings, said: This shall bee the right of the King that shall reigne ouer you: he shal take your sonnes and put them to his Chariot, to make them his horsemen, and to plow his land, and reape his crop, and to make instruments of warre. Hee shall take your daughters, that they may bee his dressers of oyntments, his Cookes and Bakers. Your Lands, your Vineyards, and your best Oliue plantes, hee shall take away and giue to his bond seruants. Hee shall take tithes of your Seedes and Vineyardes, and shall giue them to his Enuches and bond-seruants. Hee shall take away your bond-men, your bond-women and your Asses, and set them to his worke. Yea and he shall take tithes of your flockes, and yee shall bee his bond-seruants. Verily Kings should not haue done this of right, whom the law did very well instruct to all continence: but it was called a right ouer the people which it behooued them of necessitie to obey, and they might not resist it: as if Samuel had said. The wilfulnesse of Kings shall runne to such licentiousnesse, which it shall not be your part to resist, to whom this onely thing shall be left, to obey their commandements and hearken to their word.

Ier.27.5.

27 But chiefly there is in Ieremie a notable place and worthy to bee remembred, which although it be somewhat long, yet I will be content to rehearse, because it most plainely determineth this whole question. I haue made the earth and men, saith the Lord, and the liuing creatures that are one the ouerface of the earth in my great strength and stretched out arme, and I will deliuer it to him whom it pleaseth in mine eyes. And now therefore I haue giuen all these landes into the handes of Nabuchadnezar my seruant, and all nations and great Kings shall serue him, till the time shall come of that land. And it shall bee as a nation and a kingdome that hath not serued the King of Babell. I will visite that nation in sworde, famine, and pestilence. Wherefore serue yee the King of Babell and liue. Wee see with how great obedience the Lord willed that cruell and proud Tyrant to bee honoured, for no other reason but because he possessed the kingdome. And the same was by the heauenly decree, that he was set in the throne of the kingdome, and taken vp into kingly maiestie, which it was vnlawfull to violate. If wee haue this continually before our mindes and eyes, that euen the most worst Kings are ordained by the same decree by which the authoritie of Kings is stablished, these seditious thoughts shall neuer come into our minde, that a King is to bee handled according to his deseruings, and that it is not meete that we should shew our selues subiects to him that doth not on his behalfe shew himselfe a King vnto vs.

28 In vaine shall any man obiect that this was a peculiar commandement to the Israelites Israelites. For it is to be noted with what reason the Lord confirmeth it. I haue giuen (saith he) the kingdome to Nabuchadnezzar: Wherefore serue yee him and liue. To whomsoeuer therefore it shall be certaine that the kingdome is giuen, let vs not doubt that he is to be obeyed. And so soone as the Lord aduanceth any man to the royall estate, he therein declareth his will to vs that he will haue him raigne. For thereof are generall testimonies of the Scripture. Salomon in the xxviij. Chapter, Many Princes are because of the wickednesse of the people. Againe, Iob in the xij. Chapter, He taketh away subiection from Kings, and girdeth them againe with the girdle. But this being confessed, there remaineth nothing but that we must serue and liue. There is also in Ieremie the Prophet an other commandement of the Lord, wherein he commanded his people to seeke the peace of Babylon, whither they had beene led away captiue, and to pray to him for it, because in the peace of it should be their peace. Behold the Israelites being spoyled of all their goods, plucked out of their houses, led away into exile, and cast into miserable bondage, are commanded to pray for the safetie of the Conquerour: not as in other places we are commanded to pray for our persecutors: but that the kingdome may be preserued to himselfe and quiet, that they themselues may also liue prosperously vnder him. So Dauid being alreadie appointed King by the ordinance of God, and annointed with his holie oyle, when he was without any his deseruing vnworthilie persecuted of Saul, yet the head of him that layed wait for his life, hee esteemed holie which the Lord hath hallowed with the honor of kingdome. Farre be it from me (said he) that I should before the Lord doe this thing to my Lord the annointed of the Lord, that I should lay my hand vpon him: because he is the annointed of the Lord. Againe, My Soule hath spared thee, and I haue said, I wil not lay my hand vpon my Lord, because he is the annointed of the Lord. Againe, Who shall lay his hand vpon the annointed of the Lord and shall be innocent? So sure as the Lord liueth, vnlesse the Lord strike him, or his day be come that he die, or he goe downe into battell: farre be it from me that I should lay my hand vpon the annointed of the Lord.

29 Finally wee owe this affection of reuerence yea and deuotion to all our Rulers, of what sort soeuer they be, which I doe therefore the oftener repeate, that wee may learne not to search what the men themselues bee, but take this for sufficient, that by the will of the Lord they beare that personage in which the Lord himselfe hath imprinted and ingraued an inuiolable Maiestie. But (thou wilt say) Rulers owe mutuall duties to their Subiects. That I haue alreadie confessed. But if thou thereupon conclude, that obediences are to be rendred to none but to iust Gouernours, thou art a foolish reasoner. For, husbands also are bound to their wiues, and parents to their children with mutuall dueties. Let Parents and Husbands depart from their duetie: let Parents shew themselues so hard and vnpleasable to their children, whom they are forbidden to prouoke to anger, that with their peeuishnesse they doe vnmeasurably wearie them: let the husbands most despitefully vse their wiues, whom they are commanded to loue, and to spare them as weake vessels: shall yet therefore either children be lesse obedient to their parents, or wiues to their husbands? but they are subiect both to euill parents and husbands and such as doe not their duetie. Yea, whereas all ought rather to endeuor themselues not to looke behinde them to the bagge hanging at their backe, that is, not to enquire one of anothers dueties, but euery man set before him that which is his owne duetie: this ought chiefly to haue place among those that are vnder the power of other. Wherefore if we be vnmercifully tormented of a cruell Prince, if we be rauenously spoyled of a couetous or riotous Prince, if we be neglected of a slothfull Prince, finally if we be vexed for godlinesses sake of a wicked and vngodly Prince: let vs first call to mind the remembrance of our sinnes, which vndoubtedly are chastised with such scourges of the Lord. Thereby humilitie shall bridle our impatience. Let vs then also call to minde this thought, that it pertaineth not to vs to remedie such euils: but this onely is left for vs, that we craue the help of the Lord in whose hands are the hearts of Kings, and the bowings of kingdomes. He is the God that shall stand in the assemblie of Gods, and shall in the middest iudge the Gods, from whose face all Kings shall fall, and be broken, and

The prouident care of God to deliuer his people from their Rulers tirannie. Exod 3. 7. Iud. 3. 9. &c.

30 And heere both his maruellous goodneſſe, and power, and prouidence ſheweth it ſelfe: for ſometime of his ſeruants he raiſeth vp open reuengers, and furniſheth them with his commandement, to take vengeance of their vniuſt gouernment, and to deliuer his people many waies oppreſſed out of miſerable diſtreſſe: ſometime hee directeth to the ſame end the rage of men that intend and goe about an other thing. So he deliuered the people of Iſraell out of the tyrannie of Pharao by Moſes: and out of the violence of Chuſam King of Syria, by Othoniel: and out of other thraldomes, by other Kings or Iudges. So hee tamed the pride of Tyrus, by the Ægyptians: the inſolence of the Ægyptians, by the Aſſyrians: the fierceneſſe of the Aſſyrians by the Chaldees: the boldneſſe of Babylon, by the Medians, and by the Perſians when Cyrus had ſubdued the Medians. And the vnthankfulneſſe of the Kings of Iuda and Iſraell, and their wicked obſtinacie toward his ſo many benefits, he did beat downe and bring to diſtreſſe ſometime by the Aſſyrians, ſometime by the Babylonians, albeit not all after one maner. For the firſt ſort of men when they were by the lawfull calling of God ſent to doe ſuch actes: in taking armour againſt Kings, they did not violate that maieſtie which is planted in Kings by the ordinance of God: but being armed from heauen they ſubdued the leſſer power with the greater: like as it is lawfull for Kings to puniſh their Lords vnder them. But theſe latter ſort, although they were directed by the hand of God whether it pleaſed him, and they vnwittingly did worke, yet purpoſed in their minde nothing but miſchiefe.

The reuenge of vnbridled gouernment belongeth not to priuate men.

31 But howſoeuer the very doings of men bee iudged, yet the Lord did as well execute his worke by them, when he did breake the bloody ſcepters of proud Kings, and ouerthrew their intollerable gouernments. Let Princes heare and bee afraide. But we in the meane time muſt take great heed, that we doe not deſpiſe or offend that authoritie of Magiſtrates full of reuerend maieſtie, which God hath ſtabliſhed with moſt weightie decrees, although it remaine with moſt vnworthy men, and which doe with their wickedneſſe, ſo much as in them is, defile it. For though the correcting of vnbridled gouernment bee the reuengement of the Lord, let vs not by and by thinke that it is committed to vs, to whom there is giuen no other commandement but to obey and ſuffer. I ſpeake alway of priuate men. For if there be at this time any Magiſtrates for the behalfe of the people, (ſuch as in old time were the Ephori, that were ſet againſt the kings of Lacedemonia, or the Tribunes of the people, againſt the Roman Conſuls: or the Demarchi, againſt the Senate of Athens: and the ſame power alſo which peraduenture, as things are now, the three eſtates haue in euerie Realme, when they hold their principall aſſemblies) I do ſo not forbid them according to their office to withſtand the outraging licentiouſneſſe of kings: that I affirme that if they winke at kings wilfully raging ouer and treading downe the poore communaltie, their diſſembling is not without wicked breach of faith, becauſe they deceitfully betray the libertie of the people, whereof they know themſelues to be appointed protectors by the ordinance of God.

Parliaments.

The dutie which we owe vnto Kings muſt not lead vs from our obedience to the King of Kings.

32 But in that obedience which wee haue determined to be due to the authorities of Gouernours, that is alway to be excepted, yea chiefely to be obſerued, that it do not leade vs away from obeying of him, to whoſe will the deſires of all kings ought to be ſubiect, to whoſe decrees all their commandements ought to yeeld, to whoſe Maieſtie their maces ought to be ſubmitted. And truely how vnorderly were it, for the ſatisfying of men to runne into his diſpleaſure for whom men themſelues are obeyed? The Lord therefore is the King of kings, who when he hath opened his holie mouth, is to be heard alone for altogether and aboue all: next to him wee bee ſubiect to thoſe men that are ſet ouer vs: but no otherwiſe than in him. If they command any thing againſt him, let it haue no place and let no account be made of it: neither let vs herein any thing ſtay vpon all that dignitie wherewith the Magiſtrates excell, to which there is no wrong done, when it is brought into order of ſubiection in compariſon of that ſingular and truely ſoueraigne power of God. After this reason Daniel denieth that he had any thing offended against the king, when he obeyed not his wicked proclamation: because the king had passed his bounds, and had not onely beene a wrong doer to men, but in lifting vp his hornes against God he had taken away power from himselfe. On the other side the Israelites are condemned because they were too much obedient to the wicked commandement of the king. For when Ieroboam had made golden calues, they forsaking the Temple of God, did for his pleasure turne to new superstitions. With like lightnesse their posteritie inclined themselues to the ordinances of their kings. With this the Prophet sharply reprocheth them, that they embraced the commandements of the king: so farre is it off, that the pretence of humilitie may deserue praise wherewith the flatterers of the court doe couer themselues and deceiue the simple, while they say that it is not lawfull for them to refuse any thing that is commanded them of their prince: as though God resigned his right to mortall men, giuing them the rule of mankind: or as though the earthly power were minished, when it is made subiect to the author of it, before whom euen the heauenly powers doe humbly tremble for feare. I know how great and how present perill hangeth ouer this constancie, because kings doe most displeasantly suffer themselues to be despised, whose displeasure (saith Salomon) is the messenger of death. But sith this decree is proclaimed by the heauenly harald Peter: That we ought to obey God rather than men, let vs comfort our selues with this thought, that wee then performe that obedience which the Lord requireth, when we suffer any thing rather whatsoeuer it be, than swarue from godlinesse. And that our courages should not faint, Paul putteth also another spurre to vs: That wee were therefore redeemed of Christ with so great a price as our redemption cost him, that wee should not yeeld our selues in thraldome to obey the peruerse desires of men, but much lesse should be bound to vngodlinesse.

A TABLE OF THE MATTERS INTREATED OF IN THIS BOOKE, DISPOSED IN FORME of common places, wherein is briefly reherſed the ſumme of the doctrine concerning euery point taught in the booke before at large, collected by the Author.

The firſt number ſignifieth the Booke, the ſecond the Chapter, the third the Section.

Acoluthes.

Acoluthes in the old Church. Book. 4. Chapter 4. Section 1.9. and Chap. 19. Sect. 22.23.

Adams fall.

The fall of Adam proceeded not of intemperance, of gluttony, but of infidelity: for he deſpiſing the word and truth of God, turned out of the way to the lies of Sathan: which infidelity opened the gate to ambition and pride, whereunto was adioined vnthankefulneſſe: and ambition was the mother of diſobedience. 2.1.4.

By the fall of Adam ſith other creatures haue beene after a ſort deformed, it is no maruell, that all mankind was corrupted, that is to ſay, ſwarued out of kind from his firſt originall, and made ſubiect to curſe. This the old Doctors called Originall ſinne, but yet did not ſo plainly ſet foorth this point of doctrine as was conuenient. In the meane time it is prooued by reaſons and teſtimonies of Scripture, that Pelagius fowlly erred when he ſaid that by imitation only, not by propagation, ſinne paſſed from the firſt man into all his poſterity. 2.1.5.6.

And though the peſtilence of ſinne doe principally abide in the ſoule, yet it doth not therefore pertaine to the diſcuſſing of this Doctrine, to diſpute whether the ſoule of the child commeth of the engendring ſubſtance of the father: for as much as the cauſe of the infection is not in the ſubſtance of the fleſh or of the ſoule, but becauſe it was ordained of God, that thoſe gifts which he at the firſt had giuen to man, man ſhould haue and looſe them for him and his. Finally it maketh not againſt this doctrine, that the children of the faithfull are ſanctified. 2.1.7.

That by the fall of Adam the naturall gifts in man were corrupted and the ſupernaturall were taken away, is a ſaying that many haue vſed, but few haue vnderſtood. 2.2.4.16. which ſaying is expounded. 2.2.12. that is to ſay, that the ſupernaturall gifts, faith, the loue of God, charity toward our neighbours, deſirous endeuour of holineſſe and righteouſneſſe were taken away, but are reſtored by Chriſt: and that the naturall gifts, namely the vnderſtanding mind, and the heart are corrupted, becauſe the ſoundneſſe of vnderſtanding and the vprightneſſe of heart were both taken away: Alſo that reaſon in man was not vtterly blotted out, but partly weakned and partly corrupted: and ſo will, becauſe it cannot be ſeuered from the nature of man, was not vtterly deſtroied, but made thrall to corrupt deſires. 2.2.12.

It is prooued by the teſtimonies of Auguſtine and of the Scripture, that God not only foreſaw or ſuffered, but alſo by his will diſpoſed the fall of the firſt man, and in him the vaine of his poſterity. 3.23.7.8.

Angels.

Angels are creatures of God although Moſes doe not expreſſe them in the hiſtory of the creation. 1.14.3.

Of the time or order wherein they were created, it is not expedient to enquire, forasmuch much as the Scripture (which we ought to follow for our rule) declareth nothing thereof. 1.14.4.

Why the heauenly spirits are called Angels, Armies, Vertues, Principalities, powers, dominions, thrones, Gods. 1.14.5.

Concerning Angels the Scripture teacheth so much as is auailable for our comfort and for the confirming of our faith, namely that they are distributers and ministers of Gods bountifulnesse toward vs, and the same by diuers waies. 1.14.6.9.

Not only one Angell hath seuerall care of euery one of vs, but they all with one consent doe watch for our safety: and therefore it is superfluous to inquire whether euery man haue his seuerall Angell assigned to be his keeper. 1.14.7.

Of the number and degrees of Angels, it is curiousnesse to inquire, and rashnesse to determine: And why, whereas they be spirits, the Scripture painteth them with wings vnder Cherubin and Seraphin. 1.14.8.

Against the Sadduces and such other fantasticall men, it is prooued by sundry testimonies of the Scripture, that Angels are not qualities or inspirations without substance, but very spirits indeed. 1.14.9.

That superstition is herein to be auoided, and that we giue not to Angels those things that belong only to God and Christ. 1.14.10.

For auoiding of this perill, we must consider that whereas God vseth their seruice, he doth it not of neede, as though he could not be without them, but for the comfort of our weakenesse. 1.14.11. And therefore whatsoeuer is said of the ministery of Angels, ought to be referred to this end, that ouercomming all distrust, our trust in God should be thereby the more strongly stablished, and not that they should lead vs away from God. 1.14.12.

That the Angels also were created after the likenesse of God. 1.15.3.

Of the ascending of Christ into heauen.

Although Christ in his rising againe began more fully to shew foorth his glory and power: yet in his ascending into heauen he first truly began his kingdome, because he then powred out greater abundance of his spirit, more royally aduanced his raigne, and shewed greater power both in helping them that are his, and in ouerthrowing his enemies. And yet that he is so absent according to the presence of his flesh, that he is alway euery where according to the presence of his maiesty, and with the faithfull according to his vnspeakable and inuisible grace. 2.16.14.

Of Christs sitting at the right hand of his Father, and of the manifold fruit which our faith gathereth thereof. 2.16.15.16.

B

Baptisme.

THE definition of Baptisme. The first end thereof is to serue our faith before God, the other end, to serue our confession before men. It bringeth to our faith three things, first that it is a signe of our clensing, assuring vs that all our sinnes are done away. 4.15.1. which is prooued by testimonies of the Scripture, and that it is not the water that clenseth vs, but the blond of Christ. Sect. 2.

The force of Baptisme is not restrained to the time past: but we are by it washed and clensed once for all our life: and yet that we may not hereof take a liberty to sinne from thence forward. 4.15.2.

The power of the keies (as they call it) that is to say, the ministery of the Church, by which the forgiuenesse of sinnes is daily preached vnto vs, is not to be seuered from Baptisme. 4.15.4.

The second fruit of faith by Baptisme, is that it sheweth to vs our mortifying in Christ, and a new life in him. 4.15.5.

The third fruit is, that it testifieth that we are so vnited to Christ, that we are partakers of all his good things. For which cause Christ is called the proper obiect of Baptisme, and the Apostles baptised into the name of Christ, in whom we doe so obtaine the matter both of our clensing and of our regeneration, as we obtaine the cause thereof in the father, and the effect in the holy Ghost. 4.15.6.

It is prooued that the Baptisme was all one which was ministred of Iohn and of the Apostles, although some of the old doctors thought otherwise. 4.15.7. and that it maketh not to the contrary, that more abundant graces of the Spirit are powred out, since the resurrection ction of Christ. But yet there is in Baptisme a difference to be made of the person of Christ from Iohn, and from the Apostles and other Ministers. 4.15.8.

Both our mortifying and our clensing were as by shadow signified among the people Israel, by the passage through the sea, and the comfortable calling of the cloud. 4.15.9.

It is false which some haue taught, that by Baptisme we are restored to the same righteousnesse and pureness of nature which Adam had at the beginning. And there is shewed that in the children of God doe remaine yet some leauings of sin, although the same raigne not in them: which doth whet their endeuours, and doth not giue them occasion to flatter themselues. 4.15.10.11. the same is prooued by Paul Sect. 12.

How Baptisme serueth our confession before men. 4.15.13.

What is the order to vse Baptisme, both for confirmation of our faith, and for a confession before men. Where it is shewed that the graces of God are not enclosed in the Sacrament, so as they be giuen to vs by the vertue thereof. 4.15.14.15.

Baptisme is nothing encreased by the worthinesse of him that doth minister it, nor diminished by his vnworthinesse: against the donatists, and our Catabaptists which require a rebaptising, because we haue beene baptized in the kingdom of the Pope. 4.15.16. their arguments are confuted Sect. 17.18.

Baptisme is a continuall Sacrament of repentance for all our life, so that we need no other Sacrament of penance. 4.19.17.

Of the coniuring of the water, the wax candell, the chresme, the blowing, the spittle, and such other trifles added to the simple ceremony of Christ: and the order of purely ministring it in the Church is shewed. 4.15.19.

It is shewed that to minister Baptisme pertaineth to the Ministers of the Church and not to priuate men, much lesse to Women: and the contrary obiections are confuted. 4.15.20.21.22.

Baptisme of Infants.

The Baptising of infants doth very well agree with Christs institution, and with the nature of the signe. 4.16. &c.

Baptism succeeded in the place of Circumcision, wherein they be like, and wherein they be vnlike. 4.16.3.4.

Infants are not to be debarred from Baptisme, sith the Lord doth make them partakers of the thing signified in Baptisme. 4.16.5. and that the Lord doth regenerate infants. Sect.17.18.19.

Sith it is certaine that the same couenant, which it pleased God to make with Abraham is sealed in infants with the outward Sacrament, therefore ought Baptisme also to haue place among them. 4.16.6.

Baptising of infants is well prooued by this that Christ embraced children and laid his hands vpon them. 4.16.7.

A confutation of certaine arguments of the enemies of infants Baptisme. 4.16.8.22.23.25.27.28.29.

There commeth great fruit by the Baptizing of infants, both to the faithfull parents and to the children. 4.16.9. Which fruit Satan trauaileth by the Anabaptists to take from vs. 4.16 32.

A confutation of the Aduersaries arguments saying, that there be other things signified in Baptisme than there are in Circumcision: that our couenant differeth from the old couenant that other are called children at this day than were at that time. 4.16.10.11.12.13 14.15.

A confutation of their other faigned differences betweene Circumcision and Baptisme. Sect. 16. Also of this obiection, that Baptisme is a sacrament of repentance and of faith: neither of which can be in tender infancy. 4.16.20.21.

In them of ripe age, faith and vnderstanding ought to go before Baptism: but in infants the Baptisme of the faithfull goeth before vnderstanding. 4.16.24.

A confutation of their error, which condemne to eternall death all that are not Baptized. 4.16.26.

This, that Christ was not Baptised till his age of 30. yeeres. was for a good cause, and maketh nothing for the enemies of infants baptisme. 4.16.29.

Why the supper is not to be ministred to the infants of the faithfull, and Baptisme not to be denied them. 4.16.30.

A long rehearsall of the arguments wherewith wicked Seruetus did fight against the Baptisme of infants, and a confutation of the same arguments. 4.16.31.

Of Baptizing of infants. 4.8.16.

Bearing of the Crosse.

It behoueth that we deny our selues, that we we may beare the Crosse, because it is Gods will to exercise all his vnder the Crosse, beginning at Christ his first begotten sonne. Which fellowship with Christ doth already giue vs great ground of patience and comfort. 3.8.1.

It is for many causes necessary for vs to lead our life vnder a continuall Crosse: first to beate downe our arrogancy and trust of our owne strength. And this remedy euen the most holy doe need, as is proued by the example of Dauid. 3.8.2. Heereby our trust in God is confirmed, and our hope encreased. Sect. 3.

Secondly, that our patience may be tried, and we may be framed to obedience. 3.8.4. Which is most needfull for vs, sith the wantonnesse of our flesh is so great to make vs shake off the yoke of God when he doth once handle vs gently. Sect. 5.

Sometime also to punish our offences committed: wherein we acknowledge that he doth the office of a good father toward vs, but contrariwise the vnfaithfull are oftentimes made more obstinate. 3.8.6.

A singular comfort when we suffer either shame or losse, or any other calamity for righteousnesse: which Crosse most properly belongeth to the faithfull. 3.8.7.

How necessary it is for the faithfull, in the bitternesse of afflictions, to be furnished with this thought, that God loueth them, but is angry with their faults. 3.4.34.

Bishops.

The name of Bishop in the old Church was giuen to some one in euery seuerall company of Ministers, for politicke order, and not that they should beare a Lordly rule ouer other. 4.4.2.

It was the office as well of the Bishop as of other Priests, to preach and minister the Sacraments. 4.4.3.

The old Church did commonly obserue the order appointed by the Apostles in calling of Ministers. 4.4.10.11.12.13.

With what forme the Ministers of the old Church were consecrate after their election. 4.4.14.15.

Of the ceremoney of ordering of true Priests. 4.19.28.

Oftentimes the order of Priests: prophets, and Pastors, hath beene most corrupt in the Church. 4.9.3.4.c.

Men are not bound without exception to obey the Pastors of Churches, but in the Lord and his word. 4.9.12.

What Bishops, and of what qualities, be made in the Papacy. 4.5.1.

The right of the people in election is taken away, and the old canons broken. 4.5.2.3.

What Priests are made in the Papacy, and to what end. 4.5.4.5.

Of the gifts of Benefices in the Papacy. 4.5.6.7.

How faithfully all Priests in the Papacy do execute their office, whether they be Monkes, or secular, as Canons, Deanes, Parsons of Paroches, Bishops, &c. 4.5.8.9.10.11.

The negligence of them that gouerned Churches in the time of Gregory and Bernard. 4.5.12.

The whole maner of Ecclesiasticall gouernance as it is at this day in the Papacy, is nothing else but a place of spoile, wherein theeues doe rob without law and measure. 4.5.13.

Of the dissolute licentiousnesse in all parts of their life, which Priests and Bishops, &c. vse in the Papacy. 4.5.14.

Calling.

OF the effectuall or inward calling, which is a sure testimony of election, and hangeth vpon the only free mercy of God. 3.24.1.2

Against them, which in predestination doe make man a worker with God. Also against them that hange election vpon that which followeth election. 3.24.3.

The certainty of our election is to be knowen by the word and caling of God, and we ought not to pearse into the eternall councell of God. 3.24.4.

The father hath chosen vs onely in Christ, in him therefore let vs hold the steadfast ground of our election. 3.24.5. and so, that thereof also we may conceiue a sure confidence of perseuerance to the end. 3.24 6.7.8.9.

Two kindes of calling vniuersall, and speciall. 3.24.8.

It is prooued by diuers examples and testimonies of Scripture, that the elect before their calling do differ nothing from other men, and that it is false which some men doe dream, that there is a certaine seed of election planted in their hearts euen from their nativity. 3.24 10.11.

It is shewed at large that as God doth by the effectualnesse of his Calling toward the elect, make perfect the saluation to which he had by his eternall counsell appointed them: so he he hath his iudgements against the reprobats, wherby he puteth his purpose concerning them in execution, and maketh away for his predestination. 3.24.12.13.14. &c.

Cardinals.

When the name of Cardinals first began, and how they haue so suddenly start vp to so great honour. 4.7.30.

Ceremonies.

The old Ceremonies are taken away, as touching their vse onely, but not as touching their effect, for we haue the same effect at this day most euidently and effectually in Christ. And this doth nothing diminish their holines, as it is prooued 2.7.16. and being weighed by themselues and without Christ, they are worthily called of Paul handwritings against vs. 2.7.17.

The ordinances concerning Ceremonies in in the Popes law, do command obseruation for the most part vnprofitable, and sometime also foolish although they haue a great seeming of wisdome: moreouer they oppresse consciences with their infinite multitude. 4.10.11. 12.13.

The Popish Ceremonies can not be executed by this colour, that they be ordained for the instruction of the ignorant as the ceremonies of the law were: because there appeareth in this point a manifest difference betweene vs and the people before Christ. 4.10.14.

The Popish Ceremonies are beleeued to be sacrifices clensing sinnes, and deserning eternal life: they are without doctrine, and are snares to catch mony. 4.10.15.

Charity toward our neighbour.

It is prooued, against the Sorbonists that Charity is the loue of our neighbour and not of our selues. 2.8.54.

Vnder the name of neighbour is contained euery man, be he neuer so much a stranger to vs, and our enimy, 2.8.55. and therefore the Schoolemen are condemned of ignorance which of the commandements of God, not to desire reuenge, and to loue our enemies, haue made Counsels, to the necessary keeping whereof Monkes alone doe binde themselues: and it is prooued that the old doctors of the Church. yea and Gregory himselfe thought otherwise. 2.8.56.57.

We haue need of patience, that we be not weary of doing good to other. And we ought not to haue respect to the vnworthinesse or other qualities of men which might withdraw vs, but to God which so commandeth vs. 3.7.6.

To the fulfilling of all the parts of charity, it is not enough if we performe all the dutifull deeds of charity, but we must doe it with a sincere affection of heart. Wherein the chiefe point is, that we take vpon our selues the person of him whom we see to need our helpe. So shall we auoide disdainfull pride and other corruptings of charity. 3.7.7.

Christ and the Apostles in rehearsing the summe of the law doe sometime leaue out the first table: not for that it more auaileth to the summe of righteousnesse to liue innocently with men, than to honour God with godlinesse: but because vnfaigned charity is the proofe of true godlinesse. 2.8.52.53.

A confutation of the Pharisies of our time, which hold that we are iustified by charity, because Paul saith that charity is greater than faith and hope. 3.18.8.

An exposition of the tenth commandement, wherein (as in the former commandements) is forbidden not only all purpose to hurt our neighbor, but also all lust or desire against charity. 2.8.49.58.

God doth for good cause and worthily require of vs so great feruentnesse and vprightnesse of loue. 2.8.50.

An exposition of the sixt commandement, wherein not only the slaughter or hatred of our neighbor is forbidden vs, but also the preseruing of his life is commanded vs, because man is both our flesh and the image of God. 2.7. 39.40.

Children.

See obedience of children to parents.

Church.

The Church the mother of the faithfull. 4.1.4.5.

An exposition of this article of the Creed, I beleeue the holy Church. 4.1.2.3.

The holinesse of the Church is not yet perfected. 4.8.12.

Of the inuisible Church: and of the visible Church, the signes whereof are the pure preaching of the word and ministration of Sacraments. 4.8.7.8.9.10.11.

Where-

Where soeuer those signes are, we ought not to depart from that fellowship. 4.8.12.

There may some fault creepe in, either in doctrine or in ministration of Sacraments, for the which yet we ought not to cast off the communion of that Church, and much lesse for the imperfection of life and corruptnesse of manners. And herein the Anabaptists are reproued 4.1.12.13.14.15.16.

The Church is none otherwise holy, but that it alway hath many faults, and yet it ceaseth not to be the Church, as is proued by testimonies of scripture and the experience of all ages. 4.1.17.18,19.

Churches power as touching Articles of faith.

It is proued by the example of the Apostles and Prophets, and of Christ himselfe, that whatsoeuer authoritie the Church hath, is properly not giuen to men, but to the word, the ministration whereof is committed to them: And therefore it was neuer lawfull for the Church, to teach any other thing, than that which she receiued of the Lord. 4.8.1.2.3.4.8.9.

Christ hath euer taught his Church: and yet he hath vsed diuers maners of teaching according to the diuersitie of times, ere the law was written, in the time of the law & the Prophets, and last of all since that he himselfe was openly shewed in the flesh. 4.8.5.6.7.

False Church.

Where lying and falshood hath gotten the vpper hand and reigneth, there is not the Church. And this is proued to be in the Papacie, although they there boast of a perpetuall succession of Bishops. 4.2.1.2.3.4.

They are not Heretickes or Schismatickes that depart from the Papacie. 4.2.5.6.

How much soeuer a man make the best of the faultes of the Popish Church, yet the state thereof is no better than was in the kingdome of Israell vnder Ieroboam. 4.2.7.8.9.10.

Yet by the goodnesse of God there remaine in the Papacie certain footsteps of the Church: and so is that fulfilled which hath beene written, that Antichrist should sit in the Temple of God. 4.2.11.12.

And so did Augustine thinke, if he be diligently weighed. 3.3.12. and this is prooued by many places of his writings. 3.3.13.

Confession Auricular.

Concerning Confession, the schoole Diuines do fight against the Canonists, affirming that it is not by the commandement of God. A confutation of the arguments whereupon the first sort do stand, first because the Lord in the Gospel did send the Lepros whom he had cleansed to the Priestes: and there is shewed the true meaning of the dooing. 3.4.4.

A confutation of their second argument for that the Lord commanded his Disciples to loose and vnwinde Lazarus when he was raised from death. 3.4.5.

A true exposition of two places by which they trauell to vphold their confession: that is to say, that they which came to the Baptisme of Iohn did confesse their sins, & Iames willeth vs to confesse our sins one to another. 3.4.6

The vse of confessing to a Priest was very ancient, but yet free as a politicke order, not as a law set by Christ or his Apostles: and afterward the same was abrogate by Nectarius Bishop of the Church of Constantinople because of a Deacon which had vnder that pretence abused a woman. This tyrannous law was not laide vpon Churches before the time of Innocent the third, about three hundred yeeres past, and the foolishnesse and barbarousnesse of that ordinance is declared. 3.4.7.

By a similitude is described how a great part of the world hath hitherto obeyed such illusions. That it is an impossible law, and maketh men hypocrites. And then is shewed a most certaine rule of confession according to the example of the Publican. 3.4.18.

A confutation of this article, that sinnes are not forgiuen, and that the gate of Paradise is shut, &c. vnlesse there be first firmely conceiued a vow of confessing, where also their obiection is confuted that iudgement cannot be pronounced till the cause be heard, that is to say, that absolution cannot be giuen till all the sins be rehearsed. 3.4.18.

It is no maruell that we condemne and abolish auricular confession, and our aduersaries doe falsely assigne so great profit vnto it, for so much as on the other side it armeth men to boldnesse of sinning. 3.4.19.

They doe falsely pretend that they haue the power of the keyes, sith they are not the successors of the Apostles, nor haue the holy Ghost, forasmuch as they doe daily without consideration loose those things which the Lord hath commanded to be bound, and binde what hee hath commanded to be loosed. 3.4.20.

It is prooued false that they say that the power of the keyes may sometime be vsed without knowledge, forasmuch as by that meane the absolution should be vncertaine. Where also is spoken of the absolution or condemnation which the ministers of the Gospel or the church doe pronounce according to the word, and of the certainty thereof. 3.4.22.

The absolution of the Priests in the Papacy is vncertaine, as well on the behalfe of him that assoileth as of him that confesseth: but contrariwise contrariwise it is in the absolutiõ of the Gospell which hangeth vpon this onely condition, if the sinner seeke his purging in the onely sacrifice of Christ, and to yeeld to the grace offered vnto him. 3.4.22.

The Popish Doctors, when they alleadge for themselues the power of loosing giuen to the Apostles, doe wrongfully wrest to auricular confession those sayings which Christ spake partly of preaching of the Gospel, and partly of Excommunication. The errors of Lombard and such other in this matter: and concerning the manner of remission with enioyning of penance and satisfaction. 3.4.23.

True Confession.

What kind of confession is taught vs by the word of God, namely to confesse to God the knower of our hearts and of all our thoughts. 3.4.9.

Out of this secret confession made to God, followeth a voluntary confession before men, so oft as it is behooefull for the glory of God or the humbling of our selues. And of this second kind there was an ordinary vse in the old Church, and is also in the Church at this day. But yet extraordinarily it ought after a speciall manner to be vsed, whensoeuer it shall haven that the people be guilty in any generall offence, or to be plagued with any calamity. Of the profit of such confession. 3.4.10.11.

Of two other sorts of priuate confession: of which the first is vsed for our owne cause, when we require comfort of our breathren, because the feeling of sinnes doth vex and trouble vs: in which case we must chiefely resort to our Pastors: and this remedy is warily and moderatly to be vsed, that no bondage be brought in. The other sort is to appease and reconcile our neighbour, if he be in any thing offended by our fault, vnder which kinde is contained their Confession which haue sinned so far as to the offence of the whole Church. 3.4.12.13.

The power of the keyes hath place in the three kinds of Confession. Of the fruit which they that confesse doe receiue thereby, because they know that forgiuenesse of sinnes is declared to them by the messenger of Christ. 3.4.14.

Of confession of sinnes one sort is generall, another speciall. 3.20.9.

It is to be wished, that the maner of the old Church were brought in vse againe, to call childrē to giue account of their faith. 4.19.13.

Conscience.

Consciences, when they seeke assiance of their iustification before God ought to forget all the righteousnesse of the law. 3.19.2.3.

The Consciences of the faithfull doe not follow the law as constrained by necessity of the law, but being free from the yoke of the law, doe voluntarily obey the will of God. 3.19.4.5.6.

Of the fredome of conscience in outward and indifferent things. 3.19.7.8.

The consciences of the faithfull being set at liberty by the benefit of Christ, are made free from the power of all men: and how this is to be vnderstood. where also is spoken of the spirituall and ciuill gouernment, and what difference is to be put betweene them. 3.19.14.15.

Of Councels.

Wee must keepe a meane in honouring of Councels, that wee take nothing away from Christ, and our doctrine for the most part is confirmed by ancient Councels. 4.9.1.

By the Scripture the Councels haue no authority, vnles they be assembled in the name of Christ: and what that is. 4.9.2.

It is false which the papists affirm: that truth remaineth not in the Church vnlesse it be among the Pastors, and that the Church it selfe is not vnlesse, it remaine to be seen in generall Councels. 4.9.3.4.5.6.7.

Creation of the world.

Although God ought to be knowen by the creation of things, yet least the faithfull should fall away to the fained inuentions of the heathen, his will was that the history of the creation should remaine written, and the time therof expressed in the Scripture. 1.14.1. where there vngodly scoffing is confuted, which aske why it came not sooner in Gods minde to create heauen and earth. 1.14.1.

For the same purpose it is rehearsed that God ended his worke, not in a moment, but in sixe daies: and likewise the order is set foorth, namely that Adam was not created till God had first furnished the world with all plenty of good things. 1.14.2.22.

A confutation of the error of Manicheus concerning two originall beginnings. 1.14.2.

It is prooued by the Scriptures that the knowledge of God which appeareth in the workmanship of the world can not by it selfe alone bring vs into the right way. 1.5.13. & yet are we rightfully without all excuse. Sect. 14.

Although the beholding of heauen & earth and the consideration of the ordering of things pertaining to men, do moone vs to worship God yet all these things passed away without profit, euen from the wisest philosophers. 1.5.10.

Hereupon came the infinit number of Gods, and the contrarieties of opinion among the sects of Philosophers concerning God. 1.5.11.

The substance of God is incomprehensible: but in his works, by engrauing certaine points of his glory therein he hath after a certaine maner presented himselfe to be seen. 1.5.1.

The wisedome of God is testified, not only by those things which philosophers and learned men do find by speculation in heauen and earth, but also which common men do perceiue by the only helpe of their eies. 1.5.2.

That we may with true faith conceiue so much as behoueth vs to know concerning God, it is good to learne the history of the creation of the world, in such sort as Moses hath set it foorth, the chiefe points wherof are briefly rehearsed. 1.14.20.

The consideration of the works of God, that is to say, of the creation of all things, ought to be applied to two principall ends, first that we doe not with vnthankefull neglecting or forgetfulnesse passe ouer his vertues which he presenteth apparantly to be seen in his creatures. 1.14.21. Secondly, that we may learne to apply them to our selues: whereby we may stir vp our selues to the trust, inuocation, praise, and loue of him. 2.14.22.

The Papists haue no true Deaconry left, forasmuch as all the disposition of Church goods among them is openly turned to sacriledge and robbery. 4.5.16.18.19.

A confutation of the shamelesnes of certain Papists, which say that the riotous excesse of Priests and of all the Popish Church, is the gloriousnes of the kingdome of Christ which the holy Prophets spake of before. 4.5.17.

Death of Christ.

Although Christ hath by the whole course of his obedience, that is to say, by his whole life & all the parts therof, redeemed vs, yet the scripture to set foorth more plainly the maner of our saluation, doth ascribe the same as peculiar & proper to the death of Christ. In the which the voluntary yeelding of Christ hath the first place which yet was so voluntary as he gaue ouer his owne affection not without strife. Also his condemnation is to be considered: Wherein two things are to be noted, namely that Christ was reputed among the wicked, and yet that his innocency was oftentimes testified euen by the iudges owne mouth. 2.1.5.

The manner of his death is to be marked, that is to say, the accursed crosse. And it is declared by many testimonies of Esay and the Apostles, that this behooued so to be, that the curse which was due to vs being cast vpon him and so ouercome and taken away, we should be deliuered. And this was figuratiuely represented in the sacrifices of Moses law, which at the last was performed in Christ the originall truth of all figures. 2.1.6.

Both in the death and buriall of Christ a double benefit is set before vs, that is to say, deliuerance from death whereunto we were in bondage and the mortifying of our flesh. 2.1.6.

Descending of Christ to hell.

The descending of Christ to hell containeth the mystery of a great thing, and is of no small importance to the effect of our redemption. Diuers expositions of this article are rehearsed and confuted. 2.16.8.9.

A true, godly, holy and comfortable exposition thereof out of the word of God. which is also confirmed by the testimony of the old doctors, that Christ did not only suffer a bodily deth, but also did feele the rigor of Gods vengeance, wherby he might both appease his wrath and satisfie his iust iudgement: and therfore it behooued that he shold, as it were hand to hand wrastle with the power of hell & with the horror of euerlasting death, yet was God not at any time either his enemy, or angry with him. But he did suffer the grieuousnes of Gods seuerity, in respect that he being stricken and beaten with the hād of God, did feele all the tokens of Gods wrath, and punishment. 2.16.10.11.

A confutation of certains wicked and vnlearned men, which at this day doe find fault with this exposition crying out that the Son of God hath wrong done to him, and that he is charged with desperation, which is contrary to faith. Therfore it is prooued against them with manifest testimonies, that these two things doe very well stand together, that Christ feared, was troubled in Spirit, was afraid, was tempted in euery point as we are, and yet that he is without sinne. 2.16.12.

Diuels.

Those things that the Scripture teacheth concerning Diuels, tend commonly to this end, that we should be carefull to beware of their deceits, and furnish our selues with those weapons which may be able to beat backe the most mighty enemies. 1.14.13.

That we should be the more stirred vp to do so, it sheweth vs that there is not one or two diuels, but great armies of euil spirits that make warre against vs: and in what sense it sometime speaketh of the diuell in the singular number. 1.14.14.

This ought to enflame vs to a continual war with the diuell, for that he is euery where called enemy to God and vs. 1.14.15.

The diuell is naturally wicked, a murderer, a lier, and forger of all maliciousnes. 1.14.15. But this euilnesse of nature is not by creation, but by corruption. 1.14.16.

It is curiosity to enquire of the cause, manner, time and fashion of the fall of the euill Angels forasmuch as the Scripture leaueth it vnspoken. 1.14.16.

This the diuell hath of himselfe and of his owne naughtinesse, desirously and purposely to striue against God, but he can do and performe nothing vnlesse God be willing and grant it. 1.14.17.

God so tempereth this gouernment, that he giueth satan to raigne ouer the soules of the faithfull, forasmuch as in the end they euer obtaine the victory, although in some particular doings they be wounded and beaten downe: but he only giueth the wicked to him to gouerne, and to vse his power vpon their soules and bodies. 1.14.18.

A confutation of them which say that diuells are nothing else but euill affections or perturbations: and it is prooued by testimonies of Scripture, that they are minds or Spirits endued with sense and vnderstanding. 1.14.19.

Discipline.

Discipline is a thing most necessary in the Church. 4.12.1.

Of priuate admonishings, which is the first foundation of the discipline of the Church. 4.12.2.

Of the Ecclesiasticall Senate, that is to say, the Seniors or Elders, which together with the Bishops haue the ouersight of manners. 4.3.8.

Of the power of binding and loosing so much as pertaineth to discipline, wherein there is spoken of Excommunication 4.11.2.

This power of the Church is distinct from the ciuill power, and the one is a helpe to the other. Therfore the opinion of some men is false which thinke that it ought to haue no place where are christian magistrates. 4.11.1.3.8.

This is a staied and continuall order in the Church, and not enduring only for a time. 4.11.4.

The ends which the Church hath regard vnto in corrections and Excommunication. 4.12.5.

Of exercising the discipline of the Church according to the proportion of sinnes, forasmuch as some be priuate and some be publike, some be negligent defaults, some be hainous offences. 4.12.3.4.6.

In excommunication seuerity ought to be tempered. And in this behalfe is noted the extreme rigorousnesse of them in old time. 4.12.8.

Euery priuate man ought to esteeme them that be excommunicate as strangers from the Church, but not to accompt them past hope, but to endeuor to the vttermost of their power to bring them into the way again. 4.12.9.10.

If the bench of Elders doe not so diligently correct faults as they ought, or if the Pastors cannot amend all things as they would, yet priuate men ought not to depart from the Church neither ought the Pastors to shake off their ministery. 4.12.11.

Against the precisenesse of the old Donatists and of the Anabaptists of our daies, which do acknowledge no congregation of Christ, but where there is in euery point an Angelike perfection. 4.12.12.

If the corruption of any sinne haue infected the whole multitude, the rigorousnesse of discipline must be tempered with mercy, least the whole body be destroied. 4.12.13.

F

Faith.

THe name of faith otherwise taken among holy writers than it is among the prophane. 4.22.13.

How it is to be vnderstood that God is the obiect of faith. 2.6.4.

Of faith. And here the Sophisters are reproued, which vnderstand nothing else by this word faith, but a common assent to the history of the Gospell, and doe simply call God the obiect of faith, in the meane time leauing out Christ, without whom there is no faith, nor any accesse to God. 3.2.1.

A confutation of the Schoole mens doctrine concerning vnexpressed faith, whereas faith requireth an expresse reknowledging of the goodnes of God, in which standeth our righteousnesse. 3.2.2.

Our faith, so long as we are wauering in the world, is enwrapped with many remnants of ignorance, and in all things infidelity is euer mingled with faith, whereof many examples are seene in the disciples of Christ before that they came to perfect light, yet this is still most true, that vnderstanding is euer ioined with faith. 3.2.3.4.

There is a certaine obedience to Christ, and aptnesse to learne, with a desire to profit, which is called by the name of faith, whereas it is but a preparation to faith, and that same may be called an vnexpressed faith: yet it far differeth from the Papists inuention. 3.2.5.

The true faith or knowledge of Christ, is when we conceiue him in such sort as he is offered of the father, that is to say, clothed with his Gospell. And faith hath a mutuall relation to the word and the word to faith, because the word is the fountaine of faith, the ground of faith, and the mirror in which faith beholdeth God. 3.2.6.

Faith, although it assent to all the parts of the word of God, yet most properly it hath regard therin to the good will and mercy of God, that is to say, the promises of grace grounded vpon Christ, for the vnderstanding and certainty whereof, the holy Ghost lightneth our minds and strengthneth our harts: Hereupon is gathered the definition of faith. 3.2.7.

A confutation of the Sophisters distinction of Faith, formed and formeleſſe: whereby it appeareth that they neuer thought of the ſingular gift of the holy Ghoſt, for as much as Faith can in no wiſe be ſeuered from a godly affection. 3.2.8.

This word faith hath diuerſe ſignifications and is ſometime taken for the power to doe myracles, with which gift of God, ſometime the wicked are endued: Sometime it is figuratiuely taken for that knowledge of God which is in ſome wicked men, which is rather a ſhadow and image of Faith, of which faith there are diuers ſorts in them. 3.2.9.10.

The reprobate haue alſo ſometime ſuch a like feeling as the elect haue, yet they doe not fully conceiue the force of ſpirituall grace, but only confuſedly. Neuertheleſſe the ſame is a certaine inferiour working of the holy Ghoſt. But this feeling differeth far from the peculiar teſtimony which he giueth to the elect. 3.2.11.

Yet is not the Spirit deceitfull, which lightly ſprinkleth the reprobate ſometime with ſuch a knowledge of the Goſpell, and feeling of the loue of God as afterward doth vaniſh away. Sometime alſo there is ſtirred vp in their hearts a certaine deſire of mutual loue toward God, but ſuch a loue as is a hyred and not a harty loue. At length it is concluded that there be ſome which doe not faigne a faith, and yet do lacke the true faith. Which is alſo prooued by teſtimonies. 3.2.12 and ſuch a feeling is in the Scripture called faith, although it be vnproperly ſo called. 3.2.13.

Faith is ſometime taken for the ſound doctrine of religion, and the whole ſumme thereof: contrariwiſe ſometime it is reſtrained to ſome particular obiect, and ſometime it ſignifieth the miniſtery of the Church. 3.2.13.

Faith is moſt rightfully called knowledge and ſcience, and yet is ſuch a knowledge as rather conſiſteth of certaine perſwaſion than of vnderſtanding, for as much as that which our minde conceiueth by faith is moſt infinite. 3.2.14.

Faith is not content with a doubtfull opinion or a darke conceiuing, but requireth a full and ſetled aſſuredneſſe: and hereunto are to be referred all thoſe titles of commendation wherewith the holy Ghoſt ſetteth foorth the authority of the word of God. 3.2.15.

Many doe ſo conceiue the mercy of God, that they receiue very little comfort thereof, becauſe they doubt whether he will be merciſull to themſelues or no: but there is a farre other feeling of the aboundant ſtore of Faith, the chiefe ground whereof is that we doe not thinke the promiſes to be true without our ſelues onely, but rather that by inwardly imbracing them we may make them our owne. Hereupon is gathered, who may truely be called faithfull. 3.2.15.16.

Though the faithfull in reknowledging the goodneſſe of God toward them are not only oftentimes tempted with vnquietneſſe, but alſo are ſometime ſhaken with moſt grieuous terrors: yet this withſtandeth not but that faith bringeth aſſuredneſſe with it becauſe howſoeuer they be troubled, yet they neuer fale and depart from that ſure affiance which they haue conceiued of the mercy of God, but ſtriuing with their owne weakneſſe they alwaies get the vpper hand at laſt: which is prooued by many examples in Dauid. 3.2.17.

A deſcription of the battell of the fleſh and the ſpirit within a faithfull ſoule. 3.2.18.

The aſſuredneſſe of Gods good will. 3.2.18.

A confutation of the moſt peſtilent ſubtill reaſoning of certaine halfe Papiſts, which although they confeſſe that ſo oft as we looke vpon Chriſt, we finde plentifull matter to hope well, yet will needes haue vs to wauer and doubt in conſideration of our owne vnworthineſſe. And it is prooued that we ought neuertheleſſe to looke for aſſured ſaluation, for as much as Chriſt by a certaine marueilous communion doth dayly grow together more and more into one body with vs. 3.2.24.

So ſoone as we haue any one drope of faith we begin to behold God mercifull vnto vs, although a far off in deed, yet with ſo aſſured ſight, as we know we are not deceiued: Both theſe points are prooued by teſtimonies of Paul. 3.2.19.20.

It is ſhewed by examples, how faith armeth and fortifieth it ſelfe with the word of God to beare the violent aſſaults of tentations, and how the godly minde neuer ſuffereth the affiance of Gods mercy to be plucked away from it, although it be aſſailed with many remnants of vnbeleefe and diſtruſt. 3.2.21.

In the good will of God: which faith is ſaid to haue reſpect vnto, although faith doe chiefly looke vnto the aſſured expectation of eternal life, yet there are alſo contained promiſes of this preſent life and a perfect ſurety of all good things, but the ſame ſuch as may be gathered of the word: both theſe points are confirmed by teſtimonies of Scripture. 3.2.28.

Faith although it embrace the word of God in euery point, that is to ſay, in the commandements dements also and in the prohibitions & threatnings, yet hath her foundation and proper marke whereunto it is directed, in the free promise of mercy. and for this reason the Gospell is called the word of faith, and is set as contrary to the law. 3.2.29.

Yet do we not by this distinction teare faith in sunder as Pighius shamefully cauilleth. 3.2.30.

Faith doth no lesse need the word of God, than the fruit doth need the liuely root of the tree, and with the word must be ioyned a consideratiō of the power of God, without the which mens eares will either not willingly, heare the word, or not esteeme it worthily. His power is to be considered: in that that it is effectuall, that is to say, by the workes of God, and by his benefits either particular or ancient, and such as he hath bestowed vpon the whole Church. 3.2.31.

The faithfull oftentimes so behaue themselues, that some errors are mingled with their faith, and they seeme to passe the bounds of the word, but yet so that faith hath alway the vpper hand: This is proued by the examples of Sara and Rebecca, whom in the crooked turnings of their minde, God did by a secret bridle hold fast in the obedience of his word. 3.2.31.

By reason of our blindnesse and stiffenecknes, the word sufficeth not to make vs haue faith, vnlesse the spirit of God doe enlighten our minde, and strengthen our heart with his power: and the same spirit is not onely the beginner of our faith, but also doth encrease it by degrees. 3.2.33.

Although it seeme to the most part of men a most strange doctrine, that no man can beleeue in Christ, but he to whom it is giuen, yet is prooued to be most true by reasons, testimonies of Scripture, and examples. 3.2.34.

Therefore faith is called the Spirit of Faith the worke and good pleasure of God: and it is a singular gift, which he giueth by singular priuiledge to whom he will, as it is prooued by notable sentences taken out of Augustine. 3.2.35.

It is not enough that the minde be enlightened with vnderstanding of the word, vnlesse also the assurednesse of the word be poured into the very heart, both which things the Spirit worketh, which is therfore called the seale, the pledge, and the spirit of promise. 3.2.36.

Although faith be tossed with diuers doubtings, yet it alway at the least, escapeth out of the gulfe of tentations, and receiueth most sweet quietnesse. 3.2.37.

A confutation of the damnable doctrine of the Schoolemen, which say that we can none otherwise determine of the grace of God toward vs, than by morall coniecture. 3.2.38.

They are prooued to be miserably blinde, in saying that it is rashnesse for vs to conceiue an vndoubted knowledge of the will of God: A good comparison of them and Paul in this point of doctrine. 3.2.39.

A confutation of their trifling shift that although we may take vpon vs to iudge of the grace of God according to the present state of righteousnes, yet the knowledge of persevering to the end abideth in suspence. 3.2.40.

It is prooued that the definition of faith taught in this chapter, Sect. 7. agreeth with the Apostles definition: Heb. cap. 11. And the error of the schoolemen, that charity is before faith and hope, is confuted by the testimonie. of Bernard. 3.2.41.

Hope is alway engendered of faith, and is the vndiuided companion of faith, so that whosoeuer lacketh hope, is prooued also to haue no faith. Also faith is nourished and strengthened by hope and how necessary are the helpes of hope to stablish faith which is assailed with so many sorts of tentations. 3.2.42.

By reason of this conioyning and alliance of faith and hope, the scripture doth many times vse those two words without difference, and sometime ioyneth them together. Feare.

The faithfull are oftentimes troubled with Feare and distrust by reason of the feeling of their owne weakenesse. 3.2.17.

Another kinde of Feare conceiued in a godly heart, either by examples of Gods vengeance against the wicked, or by consideration of his owne misery: Such feare is so much not contrary to faith, that the faithfull are much exhorted to haue it. Neither is it any maruell, if there be in a faithfull soule both feare and faith sith on the other side in the wicked there are both dull negligence and carfulnesse. 3.2.22.23.

The feare of God proceedeth out of a double feeling, namely when we honour God as our father, and feare him as our Lord: Neither is it any maruell if one minde haue both those affections.

This feare differeth from the feare of the vnfaithfull, which they commonly call a seruile feare. 3.2.27.

Of forsaking of our selues.

The first beginning of framing our life after the rule set foorth in the law, is to consider that we are not at our owne liberty, but hallowed and dedicate to God. And therefore we ought to forsake our selues, and our owne reason (which as the Philosophers thinke, ought alone to be obeied) to the end that we may be gouerned by the word and Spirit of the Lord. 3.7.1.

Also that we ought not to seeke those things that are our owne, but those things that are according to the will of the Lord, and doe serue to aduance his glory. And that this is the forsaking of our selues, without the which there is a world of vices enclosed in the soule of man, and if there be any seeming of vertue at all, the same is corrupted with wicked desire of glory. 3.7.2.

The forsaking or mortifying of our selues, is partly in respect of men, and partly, yea, and chiefely in respect of God. Toward other men, the scripture commandeth vs to do two things: namely to preferre them in honour before our selues, and with vnfained truth to employ our selues wholy to procure their commodities. How the first of these points is to be performed is taught in the. 3.4.7. and also how the scripture leadeth vs by the hand to the second point is shewed in the. 3.7.5.

Free will.

Man was endued with Free wil in the first estate of his creation. 1.15.8. which he lost by his fall. Of this the Philosophers were ignorant, and so all such, as follow them, giuing free will to man, are vtterly deceiued. 1.15.8.

The pliableneſſe or weake power of free wil, which was in the first man, doth not excuse his fall. 1.15.8.

It is as well for our profit, as for the glory of God, to acknowledge all our strength to be but a staffe made of a reede, yea, but a smoake. In the meane time we must beware, that while we take all vprightnesse from man, we doe not thereof take occasion of slothfulnesse. But rather we ought thereby to be stirred vp to seeke in God all the goodnesse whereof we our selues are void. The defenders of free will doe rather throw it downe headlong than stablish it. 2,2.1.

The Philosophers determine three powers of the soule. Understanding, Sense, and Will or Appetite: and they thinke that the reason of mans vnderstanding sufficeth for his good gouernance: that will is by sense moued to euill, so that it doth hardly yeeld it selfe to reason, and sometime is diuersly drawen from the one to the other, but yet that it hath a free election and cannot be stopped, that it may follow reason her guide in all things: finally that vertues and vices are in our powers. 2.2.2.3.

The Ecclesiasticall writers, although they acknowledged the soundnesse of vnderstanding and the freedome of will to haue beene sore wounded by sinne, yet haue spoken too much Philosophically of this matter. The old writers did it for this purpose, first because they were loth to teach a thing that should be an absurdity in the common iudgement of men, and also specially least they should giue a new occasion of slothfulnesse to the flesh being already too much dull to godlinesse, as appeareth by many sayings of Chrysostome and Hierom. The Greeke doctours aboue all other, and especially Chrysostome, doe exceed measure in aduan- aduancing free will. But all the old writers generally, except Augustine, doe so vary and wauer in this point of doctrine, that there can almost no certainty be gathered of their writings. They which came after them, fell one after another to worse and worse. The definitions of freewill out of Origen, Augustine, Bernard, Anselme, Peter Lombard, and Thomas. 2.2.4.

In what things they do commonly giue free-will to man, and of the three sorts of mans will. 2.2.5.

Also of the common distinction of the three sorts of liberty. 2.2.5.

Whether man be wholly deprined of power to do good, or whether he haue yet some power though it be weake: where it is spoken of the common distinction of grace working and grace working together, and what is amisse in the same distinction. 2.2.6.

Forasmuch as it can not otherwise be said that man hath free will, but because he doth euill of his owne will, and not by compulsion, it had been very good for the Church that this word freewill had neuer been vsed, which had raised vp men to a damnable trust of themselues. The old writers also do oft declare what they meane by that word, specially Augustine, out of whom there are many places alleadged, where he weakneth and mocketh the strength thereof, both when he calleth it Bondwill, and when he expoundeth the thing it selfe as it is at large. 2.2.7 8.

Although the old Ecclesiasticall writers do sometime too much aduance freewill, and haue spoken doubtfully and diuersly in that matter: yet it appeareth by very many of their sayings, that they little or nothing esteeming mans power, gaue the whole praise of all goodnesse to the holy Ghost. Many such sentences are rehearsed out of Cyprian, Augustine, Eucherius, Chrysostome. 2.2.9.

The power of mans will is not to be weighed by the successe of things, but by the choise of iudgement and the affection of will. 2.4.8.

It is proued against the defenders of free-will that sinne is of necessity, and yet neuertheless ought to be imputed: also that it is voluntary, and yet cannot be auoided. 2.5.1.

A solution of another obiection of theirs, where they say that vnlesse both vertues and vices proceed of free election of will, it were no reason that man should either be punished or rewarded. 2.5.2.

Also another obiection, where they say that if this were not the power of our will, to choose good or euill, then of necessity either all men should be good, or all men euill. 2.5.3.

Against the same men also it is proued that exhortations, admonitions, and rebukings are not in vaine, although it be not in the power of the sinner to obey: and there is shewed what effect the same do worke both in the wicked and in the faithfull. 2.5.4.5.

It is not to be gathered by the commandements and law of God, that man hath free will and strength to performe them, for God doth not only command what ought to be done, but also promiseth grace to obey. 2.5.6.7 9.

This is prooued as well in the commandements which require the first conuersion to God, as also in those which speake simply of the obseruing of the law, and those which command men to continue in the receiued grace of God. For the same God which requireth those things, doth testifie that the conuersion of a sinner, holinesse of life, stedfastnesse of continuance, are his free gifts, and the praise thereof is not to be parted between God and man. 2.5.8.9.11.

The conditionall promises, as, if ye will, if ye heare, and such like, doe not proone that there is in man a free power of willing or hearing: yet it is proued that God doth not mocke men in so bargaining with them. Also what is the vse of such protestations, both toward the godly and toward the vngodly. 2.5.10.

The reprochings, wherein God saith to his people that they were the cause that they receiued not all kind of good things at his hand, doe not proone that it was mans power to escape the euils wherewith they were afflicted. And there is spoken of the vse of such reprochings as well toward them that obstinatly goe forward in their faults, as toward the conformable that are conuerted to repentance. Also whereas the Scripture doth sometime giue to vs the office of doing, it doth so for no other reason but to awaken the slothfulnesse of the flesh. 2.5.11.

The saying of Moses, The commandement is neere to thee, in thy mouth, and in thy heart, &c. maketh nothing for the defenders of free will, forasmuch as he there speaketh not of the bare commandements, but of the Euangelicall promises of the Law. 1.5.12.

No more doe those places make for them, where it is said that the Lord looketh and watcheth to see what men will doe. 2.5.13.

Chriſt, although he were knowen to the Iewes in the time of the law, was yet ſhewed in deed only by the Goſpell: and the holy Fathers taſted of that grace, which is now offered to vs with full abundance: they ſaw the day of Chriſt albeit with a dim ſight, the glory whereof now ſhineth in the Goſpell, without any vaile between vs and it. 2. 9. 1. 2.

In the ſame place alſo is ſhewed, that the Goſpell is properly and ſpecially called the publiſhing of the grace giuen in Chriſt, and not the promiſes that are written by the Prophets concerning the remiſſion of ſins. The holy Ghoſt is the bond wherewith Chriſt doth effectually bind vs to him, and without it, all that Chriſt hath ſuffered and done for the ſaluation of mankind, doth nothing profit vs. 3. 1. 1. 3.

Chriſt came after a ſingular maner furniſhed with the holy Ghoſt, to ſeuer vs from the world, and therefore he is called the Spirit of ſanctification. Why he is ſometime called the Spirit of the Father, and ſometime the Spirit of the Sonne. He is called the Spirit of Chriſt, not only in reſpect that Chriſt is the eternall word, but alſo according to his perſon of Mediator. 3. 1. 2.

Faith is the chiefe worke of the holy Ghoſt, and therefore to it for the moſt part are all thoſe things referred which are commonly found in the Scripture to expreſſe the force and effectuall power of the holy Ghoſt. 3. 1. 4.

There is no danger least man ſhould take too much from himſelfe, ſo that hee learne that which wanteth in himſelfe is to be recouered in God. It is a diueliſh word, although it bee ſweete to vs, that lifteth vp man in himſelfe: for repulſing whereof, there are recited out of the Scripture many weighty ſentences, which do rigorouſly throw downe man: and alſo there are recited certaine promiſes, which doe promiſe grace to none but to them that doe pine away with feeling of their owne pouertie. 2.2.10.

The Papiſts are ſo perſwaded as the Heathen and the Idolatrous Iewes were, that they worſhip God himſelfe vnder Images. 1.11.10. Neither can they eſcape away with their diſtinction of ſeruice and worſhip. 1.11.11.16. and 1.12.2.

Iustification of Faith.

The article of doctrine concerning the Iustification of Faith is of great importance. 3.11.1.

It is prooued by the Scripture against the Sophisters, that this is a sure principle, that we are iustified by faith onely. 3.11.19.20.

It is prooued by testimonies of Scripture, that the righteousnesse of faith is reconciliation with God, which consisteth only vpon the remission of sinnes. 3.11.21.22.

By the onely intercession or meane of the righteousnesse of Christ, we obtaine to be Iustified before God. 3.11.23.

That we may be throughly perswaded of the free Iustification, wee must lift vp our mindes to the Iudgement seate of God: before which, nothing is acceptable but that which is whole and perfect in euery behalfe, the dreadfull maiestie whereof is described by many places of Scripture. 3.1.2.12.

All godly writers do shew that when men haue to do with God, the only place of refuge for conscience is in the free mercy of God, excluding all trust of works: And this is proued by testimonies of Augustine and Bernard. 3. 12. 3.

Two things are to be obserued in free Iustification: the first, that the Lord keepe fast his glory vnminished: which is done when he alone is acknowledged to be righteous, for they glory against God, which glory in themselues. 3. 13. 1. 2. the second, that our consciences may haue quietnesse in the sight of his iudgement. 3. 13. 3. 4. 5.

He that walketh in vprightnes is righteous. 3. 17. 15.

An exposition of certaine places, wherein the faithfull doe boldly offer their righteousnesse to the iudgement of God to be examined, and pray to be iudged according to the same, and it is prooued that this disagreeth not with the free iustification of Faith. 3. 7. 14.

The saying of Christ, If thou wilt enter into life, keepe the commandements, disagreeth not with the free iustification of faith. 3. 18. 9.

Knowledge of God.

To know God, is not only to conceiue that there is some God, but to vnderstand so much as behoueth vs to know of him, and so much as auaileth for his glory, and is expedient. 1. 2. 1.

The Knowledge of God ought to tend to this end, first to frame vs to feare and reuerence: and then that by it guiding and teaching vs we may learne to aske all good things of him, and to account the same receiued at his hand. 1. 2. 2. & 1. 5. 8.

The Philosophers had no other Knowledge of God than that which made them vnexcusable, but did not bring them to the truth. 2. 2. 18.

This perswasion is naturally planted in all men, that there is some God. 1. 2. 3. and that to this end, that they which doe not worship him, may be condemned by their owne iudgement. 1. 3. 1.

Though all men know by nature that there is a God, yet some become vaine in their superstitions, and other some of set purpose doe maliciously depart from God. 1. 4. 1.

Lawe.

The Law, that is to say, the forme of religion set foorth by Moses, was not giuen to hold the old people still in it, but to nourish in their hearts the hope of saluation in Christ vntill his comming. which is prooued by this that Moses repeateth the mention of the couenant: and by the order of the ceremonies appointed as well in Sacrifices as in washings, also by the office of Priesthood of the tribe of Leui and the honour of kingdome in Dauid and his posteritie. The Lawe also of the ten commaundements was giuen to prepare men to seeke Christ. 2. 7. 1. 2. and that is done, when it maketh vs vnexcusable being being on euery side conuicted of our sinnes, to moue vs to seeke for pardon of our guiltinesse. 2.7.3.4.

It is prooued by the Scripture and declared that the obseruing of the law is impossible. 2. 7.5.

There are three vses and offices of the morall Law: The first is, that shewing vnto vs the righteousnesse which only is acceptable vnto God, it may be as a glasse for vs, wherein we may behold our weaknesse, and by it our wickednesse, and finally by them both our accursednesse: Neither turneth this to any dishonor of the Law, but maketh for the glory of the bountifulnesse of God, which both with helpe of grace aideth vs to doe that which we are commanded, and by mercy putteth away our offences. Neither yet doth this office altogether cease in the reprobate. 2.7.6.7.8 9.

The second office, is to restraine the reprobate with feare of punishment, least they vnbrideledly commit the wickednesse which inwardly they alway nourish and loue: and also to draw backe the children of God before their regeneration from outward licentiousnesse. 2. 7.10 11.

The third office, concerneth the faithfull: for the Law although it be already written with the finger of God in their harts, yet profiteth them two wates: For by studying vpon it they are more confirmed in the vnderstanding of the will of the Lord, and are stirred vp and strengthned to obedience, that they goe not out of kind by the sluggishnesse of the flesh. 2.7.12. 13. For as touching the curse of the Law, it is taken away from the faithfull, that it can no more extend it selfe against them in damning and destroying them. 2.7.14.

By the ten commandements of the Law we learne the same things which we but slenderly tast by instruction of the law of nature: First that we owe to God reuerence, loue, and feare, that righteousnesse pleaseth him, and wickednesse displeaseth him: finally, that examining our life by the rule of the Law, we are vnworthy to be accounted among the creatures of God, and that our power is vnsufficient, yea no power at all to performe the law. Both these points engender in vs humility and abasing of our selues, which teacheth vs to flee to the mercy of God, and to craue the helpe of his grace. 2.8.1.2.3.

For asmuch as God the Law maker is spirituall, that is to say, speaketh as well to the soule as to the body, therefore the law likewise requireth not only an outward honesty, but also an inward and spirituall righteousnesse and a very angelike pureness. 2.8.6. which is prooued by Christs owne exposition, when he confuted the Pharisies wrong interpretation, which required only a certaine outward obseruation of the law. 2.8.7.

There is alway more in the commandements and prohibitions of the law, than is expressed. Therefore for the right and true expounding of them, it behoueth to waigh what is the intent or end of euery of them: Then from that which is commanded or forbidden, we must draw an argument to the contrary, that we may vnderstand, that not only an euill is forbidden, but also the good is commanded which is contrary to that euill. 2. 8.8.9.

Why God spake by way of emplied comprehending, in setting foorth the forme of his commandements. 2.8.10.

Of the diuision of the ten commandements, and how many commandements are to be appointed to the first table, and how many to the second. 2.8.12.50.

An exposition of the commandements of God: Where is declared that the Lord is the beginning of the Law, to stablish his owne maiesty, vseth three arguments: First by challenging to himselfe the soueraigne power and right of dominion ouer vs, he doth as it were by necessity draw vs to obey him: secondly he alloureth vs with the sweetnesse of the promise of grace: thirdly he mooueth vs to obedience with rehearsell of the benefit that we haue receiued. 2.8.13.14.15.

The Lawe teacheth not onely certaine introductions and principles of righteousnesse, but the very accomplishment thereof, the expressing of the image of God, and the perfection of holinesse: which Law is all contained in two points, that is to say, the loue of God and of our neighbour. 2.8.51.

Lawes Politicke.

Neither can Lawes be without the Magistrate, nor the Magistrate without Lawes. A confutation of them which say that a common weale is not well ordered, vnlesse it be gouerned by the politicke Lawes of Moses. For this purpose is rehearsed a diuision of the Lawes of Moſes into morall Lawes, ceremonies, and iudiciall Lawes, and the end of euery one of them being diſcuſſed, it is prooued that it is lawfull for euery ſeuerall nation to make politicke Lawes, 4.20.14.15. ſo that they agree with that naturall equity, the reaſon whereof is ſet foorth in the moral Law of Moſes. Therfore it is ſhewed by examples that they may alter the ordinances of penalties according to the diuerſity of the country, time, and other circumſtances. 4.20.16.

Lying.

An expoſition of the ninth commandement, wherein the Lord forbiddeth falſehood, wherwith we by Lying or backbyting, doe hurt any mans good name, or hinder his commodity. 2.8.47.

We many times ſinne againſt this commandement, although we doe not Lie. But in this point there muſt be a difference wiſely made betweene the ſlandering which is here condemned, and iudicial accuſation or rebuking, which is vſed vpon deſire to bring to amendment. 2.8.48.

Life of a Chriſtian man.

The Law containeth a rule how to frame a mans Life, and diuers places alſo of the Scripture do here and there declare it, and not without an orderly manner of teaching, although not ſo exquiſite and curious as the Philoſophers do. 3.6.1.

Herein the Scripture doth two things: it ſtirreth vs vp to the loue of righteouſneſſe and teacheth a rule how to follow the ſame. The firſt point it worketh by diuers arguments and reaſons. 3.6.2. and heerein the Scripture layeth much better foundations, than can be found in all the bookes of the Philoſophers. 3.6.3.

Againſt them that pretend a knowledge of Chriſt, when there life and manners reſemble not the doctrine of Chriſt. 3.6.4.

Though perfection were to be wiſhed in all men, yet we muſt alſo acknowledge for Chriſtians the moſt part of men which haue not yet proceeded ſo farre. We muſt alway endeuour forward, and not deſpaire for the ſmaleneſſe of our profiting. 3.6.5.

Out of a place of Paul theſe are gathered to be the parts of a well framed Life: conſideration of the grace of God, forſaking of wickedneſſe and of worldly luſts, ſoberneſſe, righteouſneſſe, godlineſſe, (which ſignifieth true holineſſe) and the bleſſed hope of immortality. 3.7.3.

Life preſent, and the helpes thereof.

The Scripture teacheth the beſt way how to vſe the goods of this Life. 3.10.4.5.

God both in clothing and in food prouided not onely for our neceſſity, but alſo for our delight. 3.10.2.

It is moſt neceſſary, that euery one of vs in all the doings of his Life do looke vpon his vocation, that we attempt nothing raſhly with doubtfull conſcience. 3.10.6.

Life to come.

God doth by diuers myſteries teach vs the contempt of this preſent Life, that we may earneſtly deſire Life to come. 3.9.1.2.4.

Such a contempt of this life is required of vs, that we neither hate it nor be vnthankefull to God, of whoſe clemency it is a teſtimony to the faithfull 3.9.3.

An admonition to them which are holden with two much feare of death, that Chriſtians ought rather to deſire that day which ſhal make an end of their continuall miſeries, and fill them with true ioy. 3.9.5.6.

And there ſhall be an equal meaſure of glory to all the children of God in heauen. 3.25.10.11. M Magistrates.

The office of Magistrates is not onely holy and lawfull before God, but also the most holy and honorable degree in all the life of men, and this is prooued by diuerse titles wherewith the Scripture doth set it foorth, and by the examples of holy men which haue borne ciuill power. 4.20.4.

This consideration is a pricke to godly Magistrates to moone them to the doing of their dutie and also it is a comfort to ease the hard trauels of their office, 4.20.6.

A confutation of them, which say that though in the olde time vnder the law Kings and Iudges ruled ouer Gods people, yet this seruile kind of gouernment doth not agree with the perfection which Christ hath brought with his Gospell. 4.20.5.7.

They erre which exclude the Magistrates from the charge of religion, forasmuch as their office extendeth to both the tables of the law. It is prooued by Scripture, that they are ordained Protectors & defenders as wel of the worshipping of God as of common peace and honestie, which they cannot throughly performe without the power of the sword. 4.20.9.

A declaration of this question by Scripture, how the Magistrates may bee godlie and also draw their swords, and shed the blood of men, and it is prooued, that they are so farre from sinning in punishing offenders, that this is one of the vertues of a King, and a proofe of their godlinesse. Herein the Magistrates must beware of two faultes namely extreme rigorousnesse, and superstitious desire of pitie. 4.20.10.

It is the duetie of subiects towards Magistrates to thinke honorablie of them as of the Ministers and Deputies of God, forasmuch as concerneth their degree, but not that they should esteeme the vices of men for vertues. 4.20.22.

It is also their duetie with mindes hartily bent to the honouring of them to declare their obedience toward them, whether it bee in following their decrees or in paying of tributes, &c. to pray to God for their safetie and prosperitie, to raise no tumults and not to thrust themselues into the office of the Magistrate. 4.20.23.

Euen wicked Princes of euill life, and which rule tyrannously (forsomuch as pertaineth to publicke obedience) ought to be had in as great reuerence and honor as we would giue to the best King that might be. 4. 20. 24. 25. because euen they also haue the publicke power not without the prouidence and singular power of God. Which is prooued by diuerse testimonies and examples of Scripture: and there is shewed with what considerations those subiects ought to bridle their owne impatience which liue vnder such vngodly and wicked Tyrants. 4.20.26.27.28.29.31.

It is not lawfull for priuate men to rise vp against Tyrants, but onely for them which by the lawes of the Kingdome or of the country, are the defenders of the libertie of the people. 4.20.31.

The Lord by his maruellous goodnesse and prouidence, doth sometime raise vp some of his seruants to punish Tyrants, and sometime also hee directeth thereunto the rage of wicked men while they intend another thing. 4.20.30.

In the obedience which is due to the commandements of Kings and Rulers this is alway to be excepted, that it draw vs not away from the obedience of God. Neither is any wrong done to them when we refuse to obey them in such things as they command against God: And this is our duetie, how great and present perill soeuer doe hang vpon such constancie. 4.20.32.

Man.

Man is by knowledge of himselfe not only moued to seeke God, but also led as it were by the hand to finde him. 1.1.1.

The creation of Man is a notable shew of the power, wisedome, and goodnesse of God: Wherefore Man is by some of the Philosophers called a little world. 1.5.3.

The vnthankefulnesse of men which feeling tokens of the prouidence of God both in their Soule and bodie, yet doe not giue God praise. 1.5.4.

Two sorts of knowledge of our selues, the one in our first Originall estate, the other after Adams fall, and the latter is not to be receiued without considering the first, least we should seeme to impute corruption to God the Author of nature. 1.15.1.

The knowledge of himselfe is most necessarie for Man, which consisteth in this (as the truth of God prescribeth) that first considering to what end he is created and endued with excellent gifts, he should hang altogether vpon God, of whom hee hath all things by giſt: then, that weighing his owne miſerable eſtate after the fall of Adam, he ſhould truely loath himſelf and conceiue a new deſire to ſeeke God, that in him he may recouer theſe good things, of which he himſelfe is found vtterly voide and empty. Wherefore we muſt beware that in this point we harken not to the iudgement of the fleſh and to the bookes of Philoſophers, which while they with hold vs in conſidering onely our good things, would carry vs awaie into a moſt wicked ignorance of our ſelues 2.1.1.2.3.

Man can neuer come to the true knowledge of himſelfe, vnleſſe he haue firſt beholden the face of God, that is to ſay, till he haue begon to know and weigh by the word of God what and how exact is the perfection of his righteouſneſſe, wiſedome, and power, to the which we ought to be made of like forme. 1.1.2.

Euen the moſt holy men were ſtricken with feare and aſtoniſhment, when God did extraordinarily ſhew his preſence and glory vnto them. 1.1.3.

That whole Man is corrupted in both parts of him (that is to ſay both in vnderſtanding, minde, and in heart or wil) is prooued by diuers titles wherewith the ſcripture deſcribeth him, ſpecially when it ſaith that he is fleſh: And there is declared that this word fleſh is not referred onely to the ſenſuall part but alſo to the ſuperiour part of the ſoule. 2.3.1,

That men doe in vaine ſeeke for any good thing in their owne nature, is prooued by Paul, which intreting of the vniuerſal kindred of the children of Adam, and not rebuking the corrupted maners of ſome one age alone but accuſing the perpetuall corruption of nature, taketh from men righteouſnes, that is to ſay, vprightneſſe and pureneſſe, and then vnderſtanding, and laſt of all the feare of God. 2.3.2.

A confutation of the obiection concerning certaine Heathen men, which foraſmuch as they were all their life long by the guiding of nature bent to the endeuour of vertue and honeſty, do ſeeme to warne vs, that we ſhould not eſteem the nature of Man, altogether corrupt. Therefor it is declared that in the vnbeleeuers God doth not inwardly cleanſe the corruption of nature wherewith Man is in each part defiled, (as he doth in the elect) but by this prouidence ſometime he bridleth it in them, that it breake not foorth into deeds, and reſtraineth it by diuers waies, ſo much as he knoweth to be expedient for preſerning of the vniuerſall ſtate of things. 2.3.3.

Thoſe vertues which we read to haue been in heathen Men, are not ſufficient proofes of the pureneſſe of nature, for as much as their minde was inwardly not vpright, being corrupted with ambition or ſome other poiſon, and not directed with deſire to ſet foorth the glory of God: and alſo for as much as thoſe vertues are not the common giſts of nature, but the ſpecial graces of God, which he diuerſly and by a certaine meaſure giueth to prophane Men, as oftentimes to Kings, and ſometime to priuate Men. 2.3.4.

See Image of God in Man.

Mariage.

An expoſition of the ſeuenth commandement, wherein the Lord forbiddeth fornication and requireth chaſtity and cleanneſſe, which we ought to keepe and preſerue both in our minde, and in our eies, and in the apparell of our body, and in our tongue, and in the moderate vſe of meat and drinke. 2.8.41.44.

Continence is a ſingular gift of God, which he giueth not to all men, but to ſome, yea and that ſometime for a ſeaſon: As for them to whom it is not granted, let them alway flee to Mariage, which is ordained of the Lord for the remedy of mans neceſſity. 2.8.41 42.43.

Maried perſons muſt beware that they commit nothing vnbeſeeming the honeſty and temperance of Mariage: Otherwiſe they ſeeme to be adulterers of their owne wiues, and not husbands. 2.8.44.

The Papiſts doe wrongfully call Mariage a Sacrament: And their reaſons are confuted. 4.19.34. It is prooued that the place of Paul, wherewith they ſeeke to cloke themſelues, maketh nothing for them. 4.19.35.

In the meane they diſagree with themſelues when they exclude Prieſts from this ſacrament, and do ſay that it is vncleanneſſe and defiling of the fleſh. 4.19.36.

By this falſe colour of Sacrament, the Pope with his Clergy haue drawen to themſelues the hearing of cauſes of Matrimony, and haue made lawes of mariage, which partly are manifeſtly wicked againſt God, and partly moſt vniuſt toward men, which lawes are reheerſed. 4.19.37.

Mediator Chriſt.

It behooued that Chriſt, to the end that he might might performe the office of Mediator, should be made man, forasmuch as God had so ordained, because it was best for vs, sith none other could be the meane for restoring of peace between God and vs, none other could make vs the children of God, none other could assure vnto vs the inheritance of the heauenly kingdome, none other could for remedy set mans obedience against mans disobedience. 2. 12. 1. 2. 3.

A confutation of their fantasticall conceit, which affirme that Christ should haue become man, although there had needed no remedy for the redeeming of mankind. And it is prooued by many reasons and texts, that forasmuch as the whole Scripture crieth out that he was cloathed with flesh, to the end that he might be the redeemer, therfore it is too great rashnesse to imagine any other cause or purpose. 2. 12. 4.

Neither is it lawfull to search further concerning Christ: and those that do search further, do with wicked boldnesse runne forward to the faigning of a new Christ: And herein Osiander is reprooued, which hath at this time renued this question, and affirmeth that this error is confuted by no testimony of Scripture. 2. 12. 5.

And the principle is ouerthrowen which he buildeth on, that man was create after the image of God, because he was formed after the likenesse of Christ to come, that he might resemble him whom the father had already decreed to cloath with flesh: And there is shewed that the image of God in Adam, was the marks of excellency wherewith God had garnished him, which doth also shine in the Angels. 2. 12. 6. 7.

A solution of other obiections or absurdities which the same Osiander feareth: namely, that then Christ was borne and create after the image of Adam but as it were by chance: and that the Angels should haue lacked their head, and men should haue lacked Christ their king. 2. 12. 6. 7.

How the two natures do make one person of the Mediator in Christ: Which is shewed by a similitude taken of the ioining of the soule and body in one man: And then it is prooued by diuers places that the Scripture doth many times giue vnto Christ those things which properly belongeth to the Godhead, and sometime those things which must be referred only to the manhood, and sometime giueth to the one nature that which is proper to the other: which figuratiue manner of speech is called communicating of properties. 2. 14. 1. 2. and sometime also giueth to Christ those things which do comprehend both natures together, but doe seuerally well agree with neither of them. Which last point the most part of the old writers haue not sufficiently marked: Yet it is good to be noted, for the dissoluing of many doubts, and for auoiding of the errors of Nestorius and Eutiches. 2. 14. 3. 4.

A confutation of the error of Seruetus, which had put in the stead of the sonne of God, an imagined thing made of the substance of Gods spirit, flesh, and three elements vncreat: His subtlety is disclosed, and there is prooued (which thing he denieth) that Christ was the sonne of God, euen before that he was borne in the flesh, because he is that word begotten of the father before all worlds. 2. 14. 5.

Also it is prooued that he is truly and properly the sonne of God in the flesh, that is to say in the nature of Man, but yet in respect of his Godhead, and not of his flesh, as Seruetus babbleth. 2. 14. 6.

An exposition of certaine places which Seruetus and his disciples do enforce for defence of their error: There is also another cauillation of his disclosed, that Christ before that he appeared in the flesh, is in no place called the son of God but vnder a figure. 2. 14. 7.

Also there is opened the error of all them which do not acknowledge Christ the Son of God but in the flesh: and there are briefly rehearsed the grosse subtleties of Seruetus, wherwith he hath bewitched himselfe and other, ouerthrowing that which pure faith beleeueth concerning the person of the sonne of God. And thereupon is gathered that with the crafty subtleties of that filthy dog, the hope of saluation is vtterly extinguished. 2. 14. 8.

Merit of Christ.

It is truly and properly said that Christ merited for vs the grace of God and saluation. Where it is prooued that Christ was not only the instrument or minister of saluation, but also the author and principall doer thereof: And in so saying, the grace of God is not defaced, because the merit of Christ is not set against mercy, but hangeth vpon it. And those things which are Subalterna, fight not as contraries. 2. 17. 1.

The distinction of the Merit of Christ and of the grace of God is prooued by many places of scripture. 2. 17. 2.

There are alleadged many testimonies of Scripture,

Scripture, out of which it is certainly and soundly gathered, that Christ by his obedience hath truly purchased and deserued fauour for vs with his Father. 2.17.3.4.5.

It is a foolish curiosity to enquire whether Christ hath deserued any thing for himselfe: and it is rashnesse to affirme it. 2.17.6.

Merits of workes.

The boastings that are made of the Merits of works, do ouerthrow as well the praise of God in giuing righteousnesse, as also the certainty of saluation. 3.15.1.

Whosoeuer first applied the name of Merit to good works in the sight of Gods iudgement, he did against the pureneſſe of Faith. And though the old Fathers vsed that name, yet they so vsed it that they haue in many places shewed that they attribute nothing to works. 3.15.2.

An exposition of certaine places, wherewith the Sophisters go about to proone that the name of Merit toward God is found in the Scripture. 3.15.4.

It is prooued by authority of the Apostles and Augustine, that the rewards of righteousnesse doe hang vpon the meere liberality of God. 2.5.2.

It is prooued that this is a false saying, that Christ Merited for vs only the first grace, and that afterward we doe Merit by our owne works. 3.15.6.7.

There be certaine things touching Merits in the title of Iustification by Faith.

Ministery of the Church.

Of the Ministery of the Church, and of them which despise this manner of learning. 4.1.5.

Of the efficacy of the Ministery. 4.5.6.

God, which might teach the Church either himselfe alone or by Angels, yet doth it by the Ministery of men for three causes. 4.3.1.

The Ministery of the Church is garnished with many notable titles of commendation in the Scripture. 4.3.2.3.

Of Apostles, Prophets, Euangelists, Pastors, and Teachers: and what is the seuerall office of euery of them. 4.3.45.

The chiefe parts of the office of Apostles and Pastors are to preach the Gospell, and Minister the Sacraments. 4.3.6.

Pastors are so bound to their Churches, that they may not remoone to any other place without publicke authority. 4.3.7.

They are called in the Scripture, Bishops, Priests, Pastors and Ministers which gouern Churches. 4.3.8.

No man ought to thrust in himselfe in the Church to teach or gouerne: But there is a calling required. 4.3.10.

The preaching of the word of God is compared to seed which is scattered in the ground: Whereby we vnderstand that the whole increase proceedeth of the blessing of God and the effectuall working of the holy Ghost. 4. 14.11.

What manner of men ought to be chosen Bishops, and in what sort and of whom they are to be chosen, and with what forme or ceremony they are to be ordered. 4.3.11.12.13.14. 15.16.

The old Church before the Papacy, diuided all their Ministers into three degrees, Pastors, Elders, and Deacons. 4.4.1.

Of the commission to remit and retaine sins, or to bind and loose, which is a part of the power of the keies, and pertaineth to the Ministery of the word. 4.11.1.

Monkery.

Monasteries in old time were the seed plots of Ecclesiasticall orders: And there is described out of Augustine the forme of the old Monkery, and how they were wont at that time to get their liuing with the labor of their hands. Whereby appeareth that at this day the manner of Popish Monkery is far otherwise. 4. 13.8.9.10.

Of the proude title of perfection wherwith the Monkes doset out their kind of life. 4.13. 11. because they bind themselues to keepe the counsels of the Gospell (as they call them) wherunto other Christian men are not bound. Sect. 12. and because they haue forsaken all their possessions. Sect. 13.

As many as go into Monasteries, do depart from the Church, sith they openly affirme that their Monkery is a forme of second Baptisme. 4.13.14.

The Popish Monkes do in maners much differ from the old Monkes. 4.13.15.

Some things are to be misliked euen in the profession of the old Monkery, and they that were the Authors thereof brought a perillous example into the Church. 4.13.16.

Monks with their vowes do consecrate themselues not to God but to the diuell. 4. 13.17.

As all vowes vnlawfull and not rightly made, are of no value before God, ſo they ought to be voide to vs. 4.13.20.

Therefore they which depart from Monkerie to ſome honeſt trade of life, are wrongfully accuſed of Faith breaking and periurie. 4.13.21.

Offences.

What offences are to be auoided, and what to be neglected: what is an Offence giuen, and what an offence taken. 3.19.11.

It is declared by the doctrine and example of Paul who be weake, to whom we muſt beware that we giue no Offence. 3.19.12.

Whereas we are commanded to beware that we Offend not the weake, the ſame is meant only in things indifferent: Therefore they doe wrongfully abuſe this doctrine which ſay that they heare Maſſe for the weakes ſake. 3.19.13.

Officials.

Of Popiſh Biſhops Officials, as they call them. 4.11.7.8.

Orders Papiſticall.

The Sacrament of Order breedeth to the Papiſts ſeuen other petie Sacraments, of whoſe names and differences they themſelues be not yet agreed. 4.19.22.

Their fond and vngodly fooliſhneſſe, foraſmuch as they make Chriſt fellow Officer with them in euery one of them. 4.19.23.

Of Acoluthes, Doore-keepers and Readers, whom the Papiſts doe make Orders of the Church and Sacraments, 3.19.24. and with what ceremonies they conſecrate them. Sect. 27.

Of Exorciſts or Coniurers an order of the Popiſh Church. 4.19.24.

The orders of Pſalmiſts, Doore-keepers and Acoluthes, are vaine names among the Papiſts, foraſmuch as they themſelues doe not execute the Offices, but ſome boy, or any layman. 4.19.24.

Of the ſhauing of the Cleargie, and the ſignification thereof by the doctrine of the Papiſts. 4.19.25.

They doe wrongfully apply it to Paules example, which ſhaued his head when he tooke a vow, or to the old Nazarites. 4.19.26.

It is ſhewed out of Auguſtine whence it firſt began. 4.19.27.

Of the three higher Orders: and firſt of Prieſthood or ſacrificerſhip: where is ſhewed that the Papiſts haue moſt wickedly peruerted the order appointed by God, and doe wrong to Chriſt the onely and eternall ſacrificing Prieſt. 4.19.28.

Of their blowing at the making of the Popiſh prieſts, and how in that ceremonie they doe wrongfully counterfait Chriſt: Where is declared that the Lord did many things which hee would not haue to be examples for vs to follow. 4.19.29.

Of the vndeleble charecter or vndefaceable marke of the oyle wherwith Popiſh Prieſts are anneinted at their creation. And how the ſame is wrongfully applied to the children of Aaron. But theſe Prieſts in coueting to be like the Leuites, are Apoſtataes from Chriſt. 4.19.30.31.

Originall Sinne.

A definition and expounding of Originall ſinne. 4.15.10.11.12.

A true definition of Originall and a declaration of the ſame definition: Wherein is ſhewed, that not onely puniſhment came from Adam vpon vs, but alſo that the infection diſtilled from him remaineth in vs, and how it is the ſinne of another and alſo our owne ſinne: Finally, that ſuch infection pearſed not onely into the inferiour deſire, but alſo into the very vnderſtanding minde and bottome of the hart, ſo that there is no part of the ſoule free from corruption. 2.1.8.9.

A confutation of them that dare charge God with their faults, because we say that men are naturally faulty: And there is proued, that man is corrupt by naturall vicionsnesse: (to the end that no man should thinke it to be gotten by euill custome) but yet such as proceeded not from nature, but is an accidentall quality, and not a substantial property from the beginning. 2.1.10.11.

Patience.

A part of the forsaking of our selues, in respect of God, is contentation of minde and sufferance: Which we shal performe, if in seeking the commodity or quietnesse of this present life wee yeeld our selues wholly to the Lord, and doe not desire, hope for, or thinke vpon any other meane of prospering than by his blessing. 3.7.8.

So shall it come to passe that we shall neuer seeke our owne commodities by vnlawfull meanes or with wronging of our neighbours: also that we shall not burne with vnmeasurable desire of riches or of honors: finally if things prosper wel with vs, we shal yet be holden from pride, and if they happen ill, we shall yet be restrained from impatience. 3.7.9. Which extendeth to all chances whereunto our present life is subiect, whereof the faithful doe alwaies acknowledge the hand of God their father, and not fortune, to be the gouernor. 3.7.10.

The Patience of the faithful is not such as is without all feeling of sorrow, but such as being vpholden by godly comfort, fighteth against the naturall feeling of sorrow. Therefore the Patience of the Stoikes is to be reiected: neither is it in it selfe any fault to weepe or feare. 3.8.8.9.

A discription of that striuing which is ingendred in the hearts of the faithful by the feeling of nature, which feeling cannot be cleane done away, and by the affection of godlinesse wherewith that same feeling must be subdued and tamed. 3.8.10.

There is a great difference betweene Philosophical and Christian patience. For asmuch as the Philosophers doe teach vs to obey because we so must of necessity: but Christ teacheth it, because it is righteous, and also because it is profitable for vs. 3.8.11.

Pardons.

The so long continuing of pardons declareth in how deepe darknesse of errours men haue beene drowned these certaine ages past. 3.5.1.

What pardons are by the Papists doctrine: Whereby is prooued that they are a dishonoring of the blood of Christ: A comparison of Christ and Popish pardons. 3.5.1.

A confutation of the wicked doctrine of pardons, by the notable saying of Leo Bishop of Rome, and of Augustine. And there is shewed that the blood of Martyres is not vnlawful, although it haue no place in forgiuenesse of sinnes. 3.5.3.4.

Either the Gospel of God must lie, or pardons must be lying deceits. And there is shewed what seemeth to haue been the beginning of them. 3.5.5.

Penance, the Popish Sacrament.

Of the vsage of the old Church in publicke penance: and of the laying on of hands at reconciliation. Also how in processe of time the laying on of hands was vsed in priuate absolutions. 4.19.14.

The diuers opinions of the Schoolemen how Penance is a Sacrament: And there is shewed that the definition of a Sacrament doth not agree with it. 4.19.15.16.

It is a lie, and a deceitful error which they haue inuented concerning the Sacrament of Penance: and it is a wicked and blasphemous title wherewith they haue garnished it, a second boord after ship-wracke from Baptisme. 4.19.17.

Perseuerance.

See booke 2. Chap. 5. Sect. 3.

A confutation of the most wicked error that Perseuerance is giuen of God according to the Merit of men, so as euery man hath shewed himselfe not vnthankefull for the first grace: and in this opinion is shewed a double error. Of the common distinction of grace working, and working together: and how Augustine vsed it, qualifying it with an apt definition. 2.3.11.

Politicke Gouernment.

There is a difference to be made betweene

Policy,

Policie, and the inward gouernment of the Soule. Their doctrine is to be reiected which goe about to ouerthrow Policie as a thing not neceſſarie for Chriſtians, or as a thing that ouerthroweth the ſpirituall libertie of the Soule. Alſo thoſe flatterers are to be reiected, which doe giue too much vnto it, and doe ſet it in compariſon againſt the authority of God. 4. 20. 1. 23.

Policy is the gift of God, which bringeth great commodities to mankind and no ſmall helpe to the defence of the ſtate of religion. Politicke gouernment hath three parts, the Magiſtrate, the Lawes and the People. 4. 20. 3.

Of the three formes of Ciuill gouernment, Ariſtocracy the gouernment of the beſt choiſeſt men Democracy the gouernement of the people, Monarchy the gouernment of one: it can not ſimply be determined which of theſe is the beſt: yet it commeth to paſſe by the fault of men, that it is ſafer and more tolerable to haue many to gouerne than one to raigne. But all theſe formes are of God, and diuerſly diſpoſed by him, therefore it is the duty of priuate men to obey, and not to make innouation of ſtates after their owne will. 4. 20. 8.

Of the immunity that the Romiſh Clergy take to themſelues, which was altogether vnknowen to the Biſhops of the old Church. 4. 11. 15.

In matters of Faith, the iudgement in the old time pertained to the Church and not to Princes, although ſometime princes entermedled their authority in eccleſiaſticall matters, but the ſame was done to preſerue and not to trouble the order of the Church. 4. 11. 15. 16.

Of the authority of the ſword vſurped by the Biſhops in the Papacy: and how they haue by little and little from ſo ſmall beginnings growen to ſo great encreaſe. 4. 11. 9. 10.

Pope.

It is prooued that the ſupremacy of the ſea of Rome is not by the inſtitution of Chriſt. 4. 6. 1. 2. 3. 4.

Neither had Peter any principality in the Church or among the Apoſtles. 4. 6. 5. 6. 7.

Neither is it profitable nor may be, that one man ſhould beare rule ouer the whole Church 4. 6. 8. 9. 10.

Although Peter had had a ſupremacy in the Church, yet it followeth not that the ſeat of that ſupremacy ought to be at Rome. 4. 6. 11. 12. 13.

It is prooued by many arguments that Peter was not Biſhop of Rome. 4. 6. 14. 15.

The ſupremacy of the ſea of Rom is not according to the vſe of the old Church. 4. 6. 16. 17.

The old Biſhops of Rome in the moſt part of their Epiſtles did ambitiouſly ſet foorth the glory of their ſea, but thoſe Epiſtles at that time had no credit. Alſo they did thruſt in certaine forged things as though they had beene written in the old time by holy men. 4. 7. 11. 20.

Although in the time of Gregorie, the authoritie of the Biſhop of Rome was greatly encreaſed, yet it is prooued by his writings that it was then far from vnbridled dominion and tyrannie. 4. 7. 12. 13. 22.

There was ſtrife for the ſupremacie betweene the Biſhop of Conſtantinople and the Biſhop of Rome. 4. 7. 14. 15. 16. vntill Phocas granted to Boniface the third, that Rome ſhould be the head of all Churches: which afterward Pipine confirmed, when he gaue to the Sea of Rome iuriſdiction ouer the Churches of France. 4. 7. 17.

Prayer.

True faith cannot be idle from calling vpon God. 3.20.

How necessarie and how many waies profitable is the exercise of praying, 3.20.2. although the Lord will not cease while wee craue not, nor needeth any to put him in minde. Sect. 2.

The first rule of well framing our praier, is that we bee no otherwise disposed in heart and minde than becommeth them that enter into talke with God. 3.20.4.5.

The second rule is, that in praying we alway feele our owne needinesse, and that earnestly considering that wee want all these things that wee aske, wee ioyne with our prayer an earnest and feruent desire to obtaine. 3.20.6.

Wee ought to pray at all times, and in the greatest quietnesse of our estates, the onely remembrance of our sinne ought to bee no small prouocation to mooue vs to that exercise. 3.20.7.

The third rule of praying well, is that wee forsake all confidence of our owne glory, least if we presumptuously take any thing, be it neuer so little, vnto our selues, we with our vaine pride, fall downe from his face. 3.20.8.

The beginning of praying well, is the obtaining of pardon, with an humble and plaine confession of offence. 3.20.9.

In what sense the prayers of certaine holy men are to be taken, in which to intreat God, they seeme to alleadge their owne righteousnes 3.20.10.

The fourth rule of praying well, is that being so ouerthrowen and beaten down with true humilitie: we be neuertheless encouraged to pray with an assured hope to obtaine: so in our praiers, faith and repentance doe meete together. 3.20.11.

Of the certainty of faith, whereby the faithfull doe determine that God is fauourable vnto them. And how necessarie the same is in praier: Neither is that certainty weakned, when it is ioyned with acknowledging of our owne misery. 3.20.12.

God commandeth vs to call vpon him: hee promiseth, that we shall be heard: both these things are necessary, that we may pray in faith 3.20.13.

There are rehearsed diuers promises of God with the sweetnesse whereof they that are not stirred vp to prayer, are altogether vnexcusable. 3.20.14.

An exposition of certaine places wherein God seemeth to haue assented to some mens prayers which yet were grounded vpon no promise. 3.20 15.

These fower rules of praying well, are not examined with so extreame rigor, but that God heerein doth beare with many infirmities, yea many intemperances in them that be his, which is prooued by many examples. 3.20.16.

We must alway pray in the name of Christ onely. 3.20.17. neither were the faithfull euer heard any otherwise. Sect. 18.

It is vnlawfull to direct our praiers to dead Saints, foraſmuch as this kind of worſhipping doth moſt properly belong to God alone. 3.20.27.

It is good that euery one of vs for exerciſe, appoint to himſelfe certaine peculiar houres to pray, ſo that it be done without ſuperſtitious obſeruation. 3.20.50.

Of perſeuerance and patience in the exerciſe of praier. 3.20.51.52.

Predeſtination.

It is prooued that the doctrine of Predeſtination is a doctrine of moſt ſweete fruit. There are rehearſed three principall profits thereof: and they are admoniſhed which being mooued with a certaine curioſitie do beyond the bounds of Scripture breake into the ſecrets of the wiſedome of God 3.1.1.2. and alſo they which would haue all mention of Predeſtination to be buried. Sect. 3.4.

What is Predeſtination, and what is the foreknowledge of God, and how the one of them is wrongfully ſet after the other. The example of Predeſtination in all the offspring of Abraham in reſpect of other nations, is confirmed by many teſtimonies of Scripture. 3.21.5.

Alſo there is ſhewed a ſpeciall Predeſtination, whereby euen among the children themſelues he hath made difference betweene ſome and other ſome. Sect. 6.7.

A definition of Predestination. 3.23.8.

A confutation of them which gather of the doctrine of Predestination, that God hath respect of persons. 3.23.10.11.

Against those hogs which vnder colour of Predestination doe goe carelesly forward in their sins: and against all them which say that if this doctrine take place, all endeuour of well working decaieth. 3.23.12.

Against them which say that this doctrine ouerthroweth all exhortations to godly life, it is prooued by Augustine that preaching hath his course, and yet the knowledge of Predestination is not hindered thereby. 3.23.13.

In this point of doctrine we must so temper our manner of teaching the truth, that so far as we may, we wisely beware of offence. 3.23.14.

Whereas some obey the preaching of the word of God, and other some despise it, or be more blinded and hardned thereby, although this come to passe by their owne malice and vnthankfulnesse, yet we must therewith also know, that this diuersity hangeth vpon the secret counsell of God, than which it is vnlawfull for to search for any further cause. 3.24.12.13.14.

An exposition of certaine places, wherein God seemeth to denie that it commeth to passe by his ordinance that the wicked perish, but in as much as against his will they wilfully bring destruction vpon themselues. And there is shewed that those places make nothing against the doctrine of Predestination. 3.24.15.16.

The vniuersalnesse of the promises of saluation, maketh nothing against the doctrine of the Predestination of the reprobate: and yet not without cause are they framed vniuersally. 3.24.16.

Here also are confuted certaine obiections of them which deny this point of doctrine.

Priesthood, Kingdome, and Propheticall office of Christ.

That we may know to what end Christ was sent of his father, and what he brought vnto vs, three things are chiefly to be considered in him, his Propheticall office, his Kingdome, and his Priesthood: and therefore is giuen to him the title of Christ (or Messias which signifieth annointed) although he be specially so called in respect of his kingdome. Albeit that God alway gaue Prophets and teachers to his Church, yet it is prooued that all the godly looked for full light of vnderstanding, only at the comming of Messias: and that he when he appeared was annointed a Prophet, not only for himselfe, but also for all his body. 2.15.1.2.

As touching his Kingdome, first we must note the spirituall nature thereof, whereupon also is gathered the eternall continuance of it, which is of two sorts: the one pertaineth to the whole body of the Church, the other is proper to euery member: both sorts are declared and plainly set foorth by testimonies of Scripture. 3.15.3.

It is declared that the profit of the kingdome of Christ cannot otherwise be perceiued of vs, but when we knowledge it to be spirituall: and the same profit consisteth in two things, namely that it enricheth vs with all good things necessary to eternall saluation, secondly, that it fortifieth vs with strength and vertue against the diuell and all his assaults. And so Christ reigneth for vs rather than for himselfe, whereupon we are rightfully called Christians: Where it is said that at the last day he shall yeeld vp his kingdome to God and his father, and such like sayings, the same maketh nothing against the eternity of his kingdome. 4.15.4.5.

As touching his Priesthood, that the efficacy and profit thereof may come to vs, it is shewed that we must begin at the death of Christ. Hereupon it followeth that he is an euerlasting intercessor, by whose mediation we obtaine fauor, whereby ariseth to godly consciences both boldnesse to pray, and quietnesse: finally that he is so a Priest, that he ioineth vs in the fellowship of so great an honor, to the end that the Sacrifices of praiers and praise which come from vs, may be acceptable to God. 2.15.6.

Promises.

Not without cause all the Promises are concluded in Christ: for as much as euery promise is a testifying of the Law of God toward vs, and none of vs is beloued of God without Christ. Neither was Naaman the Syrian, Cornelius the Captaine, nor the Eunuch to whom Philip was carried, without knowledge of Christ, although they had but a very small taste to him, and a faith in some part vnexpressed. 3.2.32.

The

The Lord, to the end to fill our hearts with loue of righteousnes and hatred of wickednes, was not content to set foorth bare commandements only, but addeth Promises of blessings both of this present life and of eternall blessednes, and also threatnings both of present miseries, and of eternall death: The threatnings declare the great pureneſſe of God: the Promises doe shew his great loue to righteousnesse, and his wonderfull goodnesse toward men. 2. 8.4.

Prouidence of God.

Prophane men, by fleshly vnderstanding doe confesse God the Creator, otherwise than we doe by faith: forasmuch as faith doth teach that he is also the gouernor of all things not by a certaine vniuersall motion, but by a singular prouidence which extendeth euen to the least sparrow. 1.16.1.

They which giue any thing to fortune, doe bury the Prouidence of God, by whose secret counsell all successes are gouerned. 1. 16.2.

Things without life, although each of them haue their property naturally planted in them, yet doe not put foorth their force, but so far as they be directed by the present hand of God: which is prooued by the Sunne, before which he would both light to be, and the earth to abound with all kinde of good things: which also we read to haue stand still by the space of two daies, and gone backe two degrees at the commandement of God. 1. 16. 2. also by the starres and signes of the heauen, which the vnbeleeuers doe feare. Sect. 3.

The almightinesse of God is busied in continuall doing, so that it extendeth to euery particular act, and nothing hapneth but by his counsell: Which who so doe not acknowledge they defraude God of his glory and doe extenuate his goodnesse: But we on the other side doe receiue double fruit thereof. 1. 16.3.

It is prooued that the prouidence of God doth not onely behold things that are done, but gouerneth all successes: Whereby is ouerthrown the fained inuention of bare foreknowledge and of vniuersall prouidence only: also the error of the Epicures is confuted, and of them which giue to God a gouernance only aboue the middle region of the aire. Yet there may a certaine vniuersall prouidence bee granted, but so, that the speciall prouidence be not darkned, which doth gouerne not only certaine but all particular doings. 1. 16.4.5.

That not only the beginning of motion is in the disposing of God, is prooued by the plentifulnesse of one yeere and the barrennesse of an other, for whereas God calleth the one his blessing, and the other his curse and vengeance. 1. 16.5.

The prouidence of God in gouerning the world, is chiefly to be considered in mankind, and in the diuerse estate of all men, and diuerse disposing of successes. 1.16.6.7.

Against them which canill, that this doctrine of the prouidence of God, is the Stoicks doctrine of fate or destiny. 1.16.8.

Whether any thing happen by fortune or chance: Where is rehearsed the saying of Basilius Magnus, that chance and fortune are words of heathen men: also the saying of Augustine, that he repented that he had vsed the name of Fortune. Yet those things may be said to happen by fortune in respect of vs, which being considered in their nature, or weighed according to our knowledge doe seeme so, although in the secret counsell of God they be necessarie: Also all things that are to come, may be said to be happening, inasmuch as they be vncertaine to vs. 1.16.8.9.

What things are to bee considered, that the doctrine of the Prouidence of God, may be referred to a right hand, that we haue the profit thereof: and where the causes of those things that happen, appeare not vnto vs, we must beware that wee doe not thinke, that things are rolled by the sway of fortune: but we must so reuerence his secret iudgements, that we esteeme his will the most iust cause of all things. 1.17.1.

Against certaine dogs which at this day doe barke against the Prouidence of God, it is prooued by the Scripture that whereas God hath so reuealed his will in the Law, and the Gospell that hee illuminateth the mindes of them that bee his with the Spirit of vnderstanding, to perceiue the mysteries therein contained, which otherwise are incomprehensible, yet the order of gouerning the world is called a bottomlesse depth, because when we know not the causes thereof, yet we ought reuerently to honour it. 1.17.2.

Such prophane men doe foolishly comber themselues, when they alleadge that if the doctrine of the Prouidence of God be true, then the praiers of the faithfull in which they aske any thing for time to come are vaine, no counsell is to be taken for things to come, and then men which doe any thing against the Law of God, doe not sinne: These dangerous errours they shall auoid, which in considering the Prouidence of God, shall frame themselues to true modesty. 1.17.3.

As concerning things to come, it is prooued that the Scripture doth well ioyne the aduisements of men with the prouidence of God: because wee are not hindred by his eternall decrees, but that vnder his will, we may both foresee for our selues, and order our owne things: For the knowledge of consulting and taking heede, are inspired into men by the Lord, whereby we may serue his Prouidence, in the preseruing of our owne life. 1.17.4.

In all successes of time past the will of God doth gouerne: and yet the doers of wicked deedes are not excused, because they are accused by their owne conscience, and doe not obey the will of God, but their owne lust. They are indeed the instruments of Gods prouidence, but so, that they finde the whole euil in themselues, and in God is found nothing but a lawful vse of their euilnesse. 1.17.5. and 1.18.4. Where also the same thing is shewed in the election of King Ieroboam, the tenne Tribes forsaking the house of Dauid, the slaughter of the sonnes of Achab, and in the betraying of the sonne of God.

A godly and holy meditation of the Prouidence of God, which is taught by the rule of godlinesse first that being certainely perswaded that nothing happeneth by Fortune, wee alwaie cast our eies to God the chiefe cause of all things: then that wee doubt not that his singular Prouidence watcheth for vs, whether wee haue to doe with men as well euill as good, or with his other Creatures: To which vse wee must apply the promises of God in the Scripture which testifie the same, the examples whereof are rehearsed. 1.17.6.

We must also adioyne those testimonies of Scripture which teach that all men are vnder the power of God, whether we need to get their good wils to restraine the malice of our enemies: which last point God worketh diuers waies, sometime by taking away their wit, sometime when hee granteth them wit, hee fraieth them that they dare not goe about that which they haue conceiued: and sometime also when he suffereth them to goe about it, he breaketh their enterprises: Vpon which knowledge necessarily followeth a thankfulnesse of minde in so prosperous successe of things. 1.17.7.

In aduersity when we are hurt by men, is required patience and quiet moderation of minde: Which is shewed in the examples of Ioseph being afflicted of his brethren, Iob persecuted of the Chaldees, and Dauid railed vpon of Semi. If we happen to be distressed with any misery without the worke of men, this selfe same doctrine is the best remedy against impatience because the Scripture testifieth, that euen aduersities also doe come from God. 1.17.8.

A Godly man principally regarding the prouidence of God, yet will not leaue inferiour causes vnmarked. Therefore if he haue receiued a benefite of any man, he will hartily know and confesse himselfe to be bound vnto him. If he haue taken harme or done harme to any other by his negligence or want of heed, he will impute it vnto himselfe, much lesse will he excuse his owne offences. In things to come chiefly he will haue consideration of inferiour causes, but yet so that in determining he wil not be caried away with his owne wit, but commit himselfe to the wisedome of God: neither shal his trust so stay vpon outward helpes, that he will carelesly rest vpon them if hee haue them, nor be dismaied for feare if he want them. 1.17.9.

A large description of the inestimable felicity of a godly minde which resteth vpon the prouidence of God: and on the otherside the miserable carefulnesse wherewith wee must needs be distressed when the weakenesse of this earthly cottage maketh vs subiect to so many diseases, sith our life and safety is besieged with infinite dangers at home, abroad, vpon the land, in the water, by men, and by deuils. 1.17.10.11.

Those places of Scripture, where it is said that God repented him: maketh nothing against the doctrine of Prouidence, forasmuch as therein (like as also when he is said to be angry) the Scripture applying it selfe to our capacity describeth him, not such as he is, but such as we feele him to be. Likewise, where where he ſpared the Niniuites, to whom hee had threatned deſtruction within forty daies: whereas he prolonged the life of Ezechias for many yeeres, to whom he had declared preſent death: becauſe ſuch threatnings containe an vnexpreſſed condition. Which is well prooued by a like example in King Abimelech, which was rebuked for Abrahams wife. 1. 17. 12. 13. 14.

A confutation of them which coueting to get a praiſe of modeſtie, goe about to maintaine the righteouſneſſe of God with a lying defence, when they ſay: that thoſe things which Satan and all the reprobate doe naughtily, are done by the ſufferance of God, and not by his prouidence and will. And it is prooued by the affliction of Iob, the deceiuing of Achab, the killing of Chriſt, the inceſtuous adulterie of Abſolon, and many other examples, that men doe worke nothing but that which he hath alreadie decreed with himſelfe, and doth appoint ſo to bee by his ſecret direction. 1. 18. 1.

And this hath place, not onely in outward doings, but alſo in ſecret motions. For it is prooued by the hardning of Pharao, and other teſtimonies, that God worketh euen in the minds alſo and hearts of the wicked. Neither maketh it any thing to the contrarie, that oftentimes the worke of Satan is vſed therein: for God worketh neuertheleſſe, but after his owne manner, vſing a iuſt reuenge 1. 18. 2. therefore God is not the Author of ſinnes. Sect. 4

They are prooued guiltie of intollerable pride, which refuſe this doctrine vnder pretenſe of modeſtie. A confutation of their obiection when they ſay that if nothing happen but with the will of God, then hath he in himſelfe two contrarie wils, foraſmuch as he doth appoint thoſe things to bee done by his ſecret counſell, which he hath openly forbidden by his lawes. And there is ſhewed, that God doth not diſagree with himſelfe, that the will of God is not changed, that he doth not faigne himſelfe to nill that which hee willeth: but whereas there is in God, but one ſimple will, the ſame to vs appeareth diuerſe, becauſe for the weakneſſe of our vnderſtanding, we conceiue not how he diuerſly both willeth not, and willeth one ſelfe thing to bee done. Finally it is prooued by Auguſtine, that man ſometime with good will willeth ſomething which God willeth not: and ſometime willeth that thing with euill will, which God willeth with good will. 1. 18. 3.

The conſideration of Gods power in gouerning this frame of heauen and earth, and all parts that are in them. 1. 5. 5.

The fellowſhip of men is ſo gouerned by the prouidence of God, that he ſheweth himſelfe liberall, mercifull, righteous, and ſeuere. 1. 5. 6.

Thoſe things which in the life of men are counted chances, as well of proſperitie as aduerſitie are ſo many tokens of the heauenly prouidence, 1. 5. 7. and ought to awaken vs to the hope of the life to come. Sect. 9.

How God worketh in the harts of them that be his, and Sathan in them that be his, but yet ſo, that they are not excuſed. 2. 4. 1.

God worketh alſo in the wicked, and euen in the ſame worke wherein Satan worketh, and yet is not God ſo ſaid to be the Author of ſinne, neither is Satan or the wicked excuſed, but there is difference betweene the one and the other, both in the end and manner of doing. 2. 4. 2. 5.

The olde writers oftentimes referred theſe things, not to the working of God, but to his foreknowledge or ſufferance, leaſt the wicked ſhould thereby take occaſion to ſpeake irreuerently of the workes of God. But the Scripture when it ſaith that God blindeth, hardeneth, and ſuch like, declareth ſomewhat more than a ſufferance: although God doe worke two waies in the reprobate, namely by forſaking them, and taking his Spirit from them, and alſo by deliuering them to Satan the miniſter of his wrath. 2. 4. 3. 4.

The miniſterie of Satan is vſed to ſtir forward the reprobate, whenſoeuer the Lord by his prouidence directeth them hither or thither. 2. 4. 5.

Purgatorie.

We ought not to winke at the doctrine of Purgatorie, foraſmuch as it is a damnable inuention of Satan which maketh voide the croſſe of Chriſt, &c. 3. 5. 6.

An expoſition of certaine places of Scripture which the Papiſts doe wrongfully wreſt to the confirmation of their Purgatorie. 3. 5 7. 8. 9.

An anſwere to the obiection of the Papiſts, that it hath beene an ancient vſage of the Church that praiers ſhould be made for the dead. Where is ſhewed that this was done by them in the olde time, without the word of God, by a certaine wrongfull imitation, leaſt Chriſtians if they were ſlow in having care of funerals and the dead, ſhould ſeeme worse than heathen men. Yet herein was a great difference betweene this slipping of these old men, and the obstinate errour of the Papists. 3. 5. 10.

R.

Redeemer Christ.

THe knowledge of God the Creator is vnprofitable vnto vs, vnlesse faith doe also follow, setting him foorth in Christ a Father and Redeemer to vs, and this doctrine from the beginning of the world in all ages hath beene holden among the children of God. 2. 6. 1.

It is prooued by diuers arguments and testimonies of Scripture, that the happy state of the Church hath alway beene grounded vpon the parson of Christ. For both the first adoption of the chosen people, and the preseruing of the Church, the deliuerance of them in perils, and the restoring after their dissipation, did alway hange vpon the grace of the Mediator. And the hope of all the godly was neuer reposed any other where than in Christ. 2. 6. 2. 3. 4.

It is to be diligently considered how Christ hath fulfilled the office of Redeemer, that we may finde in him all things necessary for vs, sith (as Bernard saith) he is to vs light, meat, oile, salt, &c. 2. 16. 1.

An exposition how we should say that God was our enemy vntill he was reconciled to vs by Christ, whereas to giue Christ to vs, and to preuent vs with mercy, were signes of the loue wherewith he before imbraced vs. And there is shewed that the Scripture vseth this speech and such other, to apply it selfe to our capacity: and yet it doth not the same fallsly. And all this is prooued by the authority of Scripture, and the testimony of Augustine. 2. 16. 2. 3.

Regeneration.

Against certaine Anabaptists, which inuent a phrenticke intemperance in stead of spirituall Regeneration, namely that the children of God being now restored into the state of innocencie, ought no more to bee carefull to bridle the lust of the flesh, but onely to follow the spirit for their guide. 3. 3. 14.

The rest pertaining to this matter, see in the title of Repentance.

Religion.

Necessity enforceth the Reprobate to confesse that there is some God. 1. 4. 4.

They are deceiued which say that Religion was deuised by the subtilty of certaine men to holde the simple people in order. 1. 3. 2.

The very wicked and godlesse men are compelled whether they will or no to feele that there is a God. 1. 3. 2. and in what sense Dauid saith, that they thinke that there is no God. 1. 4. 2.

Remission of sinnes.

Against them which dreame a perfection in this life, which taketh away need of asking pardon. 3. 20. 45.

Of Remission of sinnes: and in what sense sinnes are called debts, and how we are said to forgiue other that haue offended against vs. 3. 20. 45.

Of the distinction of fault and paine: where with most strong testimonies of Scripture the doting errour of the Papists is confuted, namely, that when the fault is forgiuen, yet God retaineth the paine, which remaineth to bee redeemed with satisfactions. 3. 4. 29. 30. and there also is shewed that they cannot scape away with their distinction betweene euerlasting paine and temporall paines.

Of certaine places of Scripture wherewith they goe about to confirme their errour: where is declared that there are two kindes of the iudgement of God: the one of Vengeance, the other of Chastisement, which are wisely to be distinguished asunder. 4. 4. 31.

The first of these, that is to say, vengeance, the faithfull haue alway earnestly praied to escape: the other that is to say, chastisement, they haue receiued with quiet minde, because it hath a testimony of loue. And where it is saide that God is angry with his Saints, the same is not meant of his purpose or affection to punish them, but is spoken of the vehement feeling of sorrow wherewith they are stricken so soone as they beare any part of his seuerity: and this is profitable for them. On the other side the reprobate, when they are stricken with the scourges of God doe alreadie after a certaine manner begin to feele the paines of his iudgement.

All

All which things are prooued by teſtimonies of the Scripture, and alſo by the expoſitions of Chryſoſtome and Auguſtine. 3.4.32.33.

God when he had forgiuen the adultery of Dauid, chaſtiſed him both for common example, and alſo to humble him: and for this reaſon he daily maketh the faithfull (to whom he is mercifull) ſubiect to the common miſeries of this life. 3.4.35.

An expoſition of the article of the Creed concerning remiſſion of ſins. 4.1.20.21.

The keyes were giuen to the Church, to forgiue ſins, not only to men at their firſt converſion to Chriſt, but to the faithfull all their life long. 4.1.22.

This doctrine is prooued by teſtimonies of Scripture againſt the Nouatians, and certaine of the Anabaptiſts which faine that the people of God are by baptiſme regenerate into an angelike life, and afterward there remaineth no pardon for them that fall. 4.1.23.24.25.26.27.

A confutation of them which make a voluntary tranſgreſſion of the law a ſinne vnpardonable. 4.1.28.

Repentance.

Repentance commeth of faith, and goeth not before it. 3.3.1.

A confutation of their reaſons, which thinke otherwiſe, but hereby is not ſignified any ſpace of time wherein faith breedeth repentance: but only is ſhewed that no man can earneſtly endeuour himſelfe to repentance vnleſſe he know himſelfe to be Gods. Of the error of certaine Anabaptiſts, Ieſuits, and ſuch other, which appoint to their nouices certaine daies for repentance. 3.3.2.

Certaine learned men long before this time, made two parts of repentance, namely Mortification, which they commonly call contrition, Viuification which they wrongfully expound to be comfort by the feeling of the mercy of God: whereas it rather ſignifieth a deſire to liue well. 3.3.3.

They doe alſo make two other ſorts of repentance, the one of the Law, the other of the Goſpell: where alſo are ſhewed examples of either ſort out of the Scripture. 3.3.4.

A true definition of repentance taken out of the Scripture, and here repentance though it cannot be ſeuered, yet ought to be diſtinguiſhed from faith. 3.3.5.

A plainer declaration of the definition of repentance: where firſt is ſhewed, that there is required a turning to God, that is to ſay, an alteration, not only in outward works, but alſo in the ſoule it ſelfe. 3.3.6. then that it proceedeth of an earneſt feare of God: where alſo is entreated of the ſorrowfulneſſe that is according to God. 3.3.7.

Thirdly, that ſaying is declared that repentance conſiſteth of two parts, the Mortification of the fleſh, and the quickning of the Spirit. 3.3.8.

Both theſe things doe we obtaine by partaking of Chriſt, the firſt by communicating of his death, the ſecond of his Reſurrection. Therefore repentance is a new forming of the Image of God in vs, and a reſtoring into the righteouſneſſe of God by the benefit of Chriſt: and this reſtoring is not fulfilled in vs in one moment. 3.3.9.

But there remaineth in all the Saints, while they liue in mortall body, matter of ſtrife with their fleſh, and ſo thought all the Eccleſiaſticall writers that haue been of ſound iudgement: and ſpecially Auguſtine, which calleth this nouriſhment of euill and diſeaſe of luſting in the elect, weakneſſe, and ſometime ſinne: and indeed it is ſinne. 3.3.10.

This is confirmed by the teſtimony of Paul, and by the ſum of the commandements. Whereas it is ſaid that God cleanſeth his Church from all ſinne, the ſame is ſpoken rather of the guiltines of ſinne, then of the matter of ſinne it ſelfe, which ceaſeth not to dwell in the regenerate (but ceaſeth to raigne in them) though it be not imputed. 3.3.11.

A declaration of the ſeuen cauſes or effects, or parts or affections of repentance, which Paul rehearſeth. Thoſe be ſtudy or carefulneſſe, excuſing, diſpleaſure, feare, deſire, zeale, reuenge. Whereunto alſo is added out of Paul, and declared by an excellent admonition of Bernard, that in ſuch renewing we muſt keepe a meaſure. 3.3.15.

The fruits of repentance are deuotion toward God, charity toward men, holineſſe and pureneſſe in all our life: but all theſe ought to begin at the inward affection of the heart, from whence outward teſtimonies may afterward ſpring foorth: where alſo is ſpoken of certaine outward exerciſes of repentance, which the old writers ſeem to enforce ſomewhat too much. 3.3.16.

Turning of the heart to God is the chiefe peint of repentance: Sackcloth and Aſhes, weeping and faſting, were vſed of them in the old time before Chriſt, as tokens of publicke repentance: of which the two laſt may yet be vſed to appeaſe the wrath of God in the miſerable times of the Church. 3.3.17.

The name of repentance or penance is vnpreperly drawen from his naturall ſenſe to this outward profeſſion. Publicke confeſſion is not alway neceſſary in ſins: but priuate confeſſion to God may neuer be omitted, wherein we ought to confeſſe not only thoſe things that we haue lately committed, but the diſpleaſure of our grieuous fall ought alſo to call vs backe to remembrance of our paſſed offences. Of ſpeciall penance which is required of hainous offenders and certaine other: and of the ordinances which the children of God, euen the moſt perfect, ought to vſe all their life long. 3.3.18.

God doth therefore freely iuſtifie them that be his, that he may alſo with the ſanctification of his Spirit reſtore them into true righteouſneſſe: therefore Iohn, Chriſt, and the Apoſtles preached repentance and remiſſion of ſins. The effect of which ſaying is declared. 3.3.19.

Chriſtians ought to exerciſe themſelues in a continuall repentance, and he hath moſt profited, that hath learned moſt to miſlike himſelfe. 3.3.20.

Repentance is a ſingular gift of God, vnto which he calleth all men, which he giueth to all them whom he purpoſeth to ſaue, and which the Apoſtle pronounceth, that it ſhall neuer be giuen to wilfull Apoſtataes whoſe wickednes is vnpardonable, that is to ſay, ſuch as haue ſinned againſt the holy Ghoſt. 3.3.8.

Although fained repentance doth not pleaſe God, yet he ſometime for a ſeaſon ſpareth hypocrites which make a ſhew of ſome conuerſion, which he doth not for their ſakes, but for common example, that we may learne more chearefully to giue our minds to vnfaigned repentance: and this is prooued by the examples of Achab, Eſau, and the Iſraelites. 3.3.25.

The Schoole Sopiſters doe fowlly erre in thoſe definitions which they make of repentance, and no better doe they deuide it, when they part it into contrition of heart, confeſſion of mouth, and ſatisfaction of worke: where is entreated of certaine queſtions which they moue: whereupon is eaſily gathered, that they babble of things which they know not, when they ſpeake of repentance. 3.4.1.

When they require thoſe three things in repentance they muſt needs bind thereunto forgiueneſſe of ſins: And if it be ſo, then are we moſt miſerable, foraſmuch as we can neuer haue quietnes of conſcience: which is prooued first in that contrition of heart ſuch as they require. 3.4.2.

There is a great difference between the doctrine of ſuch contrition, and that contrition which the Scripture requireth of ſinners, that they truly hunger and thirſt for the mercy of God. 3.4.3.

In what ſenſe the old writers thought that ſolemne penance, which was then required for hainous offences, might no more be eſtſoones done then Baptiſme. 4.1.29.

Reaſon of Man.

Mans vnderſtanding is not ſo to be condemned of perpetuall blindneſſe, that we leaue it nowhit of vnderſtanding in any kind of thing: but it hath ſome knowledge in aſmuch as he is naturally caried with deſire to ſearch out truth: And yet this deſire by and by fallethinto vanity, becauſe the mind of man cannot for dulnes keep the right way to ſearch out truth, and for the moſt part he diſcerneth not of what things it is behoouefull for him to ſeeke the true knowledge. 2.2.12.

As touching earthly things it is prooued by examples that the mind of man hath a ſharpe vnderſtanding, as firſt of houſholds, ſith euery man vnderſtandeth that the fellowſhip of men muſt be holden together by lawes, and comprehendeth in mind the principles of thoſe lawes. 2.2.13.

Alſo in liberall Arts and handy crafts for learning whereof, yea for amplifying and garniſhing of the ſame, there is in man a certaine aptneſſe, although ſome be more apt then other. But the light of reaſon and vnderſtanding of men, is ſo a generall good quality in all men, that yet it is a free gift of Gods liberality toward euery man: which thing God ſheweth when he createth ſome Idiots and dull witted: alſo when he maketh one man to excell in ſharpe inuention, another in iudgement, another in quickneſſe of mind, againe when he powreth into men ſingular motions according to euery mans calling, and according to the time and matter that is to be done. 2.2.14.17.

The inuention of Arts, the orderly teaching of deep and excellent knowledge thereof, which appeare to haue been in the old Lawyers, Philoſophers, Phyſitians, being prophane men, doe declare vnto vs, that the mind of men how much ſoeuer it be fallen from his firſt vprightnes, is yet ſtill garniſhed with excellent gifts of God. 2.2.15.

They are the gifts of the holy Ghoſt which the the Lord giueth to whom he will, euen to the vngodly for the publicke benefit of mankind: therefore we ought to vse them although they be communicate vnto vs by the ministerie of the wicked, to whom they are but transitorie and fleeting, because they are without the sound foundation of truth. 2.2.16.

It is shewed in the first two pointes that mans reason seeth nothing that concerneth the kingdome of God and heauenly matters, which are contained in three things, that is to say, to know God, his fatherly fauour toward vs, and the way to frame our life according to the rule of his law. 2. 2. 18. and to that purpose are alleadged diuers testimonies of Scripture. Sect. 19. 20. 21. In the third it seemeth that he hath some more vnderstanding than in the other, forasmuch as man is instructed by the law of nature to a right rule of life. But such knowleage is vnperfect in the vnbeleeuers, and auaileth to no other end, but to make them vnexcusable: neither doe they by that naturall light, see the truth in euery thing. And here is expounded the saying of Themistius, that vnderstanding in the vniuersall definition is seldome deceiued, but the error is when it descendeth to particular causes, and there is shewed that mans vniuersall iudgement in the difference of good and euill, is not alway sound and vpright. For it attaineth not those which are the chiefe things in the first table of the law, namely of confidence in God, &c. In the second table, although it haue some more vnderstanding, yet it appeareth that it sometime erreth: as when it iudgeth that it is an absurditie to suffer too imperious gouernment, and not to reuenge wrongs: also it knoweth not the disease of desire in the whole obseruation of the law. 2.2.22.23.24.

It is prooued by the Scripture, that the sharpnesse of our reason in all the parts of our life, is nothing before the Lord, and our minds doe reape the grace of enlightning, not onely at the beginning, or for one day, but at euery moment. 2.2.25.

See vnder the title of freewill, certaine things pertaining to this matter.

Resurrection of Christ.

Without the resurrection of Christ all is vnperfect that we beleeue concerning his crosse, death, and buriall, thereof we receiue three profits: forasmuch as it hath both purchased vs righteousnesse before God, and is to vs a pledge of the Resurrection to come, and by his life, we are now regenerate into newnesse of life. 2.16.13.

A declaration of the historie of the Resurrection of Christ. 3.25.3.

Last Resurrection.

Forasmuch as the faithfull, doe chiefly need hope and patience, least they should faint in the course of their calling: he hath soundly profited in the Gospell which is accustomed to a continuall meditation of the blessed Resurrection. 3.25.1.2.

The article concerning the last Resurrection, containeth a doctrine of great weight: graue and hard to beleeue: for the ouercomming of which hardnesse by faith, the Scripture giueth two helps, the example of Christ, and the almightinesse of God. 3.25.3 4.

A confutation of the Sadduces, which deny the Resurrection: and of the Millenaries which appoint the kingdome of Christ to endure but a thousand yeeres. 3.25.5.

By what reason, the last Resurrection, which is a singular benefit of Christ, is common also to the wicked and the accursed of God. 3.25.2.

S.

Sabboth.

AN exposition of the fourth Commandement, the end thereof, and the three causes whereuponwe must note that it consisteth. 2.8.28.

The first cause is a shadowing of spirituall rest, that is to say, of our sanctification: this is prooued by diuers places to haue beene the chiefe thing in the Sabboth. 2.8.29.

Why the Lord appointeth the seuenth day 2.8.30.31.

This part, forasmuch as it was Ceremoniall, is taken away by the death of Christ. 2. 8. 31.

The two later causes, that is to say, that there should be certaine daies appointed for assemblies in the Church, and that there should be giuen to seruants, a rest from their labor, do serue for all ages. 2.8.32.

Of

Of daies of meeting in the Church to heare the word of God and common praiers : where is spoken of obseruing of the Sunday. 2. 8. 32. 33. and of superstition to be auoided in this behalfe. 2. 8. 34.

Sacraments.

What is a Sacrament. 4. 14. 1.

For what reason the old Writers vsed this word in that sense. 4. 14. 2. 13.

A Sacrament is neuer without a promise going before, which the Lord sealeth by that meane, wherein he prouideth helpe for our ignorance and dulnesse, and also for our weakenesse. 4. 14. 3. 5. 6. 12.

A Sacrament consisteth of the word and the outward signe : but the sacramentall word is to be taken otherwise than the Papists thinke 4. 14. 4.

Sacraments cease not to be testimonies of the grace of God, although they be giuen also to the wicked, which doe gather to themselues more grieuous damnation thereby. 4. 14. 7.

Our faith is so confirmed by Sacraments, that yet it hangeth vpon the inward effectuall working of the spirit. 4. 14. 10. 11. and no vertue is to be put in the creatures. Sect. 12.

A confutation of the diuelish doctrine of the Sophisticall Schooles, that the Sacraments of the new law doe iustifie and doe giue grace, so that we doe not stop it with deadly sinne. 4. 14. 14.

Augustines good distinction betweene a sacrament and thing of the Sacrament, whereby is proued that though God in Sacraments do truely offer Christ, yet the wicked receiue nothing but the sacrament, that is to say, the outward signe. 4. 14. 15. 16.

We must not thinke that there is ioyned or fastened to the Sacraments any secret vertue, wherby they by themselues do giue vs the graces of the holy Ghost. 4. 14. 17.

In the old time God gaue vnto his people some sacraments in miracles and some in naturall things. And there is spoken of the tree of life and of the raine-bow. 4. 14. 18.

Sacraments are on the Lords behalfe testimonies of grace and saluation, and on our behalfe tokens of our profession. 4. 14. 19.

The Sacraments of the old Church vnder the law, tended to the same end that our Sacraments doe, that is to say, Christ : whom yet our Sacraments doe more plainly represent wherefore the Schoolemens doctrine is to be reiected, which say, that the old sacraments did shew a shadow of the grace of God, and ours doe giue it presently. 4. 14. 20. 21. 22. 23. &c.

The fiue falsely called Sacraments.

When we deny those fiue to be Sacraments, which are inuented by men, we striue not about the name but the thing : because the Papists will haue them to be visible formes of inuisible grace. 4. 19. 1.

Many reasons are brought, why it is not lawful for men to make sacraments. Also there is a difference to be put betweene sacraments, and other ceremonies. 4. 19. 2.

The number of seuen Sacraments cannot be prooued by the authority of the old Church. 4. 19. 3.

Although the old Church vnder the law, had no Sacraments, yet at this day, the Christian Church ought to be content with those two, which Christ hath ordained : and it is not lawfull for men to make other, nor to adde vnto those any thing of their owne, 4. 18. 20.

Sacrifices.

A difference betweene the sacrifices of Moses his law, and the supper of the Lord in the Christian Church. 4. 18. 12.

What the name of a Sacrifice properly signifieth : and of the diuers kindes of Sacrifices vnder the law : which may be deuided into two sorts, whereof some may be called of thanke-giuing, and other some propitiatory or of cleansing. 4. 18. 13.

Our onely propitiatory sacrifice, is the death of Christ. Sacrifices of thanke-giuing we haue many, as all the duties of charity, praiers, praises, giuing of thankes, and all that we doe to the worshipping of God. 4. 18. 13. 16. 17.

This maner of sacrificing is daily vsed in the Church, and in the Supper of the Lord : And thereupon all Christians are sacrificing Priests.

Satisfactions Papisticall.

Of satisfaction, which they make the third thing in penance, of retaining the paine, the fault being forgiuen, and such like lies, which all are ouerthrowen, by setting against the free forgiuenesse of sinnes, by the name of Christ. 3. 4. 25.

A confutation of the blasphemous errour of of the Schoolemen, that forgiuenesse of sinnes, and reconciliation is once done in Baptisme, but after Baptisme we must rise againe by satisfactions. 3.4.26.

By such error, Christ is spoyled of his honour, and the peace of conscience is troubled, forasmuch as they can neuer certainely determine, that their sinnes are forgiuen them. 3.4.27.

In Daniel, when Nabuchadnezar is commanded to redeeme his sinnes with righteousnesse: that same redeeming is referred to God, rather than to men, and the cause of pardon is not there set foorth, but rather the manner of true conuersion. The same is to be said of certaine other places of Scripture. 3.4.36.

An exposition of that place in the Gospell, Many sinnes are forgiuen her, because she hath loued much: Meaning that loue is not the cause, but the proofe of forgiuenesse. 3.4.37.

The olde writers of the Church did not speake of satisfactions in such sense as the Papists doe: for they vnderstand that the penitent doe make satisfaction to the Church, and not to God. 3.4.38.39.

Scripture, the Word of God, and the authoritie thereof.

Men doe not sufficiently know God the Creator, and discerne him from faigned gods, by consideration of his creatures, vnlesse they be also holpen by the light of the word. And God hath kept this order in teaching them that be his not onely since that he chose the Iewes for his peculiar people, but also from the beginning, euen toward Adam, Noe, and the other Fathers. 1.6.1.

Either by Oracles, or by Visions, or by the ministerie of other, the Fathers had the word which they were certainely perswaded to be the word of God, whereby they knew the true GOD the creator and gouernor of all things: which word afterward, that he might prouide for men in all ages, he caused to be written in the Law and the Prophets, as it were in publicke registers. 1.6.2.3. in which place also is proued by testimonies of Scripture, that the doctrine of the word, must be ioyned to the consideration of creatures, least we conceiue a fickle knowledge of God.

Of them which say that the authoritie of Scripture hangeth vpon the indgement of the Church, and in how ill case we should be, if it were so. 1.7.1.

This error is well confuted by the place of Paul in the second Chapter to the Ephesians, where he saith that the faithfull are builded vpon the foundation of the Apostles and Prophets. 1.7.2.

In what sense Augustine saith, that hee would not haue beleeued the Gospell, vnlesse the authoritie of the Church did moue him: which place they doe cauillously wrest to the confirmation of their error. 1.7.3.

Although there be many other arguments, which doe proone, yea, doe enforce the wicked to confesse that the Scripture came from God, yet by none other meane than by the secret testimonie of the Holy Ghost, our hearts are truly perswaded that it is God, which speaketh in the Law, in the Prophets, and in the Gospell. And this is prooued by many places of Esay. 1.7.4.5.

The orderly disposition of the wisedome of God, the doctrine sauouring nothing of earthlinesse, the goodly agreement of all the partes among themselues, and specially that baseneesse of contemptible words, vttering the high misteries of the heauenly kingdome, are second helps to stablish the credit of Scripture. 1.8.1.2.11.

Also the antiquitie of the Scripture, whereas the bookes of other Religions, are later than the bookes of Moses, which yet doth not himselfe inuent a new God, but setteth foorth to the Israelites, the God of their Fathers. 1.8.3.4.

Whereas Moses doth not hide the shame of Leui his Father, nor the murmuring of Aaron his brother, and of Mary his sister, nor doth aduance his owne children: the same are arguments, that in his bookes is nothing faigned by man. 1.8.4.

Also the miracles which happened, as well at the publishing of the law, as in all the rest of time. 1.8.5.

Which miracles, when the prophane writers could not denie, they cauilled, that Moses did then by Magicall Artes. Which slander is confuted by most strong reasons. 1.8.6.

Also whereas Moses speaking in the person of Iacob, assigneth the gouernment to the Tribe of Iuda, and where he telleth before of the calling of the Gentiles, whereof the one came to passe foure hundred yeeres after, and the other almost two thousand yeeres: these are arguments, that it is God himselfe which speaketh in the bookes of Moses. 1.8.7.

Whereas Esay telleth before of the captiuitie nity of the Iewes, and their restoring by Cyrus (which was borne a hundered yeeres after the death of Esay ) and where Ieremy before that the people was led away appointeth their exile to continue three-score and tenne yeeres, whereas Ieremy and Ezechiel, being farre distant in places the one from the other, doe agree in all their sayings, where Daniel telleth before of things to come, for six hundred yeeres after: these are most certaine proofes, to stablish the authority of the Bookes of the Prophetes. 2. 8. 8.

Against certaine vngodly scoffers which aske how we know that those are the writings of Moses and the Prophets, which are read in their names: and how we know that there was euer any such Moses. 1.8.9.

Also of them that aske, from whence the copies of the Bookes of the Scripture came to vs, forasmuch as Antiochus commanded them all to be burned. And there is spoken of the wonderfull prouidence of God in preserving them so many ages, among so many enemies, and so cruell persecutions. 1.8.10.

The simplicity of speech of the first three Euangelists, containing heauenly mysteries, the phrase of Iohn thundering from on high with waighty sentences, the heauenly Maiesty shining in the writings of Peter and Paul, the sudden calling of Mathew from the boord, the calling of Peter and Iohn from their fisher-botes to the preaching of the Gospell, the conuersion and calling of Paul being an enemy to Apostleship, are signes of the holy Ghost speaking in them. 1.8.11.

The consent of so many ages, of so sundry nations, and of so diuerse mindes in embracing the Scripture, and the rare godlinesse of some, ought to stablish the authority thereof among vs. 1.8.12.

Also the blood of so many Martyrs which for the confession thereof, haue suffered death with a constant and sober zeale of God. 1. 8. 13.

Against certaine phrentick men, which forsaking the reading of Scripture and learning, doe boast of the Spirit and doe flie to reuelations. 1.9.1.2.

A confutation of their obiections that it is not meete that the spirit of God, to whom all things ought to be subiect, should be subiect to the Scriptures. 1.9.2.

Also where they say that we rest vpon the letter which slaieth. 1.9.3.

The Lord hath ioyned with a mutuall knot the certainty of his doctrine and of his Spirit. 1.9.3.

Such as the beholding of the heauen and earth and other creatures doth depaint out God vnto vs, such doth the Scripture set him foorth, that is to say, eternall, full of goodnesse, clemency, mercy, righteousnesse, iudgement and truth: and also to the same end. 1. 10. 1. 2.

What is to be thought of the power of the Church in exposition of Scripture. 4.9.13.

The Romish Doctors doe wrongfully abuse this colour to the confirmation of their errours and blasphemies. 4.9.14.

Of singing in the Church.

Voice and singing auaile nothing in prayer, without affection of the heart. 3.20.31.33.

Of the vsage of Singing in Churches. 3.20. 32.

Single life.

Their foamelesnesse which doe set foorth the comelinesse of Single life for a thing necessary, to the great reproch of the old Church. By what degrees this tyranny crept into the Church: and how it cannot be defended by the pretence of certaine old Canons. 4.12.26. 27. 28.

Priests were forbidden to mary by wicked tyranny, and against the word of God, and against all equity. 4.12.23.

An answer to the aduersaries obiection, that the Priest must by some marke differ from the lay people. 4.12.24.

The blasphemy of the Pope, saying that mariage is defiling and vncleannesse of the flesh. 4. 12. 24.

It is fond to defend the forbidding of mariage with the examples of the Leuiticall Priests, which when they should goe into the sanctuary lay asunder from their wiues. 4.12. 25.

Sinne.

A confutation of Platoes saying, that men Sinne not but by ignorance: also of their opinion which say that in all Sinnes there is an aduised malice and frowardnesse. 2. 2. 22. 23. 25.

Against the false imagination of the Sophisters concerning veniall sinnes, which they call desires without a determined assent, which doe not long rest in the heart: it is proued that euery sinne, euen the lightest desire deserueth death, and is deadly, except in the Saints which obtaine pardon by the mercy of God. 2. 858.59.

A confutation of their fond diſtinction betweene deadly and veniall ſinnes, and of their ſlander when they ſay that we make all ſinnes equall, 3.4.28.

How it is to be expounded, that God viſiteth the iniquitie of the Fathers vpon the children vnto the third and fourth generation: and whether ſuch reuengement be vnſeemely for the righteouſneſſe of God. 2.19.20.

Sinne againſt the holy Ghoſt.

The true definition of Sin againſt the holy Ghoſt, and examples thereof out of the Scripture. 3.3.22.

It is not one or another particular falling, but a generall forſaking, the deſcription whereof is declared by the Apoſtle. Neither is it any marueil if God will be alwaies vnappeaſeable to them that haue ſo fallen. 3.3.23. foraſmuch as he promiſeth pardon onely to them that repent, which they ſhall neuer doe. And though the Scripture doe ſay that ſome ſuch haue groaned and cried, yet that was not repentance or conuerſion, but rather a blind torment by deſperation. 3.3.24.

Of the Soule.

That the Soule or Spirit of man is not only a breath, but an immortall ſubſtance, although it were created, is prooued by conſcience, by the knowledge of God, and by ſo many excellent gifts wherewith the minde of man is endued, yea, and by thoſe things which it conceiueth in ſleepe, and alſo by many arguments taken out of the Scripture. 1.15.2. Finally by this that is ſaid, that man was created after the image of God. Sect. 3.

Againſt them that vnder the colour of Nature doe denie the prouidence and gouernance of God vttering it ſelfe in the marueilous and in a manner innumerable powers of the ſoule. 1.5.4.5.

A confutation of the error of the Manichees and of Seruetus, that the ſoule is a deriuation of the ſubſtance of God: alſo of the error of Oſiander, which acknowledgeth no image of God in man without an eſſentiall righteouſneſſe. 1.15.5.

Concerning the immortalitie of the Soule, in a manner none of the Philoſophers hath certainely ſpoken: but they doe binde the powers thereof to this preſent life, whereas the Scripture doth ſo giue to it the chiefe rule in gouernance of life, that it alſo ſtirreth vp man to the worſhipping of God. Alſo of the diuerſitie of ſoules, and of the diuiſion of the powers of the ſoule according to the Philoſophers. 1.15.6.

Another diuiſion more agreable with Chriſtian doctrine, that is to ſay, that the powers of the ſoule are vnderſtanding and will: and the office and force of either of them in mans firſt eſtate. 1.15.7.8.

That there yet remaineth ſomewhat of the ſeede of religion yet imprinted euen in the corruption of the ſoule. 1.15.6.

Of their error which thought that whole man periſheth by death, and that the ſoules at the laſt ſhall riſe againe with the bodies. 3. 25.6.

Of the ſtate of ſoules from death to the laſt day. 3.25.6.

A deſcription taken out of Bernard, of the miſeries of a faithfull ſoule, being conſidered as it is in it ſelfe and of it ſelfe: and on the other ſide, of the aſſured glorying of a faithfull ſoule in Chriſt, which blotteth out all her vnworthineſſes. 3.2.25.

Superſtition.

The ſimplicitie of the ſuperſtitious doth not excuſe them, becauſe their blindneſſe is found to be mingled with vanitie, pride, and obſtinacie. 1.4.1.3.

When ſuperſtition goeth about to pleaſe God, it mocketh him with lying colours. 1. 4.3.

The ſuperſtitious doe not approach vnto God but againſt their will and with ſeruile feare. 1 4.4.

Whoſoeuer doe corrupt the true religion, although they follow the conſent of antiquitie or the cuſtome of any Citie, yet they depart from the one and true God. 1.5.12.

It is prooued by the etymologie of the words Superſtition, Religion, Euſebeia or godlineſſe, what difference is betweene Religion and ſuperſtition. 1.12.1.

The craft of ſuperſtition, when granting the chiefe place to the one God, it beſetteth him with a rout of ſmaller gods. 1.12.1.3.

Supper of the Lord.

Of the bread and wine the ſignes in the holy Supper: and it is declared by his ewne words words at his Supper, why the Lord willed that we ſhould vſe them. 4.17.1.

We gather a great fruit of confidence and ſweetneſſe out of this Sacrament, which teſtifieth that we are ſo growen together into one body with Chriſt, that whatſoeuer is his, we may lawfully call it ours. 4.17.2.

This is declared by the words of the ſupper. 4.17.3.

The chiefe office of the Sacraments is not to giue vnto vs the body of Chriſt without any higher conſideration, but rather to ſeale that promiſe wherein he teſtifieth that his fleſh is verily meat. 4.17.4.

The ſupper maketh not Chriſt then firſt to begin to be the bread of life, but that we ſhould feele the force of that bread. He once gaue his fleſh for the life of the world, and daily giueth it to them that be his. We muſt beware that we doe not too much abaſe or aduance the ſignes. The eating of the fleſh of Chriſt is not faith, but rather the effect of faith. 4. 17. 5.

So thought Chryſoſtome and Auguſtine and in what ſenſe Auguſtine ſaith, that in beleeuing we eat the fleſh of Chriſt. 4.17.6.

They doe not ſay enough, which paſſing ouer the mention of fleſh and blood, doe thinke that we are made partakers onely of the ſpirit of Chriſt. The myſtery of the Supper is ſo great, that neither the tongue can expreſſe with ſpeaking, nor the heart comprehend with thinking the greatneſſe thereof. 4.17.7.

How farre the perfect communicating of Chriſt extendeth. Where is declared that Chriſt, which from the beginnig was the life giuing word of the father, made the fleſh which he tooke vpon him to be alſo life giuing to vs. 4.17.8 9.

The faithfull doe truely eat of the ſame fleſh how great diſtance of place ſo euer there be betweene them and it. 4.17.10.

The myſtery of the ſupper conſiſteth of two things, the bodily ſignes, and the ſpirituall truth: Which ſpirituall truth containeth three things, ſignification, matter, and effect. 4.17.11.

Of the tranſubſtantiation of bread and wine into the body and blood of Chriſt, which the Craftſ-men of the court of Rome haue forged. 4.17.12.13. &c. & 20.

They are without teſtimony of antiquity. And in what ſenſe the old writers ſaid, that in the conſecration is made a ſecret turning. Alſo the ſignification of the Supper agreeth not vnleſſe the ſubſtance of the outward ſignes remaine. 4.17.14.

The bread is a Sacrament to none but to men to whom the word is directed. And heere are confuted certaine arguments of the teachers of tranſubſtantiation. 4.17.15.

Of ſome men, which though they doe at one word grant that the ſubſtance of the ſignes remaineth, yet placing the bodie of Chriſt in bread and vnder bread, they fall backe into the locall preſence, and faigne a being euery where. 4.17.16.17.18.20.

A confutation of their obiections. 4.17.21. 22.23. &c.

It is prooued that this doctrine is not maintained, neither by the teſtimonie of Auguſtine, nor by authoritie of Scripture. 4.17.28. 29 30. 31.

A confutation of certaine other of their obiections, and chiefly of this that they ſay, that whatſoeuer we teach of ſpiritnall eating, is againſt the true and reall eating: where alſo is declared that the bodie of Chriſt is in the Supper offered to the Infidels, but they receiue it not. 4.17.33.

Neither can the ſaying of Auguſtine be drawen to this purpoſe, that the Sacraments are nothing appaired by the infidelitie of men. Which is prooued by diuerſe other teſtimonies of the ſame man. 4.17.34.

How the bodie and blood of Chriſt is giuen to vs in the Supper, and what manner of preſence of Chriſt we ought to hold therein. 4. 17.18 19.32.

Of the expoſition of the words of Chriſt in the Supper. 4.17.20.21.

The bodie of Chriſt is contained in quantitie, and comprehended in heauen vntill the laſt day, as it is prooued by the Scriptures. 4. 17.26.27.

Of the Papiſts carnall adoration, and concomitance, and conſecration of the hoſt (as they call it) and carrying it about in pompe. 4.17.35.36.37.

The myſterie of the Supper ought to ſtir vs vp to giuing of thankes, to exerciſe vs in remembring the death of Chriſt, to kindle vs to holineſſe of life, and chiefly to charitie. 4. 17.37.38.

In the Papacie the Supper (the true miniſtration whereof is not without the word) is turned into a dumbe action. And heere is ſpoken of the laying vp of the Sacrament to be extraordinarily diſtributed to ſicke men. 4. 17.39.

The doctrine of the Papiſts, when they go about to prepare men to the worthinesse of eating the body of Christ, doth in cruell wise torment consciences: And the deuill could not by any readier way destroy men. Of the best remedy to auoid this destruction. They erre which in the supper doe require of the faithfull perfection of faith. 4.17.41.42.

As touching the outward vsage of the ministration of the Supper, there are many things indifferent; And how it ought to be ministred most comely. 4.17.43.

Of the small assembly at this day at the partaking of the Supper, which is a token of contempt, wherewith the holy fathers in old time were much displeased: And how the custome which commandeth men to communicate once euery yeere, was a most certaine inuention of the deuill. 4.17.44.45.46.

It is prooued by authority of the Scripture and by the vsage of the old Church, fowre hundred yeers before the death of Gregory, and by many other arguments, that the constitution which tooke away from lay men the cup of the Lord, came out of the deuills work-shop. 4.17.47.48.49.50.

Of the concomitance of the bloud in the flesh of Christ, which is a popish inuention. 4.17.47.

The Supper of the Lord is profanely abused, if it be giuen to all men without choice. Of the duty of ministers in reiecting the vnworthy. 4.12.5.

A briefe sum of those things which we ought to know concerning the two Sacraments. And why the Supper is oftentimes ministred, and Baptisme but once. 4.18.19.

Swearing.

An exposition of the third commandement, in which these three things are contained; that we neither thinke nor speake any thing of God, nor of his word and honorable mysteries, nor yet of any of his works, otherwise than reuerently. 2.8.22.

A definition of Swearing: where is declared that it is a kind of worshipping of God. And therefore we must beware that our oathes containe not any dishonor to the name of God, which is done in forswearing: or any contempt of it, which is done in superfluous oathes, or in which the name of any other than God is vsed. 2.8.23.24.25.

It is prooued by Scripture against the Anabaptists: that all oathes are not forbidden vs, that Christ in the Gospell changed nothing as touching the rule of Swearing, set foorth in the law. 2.8.26. Which is prooued by his owne example: and not only publike, but also priuate oathes are permitted, keeping the moderation which the law commandeth. 2.8.27.

T

Temples.

OF Temples of Christian men for assemblies of the congregation. 3.20.30.

It is prooued by the authority of the old Church, and the reasons of Augustine, that it is not expedient, that there should be any images in Christian temples. 1.11.13.

The preaching of the word and the Sacraments, are liuely images which only are fit to be in Christian Temples. 1.11.7.13.

The wickednesse of the Nycene Synode which was holden by the commandement of Irene the Empresse, and the filthy follies therof in allowing images in Temples, and the worshipping of them. 1.11.14.15.16.

Of the garnishing of Temples and holy things in the old Church. 4.4.8. and 4.5.18.

Temptations.

Of diuerse kinds of Temptations: and in what sense it is said that God tempteth vs. 3.20.46.

Testament, old, and new.

Of the likenes of the old, and new Testament: Where is declared, that they are all one in substance and matter, but only doe differ in ministration. The likenes standeth chiefly in three points. 2.10.1.2.

The first point is, that the old Testament did not hold the fathers in earthly felicity, but had chiefe regard to the life to come. Which is prooued by Paul, which saith that the promises of the Gospell are contained vnder it. 2.10.3.

The same also is prooued by the law and the Prophets: First, by considering the words of the couenant: I am your God. 2.10.7.8.

Againe, I will be the God of your seed after you. Sect. 9. Also by the life of the holy Fathers, as Adam, Abel, Noe, Sect. 10. Abraham, Sect. 11. Isaac, Iacob, Sect. 12.13.14. And by many testimonies of Dauid. Se. 15.16.17.18. Of Iob, Sect. 19. Generally of all the latter Prophets. Sect. 20. But namely of Ezechiel. Sect. 21 Of Esay and Daniel. Sect. 22. A conclusion of this point with rehearsing certaine testimonies out of the new Testament. Sect. 23.

The second point is that the olde Testament did not stand vpon the merits of men, but vpon the free mercie of God. The third point is that the couenant of the Fathers with God, did then stand vpon like knowledge of Christ the Mediator. 2.10.4.

Also in signification of Sacraments the Israelites vnder the law were equall with the Christian people. 2.10.5.6.

There are fower differences of the old Testament from the new, whereunto we may adde a fift. The first is, that although in the olde time also the Lords will was to direct the soules of his people to the heauenly inheritance: Yet to the end that they might be the better nourished in the hope thereof, he gaue it them to be holden, and after a certaine manner tasted vnder earthly benefits. But now the grace of the life to come, being more clearely reuealed by the Gospell, he directeth our mindes the straight way to the meditation thereof, leauing the inferiour manner of exercising which hee vsed among the Israelites. 2.11.1.

Therefore the old Church is compared to an heire vnder age, which is gouerned by Gardians. 2.11.2.

For this reason, the Father so much esteemed this life, and the blessings thereof. 2.11.3.

The second difference is in figures wherewith the olde Testament did shew foorth the image and shadow of spirituall good things. The new Testament giueth the present truth and perfect bodie. There is also a reason shewed why the Lord kept this order: And a definition of the old testament. 2.11.4.

In this sense it is saide, that the Iewes were by the introduction or schooling of the Law led vnto Christ: before that hee was deliuered in the flesh. 2.11.5. which appeared in the most excellent Prophets that were endued with singular grace of the Spirit. Sect. 6.

The third difference is taken out of the one and thirtie Chapter of Ieremie, and the third Chapter of the second Epistle to the Corinthians, that the olde Testament is literall, and the new Testament is spirituall: the old bringeth death, the new is the instrument of life. 2.11.7.8.

The fourth difference is, that the Scripture calleth the olde Testament, the Testament of bondage, because it engendreth feare in mens mindes: but the new is called the Testament of libertie, because it raiseth them vp to confidence and suretie. The three latter differences are comparisons of the law and the Gospell. The first containeth also the promises made before the law. The Fathers liued so vnder the law and the olde Testament, that they staied not there, but alwaies aspired to the new, yea and embraced a certaine communicating thereof. 2.11.9.10.

The fift difference is, that before the comming of Christ, the Lord had seuered one nation, in which he would keepe the couenant of his grace, in the meane time neglecting all other nations. So the calling of the Gentiles is a certaine signe, wherewith the excellencie of the new Testament is set foorth aboue the olde: a thing so incredible, that it seemed yet new to the Apostles themselues, being exercised in reading of the Prophets, and endued with the holy Ghost. 2.11.11.12.

A conclusion of this matter, and an answere to diuerse obiections of some men, which say that this varietie in the Church, this diuerse manner of teaching, so great change of vsages and ceremonies, is a great absurditie. Where is declared that the constancie of God appeareth in this changing, and he hath done nothing but wisely, righteously, and in mercy, when he gouerneth his Church, after one sort in childhood and after another sort in riper age, and also when hee did keepe close in one people the shewing foorth of his grace before the comming of Christ, which afterward he powred foorth vpon all Nations. 2.11.13.14.

Theft.

An exposition of the eight Commandement: where is intreated of diuers kindes of Theft, and some which although men iudge otherwise yet are accounted Thefts before God. And so he that doth not performe that which by the office of his calling he oweth to other, is a theefe 2.8.43.

What we ought to doe, that we may obey this commandement, is shewed by diuers examples according to the diuersity of persons and offices. 2.8.46.

Traditions.

For as much as the Lord, willing to teach a rule of true righteousnesse, hath drawen all the parts thereof to his owne will, thereby it appeareth, that all the good works which men deuise of their owne wits, are nothing worth before him: But the true worshipping standeth vpon obedience only, which is the beginning, mother, and preseruer of all vertues. 2. 8. 5.

Of Traditions of men, that is to say, ordinances proceeding from men, concerning the worshipping of God: And of the vngodlinesse and necessity of them. 4 10. 1. 2. 5. 6. 7. 8.

A diuision of Popish constitutions, which they call Traditions of the Church, into such as containe ceremonies, and other which are said to pertaine to discipline. The wickednesse of both sorts, because they place the worship of God in them, and consciences are bound with precise necessity of them. 4. 10. 9.

For them the commandement of God is made voide. 4. 10. 10.

A true marke of mens Traditions, which ought to be reiected of the Church, and of all godly men. 4. 10. 16.

A confutation of the pretence which some men vse that defend Popish Traditions to be of God, because the Church cannot erre, and is gouerned by the holy Ghost. 4. 10. 17.

It is a meere mockery to say, that the Apostles were authors of the Traditions, wherewith the Church hath heretofore been oppressed. 4. 10. 18. 19. 20.

The example of the Apostles, when they commanded the Gentiles to abstaine from things offered vnto Idols, from strangled, and from blood, is falsely alleadged to excuse the tyranny of the Popes Lawes. 4. 10. 21. 22.

The Lords kingdome is taken from him, when he is worshipped with the lawes of mens Traditions: which is prooued by examples and testimonies of Scripture to haue alwaies been a most hainous offence in the sight of God. 4. 10. 23. 24.

The inuentions of men cannot be defended by the example of Menoha, which being a priuate man offered sacrifice, nor of Samuel which sacrificed in Ramath. 4. 10. 25. nor of Christ which willed men to beare the burdens that the Scribes and Pharisies did bind together. 4. 10. 26.

Of holy and profitable ordinances of the Church, and the end that they tend vnto. 4. 10. 1.

Of such ordinances of the Church as ought to be accounted holy, namely those which serue for comelinesse, or doe preserue order and peace in the Church. 4. 10. 27. 28. 29. We must wisely consider, which be of that sort. 4. 10. 30.

It is the duty of Christian people, to obserue such ordinances: And what errors herein are to be taken heed of: And how in the meane time, the liberty of consciences may still be preserued safe. 4. 10. 31. 32.

Tributes.

Of Tributes, Taxes, Impositions, and Finances, which are paid to Princes: And how Princes may vse them with a good conscience. 4. 20. 13.

Trinity.

In one simple essence of God, we must distinctly consider three persons, or (as the Greeks call them) Hypostases. 1. 13. 2.

A confutation of them which in this matter doe condemne the name of person, and reiect it for newnesse. 1. 13. 3. 4. 5.

The holy doctors haue been compelled to inuent certaine new words, to defend the truth of God against certaine subtill men, which mocked it out with shifting: as against Arrius they inuented this word Homousion Consubstantiall, and against Sabellicus the name of three properties or persons. 1. 13. 4. 16.

The diuers sentences of Hierome, Hillary, and Augustine, in the vse of these words. 1. 13. 5.

What we call a person, when we entreat of the Trinity. 1. 13. 6.

Of the error of Seruetus, in the taking of this word Person. 1. 13. 22.

As God hath more cleerly opened himselfe by the comming of Christ, so he is since that time more familiarly made known in the three Persons. 1. 13. 16.

Testimonies of Scripture, whereby is shewed the distinction of the Father from the Word, and of the word from the Spirit. 1. 13. 17.

Also in the Scripture there is a distinction made of the Father, from the Word and the Spirit, and of the Spirit from them both, as well by obseruation of order, as by prophecies ascribed to them. 1. 13. 18.

This distinction of Persons maketh not against the most simple vnitie of God. 1. 13. 19.

In what ſenſe the Fathers ſay, that the Father is the beginning of the Sonne, and yet that the Sonne hath his eſſence of himſelfe. 1. 13.19.

A brieſe ſumme of thoſe things which we ought to beleeue concerning the one eſſence of God and the three perſons. 1.13.20.

And herein we muſt diſpute ſoberly, and with great moderation, that neither our thought, nor our tongue, doe paſſe beyond the bounds of the word of God. 1.23.21.

A confutation of the doting errors of Seruetus in this point of doctrine. 1.13.22.

A confutation of the error of certaine lewd men, which ſay, that the Father is truly and properly the one only God, which in making the Son and the holy Ghoſt, did powre his Godhead into them. 1.13.23.

It is falſe which they ſay, that when mention is made of God in the Scripture, only the Father is meant thereby. 1.13.24.

Alſo it is falſe which they dreame of vndiuided ſubſtances, of which euery one hath a part of the eſſence. 1.13.25.

An anſwer to their obiection, that Chriſt, if he be properly God, is wrongfully called the ſonne of God. 1.13.26.

An anſwer to many places which they bring out of Ireneus for proofe of their opinion, where he affirmeth the Father of Chriſt to be the one only and eternall God of Iſrael. 1. 13.27.

Alſo to the places of Tertullian. Sect. 28.

It is prooued that Iuſtine, Hilary, and Auguſtine, doe make of our ſide. 1.13.19.

The Sonne is of the ſame ſubſtance with the Father. 4.8.16.

Laſt Vnction as they call it.

What manner of adminiſtration is of the Popiſh laſt Vnction, and in what forme of words: And how it cannot be defended by the authority of Iames, or by the example of the Apoſtles. 4.19.18, Foraſmuch as the grace of healing which was in the olde time giuen to the Apoſtles, hath long agoe ceaſed in the Church. Sect. 19. 20. And though it ſtill remained, yet this their wicked obſeruation is farre from that hol, ceremonie of the Apoſtles. A declaration of the blaſphemies thereof when they coniure the oyle, and aſcribe vnto it that which is proper to the holy Ghoſt. 4. 19.21.

Vocation.

See calling.

Vowes.

Of Vowes which are made againſt the expreſſe word of God: whether they may well be vowed of Chriſtian men, and how they are to be eſteemed. 4.13.1.6.

Three things are to be conſidered in Vowes: Who it is to whom we vow, namely God which delighteth in obedience. 4. 13. 2. Who we be that doe Vowe, that we meaſure our owne ſtrength and looke vpon our calling, that we neglect not the benefit of liberty which God hath giuen vs. Sect. 3. And with what mind we Vow. Sect. 4.

Of the Prieſts, Monkes and Nunnes Vowes of ſingle life. 4.13.3.17.18.19.

There be fowre ends of Vowes, two haue reſpect to the time paſt, and two to the time to come. 4.13.4.5.

There is one common Vowe of all the faithfull which they make in baptiſme. 4.13.6.

Of the raſhneſſe and ſuperſtition of the world in making of Vowes. 4.13.1.7.

W

Of Warres.

Warres are lawfull, when Magiſtrates are driuen of neceſſity to take weapon in hand, to execute publicke reuenge vpon thoſe that trouble the peace of their dominion, whether they be ciuill or foraine enemies. 4.20.11.

It maketh not to the contrary hereof, which many alleadge, that there is not in the new Teſtament any teſtimony or example which prooueth that Warre is a thing lawfull for Chriſtians. But Magiſtrates ought to take great heed, that in taking of weapon in hand, they nothing at all follow their owne luſtes. As Warre, ſo gariſons alſo, leagues and ciuill fortifications are things lawfull for Chriſtians to vſe. 4.20.12.

Will of God.

Of the ſecret will of God. Alſo of another Will, whereunto anſwereth Willing obedience. 3.20.43. and 3.24.1.7.

Will of Man.

Whether the Will of man be in euery part through defiled and corrupted, so that it bringeth foorth nothing but euill: Or whether it yet retaine some liberty of choise. Where is declared the common saying taken out of the Philosophers, that all things by naturall disposition couet that which is good. And there is shewed that the liberty of will cannot be proued thereby. 2.2 26.

The soule hath not onely a weake power but no power at all of it selfe to aspire to goodnesse. And sith the whole man is subiect to the dominion of sinne, it is proued by testimonies of Scripture and of Augustine, that the will of man is bound with most straight bondes. 2. 2.27.

Man by his fall lost not his Will, but the soundnesse of his Will, so that he cannot moone, much lesse apply himselfe to goodnesse, but is necessarily drawen or lead vnto euill, howbeit not by compulsion but voluntarily. Which is proued by Augustine and Bernard, A large declaration of the difference betweene compulsion and necessity. 2.3.5.

Sith the Lord both begimneth and perfiteth good in our hearts, sith he worketh in vs to will that is to say the good will, sith he createth a new heart, taketh away the stony heart and gineth a flesby heart, it followeth, that the Will of man is vtterly corrupted and hath no goodnesse at all. 2.3.6.

It is cleerely proued by reasons and diuers testimonies of Scripture, that God worketh good will in them that be his, not onely in preparing or turning them from the beginnig so as it may afterward doe some good of it selfe. But because it is his onely worke that Will conceiueth a loue of goodnesse, that it is enclined to the study thereof, that it is stirred and mooued to an endeuour to follow it, and againe that the choise, study, and endeuour doe not faint, but proceed to effect, finally that man goeth constantly forward in them and continueth to the end. 2.3.7.8.9.

Therefore it is proued by the authority of Scripture and of Augustine that this which hath beene taught these many ages, that God so mooueth our Will, that it is afterward in our owne choise to obey or disobey his motion and other like sayings are vtterly false. 2.3.10.11. 12.13.14.

Also in doings, which of themselues are neither righteous nor vnrighteous, and belong rather to the bodily than the spirituall life, the will of man is not free, but by the speciall motion of God is enclined to clemency, mercy, wrath, feare, and other diuerse affections, when it pleaseth him to make way for his prouidence. Which is proued by scripture, by daily experience, and by the authority of Augustine. 2.4.6.7.

Workes.

A comparison of the pureneſſe of God with all the righteousnesse of men. 3.12.4.5.

All the offspring of Adam being diuided into fower kindes of men, it is proued that they haue no holinesse, or righteousnesse: First in them which are endued with no knowledge of God, in whom although there doe sometime appeere excellent qualities (which are the gifts of God) yet there is in them nothing pure. 3.14.1.2.3.4.5.6.

The same is shewed in them which being professed by Sacraments, are Christians onely in name, denying God in their deeds: Also in hypocrites which with vaine false colours doe hide the wickednesse of their heart. 3.14.7.8.

Finally, it is proued that euen the children of God truly regenerated by his Spirit, cannot stand by any righteousnesse of their owne workes before the iudgement of God because they can bring foorth no good worke that is not sprinkeled with some vnclannesse of the flesh, and therefore damnable. Moreouer although they could bring forth any such worke, yet one sinne is enough to blot out the remembrance of all former righteousnesse. 3.14.9. 10.11.

A confutation of the Papists shifts concerning the righteousnesse of workes: and specially of the same horrible monster of workes of supererogation. 3.14.12.13.14.15.

When we entreat of workes we must thrust two pestilences out of our mindes: that wee put no trust in the righteousnesse of our owne workes, and that we ascribe no glory vnto them 3.14.16.

The Scripture setteth out and declareth fower kindes of causes in stablishing our saluation: And it is proued that in them all there is no regard of workes. 3.14.17.

Where sometimes the Saints doe bolden themselues with remembrance of their owne innocency and vprightnesse: how the same is to be taken: and how it doth in no wise abate any thing from the free righteousnesse in Christ. 3. 14.18.19.20.

Where the Scripture ſaith that the good workes of the faithfull doe moeue God to doe them good, the order is therein rather expreſſed than the cauſe. 3.14.21.

Why the Lord in the Scripture calleth good workes ours, and promiſeth reward to them. 3.15.3.

A confutation of the Sophiſters inuention, concerning Morall workes, whereby men be made acceptable to GOD, before that they be grafted in Chriſt. 3.15.6. and 17.4.

Thoſe rewardes are giuen to the workes of the faithfull, which the Lord in his Law hath promiſed to the followers of righteouſneſſe: but thereof there are three cauſes to be conſidered. 3.17.3.

We may note in the Scripture two acceptances of man with God, of which the latter although it haue reſpect to the good workes of the faithfull, yet is alſo the free mercy of God. 3.17.4.5.

Woen it is ſaid that God doth good to them that loue him, heere is not rehearſed a cauſe why he ſhould doe them good, but rather the manner of what ſort they be by his grace. 3.17.6.

An expoſition of certaine place wherein the Scripture gineth to good workes the name of righteouſneſſe. And there is ſhewed that thoſe places are not againſt the doctrine of iuſtification of faith. 3.17.7.

One good worke or many doe not ſuffice for righteouſneſſe before God, although one ſinne ſuffice to condemne. And heere the principle hath no place, the contraries haue all one rule. 3.18.10.

Why the Lord ſaid that he rendereth to workes that which he had freely giuen before Workes. 3.18.3. And therein he helpeth our weakeneſſe leaſt we ſhould be diſcouraged. 3.18.4.6.7.

Hereupon hangeth the righteouſneſſe of the good Workes which the faithfull doe, that by pardon they are allowed of God. 3.18.5.

The end of the Table.

TO THE CHRISTIAN and Studious Readers of this Booke, AVGVSTINE MARLORATE wiſheth health.

WHoſoeuer ſhall read and peruſe theſe two Tables following, and eſpecially the latter, may maruell what I meant (after ſo many impreſſions and corrections of this worke) to collect and gather all the places of holy Scriptures therein alleadged: and a great part of the authorities therein expounded, whereas if any fruit or profite thereof were to be had, the ſame long before might haue been done: and eſpecially about three yeeres paſt, when the Author himſelfe was ſo diligent therein: who beſides the many and profitable additions (which it containeth) he himſelfe ſetting the ſame in order, with his owne hands, and reducing it to a moſt exact perfection did then ſet and publiſh it foorth, in ſuch ſort, that in Foure Bookes, being diuided into Chapters and diuers Sections, he hath right worthily and in familiar manner, compriſed the ſumme of the whole Chriſtian Religion. And certainely I cannot deny but it would haue beene very good and commodious, if that any one man would haue taken the paine, faithfully and truely to haue collected thoſe places: which thing I thought once to haue done by the aduiſe of the Imprinter, ſauing that my charge and office office did elſe where call mee, as alſo when I had peruſed and ſet it in an other order than it was before, and had euen finiſhed it, I was compelled to omit it, or at the leaſt to ſurceaſe for the time. And after that this Booke being put foorth both in Latine and French, was ſet to ſale in euery place, becauſe I ſaw no man who then did take the paine to reduce the places of Scriptures to a Table, and vnderſtanding how profitable the ſame would be to all men: I could not chooſe but after my power, and as leaſure ſerued in thoſe troubleſome times, to imploy my whole care and trauell therein. And becauſe all things ſhould be done and come foorth more certaine and in better order: I would not giue credit, nor truſt to the numbers which the Imprinter had before ſet and made: for when I had diligently conferred them all, I found many falſe, many omitted, and ſome diſorderly ſet: And ſurely that happeneth very ſoone to ſuch as are not beſt skilfull in examining and peruſing the places of holy Scripture to be ſoone deceiued. Wherefore all things diligently reſtored, and that ſupplied which ſeemed to want, I did ſo order the places of Scripture collected out of the olde and new Teſtament, that if there were any, through forgetfulneſſe, or by any other meanes omitted or ouerskipped: (as it cannot bee but that in a great harueſt ſome one eare of corne ſhall eſcape the reapers hand) I durſt warrant ſo few ſhall be found, that this Table being brought to triall you ſhall not finde one much more plentifull or larger. Neuertheleſſe I doe pray and requeſt the readers, that if they doe finde any, they ſhall aduertiſe the Imprinter, whereby the ſame may better be examined and corrected. And this is to be noted, that ſuch whole verſes as I haue compriſed in this Table, they were not wholy but in part alleadged, much leſſe expounded in the Inſtitution: which thing I did vpon good conſideration. For oftentimes it happeneth that in diuers places of the Inſtitutions, ſome authorities are alleadged, which are prooued but by ſome part of the verſe. And becauſe in noting the places and numbers, we muſt vſe repititions (which for the moſt part bring a lothſomneſſe to the reader) I thought it better to put in the whole verſe, than by often diuiſions, to vſe vaine and ſuperfluous repititions. And as concerning the commoditie which the reader may gather by this my trauell (beſides that which by vſe and experience I am taught by theſe Tables, which for mine owne priuate ſtudie and exerciſe I wrote vpon the Inſtitutions heretofore ſet foorth) I durſt to affirme this much, that they which are not exerciſed in entreating the holy Scripture, and yet deſirous to ſerue the Church of God, doe diligently endeuour themſelues thereunto, they ſhall finde a large and plaine way, both with dexteritie to expound the writings of the Prophets and Apoſtles, as alſo aptly to apply the authorities here alleadged, and ſuch like to the edifying of the Church, which is the very end of the whole. And although we want not good Comentaries to diſcouer vnto vs the naturall ſenſe of the Scripture, which wee doe now ſtudie and apply: yet becauſe they who wrote the ſame, and who with good ſucceſſe haue trauelled therein, were contented with the plaine and ſyncere expoſition of the text: none could tell by the vſe of the ſaid Commentaries onely (vnleſſe they were well practiſed in the principles of religion) how and to what common place they ought to apply the argument then in hand. But who can be ſo contented to vſe this Table, whenſoeuer he ſhall finde the places which he entreateth, he ſhall ſee how and to what end the ſame is to be applied, whether to the confirmation of true doctrine, or to the confuting of the aduerſaries, or to the reconciling of ſuch places as ſeeme to be repugnant. And this ſhall be very commodious and profitable, not onely for the amplifying of any argument, but alſo to ſatisfie them, which are deſirous to be confirmed in the principall points of Chriſtian Religion. For it is manifeſt how ſimple and ſlender is their oration and ſpeech, which bring and alleadge nothing elſe, but as they read in the Commentaries: where the Authors themſelues (being moſt worthy and well learned) doe chiefly deſire breuitie, becauſe the readers ſhould vſe and ſtudie the common places themſelues, to the end they ſhould the more largely be applied to thoſe things which in the Commentaries are but briefly expounded. Againe, for as much as we haue not alwaies in readineſſe, what good Authors haue written vpon the Scripture: and very few Commentaries vpon ſome Bookes, and namely vpon this Inſtitution, are to be found or had: This Table expounding the obſcure and hard authorities, ſhall greatly further and helpe the readers. For they ſhall either finde ſome ready interpretation, or ſome entrance whereby to ſearch and finde out the true ſentence. And as touching the tranſlation, I truſt it ſhall not ſeeme ſtrange to the reader, in that I haue rather followed the ſelfe ſame words, as they be in the Bible, than as they bee alleadged by Caluin in this his Inſtitution. For he being a man moſt excellently well learned, and of great reading (as by his workes it doth appeare, how ready and familiar the Scriptures were to him) had not alwaies the bookes in readineſſe, or lying open before him, when he wrote: neither was it neceſſarie that whatſoeuer hee did auouch out of the old or new Teſtament, hee ſhould expreſſe or write it in the ſelfe ſame wordes: for it is ſufficient, that the ſenſe be faithfully retained, and the true proprietie of the word obſerued, and ſo to eſchew the cauillings of all men, ſauing ſuch as will finde fault in that, which in the leaſt part cannot be followed nor obſerued. Being therefore perſwaded, that neither he himſelfe will bee offended, nor the Reader miſlike, if the ſentences in the Bible, be tranſlated according to the Hebrew, as concerning the old Teſtament, and according to the Greeke, as touching the new Teſtament: I haue aduentured to aduouch the authorities of Scriptures in another order (as concerning the wordes) than they are alleadged in this booke of Inſtitutions. And therefore ſometimes that which is recited in the third perſon, this Table doth expreſſe in the ſecond, and ſo contrariwiſe: but yet ſo, that the ſenſe and meaning is alwaies reſerued, which thing euery man ſhall eaſily perceiue, if diligently and without haſtie iudgement, he doe conferre euery thing together: for elſe curious heads doe looſe that fruit, which by aduiſed reading they might haue and recieue. And as concerning the names and numbers of the bookes, and of the Chapters of the olde Teſtament, wee haue not followed the common tranſlation, but that which is moſt agreable to the Hebrew. And therefore we doe aduertiſe the readers, that they doe not take the firſt booke of the Kings, for the firſt of Samuel: nor the ſecond of Kings for the ſecond of the ſame Prophet: which is ſo done by them, who heretofore haue quoted the Chapters in this imprinted booke, becauſe they followed the Concordances of the Bible, called the great Concordances, which is collected according to the common tranſlation: and by that meanes, as it may euidently appeare to all men ſome bookes of the old Teſtament are not lightly intituled: and the Pſalmes otherwiſe and in another order diuided, than did the Hebrewes. And foraſmuch as all the principall points of religion are in this Booke copiouſly and faithfully expounded, we may eaſily refute the falſe opinions of the Aduerſaries. Whoſoeuer ſhall come to the reading thereof, either with a minde to learne, or a deſire to profit: there is no doubt, but he ſhall very much profit himſelfe, and helpe others: whoſe conſciences he may ſo ſtrengthen and aſſure, as they neede not to quaile in any point, becauſe they be aſſured, that their Faith is grounded vpon the firme foundation of the Prophets and Apoſtles, who wrote and ſpake, being inſpired by the holy Ghoſt, who hath willed and commanded his moſt pretious and deare word, to be read, heard, and handled, in all feare and reuerence, without adding thereunto, or taking from the ſame: leaſt we be worthily reproued of our folly. Let vs therefore, in all ſimplicitie and feare of God, read ſo wholeſome and neceſſarie things, and daily proceed therein, in the grace and knowledge of God, who onely is the Sauiour, head and Doctor of the Church: To whom now and for euer be all glory. 2 Now when the gouernour of the feast had tasted of the water that was made wine, &c. 4.23.3

15 Then he made a scourge of small cords, and draue them all out of the temple with the sheepe and oxen, and powred out the changers money, and ouerthrew the tables. 4.19.23

19 Iesus answered and said vnto them, destroy this temple, and in three daies I will raise it vp againe. 2.14.4. & 3.25.7

21 But he spake of the Temple of his body. 2.14.4. & 3.25.7

23 Now when he was at Ierusalem, at the Passeouer in the feast, many beleeued in his name, when they saw the miracles which he did. 4.2.5

24 But Iesus did not commit himselfe vnto them, because he knew them all. 3.2,12

3.3 Verily, verily, I say vnto thee except a man bee borne againe, hee cannot see the kingdome of God. 2.3.1. & 4.16.17

5 Except that a man be borne of water and of the spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdome of God. 4.16.25

6 That which is borne of the flesh is flesh: and that which is borne of the spirit, is spirit. 2.1.6. & 2.3.1

13 For no man ascendeth vp to heauen, but he that hath descended from heauen, euen the sonne of man which is in heauen. 2.14. 2. & 4.17.30

14 And as Moses lifted vp the serpent in the wildernesse, so must the sonne of man be lift vp. 2.14.4. & 4.18.20

16 For God so loued the world, that he gaue his onely begotten sonne, that whosoeuer beleeueth in him, should not perish, but haue life euerlasting. 2.12.4. & 2.16.4. & 2. 17.1. & 3.14.17. & 3.24.5. & 3.24.7

23 And Iohn also baptised in Enon besides Salem, &c. 4.15.6

27 Man can receiue nothing, except it be giuen him from heauen. 2.2.20

33 He that hath receiued his testimony hath sealed that God is true. 3.2.8

34 For he whom God hath sent, speaketh the word of God: for God giueth him not the spirit by measure. 2.15.1. & 2.15.5
36 He that beleeueth in the Sonne, hath euerlasting life: and hee that obeieth not the Sonne, shall not see life, but the wrath of God abideth on him. 4.16.31
4.1 Now when the Lord knew, that the Pharisees had heard, that Iesus made and baptised moe disciples than Iohn, 4.15.6
14 But whosoeuer drinketh of the water that I shall giue him, shal neuer be more a thirst: but the water that I shall giue him, shall be in him a well of water, springing out into euerlasting life. 3.1.3
22 Yee worship that which yee know not: wee worship that which we know: for saluation is of the Iewes. 1.5.12.& 1.6.4.& 2.6.1
23 But the houre commeth, and now is, when the true worshippers shall worship the Father in spirit and truth, &c. 3.20.30. & 4.10.14
24 God is a spirit, &c. 1.13.24
25 I know well that Messias shall come, which is called Christ: when he is come he will tell vs all things. 2.15.1.& 4.8.7
25 Behold, I say vnto you, lift vp your eies, and looke on the regions, for they are white already vnto harueſt. 4.16.31
42 And they said vnto the woman, now wee beleeue not because of thy saying: for wee haue heard him our selues, and know that this is indeed the Christ, that Sauiour of the world. 3.2.5
53 Then the father knew that it was the same houre in the which Iesus had said vnto him, thy sonne liueth. And hee beleeued and all his houshold. 3.2.5
5.8 Iesus said vnto him, rise: take vp thy bed, and walke. 4.19.29
17 My father worketh hitherto, and I worke. 1.13.7.& 1.13.12.& 1.16.4.& 2.14.2
38 Therefore the Iewes sought the more to kill him: not onely because he had broken the Sabboth: but said also that God was his father, and made himselfe equall with God. 1.13.12
21 For like as the father raiseth vp the dead, and quickneth them, so the sonne quickneth whom he will. 2.14.3
22 For the Father iudgeth no man, but hath committed all iudgement to the Sonne. 2. 14.3.& 2.16.18
23 Because that all men should honour the Sonne, as they honour the Father: he that honoureth not the Sonne, the same honoureth not the Father, which hath sent him. 2.6.2.& 2.14.3
34 He that heareth my word, & beleeueth in him that sent me, hath euerlasting life, and shall not come into condemnation, but hath passed from death to life. 2.9.3.& 3.15.6. & 3.25.1.& 3.24.5.& 4.16.26
25 The houre shall come, and now is, when the dead shall heare the voice of the Sonne of God, and they that heare it, shall liue. 2.5.19.& 2.12.4.& 3.14.5
26 For as the Father hath life in himselfe, so likewise hath he giuen to the Sonne, to haue life in himselfe. 4.17.9
28 Marueil not at this, for the houre shall come in the which all that are in the graues, shall heare his voice. 3.25.4.& 3.25.7
29 And they shall come foorth that haue done good vnto the resurrection of life: but they that haue done euill, vnto the resurrection of condemnation. 3.17.1
32 There is another that beareth witnesse of me, &c. 1.13.17
35 Hee was a burning, and a shining candle: and yee would for a season haue reioyced in his light. 2.9.5
36 For the worke which the Father hath giuen me to finish, the same works that I doe, beare witnesse of mee, that the Father sent me. 1.13.13
44 How can you beleeue, which receiue honour one of another, and seeke not the honour that commeth of God alone? 3.11.9
46 For had ye beleeued Moses, ye would haue beleeued me: for he wrote of me. 2.9.1
6.27. Labour not for the meate which perisheth, but for the meate that endureth vnto euerlasting life, which the Sonne of man shall giue vnto you, &c. 3.18.1.& 4.14.25
29 This is the worke of God, that yee beleeue in him whom he hath sent. 3.19.10
35 I am the bread of life: hee that commeth to me shall not hunger, and he that beleeueth in me shal neuer thirst. 3.24.5.& 4. 17.4
37 All that the Father giueth me, shall come to me, and him that commeth to me, I cast not away. 3.22.7.& 3.24.6
38 For I came downe from heauen, not to doe mine owne will, but his will which sent me. 2.14.2
39 And this is the Fathers will, which hath sent me, that of all which he hath giuen me, I should loose nothing, but should raise it vp againe at the last day. 3.22.7.& 3.22.10. & 3.24.6.& 3.24.7.& 3.25.8

40 And

40 And this is the will of him that ſent mee, that euery man which ſeeth the Sonne, and beleeueth in him, ſhould haue euerlaſting life, &c. 3.20 10. & 3.24.6

51 I am the liuing bread which came downe from heauen: if any man eate of this bread he ſhall liue for euer: and the bread that I will giue is my fleſh, which I wil giue for the life of the world. 3.11.8. & & 4.17.5. & 4.17.14

53 Then Ieſus ſaid vnto them, verily, verily I ſay vnto you, except ye eate the fleſh of the Sonne of man, and drinke his bloud, ye haue no life in you. 3.11.9. & 4.17.6

54 Whoſoeuer eateth my fleſh and drinketh my bloud, hath eternall life, and I will raiſe him vp at the laſt day. 3.11.9. & 4.17.34

38 For the holy Ghoſt was not yet giuen becauſe that Ieſus was not yet glorified. 4.17.2

8.12 Then ſpake Ieſus againe vnto them, ſaying, I am the light of the world, he that followeth mee, ſhall not walke in darkneſſe, but ſhall haue the light of life. 2.15.3. & 3 2.1. & 3.11.12. & 4.19.23

2 For yee are the ſeale of my Apoſtleſhip in the Lord. 4.1.6

5 Or haue we not power to lead about a wife being a ſiſter, as well as the reſt of the Apoſtles, and as the brethren of the Lord, and Cephas. 4.12.25

12 Neuertheles we haue not vſed this power, but ſuffer all things, that we ſhould not hinder the Goſpell of Chriſt. 3.4.15

16 And woe is vnto me, If I preach not the Goſpel. 4.5.6

2 And were all baptized vnto Moſes in the cloud, and in the ſea. 4.15.9

3 And did all eate the ſame ſpirituall meat, 4.14.23. and 4.18.20

4 And did all drink the ſame ſpirituall drinke, for they dranke of the ſpirituall rocke that followed them: and the rocke was Chriſt, 1.13.10. & 2.9.1. & 4.14.26. & 17.15 21.22

5 But with many of them God was not pleaſed, for they were ouerthrowen in the wilderneſſe. 4.14.24

11 And all theſe things came vnto them for examples, and were written to admoniſh vs, vpon whom the ends of the world are come. 2.10.5. & 3.2.22

12 Wherefore let him that thinketh he ſtandeth, take heed leaſt he fall. 3.2.40. & 3.24.6

17 For we that are many are one bread and one body, becauſe we all are partakers of one bread. 4.17.14

23 All things are lawful for me, but all things are not expedient: all things are lawful for me, but all things edifie not. 3.19.12

25 Whatſoeuer is ſold in the ſhambles, eate yee, and aske no queſtion for conſcience ſake 3.19.11

28 But if any man ſay vnto you, this is ſacrificed vnto idols, eate it not becauſe of him that ſhewed it, and for thy conſcience, &c. 3.19.6. & 4.10.4

29 And the conſcience I ſay not thine but of that other, &c. 3.19.11. & 4.10.4

11.4 Euery man praying or prophecying hauing any thing on his head dishonoureth his head. 4.19.26

5 But euery woman that prayeth or prophecieth bareheaded, dishonoureth her head. 4.10.29

7 For a man ought not to couer his head: forasmuch as he is the image & glory of God: but the woman is the glory of the man. 1. 15.4

16 But if any man lust to be contentious, we haue no such custome, neither the churches of God. 4.10.31

26 For as often as ye shall eate this bread and drinke this cup, yee shew the Lords death vntill he come. 4.16.30. and 4.17.37

12 For now we see through a glasse darkely, but then shall we see face to face, &c. 3.22. 11. & 4.18.20

13 And now abideth faith, hope and loue, euen these three: but the chiefest of these is loue. 3.18.8

14.15 What is it then? I will pray with the spirit, but I will pray with the vnderstanding also, &c. 3.20.5. and 3.20.32

12 Now if it be preached, that Christ is risen from the dead, how say some among you, that there is no resurrection of the dead? 3.25.7. and 4.1.14
13 For if there be no resurrection of the dead, then is Christ not risen. 3.25.3
14 And if Christ be not risen, then is our preaching in vaine, and your faith is also in vaine. 3.25.3
16 For if the dead bee not raised, then is Christ not raised. 2.13.2
17 And if Christ be not raised, your faith is vaine, &c. 2.13.2. and 2.16.13
19 If in this life onely we haue hope in Christ, we are of all men the most miserable. 3.9.6. and 3.18.4

10 But now is made manifeſt by the appearing of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt, who hath aboliſhed death, and hath brought life and immortalitie to light through the Goſpell. 2.9.2. & 3.25.1

12 For the which cauſe alſo I ſuffer theſe things, neither am I aſhamed: I know whom I haue beleeued, and I am perſwaded, he is able to keepe that I haue committed vnto him againſt that day, 3.2.31. & 3.25.4

TITVS.

1.1 PAul a ſeruant of God, and an Apoſtle of Ieſus Chriſt according to the faith of the elect of God, and knowledge of the truth, which is according to holineſſe. 3.2.12. & 3.22.10

15 All things are pure to the pure: but to the defiled and faithleſſe, nothing is pure, &c. 3.19.9. & 4.13.9. & 4.17.40

2.2 That old men be ſober, ſhewing themſelues woorthy to be reuerenced, and temperate, ſound in faith, loue, and patience, 3.2.13

11 For the grace of God that bringeth ſaluation to all men hath appeared. 2.12.4. & 3.7.2. & 3.16.2. & 4.1.26

4 But when the bountifulneſſe and loue of God our Sauiour towards man appeared. 2.5.17. and 3.14.5. and 4.1.26
5 Not by the works of righteouſneſſe that we had done, but according to his mercy he ſaued vs, by the waſhing of regeneration, &c. 1.13.14. & 2.5.17. & 3.4.25. & 4.15.2,5. & 4.16.20. & 4.17.22

9 But ſtay fooliſh queſtions and genealogies, and contentions, and brawlings about the law, for they are vnprofitable and vaine. 2.12.5

HEBREVVES.

1.1 GOd many times and diuerſly ſpake to the Fathers by the Prophets. 2.9.1. & 2.15.1. & 4.8.7
2 In theſe latter daies he ſpake to vs by his Sonne. 1.13.7. & 4.8.7. & 4.18.20
3 Who being the brightneſſe of his glorie, and the engraued forme of his perſon, and beareth vp all things by his mightie word, hath by himſelfe purged our ſinnes, &c. 1.13.2,12. & 1.16.4. & 2.2.20. & 2.14.3
4 Beeing made ſo much more excellent than Angels, by how much he hath obtained a more excellent name. 1.14.9
6 Let the Angels of God worſhip him. 1.13.11. & 1.13.23. & 1.14.9
10 And thou O Lord, in the beginning haſt laid the foundations of the earth: and the heauens be the works of thy hands. 1.13.11. & 1.13.23. & 1.13.26
14 Be they not all miniſtring ſpirits ſent foorth to miniſter for their ſakes that ſhall be heires of ſaluation. 1.14.9. and 3.20.23
2.5 He hath not put in ſubiection to the Angels, the world to come, of which we ſpeake. 1.14.9
9 But we ſee Ieſus crowned with glorie and honor, which was made a little inferiour to Angels, by reaſon of ſuffering death, that by Gods grace he might taſte of death for all men. 1.13.26. and 2.16.7
11 For he that ſanctifieth, and thoſe that are ſanctified, are all of one: wherefore he is not aſhamed to call them brethren. 2.13.2
14 That he might deſtroy through death, him that had the empire and power of death, that is the deuill, &c. 1.14.18. and 2.13.1,2. and 3.11.12
15 And that hee might deliuer all them, which for feare of death were all their life time ſubiect to bondage. 2.16.7
16 For in no wiſe he tooke the Angels, but he tooke the ſeed of Abraham. 1.14.9. and 2.13.1.2
17 In all things it became him to be made like to his brethren, that he might be mercifull, and a faithfull high prieſt in all things concerning God. 2.13.1. & 2.16.2.19
3.14 We be made partakers of Chriſt, if we keepe ſure vnto the end that beginning wherewith we are vpholden. 3.2.16
4.9 There remaineth therefore a reſt to the people of God. 2.8.29
14 Hauing therefore a great high prieſt, that hath entred into heauen, euen Ieſus the ſonne of God, let vs hold this profeſſion. 2.7.2. & 4.4.21
15 We haue not a high prieſt that cannot be touched with the infirmitie of our fleſh, but was in all things tempted in like ſort, yet without ſinne. 2.12.1,7. & 2.13.1. and 2.16.12. and 4.17.24
16 Let vs approch therefore with boldneſſe vnto the throne of grace, that we may receiue mercie, and finde grace to help at time of neede. 3.20.12,17
5.1 Euery high prieſt is taken from amongſt men, and is ordained for men in things pertaining to God, that he may offer both gifts and ſacrifice for ſinnes. 2.12.4
4 Neither doth any man take this honour to himſelfe, but he that is called of God, as was Aaron. 4.3.10. and 4.15.22. and 4.18.9,14
5 And ſo Chriſt tooke not to himſelfe this honor, to be made high prieſt, &c. 4.14.21. and 4.18.2
6 Thou art a prieſt for euer after the order of Melchiſedec. 4.19.28
7 Which in the daies of his fleſh did offer vp praiers and ſupplications with ſtrong crying and teares vnto him, that was able to ſaue him from death, and was alſo heard in that which he feared. 2.16.11
8 Although he were the ſonne, notwithſtanding he learned obedience by thoſe things that he ſuffered. 3.8.1
10 And called of God an high prieſt, after the order of Melchiſedec. 4.18.2 6.4 For it cannot be that thoſe which were once lightened, and haue taſted of the heauenly gifts, and were made partakers of the holy Ghost. 3.2.11.& 3.3.21.23

6 If they fall, that they should bee renued againe by repentance,&c. 3.3.21
10 For God is not vniust, that he should forget your works and labour of loue, which ye shewed toward his name.&c. 3.18.7
13 For when God made the promise to Abraham, when as hee could sweare by none greater, he swore by himselfe. 2.8.25
16 For men verily sweare by him that is greater than themselues, and an oath for confirmation is an end of strife amongst them. 2.8.27
7.3 Without father, without mother, without kindred, and hauing neither beginning of his daies, nor end of his life, but is likened to the Sonne of God, and continueth a priest for euer. 4.19.28
7 But without all controuersie, that which is the least is blessed of him that is greater. 4.18.2
11 If there had beene a full perfection by the Leuiticall priesthood,&c. 2.11.4
12 The priesthood therefore being changed, it must needs be, that there be a change of the law. 3.4.4.& 4.6.2
17 Thou art a Priest for euer after the order of Melchisedech. 4.18.2
19 The law sanctified nothing, but the bringing in of a better hope did it by the which we come neere to God. 2.7.17.& 2.11.4
21 But this, he is made with an oath by him that said vnto him, The Lord hath sworne and will not repent, thou art a Priest for euer,&c. 4.18.2
22 Iesus is made so much a greater suretie of a better testament. 4.18.2
24 And he, because he abideth for euer, hath an euerlasting priesthood. 2.15.6
25 Whereby hee is able to saue those which come vnto God by him. 2.16.16
8.1 But this is the summe of that which we haue spoken: that wee haue such an high priest, that sitteth on the right hand of the throne of maiestie in heauen. 2.16.15
5 See, quoth hee that thou make all things according to the patterne that was shewed thee in the mountaine. 2.7.1
6 But now our high priest hath obtained a more excellent office, in as much as he is the Mediator of a better testament. 2.16.12
9.1 The first Testament had also ordinances of religion, and a worldly sanctuarie, 4.14.21
7 But into the second went the high priest alone once euery yeere, not without blood which he offered for himselfe and for the people. 2.7.17.& 2.15.6
8 Whereby the holy Ghost this signified, that the way into the holiest of all, was not yet opened, whilest as yet the first tabernacle was standing. 2.7.17.& 2.15.6
9 Wherein were offered gifts and sacrifices that could not make holy, concerning the conscience of him that did seruice. 2.7.17.& 2.11.14.& 4.14.25
11 But Christ being come a high priest of good things to come. 2.16.16.& 4.14.21.& 4.18.2
12 Neither by the blood of goats and calues, but by his owne blood entred he once into the holy place. 2.17.4.& 4.18.3
13 For if the blood of buls and goats, and the ashes of an heifer sprinkling them that are vncleane, sanctifieth as touching the purification of the flesh. 2.17.4
14 How much more shall the blood of Christ which through the eternall spirite offered himselfe without spot to God,&c. 2.16.6.& 3.16.2.& 4.14.11.
15 And for this cause he is the Mediator of a new testament, that through death,&c. 2.7.17.& 4.17.4
16 For where a testament is, there must bee the death of him that made the testament 4.18.5.
22 And all things almost according to the law, was purified by blood, and without sheading of blood there was no remission. 2.15.6.& 2.17.4
26 But now once in the end of the world hath he appeared to put away sinne by the sacrifice of himselfe. 4.18.3
27 And as it is ordained for men that they shall once die, and after that commeth the iudgement. 2.16.17.& 3.25.8
28 So Christ was once offered to take away the sinnes of many, and vnto them that looke for him, shall he appeare the second time without sin vnto saluation 3.26.2
10.1 For the law hauing the shadow of good things to come, and not the very image of the things, can neuer with those sacrifices which they offer yeerely, sanctifie the commers thereto. 2.7.16.17.& 2.11.4.& 4.14.23
2 For would they not then haue ceased to haue beene offered because the offerers once purged, should haue had no more conscience of sinne. 3.19.15. and 4.10.3. and 4.14.25

4 For the blood of buls and goats cannot take away sinne. 4.14.25
7 Then I said, lo, I come (in the beginning of the booke it is written of mee) that I should do, O God, thy will. 2.16.5
8 Aboue, when he said, sacrifice and offerings, and burnt offerings, and sinne offerings, thou wouldest not haue, neither hast thou pleasure therein which are offred by the law, &c. 2.16.5
10 By the which will we are sanctified, euen by the offering of the bodie of Christ once made. 3.6.3. and 4.18.3
14 For with once offering he hath consecrated for euer, those that are sanctified. 3.5.2. and 4.18.3
19 Wherefore brethren, seeing wee haue libertie to enter the holy place through the blood of Iesus. 3.20.20
20 By the new and liuing way which he hath prepared for vs through the vaile, that is, his flesh. 3.20.18
26 If wee sinne willinglie after that we haue receiued the knowledge of the truth, there remaineth no more sacrifice for sinne. 3.3.21,23. & 4.18.3
27 But a fearefull looking for of iudgement, and violent fire which shall deuoure the aduersaries 3.25.12
29 Of how much more sorer punishment thinke ye, shall he be worthy, which treadeth vnder foote the Sonne of God, and counteth the blood of the testament as an vnholie thing, wherewith he was sanctified, and doth despise the spirit of grace. 3.3.21
36 Ye haue need of patience, that after ye haue done the will of God, ye might receiue the promises. 3.2.37
11.1 Now faith is the ground of things that are hoped for, and the euidence of things that are not seene. 3.2.41. & 3.25.1
3 By faith we vnderstand, that the world was made by the word of God, in such sort, that the things that we see, were not made of things that did appeare. 1.5.13. & 1.6.1. & 1.16.1
6 Without faith it is vnpossible to please him, for he that commeth to God must beleeue that God is, and that he doth reward them that seeke him. 3.11.15. & 3.14.4. & 3.20.40
7 By faith we being warned of God of the things which were as yet not seene, &c. 3.2.30
9 By faith he abode in the land of promise as a stranger, &c. 3.10.13
17 By faith Abraham offered vp Isaac when he was tried, and he that had receiued the promises, offered his onely begotten sonne. 3.19.6
21 He worshipped God leaning vpon his staffe. 1.11.15
12.3 Consider him therefore that indured such speaking against of sinners lest ye should be wearied & faint in your minds. 3.3.15
5 And you haue forgotten the exhortation, which speaketh vnto you as vnto children: My sonne, despise not the chastening of the Lord, neither faint in thy minde when thou art reproued of him. 3.4.32
8 For if you be without correction, whereof all are partakers, then are yee bastards and not sonnes. 3.8.6
9 Moreouer, we haue had the fathers of our our bodies, which corrected vs, and we gaue them reuerence, should we not much rather be in subiection vnto the father of spirits, that we might liue? 1.15.2
17 For yee know how that afterward when he would haue inherited the blessing, hee was reiected, for he found no place to repent, although he sought the blessing with teares. 3.3.24
18 For yee came not to the mount that might bee touched, nor vnto burning fire, nor to blackenesse, and darkenesse, &c. 2.11.9
22 But yee came to the mount Sion, and to the citie of the liuing God, the celestiall Ierusalem, and to the companie of innumerable angels. 1.14.9
23 To the congregation of the first borne which are written in heauen, and to God the iudge of all. 3.25.6
13.4 Mariage is honorable amongst all men, and the bed vndefiled: but whoremongers and adulterers God will iudge. 4.9.14. and 4.12.25. & 4.13.3
8 Iesus Christ the same yesterday, and to day, and also for euer. 2.10.4
15 By him therefore let vs daily offer vp to God the sacrifice of praise, that is, the fruit of the lips, which confesse his name. 3.20.28. & 4.18.16.17
16 To doe good, and to distribute forget not: for with such sacrifices God is pleased. 3.4.36. and 3.7.5. and 3.15.4. and 4.18.17
17 Obey your guides and be ruled by them, for they watch for the health of your soules, as such that shall giue account therefore. 1.15.2

IAMES.

1.2 MY brethren, count it for an exceeding ioy, ſo often as you fall into temptations. 3.20.46

12 Bleſſed is the man that ſuffereth temptation, for when he ſhall be tried, he ſhall receiue the crowne of life. 3.17.10

13 Let no man when he is tempted ſay, that he is tempted of God, for God cannot be tempted with euill, neither doth he tempt any man. 3.20.46

14 But euch one is tempted when he is drawen away by his owne concupiſcence, and is entiſed. 3.20.46

15 Then when luſt hath conceiued, it bringeth foorth ſinne, and ſinne when it is finiſhed, bringeth foorth death. 3.3.13

17 Euery good gift and euery perfect gift commeth from aboue from the Father of lights, with whom there is no variableneſſe, neither ſhadow by turning. 1.13.8. and 2. 2.21. and 4.14.10

21 Wherefore lay apart all filthineſſe and ſuperfluitie of malicioſneſſe, and receiue with meekeneſſe the word that is ingrafted in you, which is able to ſaue your ſoules. 4.17.25

2.5 Hath not God choſen the poore of this world, that they ſhould be rich in faith, and heires of the kingdome which he promiſed to thoſe of whom he is beloued. 3. 23.10

10 For whoſoeuer ſhall keepe the whole law, and yet faileth in one point, he is guiltie of all. 3.14.10. and 3.18.10

14 What auaileth it him my brethren, though a man ſay hee hath faith, when hee hath no workes, can the faith ſaue him? 3.2. 9, 12

19 Thou beleeueſt there is one God, thou doeſt well, and the diuels beleeue and tremble. 3.2.10

21 Was not Abraham our father iuſtified thorow works, when he offered vp Iſaac his ſonne vpon the altar? 3.17.11

4.3 Yee aske and you receiue not, becauſe you aske amiſſe, that yee might conſume it on your luſts. 3.20.7

6 But the Scripture offereth more grace, and therefore ſaith, God reſiſteth the proud, and giueth grace to the humble. 2. 2.10. and 3.12.5

8 Drawe nigh to God, and hee will drawe nigh to you: cleanſe your hands yee ſinners, and purge your hearts yee wauering minded. 3.3.16

11 Hee that ſpeaketh euill of his brother, ſpeaketh againſt the lawe, and condemneth it, but if thou condemne the lawe, &c. 4.10.7

12 There is one law-giuer that is able to ſaue and to deſtroy. 4.10.7

14 Who can tell what ſhall be the next day, for what is your life? it is euen a vapour, &c. 3.20.28

15 For that yee ought to ſay, if the Lord will, and if we liue, we will doe this or that. 3.20.28

5.12 Before all things, my brethren ſweare not, neither by heauen, neither by earth, neither any other oath, but let your yea be yea, and your nay nay, &c. 2.8.26

13 Is any man afflicted amongſt you? let him pray: is any man merrie? let him ſing Pſalmes. 3.20.7

14 Is any ſicke amongſt you? let him ſend for the Elders of the Church, and let them pray for him, &c. 4.19.18,21

15 And the prayer of faith ſhall ſaue the ſicke, and the Lord ſhall raiſe him vp, and if he haue committed ſinne, it ſhall be forgiuen him. 3.20.11

16 Acknowledge your faults one to another, and pray one for another, that ye may be healed: for the prayer of a righteous man auaileth much if it be feruent. 3.4.6, 12. and 3.20.27

17 Elias was a man ſubiect to thoſe things that we be, and he prayed earneſtly that it might not raine, and it rained not on the earth for the ſpace of three yeeres and ſixe monethes. 3.20.26

I. PETER.

1.2 TO the elect according to the foreknowledge of God the Father vnto ſanctification of the ſpirit through obedience and ſprinkling of the bloud of Ieſus Chriſt, grace and peace be multiplied vnto you. 3.1.1. and 3.14.6. and 3.22.6. and 4.15.2

3 Bleſſed be God the Father of our Lord Ieſu Chriſt, who of his great mercie hath begot vs againe into a liuely hope, by the reſurrection of Chriſt Ieſu from death. 2. 16.13

5 Who are kept by the power of GOD through faith to ſaluation, which is prepared pared to be declared in the last day. 3.2.42. and 3.18.3

7 That the triall of your faith, being much more precious then golde which perisheth although it be tried by fire 3.8.4

9 Receiuing the end of your faith, euen the salnation of your soules. 1.15.2. & 3.18.3 & 3.25.1

11 Searching when or what time the spirit which testified before of Christ which was in them, should declare the suffering that should come vnto Christ, &c. 1.13.18. & 2.9.1

12 Vnto whom it was reuealed, that they should not minister vnto themselues, but vnto vs the things which are now shewed vnto you by them. 2.9.1. and 2. 11.6

15 But as he which hath called you is holy, so be you holy in all maner of conuersation. 3.6.3

16 Be you holy, for I am holy. 3.6.2

18 Knowing that yee were not redeemed with corruptible things, as siluer and golde from your vaine conuersation, receiued by the traditions of the fathers. 2.17.5

19 But with the precious blood of Christ, as of a lambe vndefiled and without spot. 2. 17.5. & 3.6.3

20 Which was ordained before the foundation of the world, but was declared in the last times for your sakes. 3.22.6. & 4 18.20

21 Which by his meanes doe beleeue in God that raised him vp from the dead and gaue him glory, that your faith and hope might be in God. 2.16.13. & 3.2.1.43
